

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right
Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ Jan. 12th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the admission of Cecil Edward Bradfield as an attorney and notary. It was stated that owing to the invasion of Dordrecht there had been a break of twelve months in the applicant's service. The Law Society, however, did not oppose.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of Wilfred Massingham Seymour as attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Mount Fletcher.

Mr. Nightingale moved for the admission of David Albertus Grundlingh as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Queen's Town.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of David Goldblatt as a translator.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

BOER V. DELAROU.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on two cheques for £25 12s. and £16 2s. 6d. respectively, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

PFRIPFER V. HUBACH.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a cheque for £64, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

STEPHAN BROS. V. RIACH.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes, less £50 paid on account, and also for interest.

Order granted, subject to one of the notes being stamped.

MOLLER V LLOYD AND POWER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £314 upon certain conditions of sale, less £64 paid on account, the defendant having neglected to pay the first settlement.

Order granted.

LIBERMAN AND BUIRSKI V. STAINDIEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £27 16s. on a certain note of indebtedness, with interest a tempore mora.

Order granted.

KOCH V. CLAEYS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £58, with interest, the plaintiff tendering transfer.

Order granted.

EPSIKEN V. PRIEM.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence for £370 on a certain promissory note, with interest and commission for collection.

Order granted.

SIBERT, MAISTER AND ANOTHER V. MULLER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest granted for certain sums due to the plaintiffs, viz., £145 18s. 7d., and balance of moneys disbursed, and £37 for commission upon sale, also judgment in terms of summons, and costs.

Defendant said that he had not received a statement of account, and he did not know what he really owed.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the matter must stand over until to-morrow, and in the meantime the defendant's attorney should be communicated with, as the defendant would be in custody.

DUMINY V. VINK.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes for £304 and £33 respectively, and for judgment for £21 10s., goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

MOSTERT V. ROUS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on a judgment of this Court for £32 7s., with interest a tempore moræ and £19 5s. 2d. costs, less £6 paid on account by the co-defendant.

Order granted.

TEMPLEMAN V. ROBINSON.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence for £300 on a promissory note, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Order granted.

HARDY V. WILKS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on a judgment of this Court for £60, together with £38 14s. 6d. taxed costs. Counsel put in copy of the return of nulla bona.

Defendant said he was absolutely without cash at the present time. He had a number of important agencies from Home. He had no furniture. He lived at Walmer-road, Woodstock.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The agencies were not producing any money for him at present, as he was instructed not to take orders on credit when the money market was so bad here. He had been to England since he received the money from the plaintiff. The plaintiff advanced £60 on account, in order that they should take up certain partnership transactions in the Argentine cattle trade. It was not borrowed by witness on the strength of witness finding the plaintiff employment. He was now living by the help of his wife's sister. She provided the money for his return to England. His passage Home was partly paid by friends.

Mr. Benjamin: You must have a good many charitable friends. Have you been living upon them?

Defendant: No, not by any means; my friends have been living on me. I have helped men who have not had £50, but thousands. I have not got 5s. in the world now.

The application was refused.

ALFORD, WILLS AND ABBOTT V. COOTES AND CO.

Mr. Struben moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. BRUHNS.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on two bills of exchange for £28 17s. 4d. and £42 11s. 4d. respectively, dishonoured at the bank by non-payment, and also for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £5 7s. 6d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore moræ and costs.

Order granted.

LAWRENCE AND OTHERS V. SEGAL.

Mr. Russell moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

HEYDENRYCH V. SALODIEN.

Mr. Close moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

JOSEPH AND CO. V. PRETORIUS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £405, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

WESTERN WINE AND BRANDY CO. V. NORMAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £345 17s. 6d., balance of price of goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore moræ and costs of suit.

Order granted.

WAKELIN AND CUNNINGHAM V. FROST.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment for £51 4s. and for certain costs. The defendant, he added, had offered £2 a week, which the plaintiffs were prepared to accept.

Decree granted, to be suspended pending payment of £2 a week, first payment to be made on the 1st February.

MARCUS V. GOODMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

The defendant said that he was not prepared to pay the money. All his money was invested in property.

De Villiers, C.J., said that unless the defendant was prepared to pay the money at once, he did not see that he had any option but to make the order asked for.

Order granted.

CONTINENTAL CORONETLUM COMPANY
V. TRYE AND COMPANY.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

TRUTER V. McMULLEN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a decree of civil imprisonment for £200, together with interest and £9 1s. 9d. costs.

The defendant admitted that he owed the money, but said that he could not make a settlement at present. He should, however, be prepared to pay the interest of £1 a month, and then in April of next year he would pay off the capital in instalments of £50 a month.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bisset: He left Beaufort West in September last. He sold his practice to Dr. King. He had not got the price (£200), but he could not get his money owing to the action of Mr. Truter, who was acting for Dr. Darter. Dr. King found that the rent was being raised, and then withdrew his offer. The other doctor (Darter) had done them all down. He had gone, and the landlord was left with an empty house. Witness had taken over Dr. Seller's practice in Cape Town. His earnings had been about £90 a month. He had worked for twelve months in Beaufort West without money, because the farmers, owing to the drought, had no money. He had had a claim against the C.G.R. for £200 for an operation upon a railway servant, but he had been unable to secure payment up to the present. The C.G.R. wanted to make out that the man was playing at the time, and repudiated all liability. He had been a personal friend of the plaintiffs, and had gone there every week for twelve months along with the magistrate and the assistant magistrate. They had played bridge together. He did not know that Mr. Truter was disloyal to him until he received from him an offer of £200 on behalf of Dr. Darter for his practice. The conditions on which he had taken over Dr. Seller's practice provided that he should pay £50 a month to Dr. Seller until March, 1906; if he failed any month Dr. Seller might step in and take over his practice again.

Decree granted, with costs, decree to be suspended pending payment of £3 a month from the 1st February, and an additional payment of £50 a month from the 31st March until the debt and costs had been cleared off, leave being given to the plaintiff to apply in the meantime for an increase in the instalments.

KANNMEYER V. CHETTY BROS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendants upon an unsatisfied judgment for £600 rent less £69 18s. 6d. paid on account.

Order granted.

THE MASTER V. EXECUTOR OF THE ESTATE HOFFMAN.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for the usual order calling upon the defendant to file an account.

The usual order was granted, account to be filed within one month.

CUNHA AND CO. V. SHALOW- (1904.

SKY AND TEIXARA BROS. (Jan. 12th.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the estate of the defendants as insolvent. Counsel said there was due for goods supplied by the plaintiffs to the defendants £2,385 3s.

Mr. Benjamin, who appeared for the defendant, Gabriel Teixeira, read an affidavit by his client, in which he stated that he was no longer a partner in the firm, having retired therefrom in pursuance of a deed of dissolution. He had never put any money into the firm, and had received no share of the profits, excepting a sum of £200, which he put in the property at Johannesburg. He had kept the books.

The defendant Joseph Teixeira said he gave a promissory note for the partnership for £6,000. He was authorised by the firm to draw notes in favour of the petitioners and other creditors. The firm at present owed him £6,000. His brother Gabriel had been a partner in the firm. He (Joseph) complained very much about the mismanagement of the business.

Another of the defendants said that he had not been a partner in the firm since July last.

De Villiers, C.J.: The deed of dissolution was executed in November, 1903. By this deed the three brothers all acknowledge themselves to be partners; two of them from that date retiring, one was to remain a partner. The debt in respect of which the plaintiff claims was incurred some time before this dissolution. The plaintiff now, as the creditor, claims that the members of the firm which incurred the debt shall have their estate sequestered. It is quite clear that the plaintiff is entitled to that.

BRADFORD ROOLE AND CO. V. HAYWARD.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £80, under certain conditions of sale.

Order granted.

MILLER AND CO. V. MCFADYEN AND THOM.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

HANAU V. BUCHANAN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

The defendant said that a deed of assignment was made, and was signed by the creditors, but a certain creditor afterwards attached part of his stock, and an application was then made by the present plaintiff for the compulsory sequestration of his estate, so as to prevent one of the creditors from claiming all the property. It had now been agreed that the matter should stand over, so that the estate should not be wasted.

Mr. Bisset said that the defendant had admitted that he was hopelessly insolvent.

The further hearing of the matter was ordered to stand over until the 1st February.

DOMINICUS V. TAYLOR AND STERNER.

Mr. De Waal moved for the order for the sequestration of the defendants' estate to be superseded.

Application granted.

THE MASTER V. EXECUTOR IN THE ESTATE LIEBENBERG.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for the usual order for an account to be filed.

Usual order granted.

MABERLY V. BROCKLEBANK. { 1904. { Jan. 12th.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500 upon certain land and buildings situate at Woodstock, less £50 paid on account, and for the property to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of notice given to the mortgagee.

Order granted.

SUBURBAN ESTATES V. MUZLAK AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence for £35, under certain conditions of sale, less £10 paid on account.

Order granted.

ST. SAVIOUR'S CHURCH, CLAREMONT V. FRIEDMAN.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,100, less a certain sum paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and by notice calling up the bond having been given.

Mr. Benjamin read an affidavit by the respondent in support of his application for postponement of execution, the defendant's explanation being that he had been away in Namaqualand, and that he had only just returned, and consequently had not been able to attend to the matter previously.

De Villiers, C.J., said that an order would be granted as prayed. He could not direct a postponement, but he would remind the plaintiff that it would not be advisable, for his own sake, to press for execution.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. COHEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes, and also for judgment under Rule 323d, for £49 11s. 3d., for goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

LOCHNER AND ANOTHER V. GROMAN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence upon certain conditions of sale, for £306, balance of the purchase price of certain land, together with interest.

Order granted.

ESTATE MARSH V. SMITH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a certain mortgage bond for £200, together with interest, and for the property to be declared exe-cutable, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

ESTATE MARSH V. COLYN.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on certain six mortgage bonds, amounting in all to about £2,900, and for the property to be declared executable, the bonds having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.
Order granted.

DUMINY V. DREYER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,000, less £700 odd paid on account, and for the property to be declared executable.
Order granted.

CLARKE V. MACKEY.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a certain promissory note for £300, made in favour of the African Banking Corporation.

The defendant said that there had been a partnership between himself and the plaintiff. He looked upon the money as an advance, and as part of the money that would be owing to him by the partnership when the purchase was completed of certain property that they had acquired at Muizenberg.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 1st February, and the Chief Justice advised the defendant in the meantime to engage counsel.

JOHNSON V. LACY.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £50, with interest.
Order granted.

ROSENBERG V. LURIE.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £117 10s. with interest.
Order granted.

SCOTT V. HEESSEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence upon certain conditions of sale, plaintiff tendering transfer of the land.
Order granted.

ROSS AND CO. V. ROUS.

Mr. Alexander moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £65 9s. 6d.
Decree granted.

ESTATE MARSH V. NOTTGE.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment for costs upon a summons for provisional sentence. The debt was paid after the summons had been issued.
Order granted.

EPSTEIN V. SIERADSKI.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £123 9s. 10d.

Mr. Gardiner called

The defendant, who stated that he had no means whatever. He was willing to pay £5 towards the discharge of the debt. He had already sent £5 to the plaintiff, but it had been returned.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He had been sued by another firm since he made his first offer of £10 a month in October last. The debt related to money lent to him to enter into a partnership. He would be able to pay £7 10s. from the 1st August.

Decree granted with costs, decree to be suspended pending payment of £5 a month from the 15th inst., and £7 10s. from the 15th August.

SECCOMBE V. HALL. { 1901.
{ Jan. 12th.

Services of minors—Contract with parents—Manager of operatic troupe.

The applicant was the manager of a juvenile operatic troupe, consisting of girls under age, who had been engaged by H. in Australia by agreement with the parents for a tour in South Africa. During the tour H. died, and his wife was employed after his death by the applicant (who claimed to have been a partner of H.) as matron of the children. The applicant having dismissed her, she started an operatic troupe of her own, which was joined by several of the girls.

Held, in the absence of any indication of the parents' wishes, that the applicant had no better right to the services of the children than Mrs. H., and that he was consequently not entitled to an order that they should return to his service.

This was a motion for an interdict against the respondents, who are associated with the theatrical company known as Hall's Australian Juveniles.

A rule nisi had been granted by his lordship on the 5th January, calling upon the respondent, Mrs. Hall, to show cause why an order should not be granted compelling her to restore to the applicant, one Seccombe, the custody of certain minor children, and requiring the said children to return to the applicant.

The affidavit of Mrs. Hall set out that she was the widow of Henry Lawrence Hall, who died in Johannesburg in October last. Her husband formed the theatrical company known as Hall's Australian Juveniles, composed of children brought out from Australia to tour in South Africa. She knew that applicant had advanced certain money to her husband to enable him to continue touring with the company. She believed that a certain understanding was entered into between them, but she was not aware what the terms were. At first she was instructress of the dancing and matron, and she received a weekly wage. Applicant had informed her that her services were dispensed with. She denied that notice had previously been given to her. On January 2 the applicant came to the Opera House, Cape Town, and demanded to examine the parcels of the company. He also brought a policeman, and caused some of the children to be frightened. The children were entrusted to the care of her husband and herself in Australia. She was the only person at present in this country, who was acquainted with the parents of the children. The children refused to go back to the applicant, stating that they were frightened of him and did not know him. She denied that she had refused to allow them to return to the applicant, and said that they had come to her voluntarily. She denied that he had any right to regard himself as their guardian. She had been promised substantial financial support in connection with the company. An affidavit by Leslie Herring, a member of the company, stated that she was one of the respondents, she would be frightened to go to the applicant, and prayed to be allowed to remain with Mrs. Hall. Other affidavits by respondents were couched in similar terms. Counsel also read several letters sent by the children's parents to Mrs. Hall.

De Villiers, C.J., asked where the Juveniles were now?

Mr. M. de Villiers, for the respondents, said it was the intention of Mrs. Hall to bring them to the Court, but it was not expected that the case would come on till the following day (Wednesday). [De Villiers, C.J.: Couldn't they be sent for?]

Mr. M. de Villiers said he believed the Juveniles were residing at Sea Point. The respondent, Mrs. Hall, was anxious that the Court should see them.

The affidavit of one of the Juveniles, who had joined the section that had returned to the applicant, stated that she had not the least complaint to make in regard to the applicant's treatment. "We have," she added, "always regarded him as our friend and guardian." Another deponent said that Mrs. Hall had been gradually drifting into drinking habits, and had exhibited an undue partiality for the society of other men than her husband while he was living.

Mr. M. de Villiers objected that the applicant's answering affidavits introduce new matter which should have been brought forward on the original application.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, they do introduce new matter.]

[The new matter complained of consisted of certain personal charges against the respondent.]

Mr. Benjamin (for applicant): I will pick out the passages which are in reply to the affidavits on the other side.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It would seem that the contract was entered into between the late Mr. Hall and the parents of these children. Who stands in Mr. Hall's place?]

The contract was between the parents and the company.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How can the children be bound by that? They are not apprenticed. On what grounds. Mr. Benjamin, do you claim the right to remove the children from Mrs. Hall's care?]

Because the contract was between the parents and the company, and Mr. Seccombe is the manager of the company. Mrs. Hall is only a paid servant of the company. Then we have no guarantee that Mrs. Hall will be able to look after these children. If they are to remain with her a new contract should be drawn up, and a curator appointed to assist the children in making it. Then again there are not enough children with her to form a full company. The applicant is quite willing to send the children back to Australia. In any case, he is the surviving partner, and as such is entitled to all the benefits of the contract with the parents of the children.

Mr. M. de Villiers said that Mrs. Hall and several members of the company were now in court.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would like to ask them a few questions.

Nellie Finlay (19) and another girl, her sister (14), gave evidence to the effect that they preferred to stay with Mrs. Hall, though they said they would not object to going to Australia. They were quite satisfied with Mrs. Hall's treatment, and they would not care to join Mr. Seccombe's company. They had 16 members of the company (including 12 girls) with Mrs. Hall, while ten others had entered the applicant's service. They intended in future to play vaudeville and not to give opera.

Mrs. Hall said that as long as the children remained with her she intended to treat them fairly, and at the end of the tour to take them back to Australia. They had been performing at Sea Point and Simon's Town since the rule was granted, but had made no profits. She denied the imputations with regard to her conduct.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think the sooner you send the children back to their parents the better. The parents gave them over to Mr. Hall, and Mr. Hall is dead, and I think they should go back to their parents.]

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin, witness said she had money to carry through the tour. The money had been put up by a friend of her own and her husband's, Mr. Alexander. She had 16 of the performers with her still, out of a total of 25.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that Mrs. Hall had simply been an employee of the company, that the children were under an engagement to the company, and were under the control of Mr. Seccombe as manager.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is extremely difficult to know how to deal with a case of this kind. A contract was made in Australia by the parents of the children with Mr. Hall. He took these children to South Africa, and during the tour in South Africa Mr. Hall died. After his death his widow continued to be with the company, not only as matron, but also as a dancing teacher to the children. After a time Mrs. Hall was dismissed, and thereupon some of the children chose to go with Mrs. Hall, and application was made to me in chambers by the present applicant for an order to compel Mrs. Hall to deliver up the children, and for an order upon the children to go back to him. I felt the difficulty at the time that there is no clear proof that the contract was for the benefit of the children, or that, even if the contract were binding on the children, the applicant had any locus standi to enforce it. The contract was made with the parents by Mr. Hall. One of the conditions of the contract was that a salary was to be paid direct by Mr. Hall to the parents, and that the children were to get only some pocket money. I think something like 3s. a week was to be paid to them while on tour. There certainly does not seem to be a clear benefit to the minors; but still the children are here, and there is no one else to take charge of them. The question to be decided is whether it would be for the benefit of the children that I should order them to go to the applicant, or whether it would not be better for them to remain in the custody of Mrs. Hall. In the original affidavit, no charge was made against the moral conduct of Mrs. Hall, but in the replying affidavits, very serious charges are made, which, if true, would certainly tend to show that Mrs. Hall was not a fit and proper person to have the custody of these children. If these statements are true, they ought certainly to have been made in the original affidavits. We have now the statement made by Mrs. Hall on her oath that there is no truth in the charges made against her. In my opinion, as between the two, the person who has the custody of the children should continue to retain them. There was no contract with Seccombe, and clearly he is not entitled to the custody of the children. If I am asked what would really be best in the interests of the children, I should say they should go back to their parents in Australia, but that is not the matter before the Court. At present, without knowing what the wishes of the parents are, I have to decide whether the applicant is entitled as against Mrs. Hall to claim custody of the children. In my opinion, he has no better right than she has upon the facts before me. If the applicant thinks he has a right, he may bring his action. But upon the motion, with the facts before me, I am of opinion that the application should fail. If he is advised to bring an action, I think he should give notice of such action to the parents of the children in Australia, so that they may have an opportunity of informing the Court what they wish to be done. It will also be competent for any of the children, if dissatisfied with the treatment of Mrs. Hall, to approach any of the judges, and make complaint. For the present, I think this application should fail. Plaintiff must, if he thinks fit, bring an action. This application must be refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

COATON AND LOUW V. { 1904.
ERASMUS. { Jan. 13th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

At a later stage his lordship said that an affidavit had been put in by the defendant to the effect that he was doing his utmost to pay his creditors. Though he challenged some of the statements made in the affidavit of Coaton and Louw, he did not set up any legal defence. The order already made would stand, though the statement of the defendant might perhaps be kept in mind by the petitioners.

SIBERT, MAISTER AND ANOTHER V.
MULLER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest, and for judgment in the sum of £182 2s. 7d., balance of moneys disbursed and commission for certain potatoes sold for defendant. The matter was before the Court on Tuesday, and was ordered to stand over.

The defendant now said that he had not been supplied with a proper statement. He thought he was entitled to receive something from the transaction, whereas the plaintiff had sued him for money. He had transferred his business to another man. He admitted that he was arrested aboard the Saxon, when about to leave for Europe.

Buchanan, J., said the writ of arrest would be confirmed, but judgment would not be given, and the plaintiffs must bring an action for the amount in question.

VAN DER BYL AND W. AND G. SCOTT V.
SMUTS.

Mr. Nightingale moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate, as insolvent to be made final.

The defendant admitted that he could not pay his debts.

Order granted.

DUMINY V. VINK.

Buchanan, J., informed Mr. Gardiner who was counsel in this matter, heard on Tuesday, that he would not be entitled to judgment, under Rule 329d, until the 19th inst., and the order which had been granted for provisional sentence, and judgment must be altered accordingly. For the present, therefore, only provisional sentence was given. The day for entering appearance was the 15th.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

INSOLVENT ESTATE LUCKE { 1904.
V. ANDERSON. { Jan. 13th.

Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment in terms of citation for payment of £128, with interest, being the purchase price of certain properties, or an order cancelling such sale in the event of the defendant's failure to pay such purchase price within the period specified. Counsel also asked for damages.

Judgment as prayed, except as to damages.

SHEPPARD AND CO. V. STEER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for a proper, true, full, and detailed account of all matters entrusted by the plaintiff to the defendant, and all transactions and moneys disbursed by him, debate of account, delivery of all, and every title deed; diagram, mortgage bond, and other document belonging to the plaintiff.

Mr. Close, for the defendant, said that the present application was made in default of appearance. There was also a motion on the roll for an order authorising the defendant to purge his default. Certain affidavits had been filed, and counsel asked that the matter should be allowed to stand over.

The matter was ordered to stand over till the end of the roll.

FORTUIN V. WEINTROB.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea for £73 18s. 9d., balance of account for work and labour done, and materials supplied and money disbursed on behalf of the defendant.

Order granted.

COOKE AND OTHERS V. BETHELL.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £272, purchase price of certain lots of land, plaintiff tendering transfer.

Order granted.

HERMANS V. McMULLEN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment, under Rule 319, on a declaration claiming judgment for £30, rent due, and £9 4s. 3d., price of certain goods sold and delivered and for costs of suit.

Order granted.

PEROLD AND LEWIS V. SILVERUS.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £60 16s. 6d., professional services rendered and moneys paid, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.
Order granted.

DU PLESSIS V. MINNAAR.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £142 5s., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.
Order granted.

MILNE AND SLADDIN V. JACKSON AND CO., LTD.

Mr. Fremont moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £31 19s., rent due from September to December last, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.
Order granted.

PHILIP'S TOWN MUNICIPALITY V. WENTWORTH.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £3 2s. 6d., being arrears of rates, and for costs of suit. The parties resided in different districts.
Order granted.

BOOSEY AND CO. V. SIMMONDS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for an order interdicting the defendant from selling or dealing in any pirated or counterfeit copies of certain musical productions, and requiring him to deliver up forthwith all such copies as are still in his hands, or control for the purpose of having the same destroyed, or destroying the same forthwith. There was also a prayer in the summons for £500 damages, but this, counsel said, he could not ask for at present. He applied for judgment in terms of prayers (a), (b), and (c) of the summons.
Order granted accordingly.

WHITE V. GIBBONS AND CO.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, in terms of paragraphs (b), (d), and (e) of the summons, i.e., for an account of the amount realised by the sale of certain goods entrusted to the defendants, and payment of the sum found to be due, and alternatively in case of non-sale, for delivery of the goods, together with interest and costs. So far as prayers (a) and (c) were concerned, a settlement had been effected.

Order granted accordingly.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. POOLE.

The Colonial Government may cite a defendant to appear in any Colonial forum.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for judgment in the sum of £5 1s. 6d., quitrent and stamp duty on a certain farm at Vryburg, and £31 1s., quitrent of another farm.

[Buchanan, J.: Are the parties in different districts?]

Mr. Jones: The Government, I should imagine, would be in every district in the territory, though the plaintiff, who is the Treasurer of the Colony, is in Cape Town.

Order granted.

CAPE PRODUCE AGENCY V. PEAKE.

Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £101 16s. 4d., goods sold and delivered and moneys disbursed on behalf of the defendant, with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

QUIN, CRUGER AND CROZIER V. LALOR.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £23 9s. 1d., for professional services rendered and money disbursed for and on behalf of the defendant, in connection with a suit which he had instituted in the High Court of the Witwatersrand, and which he afterwards abandoned.
Order granted.

SILBERBAUER, WAHL AND FULLER V. STEPHAN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £169 15s. 8d., balance of account for professional services and moneys disbursed at the instance and request of defendant, and for costs of suit.

Order granted.

SILBERBAUER, WAHL AND FULLER V. CAPES.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £47 1s. 7d., for professional services rendered and costs of suit.

Order granted.

WATSON V. PILBROW.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £22 10s., rent of certain property, with interest and costs.
Order granted.

ARDERNE AND CO. V. STEPHAN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £145 13s. 1d., goods sold and labour performed, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.
Order granted.

SOUTH AFRICAN BRICKFIELDS V.
WILSON AND ERLINSON.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £100 17s. 5d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

HERMAN V. O'BREE.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £39 rent, in respect of certain houses and premises in Cape Town, together with interest and costs, and also to make absolute the rule nisi restraining the respondent from removing or disposing of furniture from the said premises, pending an action for the recovery of rent.
Order granted as prayed.

KROONEN V. OUTRAM.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £124 1s. 2d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.
Order granted.

amount and the interest having been paid since the summons was issued.
Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS. (1304.
(Jan. 13th.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of David Klaas, whose estate disclosed a deficiency of £360 odd. The debtor was in partnership with another man. The trustee's report contained one or two unfavourable remarks, one being that the partners had given credit most recklessly. The estate was sequestrated nine years ago.

Application granted.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the rehabilitation of William Daniel van der Vliet van Es, whose estate showed a deficiency of £9,489. The estate was sequestrated in 1889. There was no trustee's report attached to the record.

Ordered to stand over until the 1st February, pending information as to the trustee's report.

Mr. Close moved for the rehabilitation of George Madley Walden, whose estate disclosed a deficiency of a little over £1,600. The trustee, in his report, stated that the debtor's books were incomprehensible.

Buchanan, J., said that in this case the insolvent had not kept proper books, and it was not usual where proper books had not been kept to grant rehabilitation. The application must be refused. However, he had been insolvent so long that he might apply again in three months.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte BLOMFSTEIN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the release of the insolvent's estate from sequestration. The estate was placed under sequestration in August last, meetings of creditors were convened, to be held before the Resident Magistrate of Piquetberg, but no creditors appeared, no debts were proved, and no trustee elected.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 1st February, and it was pointed out that the facts of the case should be placed on affidavit.

Later in the day Mr. Buchanan said that he had a document from the petitioning creditors, who caused the estate to be sequestrated, consenting to the present application.

An order was accordingly granted as prayed.

Ex parte W. AND G. SCOTT, LTD.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a rule granted under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

Ex parte THEUNISMEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a rule granted under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

SWART V. SWART.

Mr. Benjamin, for the applicant, moved to have a rule nisi granted against the respondent made absolute, calling on him to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted, on the ground of his failure to return to the applicant. Counsel put in the affidavit of the applicant, Susannah Swart, which set out that up to the present her husband had not returned to her, and she claimed a decree of divorce, custody of the children, a division of the estate by reason of being married in community of property, and a reasonable sum for the maintenance of the children.

Buchanan, J., had granted an order for the return on October 30, and failing compliance therewith, defendant to show cause on the 12th January why the bonds of marriage should not be dissolved, with costs, why the plaintiff should not be entitled to the custody of the children, and why the defendant should not pay £4 per month for the maintenance of each child until it reached the age of sixteen years.

Mr. Alexander, for the respondent, said he did not oppose the divorce being granted, but he opposed the amount claimed for the maintenance of the children. Counsel submitted defendant's affidavit, which set out that he was only making £20 a month out of a small store at Vrede, in the Orange River Colony, and was only able to pay £2 a month for each child, which counsel contended was a very reasonable offer.

Mr. Benjamin pointed out that the matter had been fully gone into at the trial, and how difficult it was to know what a defendant's income was in such a case. There was no allegation that the wilful desertion of the plaintiff was any fault of the defendant.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant, her husband, for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, the custody of the children, and alimony for the support of the children. An order was issued calling upon the defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before 31st December, 1903. He has not done so, and the plaintiff is therefore entitled to a decree dissolving the marriage and an order for the custody of the children. The only question in dispute is the amount the defendant can pay for the maintenance of the children. At the trial there was no evidence as to the defendant's circumstances, except what was said by the plaintiff, that as far as she knew, he had a good business as general dealer in the Orange River Colony. The plaintiff said it cost her £16 a month to support the children, and the Court accepted that amount at the trial. It was stated that the defendant was taken prisoner during the war, and had been confined at Green Point, and afterwards sent to India. It is therefore probable that he is not in very affluent circumstances. The defendant now states that he is carrying on a small store in the Orange River Colony that only brings him in about £20 a month. I think that, under these circumstances, £8 a month would be a fair amount to allow for maintenance. However, in making the rule absolute, and ordering the defendant to pay £2 a month for each of the children, leave will be reserved to the plaintiff to make a further application in the matter. The rule will be made absolute, with costs.

LAITA V. HESSEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved upon a notice of motion calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to hand over two children to the custody of the applicant, and why he should not be further ordered to contribute to the support of the children.

The applicant's affidavit set forth that in July, 1898, she was married to the respondent according to the rights of the Mahomedan Church. She lived with him until September, 1902. In October, 1903, he divorced her according to the rights of the Mahomedan Church. She was now desirous of having the two minor children, of the ages of two and four, handed over to her custody.

Mr. Buchanan said he would read the affidavit of the respondent, subject to his objection that the matter could not be decided on motion. The affidavit set out that the applicant had agreed to leave the children with the respondent, under whose care they were being well treated. The affidavit of the nurse was put in, and it stated that the applicant had repeatedly neglected the children, and had refused to administer medicine which the respondent had purchased for the children.

Mr. Benjamin read a replying affidavit repudiating the alleged neglect.

Mr. Benjamin: There was no civil marriage between the parents, therefore in the eye of the law the children are illegitimate, and the mother is their natural guardian.

[Buchanan, J.: But is it quite clear that the children are illegitimate?]

Yes; see Brown v. Brown's Executors (3 Searle, 313). The Marriage Ordinance provides for the appointment of marriage officers for Malays and others, but as regards Malays, none have been appointed.

[Buchanan, J.: The Court might recognise their marriages for purpose connected with the custody of the children.]

If the children are illegitimate, the mother should have the custody.

[Buchanan, J.: What is the special urgency of this case?]

The mother naturally wishes to obtain the custody of such young children as soon as she can. One of them is only two years of age, and the other is four.

Buchanan, J.: Unless the matter is urgent it cannot be heard in vacation time. Let it stand over till the 1st of February.

LYONS V. KELLAWAY.

Mr. C. de Villiers, for the respondent, moved for a postponement in this matter.

Mr. Benjamin, on behalf of the applicant, offered no objection. The respondent was to show cause by the 12th January, but in the meantime he died, and an executor had been appointed, and he wished for time. At the time the application was made, it was not known that subsequent to the assignment of his rights to the applicant, the respondent had made an assignment to a third person. The name of the third person was George Withinshaw, of Wynberg.

The matter was ordered to stand over until February 1, the name of George Withinshaw to be added as a co-respondent.

Ex parte WOOD.

Mr. Russell moved to have made absolute a rule calling on all persons to show cause why an order shall not be granted authorising the Registrar of Deeds to cancel a certain mortgage bond.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

RETIEF V. RETIEF.

Mr. M. Bisset, for the petitioner, Susan Retief, moved for a rule nisi to sue the respondent in forma pauperis for a decree of divorce.

Rule granted, returnable 1st February, personal service to be effected.

Accounts—Act 26 of 1902.

Even if a member is returned unopposed, he is bound to file an account of election expenses within 50 days.

This was a petition under the 25th section of the Illegal Practices Prevention Act of 1902. The applicant did not file his accounts within the time required by the Act, and because he was returned unopposed he did not think it necessary. The three petitioners were returned unopposed at the recent election in the North-Eastern Circle for the Legislative Council, and the petitioner was not furnished with the necessary election return before December 4, 1903, when he immediately signed it, and returned same to the Returning Officer at Cradock. Counsel quoted the case of Robson, under the English Municipal Law, where it was held that, although no expense had been incurred it was necessary to file a declaration, but, inadvertence having been established, the candidate was excused. Counsel submitted that the present case was on all fours with that of Robson, and that it was purely a case of inadvertence on the part of the applicant.

Mr. Benjamin for G. H. Stockenstrom; Mr. De Waal for Michau and Pretorius.

Mr. De Waal said his clients stood on exactly the same footing, except in one case, where the candidate himself acted as his own agent.

Buchanan, J.: The 25th section of the Act requires a candidate to make certain returns within 50 days of his election. The candidates in this circle were returned unopposed for the Legislative Council, and they did not make the returns required. It is stated in affidavit the reason was that they thought it unnecessary, there being no contest, but I think it is clear from the Act, that whether there is a contest or not, these returns are required, and for the reasons stated in the English case cited, namely, that the declaration is to show that money has not been spent by the candidate or on his authority by anyone on his behalf. The 25th section, however, provides that where through inadvertence and in good faith, these returns have not been made within the time required by the law, it is open to the candidate to apply to the Court to allow him further time within which to make the returns. From the correspondence it is clear that there has been perfect good faith on the part of these candidates, and the Returning Officer himself did not apply for a return until he received an opinion from the Attorney-General that they should be sent in. This is the first case that has arisen under this Act, and it is desirable to lay stress on the necessity of good faith. I think that the good faith required by the Act has been shown to exist in this case. As the candidates live some distance from Cape Town, they will be given three weeks in which to transmit the declaration required by the Act.

HARDY V. MCSWEENEY. { 1904.
{ Jan. 13th.

Landlord and tenant—Landlord's

This was a motion to have made absolute a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why he should not be compelled to deliver up certain clothing, the property of the applicant. The affidavit of the applicant set out that he had lodged at the respondent's house in Tamboer's Kloof, and that he had been assaulted by him on 21st December. The applicant subsequently left the house, and tendered £3 0s. 6d., being the amount of his board to that date, but this the respondent refused to accept, holding out for the full amount for the month of £4 5s., and further detaining the applicant's clothing and baggage, which contained some important correspondence.

The replying affidavit of the respondent set out that the applicant climbed the balcony of the house early on the morning of the 19th December, and at breakfast next morning struck the deponent, after demanding a latch-key which had been promised him.

Mr. M. De Villiers (for respondent): As to the law on the subject of a landlord's lien, see Van Leeuwen's Cens Foren (4-37-9). It is common cause that the applicant was a monthly boarder at £4 10s. a month; he is therefore liable for a month's rent. He says that he was assaulted, but it is for him to prove that: it is denied by the respondent, and the question as to whether an assault was committed or not cannot be tried on an application of this kind. He should either have prosecuted criminally, or have sued civilly in respect of the assault. He has done neither, and I submit that all the presumptions in the case are in our favour. I submit I have shown cause why the rule nisi should be set aside.

Mr. Alexander (for applicant): It is not common cause that my client was a monthly boarder. Our letter of December 23rd, and the medical certificate prove that we were assaulted. The respondent clearly took the law into his own hands. A boarding-house keeper must come to Court to enforce his jus retentionis. He is in no better position than a landlord. Then again, the respondent must show a clear right, and this he has not done. He has not shown that anything was owing to him. I submit that the rule should be made absolute.

Buchanan, J.: The applicant obtained a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be compelled to give up the applicant's goods now in the respondent's possession. He alleges that he was lodging with the respondent, and was assaulted by him whilst at breakfast on December 21, and thereupon he left his lodgings. He demanded his goods, and tendered the amount which would be due up to the date of his leaving the house. I see that when the matter came before the Judge in Chambers, no notice was given. Now, upon the rule being served, and affidavits being filed, a different complexion is put on the whole affair. It would seem that there had been a dispute between the parties early in December, and the applicant himself left a note stating he would leave the premises on the 1st January. He remained on, and on the 21st December, after the defendant had in the early morning gained access to his room by means of the balcony, the parties had some row, and there was an exchange of blows between the applicant and the respondent. In the affidavits, each charges the other with being the aggressor, and it is by no means clear that the applicant was free from blame. The applicant gave notice that he would terminate his lodgings by the end of the month, but he left before this month expired, and refuses now to pay for his monthly lodgings. Mr. De Villiers has shown that a landlord has a lien on his lodger's goods for the amount of his rent, and the applicant must pay that rent before he can get his goods. I do not think that the rule would have been granted in the first instance if all the facts had been then set forth. The rule will now be discharged, with costs.

GREEN AND CO. V. KRETZSCHMAR.

Mr. Gardiner moved as a matter of urgency for the attachment of the defendant ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Applicants stated that the defendant was indebted to them in the sum of £34 11s. 5d., in respect that the debt was contracted in this colony, and that they had reason to believe that he would shortly be returning to the Transvaal, where he was domiciled.

Order granted for personal attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem, not to be executed provided the respondent give security for the sum of £50. to abide the result of the action to be instituted by the applicants forthwith.

DARTER BROS. V. KRETZSCHMAR.

Mr. Gardiner moved as a matter of urgency for the attachment of the defendant ad fundandam jurisdictionem, pending an action to be brought by the applicants to recover a debt amounting to £12 14s. 5d., for goods sold and delivered. Applicants believed that the respondent shortly intended to return to the Transvaal, where he was domiciled.

Buchanan, J., said that this was a debt that should be dealt with in the Magistrate's Court, but he would grant a similar order to that in the last case, security being fixed at £20.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. } 1904.
BECHUANALAND ESTATE } Jan. 13th.
SYNDICATE.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for leave to sue by edictal citation for £666 17s. 6d., quitrent and stamp duty in respect of certain farms in the division of Kuruman, against the Bechuanaland Estate Syndicate, and for £240 odd against John Francis Connolly, for his half-share in the said farms; and for leave to attach the said farms ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Connolly was at present believed to be in Jamaica. The syndicate's registered address was care of Ingie, Holmes and Co., London, and the trustees were Messrs. Max Langerman, Robert Tennant, and S. Paddon.

Buchanan, J., said he should have thought there would be no difficulty in ascertaining the address of such a well-known public man as Mr. Max Langerman. He supposed that his address was Johannesburg.

Mr. Jones said they had no definite information as to his whereabouts.

Leave was granted to attach half the farm Povall ad fundandam jurisdictionem so far as Connolly is concerned, personal service to be effected, if possible, failing which publication once in a Jamaica newspaper, the "Daily Telegraph" (London), and the "Government Gazette." Leave was also granted to attach the other half of the farm as far as the syndicate is concerned, personal service to be effected, if possible, upon the respondents, Messrs. Langerman, Tennant, and Paddon, and also at the offices of Messrs. Ingie, Holmes, and Co., failing which, one publication in the "Johannesburg Star," the "Daily Telegraph" (London), and the "Government Gazette," citation to be returnable on the 15th April.

Ex parte MBULWANA.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register in the petitioner's name certain land, viz., the farm Modderfontein, in the district of Mount Curry, East Griqualand, left by the petitioner's father, Jantje Mbulwana. Jantje died intestate, and no legal proceedings had been taken in connection with his estate. In accordance with native custom, the petitioner applied for transfer of the property as the eldest son of the first or principal marriage of the deceased. A certificate was also put in in support of the application signed by the Chief Magistrate of the territory. The application was made under Act No. 18 of 1854. The consent was signed by all the surviving wives and children. Counsel quoted in support of the application the case of Green v. Chiell (V. Juba, p. 330), and Ex parte Mabuya (13 C.T.R. 970).

Rule was granted, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause why an order should not be made as prayed, rule to be published once in a Kokstad newspaper, and once in "Imvo," and to be returnable on the 12th March.

Ex parte SCHELTEHA.

Mr. M. Bisset moved on behalf of the petitioner for leave to pay out certain money from the Guardians' Fund, in order to enable minors to acquire certain shares in three farms at the price at which it was bequeathed to their father. The sum of £840 was required in order to provide the purchase price, and the cost of transfer and other charges. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

GLASS V. GLASS.

Mr. Buchanan moved on behalf of the plaintiff (Agnes Glass), of Cape Town, for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing that, divorce. The petitioner stated that they were married in London in 1887, that the defendant deserted her in Cape Town in November last, and that she had reason to believe that he did not intend to return to her. He had proceeded up-country.

Buchanan, J., said that the petition seemed to be very loosely drawn, and it afforded no evidence of jurisdiction. There was no indication of domicile. The petition must be amended. Leave would be given to mention the matter again tomorrow (Thursday).

Ex parte RATHFELDER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Buchanan moved on behalf of petitioners, husband and wife, who reside at Belle Ombre, Wynberg, for an order authorising an amendment of the husband's name in the Deeds Registry in certain transfers, mortgage bonds, and the antenuptial contract. It appeared that the first-named petitioner was baptised Emanuel Otto Rathfelder, and his name appeared in the aforesaid documents as "Otto Emmanuel Rathfelder." The matter had arisen in consequence of the proposed partition of the estate Belle Ombre, as between the first-named petitioner and his brother, under which the former wished to execute a mortgage bond in favour of his brother. The Registrar declined to register this without an order of Court.

An order was granted, authorising amendment of the first-named petitioner's name in the ante-nuptial contract, the transfer of the 24th February, 1903, the mortgage bond of the 15th May, and the cession of a later date.

Ex parte SLABERT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the registration of certain property. The petitioners were legatees under the joint will of their parents, and the will provided that except for one or more sums of £50 the property could not be alienated. Certain of the legatees had disposed of their shares, but the Registrar remarked that Raynier Slabert did not appear to be able to take over under the will, and that it did not appear that the property could be disposed of to anyone except a co-heir, and that a mortgage could not be effected. A consent paper was put in signed by all the heirs.

The matter was ordered to stand over. The Registrar of Deeds to report.

KELLER V. STEYN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Russell moved for the making absolute of a rule calling upon the respondents to show cause why they should not be ejected from the applicant's farm, in the district of Oudtshoorn, and to restrain the respondents from trespassing on the property.

Order granted.

Ex parte KRUGER.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for an order authorising petitioner to sign all the necessary papers, to give transfer of a farm to the legatee, without consent of the other executors.

The petitioner was joint executor of his father's estate with one Johannes Willem Horne, who had not been heard of for ten years, and whose whereabouts at present are unknown.

Order granted.

Ex parte THEUNNISSEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the petitioner, as executor in the estate of the late Elizabeth Frederica Theunissen, for leave to sell certain landed property in the division of Beaufort West. Testatrix had left five children, and petitioner had been unable to re-let the property. He asked for leave to sell the land by public auction, and for the proceeds to be paid into the Guardians' Fund, the master to be authorised to pay such sums as might be found necessary for the maintenance and education of the children during their minority. The proceeds of the lease of the property had formerly been devoted to the payment of interest on the mortgage bonds, and maintenance and education of the children.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report, the sale not to be effected until the purchase price has been approved by the Master.

Ex parte HEYDENRYCH.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order for the removal of the petitioner's name from the roll of advocates, in order that he may take steps to be articulated as an attorney.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SMITH.

Mr. Russell moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem. The petitioner lived at Constantia, and his wife had had to be removed to the Valkenberg Asylum on account of lunacy. She was the owner of certain property at Beaufort West, which had been provisionally sold to one Nel. The property was at present in charge of Mr. Benjamin T. Pritchard, of Beaufort West.

An order was granted, appointing Advocate Struben as curator ad litem, pending proceedings to be taken to have the respondent declared of unsound mind, summons to be served on the alleged lunatic and the curator, and Mr. B. T. Pritchard to be curator bonis pending the proceedings.

MOORE V. MOORE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of the petitioner for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce. The defendant maliciously deserted petitioner in June, 1901, leaving for the front with a company of the Royal Engineers. He had not since returned to her. He was now supposed to be in Johannesburg.

Leave granted, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which, one publication in the "Johannesburg Star" and the "Government Gazette," citation to be returnable on the 29th February.

Ex parte MCATEER.

Mr. Buchanan moved on behalf of the petitioner, of Port Elizabeth, as executrix testamentary in the estate of her late husband, for leave to raise certain money on mortgage on landed property. Testator left property of the value of £8,000 odd in Port Elizabeth, to the daughter of his former marriage, and the five daughters of his marriage with petitioner, with usufruct to the petitioner. The property was in bad repair, four of the children (all majors) were dependent upon petitioner, and all the children consented to the application. The property was already mortgaged to the amount of about £2,000, and petitioner sought authority to raise a further loan of £750 on the property. On account of the bad repair of the Caledonian Hotel, the licence had been lost. The Master, in his report, said that the usufructuary ought to have kept the property in repair out of the proceeds.

Buchanan, J., said that the usufructuary's first duty was to keep the property in good repair.

Mr. Buchanan said that she had evidently had insufficient funds.

Buchanan, J., said that leave would be granted to pass a mortgage bond to carry out necessary repairs, subject to the amount of the bond being approved by the Master. It must be understood that the interest was to be paid out of the annual income, and if necessary the petitioner must reduce her expenditure to make it balance.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte LUMB. { 1904.
{ Jan. 14th.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for a rule nisi restraining one Muller from disposing of or otherwise dealing with the goods of the African Mercantile Co., now or presently in his possession, pending an action to be brought by the petitioners. The petitioner was Edwin Barron Lumb, acting for and on behalf of the liquidator of the African Mercantile Co., Ltd., in liquidation, and for the chairman and others. The petitioner stated that one Gottlieb Goerne, of Hamburg, was until the 21st August last general manager of the company for Europe, that, acting in such capacity, he sent various orders for goods by the company to Europe and elsewhere to be executed, and also caused large sums of the company's moneys to be distributed, ostensibly in payment of the goods ordered. In August last he disappeared, and a close examination into the company's books revealed that the said Goerne had been dealing in his own name with the company's moneys, and that a large sum was still unaccounted for. Goerne was now believed to be in German South-west Africa. A writ had been issued for his arrest for embezzlement. Certain goods had been sent by him to the order of one Basson, of Somerset West Strand, who had received a letter signed by Richard Oberg, formerly bookkeeper in the employ of Mr. Muller. It was believed that the said Oberg was acting in collusion with the said Goerne, and that various other parcels of goods belonging to the company had come into Mr. Muller's possession since Mr. Goerne's dismissal, and were held by him at present, or had been disposed of.

Rule nisi granted restraining the said R. Muller from disposing of or otherwise dealing with the goods mentioned in the invoice, or any other goods sent to him on behalf of the said Goerne, pending an action to be forthwith instituted in this Court, the rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime, leave being reserved to the respondent Muller to move, if so advised, to set aside the rule.

GLASS V GLASS.

Mr. Buchanan said that this matter was before the Court on Wednesday. His lordship was not then satisfied as to whether the parties were domiciled in the Colony. Counsel said that a reference to a previous application in the matter, which was a record in the Registrar's Office, showed that paragraph 3 of her petition contained an allegation as to domicile which was admitted by the husband. The petitioner there stated: "My husband came to Cape Town in or about the year 1896, and settled in Cape Town with my daughter and myself." She also stated that they had carried on business as boarding-house keepers in Cape Town. The first application was for maintenance, but the defendant subsequently deserted petitioner, and the last tidings she heard from him took the form of a letter, written by him in the train at Aliwal North. Hence the present action for restitution of conjugal rights, on the ground of the desertion.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which, one publication in the "Johannesburg Star," "Cape Times," and "Government Gazette," citation to be returnable on the 12th March.

Ex parte HUSKISSON AND ANOTHER.

Will, privileged—Administration—Survivor's election.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the petitioners, as execution in the estate of the late Harry Hushison (brother of one of the petitioners) to issue letters of administration. The testator died at Port Elizabeth, leaving a widow and three children, and property of the approximate value of about £15,000. He had executed a document purporting to be his last will and testament. This was written on two sheets of paper, and in addition to the signature of the deceased, only bore the name of one witness. On the first page there was no signature, either of testator or witness. The document was entirely in the handwriting of the deceased, but it was not witnessed, in accordance with the provisions of Ordinance 15 of 1845. Application was now made to the Court for the will to be recognised as a privileged will, in accordance with the decision in Steer's case (5 Supreme Court Reports, p. 313).

[Buchanan, J.: Then the legacies are not valid?]

Mr. Benjamin said that that was not the question now before the Court. They were merely asking for an order authorising the issue of letters of administration.

[Buchanan, J.: Has notice been given to the widow?]

Mr. Benjamin said he did not think so. The present application was brought by the executor and executrix.

[Buchanan, J.: The widow ought to be informed. You see she has a life interest. She might chafe to have the will set aside altogether, and take her half-share in community.]

Mr. Benjamin said he did not see how she could do that, seeing that the testator was only disposing of his half-share of the estate. The question now is, "Is this a valid will?" We now ask only for letters of administration, and, of course, the executors will be responsible for their administration. The case of Executors of Eaton v. Eaton (1875, 173), has been followed in several subsequent cases.

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said that an order would be granted authorising the letters of administration to be issued, but it must be clearly understood that this order did not in any way affect the rights of the widow under community of property, nor did it in any way affect the provisions as to usufruct or the legacies.

Ex parte THOMPSON.

Mr. Fremont moved for an order authorising an amendment of the petitioner's late husband's name in a certain deed of transfer and letters of administration by the Registrar of Deeds, in accordance with his baptismal name.

Buchanan, J., said it was not clear that the seller of the property did dispose of it to the petitioner's husband. He thought the Court should have more information. Certainly it was at present insufficient upon which to give an order. He should like to know what position the Registrar took up. The matter must stand over for further information.

Ex parte THEUNNISSEN AND OTHERS.

Will — Purchase of estate by beneficiaries—Transfer.

This was a motion for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass a clear transfer of certain property which, the applicants said, they had inherited from their father. The petitioners were Marthinus Aegidius Theunissen, of Smithfield, Orange River Colony; George Nicolaas Theunissen, of Middelburg, Cape Colony; and Dirk Cornelis Theunissen, of Edensburg, Orange River Colony. They stated that by the last will of their father, Nicolaas Hendrik Theunissen and surviving spouse, and codicils attached, the farms Zeekoegat, alias Oorlogspoort, situate in the division of Coleberg, and measuring 11,301 morgen, and the farm Popkloof, situate in the division of Middelburg, measuring 1,827 morgen, were bequeathed to the petitioners. They had applied to the executrix for transfer, and she had signed the necessary documents for transfer of the said land. Upon the deeds being lodged for registration, the Registrar of Deeds objected to pass the same, on the grounds that he considered that the transfers should be made subject to the conditions mentioned in the several codicils to the said will. Petitioners submitted that the points raised by the Registrar would not now apply, inasmuch as (a), the condition of sub-section (a) of the codicil No. 1, relating to the life interest of the survivor, had been waived by her in accordance with formal consent; (b) that with regard to the condition referred to in sub-section (b) the petitioners submitted that this would not apply to themselves, and, as they had agreed amongst themselves to waive the rights given to each of them thereunder, there would be no need for the same to be embodied in the transfer; (c) that, with regard to sub-section (c), petitioners had complied with this, as would appear from an acknowledgement given by the executrix. With regard to codicil No. 2 petitioners submitted that it could not have been the intention of the testators that the conditions therein contained should apply to the said ground for the following reasons: (a) That in a later codicil (No. 3) a portion of the said ground was bequeathed to them free from the conditions of the said codicil No. 2; (b) that the ground was bequeathed to petitioners subject to their paying into the estate specific sums for the same. The petitioners, therefore, prayed for an order directing the Registrar to allow the said transfers to them, to be passed from the estate free of the said conditions.

The affidavit of Gus. Trollip, of Cape Town, stated that he was acting as local attorney to the petitioners. A sale had been effected of the properties referred to to the R., B. and B. Syndicate, whereby the purchasers were to pay as the purchase amount thereof the sum of £26,250. Petitioners contended that the said sale was made subject to the conditions set out in the will of their late father in respect of the properties sold, but as a result of a refusal of the purchasers to take transfer in such terms, he had been instructed to present to the Court the foregoing petition with a view of overcoming this difficulty, which would, otherwise, result in the abandonment by the purchasers of the said sale. The purchasers had notified them through their attorneys that unless transfer were passed within six weeks from that date (16th November), they would consider the advisability of cancelling the said sale. If such sale were abandoned, the properties would far from realise the same sum as that to be paid by the R., B., and B. Syndicate who were compelled to pay an exceptionally high figure, owing to the fact that the properties were essential to enable the said syndicate to carry through a certain scheme with an eye to farming on an extensive scale, which scheme, without the property now sought to be transferred, would be impracticable. Furthermore, a judgment had been obtained in this court for £5,600 at the instance of the mortgagees of the property, and a writ of execution had been issued, and the property had been attached. The petitioners could not anticipate such sale in execution through lack of the necessary funds.

Mr. Buchanan moved.

Buchanan, J., said that the Registrar had taken sixteen objections, and he would like to know what was to be said about those not dealt with.

Mr. Buchanan said there was really only one point of vital importance left now, and that was in regard to the fidei commissum. He pointed out the three brothers were in a very awkward position, as, in expectation of this sale going through, they had bought other ground, and contracted other liabilities.

Buchanan, J.: The property in this estate is large, and it appears to have been mortgaged by the testator during his lifetime for a very considerable sum of money. Judgment has been obtained on the bond on the property, the property is now declared executable, and may be sold to pay debts. The petitioners are the beneficiaries under the will, and to avoid the loss to themselves, they propose taking the property, paying off the bond, and selling it to a syndicate, by which means they will obtain a considerably better price than if the property is sold in execution. Under all these circumstances, and considering the authority given by the will to the legatees to sell the property, provided that it is submitted to one another, I think the Registrar of Deeds may be authorised to pass free the transfers to the petitioners of their respective bequests. This order is, however, subject to any objections that the Registrar of Deeds may have on other grounds which are disregarded.

[Applicants' Attorneys, G. Trollip.]

Ex parte SKELTON AND } 1901.
OTHERS. } Jan. 14th.

Will—Foreign executor—Security —Rule 397.

Mr. Close moved for an order authorising the Master of the Supreme Court to issue an order sealing and signing the English probate without the security of the executors. The petitioners were domiciled in England, and the South African property was held in trust for the beneficiaries under the will. The property was vested in the trustees.

Mr. Close: The case of Human v. Human's Executors (10 Juta 172) shows that the executors in this case need not necessarily give security.

[Buchanan, J.: There have been many subsequent cases.]

Yes, there is, for instance, Re Pentz's Estate (2 C.T.R., 65).

[Buchanan, J.: The ordinary rule is that an executor testamentary need not give security, but an executor dative must do so, and so must a foreign executor.]

But here all the beneficiaries consent to the Master granting letters of administration, and undertake to indemnify him.

I do not think the Act supports it. The difficulty here is that if the executors have to give security, they will only be able to get it from one of the Trust Companies at very great expense.

Buchanan, J.: I see no reason why the ordinary Rule of Court should not be followed. Security should be lodged, with application to have the letters of administration recognised, and I see no reason why the estate should not be administered by the trustees in due time.

Ex parte THE EXECUTOR IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE ANNIE SARAH HALL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the petitioner to pass a mortgage bond of £2,500 on certain landed property, situated in Bree-street.
Order granted.

ESTATE DE JAGER V. TRYSE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order of ejectment against the respondents from the applicant's farm at Buffelsdrift, for a division of the crops, and for an order restraining the respondents from trespassing on the property. The affidavit of one of the executors set out that on the death of Carl Johannes de Jager, respondents were allowed to continue their occupation of the land as tenants, and under the same conditions, which included a division of the crops. A considerable quantity of oats was at present on the farm, the respondents had refused to divide the harvest, and had set up a claim to the property which had frightened intending purchasers.

An order was granted, restraining the respondents from removing any crops until a division of the same has taken place, and one half handed over to the applicant. No order was granted on the application for ejectment.

BAILEY V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied, under Rule 359, sub-section (e), for an order setting aside a certain judgment against the applicant, and for leave to defend the action. The applicant had been convicted of theft at the Paarl, and sentenced to six years' imprisonment, with hard labour. Judgment was given against him in the Supreme Court in December last for the sum of £600 odd, but the Chief Constable at the Breakwater informed him that he did not think there would be time, under the prison regulations, to obtain the necessary consent of the Colonial Secretary in order that an appearance might be entered.

Mr. Howel Jones, for the respondents, said that it was apparent that the prisoner had not had an opportunity of communicating with his attorneys.

Application granted, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte LOUBSER.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend the name of the petitioner on certain title deeds to his correct name, Coenraad Hendrik Adriaan Loubser. The name on the title deeds was Coenraad Adriaan Hendrik Loubser, and it was only recently that the mistake was discovered on the baptismal register.

Order granted.

Ex parte VICE.

This was an application on behalf of Heppsbah May Vice for leave to raise £300 on mortgage on the estate of her late husband, in which she was executrix testamentary. Under the will, the petitioner had a usufruct of the farm, and on her demise the property was to be equally divided among the children. The farm had been let, but petitioner and her son proposed taking it over on the 1st January, and the money would be required to renovate the place and for the purchase of farming implements. The Master held that under the will the surviving spouse could not raise a mortgage.

Mr. Buchanan moved.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further information, which his lordship suggested should be shown to the Master.

HYND V. AFRICAN BANKING CORPORATION.

Mr. Close moved to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the African Banking Corporation from paying out certain moneys in their possession belonging to the applicant. Summons had already been taken out in the Magistrate's Court for the recovery of debts, which it was alleged the applicant owed on certain three cheques, and counsel asked that the Magistrate's Court should be granted leave to attach the moneys.

Rule made absolute, and leave was granted to attach the moneys on writ issued by a competent Court, on judgment for the day mentioned in the petition.

Ex parte WILLIAMS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to enable the petitioner to institute proceedings against his mother-in-law, Sarah Ann Jupp, to have her declared of unsound mind and incapable of managing her person and property. Petitioner's wife was one of the next-of-kin of seven to Sarah Ann Jupp, who had become entitled to a certain policy of insurance, value £300, and, further, was entitled to the payment of certain pension funds from the C.G.R. She had been for a considerable time suffering from chronic melancholia, and at present was confined in Valkenberg Lunatic Asylum.

Order granted, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appointed as curator ad litem. Summons to be served on the curator.

Ex parte BEYERS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for a rule nisi interdicting the petitioners' brothers, from selling, letting, or incumbering in any other way certain property left by their father until satisfactory security had been given for the payment of £600, to which they were entitled under the will. Mr. Buchanan said it seemed that the survivor (who was the usufructuary), had not waited until she had died, but had waived her life usufruct in favour of the sons and given them transfer immediately. It seemed there was some ground for fear, because one of the sons, who was entitled to the share in the property, had refused to take possession unless his sisters were first secured. The others, however, seemed to have no such scruples.

Rule granted, restraining the respondents from selling or incumbering the property bequeathed without first giving security to the petitioners, rule to be returnable on the 11th February.

Ex parte SUTTON.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the release of the petitioner from imprisonment, under a writ for failing to obey a judgment. The petitioner said that in September last the plaintiffs, Philip Bros., obtained a decree of civil imprisonment against him. He was arrested on the 6th October, and lodged in the gaol at East London, where he still remained. He had been very ill during his detention in gaol. He had been in the employ of His Majesty's Customs, and received a salary of £9 a month, out of which he had to support a wife and family. In consequence of his arrest, his salary had been stopped. He was willing to make a small monthly payment towards the discharge of the debt, but he was now unable to earn anything. He was without property.

His Lordship asked what the amount of the debt was?

Mr. Gardiner said there were two sums, viz., £26 7s. and £56 10s.

Mr. Buchanan, who appeared for the petitioning creditors (Messrs. Philip Bros.), said that a copy of the affidavit did not appear to have been served upon Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne, who were their town attorneys, but had been served upon the plaintiffs direct.

Buchanan, J., said that the applicant ought not to have gone behind the plaintiffs' attorney in this way. The matter would stand over until Tuesday next.

Ex parte NAGGS.

Partnership—Death of partner—
Directions to surviving partner to carry on business for benefit of a third party.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order enabling the petitioner to acquire absolutely a certain business in which he was now a partner. Petitioner was executor testamentary in the estate of the late Wm. Cornwall, with whom he had carried on business at Sterkstroom, under the style of Wm. Cornwall and Co. Each partner owned one half-share of the business. There had been no division of the profits. Under his will deceased bequeathed his share in the business to his nephew, Frank Cornwall Pearson, aged 14 years, and directed that the petitioner should continue the business for the mutual benefit of himself and the said nephew. No curator, tutor, or guardian had been appointed on behalf of the minor. His father was dead. His mother had married again. Petitioner contended that deceased had no power to direct him to continue the business for the mutual benefit of the nephew and himself, and that at Cornwall's death the partnership ceased. He proposed to acquire the other half share in the business, and for that purpose had had the assets valued by a sworn appraiser. He was willing to take over all the liabilities, and to pay over the sum of £334 14s. 2d., which was half the value of the assets, to the mother of the minor as his natural guardian. The mother consented. The Master, while approving the petition, suggested that payment of the money should be made into the Guardians' Fund.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte REES AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the petitioners to cause a certain roadway in the Municipality of Cambridge, East London, to be surveyed, and portions deducted for the purchasers under the sub-divisions of the quirent land, and empowering the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer thereof.

[Buchanan, J.: The Registrar of Deeds can transfer the land with consent of parties.]

I thought the Registrar might feel a difficulty in doing so without an order of Court.

[Buchanan, J.: I do not think the matter is ripe for the Court to consider, and no order, therefore, will be made.]

Ex parte ELTON AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sell certain property settled by petitioner under an ante-nuptial contract upon the children of the marriage. The petitioner stated that he settled on trust a certain piece of freehold land, situate at Port Elizabeth. On that land was a building which had cost £325. It was proposed to accept an offer of £500 for the property. Petitioner had been unable to carry out his undertaking to reduce the bond on the property, on account of his household expenses. He was willing, however, to cede his two life insurance policies for the benefit of the children, and he undertook during his lifetime to pay the premiums. He asked for an order authorising the sale of the property by the trustee under the ante-nuptial contract for £500, the trustee to pay off the mortgage bond from the proceeds, and after the payment of all legal expenses (inclusive of costs of this application), the balance to be invested for the benefit of the children.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte THE CAPE TOWN HEBREW CONGREGATION.

Mr. Alexander moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, authorising the amendment of certain trust deeds. Publication of the rule had been given in accordance with the order of Court.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

Ex parte THE PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE PORT ELIZABETH QUOIT CLUB.

Mr. Buchanan moved, on behalf of John Algernon Willetts and another, as president and vice-president of the Port Elizabeth Quoit Club, for leave to sell a certain piece of ground, No. 20, in the division of Port Elizabeth. The petitioners stated that the club was formed in 1842. The ground in question was acquired for the purposes of the club. The original purchase price was £175, which was paid as to £162 thereof by certain proprietary members whose names were endorsed on the deed, and the balance of the purchase price and the transfer expenses, it was believed, had been paid out of the ordinary funds of the club, though there was no record of such payment. Of the original members, five only were now living, as far as was known. There were sixteen ordinary members of the club, one of whom was also a proprietary member. Owing to the lack of interest in the club, the present members had resolved to wind up its affairs. The estimated value of the said piece of land was about £700. The petitioners desired to wind up the club's affairs, to realise the said piece of land, and divide the proceeds amongst the proprietary members or legal representatives of such as may be dead, in proportion to the amount subscribed by them, or invest the shares of those who cannot be found or are unknown in some substantial trust company.

Buchanan, J., said that the balance, instead of being invested, should be paid to the Master as dividends of unknown claimants. A rule would be granted calling upon all concerned to show cause, on the 12th March, why an order should not be granted, rule to be published once in the "Eastern Province Herald," "Port Elizabeth Advertiser," and "Government Gazette."

BIRK V. EDMENBOROUGH AND BEWSTER.

Mr. Close moved to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the respondents from selling or in any way parting with six horses purchased by them at auction on the 6th December last, on the condition that the animals were not to be removed from the yard until they had been paid for. It was alleged that the respondents bought the animals at auction for £105 15s., that they had removed five of the horses, and had not paid the purchase price. Steps were being taken to institute an action for recovery of the price.

Rule made absolute, pending payment of the purchase price, or result of action to be brought forthwith, costs to be costs in the cause.

REX V. GREENING. { 1904.

Culpable insolvency—Ordinance No. 6, 1843—Act No. 38, 1884.

An insolvent failing to attend any one of the three statutory meetings of his creditors may be convicted under the 71st section of Ordinance No. 6, 1843, of the crime of culpable insolvency. (Vorster v. Lillienfeld, 5, E. D. C. Rep., p. 254, approved of.)

An insolvent was convicted of contravening the 71st section of the Insolvent Ordinance in having failed, when thereto required by the Master, to give a sufficient explanation of the causes of his insolvency. The evidence showed that it was the trustee, and not the Master, who had required the explanation. The Crown did not support the conviction, and the same was quashed.

The 10th section of Act No. 38, 1884, makes it culpable insolvency, when, on being required thereto in writing by the trustee, the insolvent fails to give a sufficient explanation, punishable under the 71st section of the Ordinance.

This was an appeal against a decision of the R.M. of Cape Town, in which the appellant was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for culpable insolvency.

The appellant's estate was sequestrated on March 20, 1903. He was subsequently charged before the Resident Magistrate with fraudulent and culpable insolvency. The Magistrate took a preparatory examination, and the Crown dropped the charge of fraudulent insolvency and remitted the prisoner for trial by the Magistrate on the charge of culpable insolvency. The charge consisted of three counts: (a) That he wrongfully and unlawfully failed to attend a third meeting of his creditors; (b) that he failed to keep such reasonable and proper books as would clearly indicate the nature of his business transactions; and (c) being insolvent on March 20, 1903, he had failed to give the Master an explanation of his insolvency. Counsel took exception to the charge on the third count on the ground that there was no allegation that the appellant had been served with notice by the Master or the Resident Magistrate, and as to the other counts, that there was not sufficient evidence to support the conviction. The evidence at the trial and the correspondence that passed between the insolvent and the trustee were read. In his letter to the trustee the day before the third meeting, the insolvent gave a history of his financial misfortunes. When he came to this country first he was doing a "roaring" business, which necessitated the employment of six clerks. An unfortunate speculation at Sea Point did him a lot of harm, but the real cause of his downfall was a man with whom he had a lot of legal work, and who had failed to pay counsel's fees over a recent action. This man told counsel that the fees had been given to appellant, and that resulted in the bar black list, and his immediate extinction, for he had to suffer absolution from the instance in an action he instituted against this man. The prisoner was convicted, and sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Mr. Gardiner (for appellant): My appeal is chiefly against the first and third counts. He was not required to attend the third meeting, nor was he called upon by the Master to give a satisfactory account of the causes of his insolvency. As to the second count, and the case in general, there is not sufficient evidence to support the conviction. The first count charges the prisoner with having failed to attend the third meeting of his creditors; but there is no allegation that he was called upon by the Master to attend this third meeting. (See Section 71 of the Insolvent Ordinance.) The whole section must be read together; notice must be given of each meeting, and failure to attend "the first, second, and third meeting" is not the same thing as failure to attend the first, or the second, or the third.

I can hardly hold that in view of Vorster v. Lütjenfeld (5, E.D.C. 254). I confess that that case is against me, but I felt bound to bring the prisoner's contention to the notice of the Court. He got no notice from the Master, and the notice he did get did not specify the hour of the meeting. The evidence shows that he attended at 10.30. As this Court had at that time recently changed its hour of sitting from 10 a.m. to 10.30, his mistake was very natural. As to the second count, failure to keep proper books, there is absolutely no evidence. The trustee does not say in what way the books were incorrect or incomplete; and at most the evidence only shows that the trustee did not regard them as sufficient; that, however, was a point on which the Magistrate should have formed his own opinion, and not have blindly accepted the opinion of the trustee. He should have been called upon to produce his books, and then the trustee should have pointed out any inaccuracies.

Lastly, he is charged with not having given the Master a satisfactory explanation of the causes of his insolvency, but he was never asked to do so. Of course, he might have been charged under section 10 of Act 38 of 1884 with not having given his trustee a satisfactory explanation, but he was charged under the Insolvent Ordinance.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown): I do not wish to press the third count.

The Magistrate could have sentenced the prisoner separately on each count to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. Had he done so, of course, the sentence on the third count must have been quashed. He, however, pronounced a general sentence in respect of all the counts, and I submit that if the conviction of two out of the three counts be upheld, that sentence was by no means excessive.

Buchanan, J.: In this case the appellant was charged before the Magistrate on three counts with culpable insolvency: (1) With not having attended the third meeting of creditors; (2) with having failed to keep proper books; (3) with having failed to give a proper explanation of the cause of his insolvency. As to the third count, the 71st section makes it an act of culpable insolvency if the insolvent, after being thereunto required by the Master or Resident Magistrate, fails to give a true and satisfactory explanation of the causes of his insolvency, and that is the charge laid. As a matter of fact, however, the evidence shows that the insolvent was called upon by the trustee to give this explanation. By the subsequent Act of 1884, section 10, the trustee could have called upon the insolvent to make this explanation, and had the charge laid been that the trustee called upon him, the conviction might possibly have been sustained. The learned counsel who appears for the Crown is not now prepared to support the conviction on the charge as laid in this third count. It is certainly only a technical objection to the conviction, and I think it shows the fairness of the Crown in not pressing a charge when technically it is incorrect. The conviction on the third count, therefore, will be quashed. As to the first and second counts, the evidence is so ample, so sufficient, and so satisfactory that the Magistrate had no option but to convict the prisoner on these two charges. As, however, the Magistrate has given one collective sentence on the three charges, the case will be returned to the Magistrate, with instructions to pass such sentence as he thinks adequate on the first and second counts. As to the third count, the conviction will be quashed.

[Appellant's Attorney: W. G. Coulton.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte BUTTON. { 1914.
Jan. 19th.

This was an application for an order releasing the applicant from civil imprisonment. Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant, and Mr. Buchanan was for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that the applicant was arrested on the 6th October last, on a decree of civil imprisonment for debt, granted on the 18th September. The applicant had a wife and six children to maintain, and while he was in prison, his salary of £9 per month was being stopped by the Customs Department.

Mr. Buchanan said that he was instructed to oppose the motion, and read the affidavit of the plaintiff's law agent, which set out that the applicant had ceded to his wife, to whom he was married in community of property, shares to the value of £1,000. The debt had been owing for several years, and the plaintiffs would not agree to payment by instalments.

Mr. Gardiner pointed out that it seemed unlikely that a man possessing property would remain three months in gaol.

The matter was ordered to stand over until 4th February, in order that an answering affidavit might be put in on the question of the property.

SHEPPARD AND CO. V. STEER.

Mr. Gardiner, for the plaintiff (respondent in the application), moved for judgment, under Rule 32nd, for a full and detailed account of all the matters entrusted to the defendant by the plaintiff and their clients, and for the delivery of all title-deeds, etc., belonging to the plaintiff.

Mr. Close, for the defendant (applicant in the application), moved for an order authorising the defendant to purge his default, in order that he might enter appearance. Counsel read the affidavit of the applicant, which set out that at different times since November he had handed over papers and statements to the plaintiff's attorneys, and on the 6th inst., he handed over all the papers in his possession.

Mr. Gardiner read the affidavit of Edward Sheppard, the general agent of Sheppard and Co., which set out that since the beginning of 1903 he had tried to get a proper and detailed account of the matters entrusted to the defendant, who had made repeated promises, which were never carried out. He respectfully claimed his rights under the Rule of Court.

Mr. Close then read the replying affidavit of the applicant, which stated that he had always been ready and willing to comply with the plaintiff's request. His default was due to the fact that negotiations were going on at the time with the plaintiff's attorneys.

Leave was granted to enter an appearance, on condition that the defendant goes to trial next term, the question of costs to stand over.

EXECUTORS OF ESTATE { 1914.
BLACK AND OTHERS V. { Jan. 19th.
JACKSON AND CO, LTD.

This was an application on notice of motion for an interdict restraining the respondents, who are engaged as contractors on the new Dock-works for the Admiralty at Simon's Town, from causing or allowing stones to be rolled down from a certain quarry now being worked by the respondents, the ground of the application being that the operations thus carried on were dangerous to life and property. The respondents were also called upon to show cause why they should not be ordered to pay the costs of this application.

The affidavit of Mr. William Runci-man, of Simon's Town, said that he was one of the executors in the estate of the late William Black, whose estate comprised a considerable extent of ground near to the main road at Simon's Town. The respondents were contractors, carrying on certain works at Simon's Town on account of the Admiralty, and in connection with such work, they had opened up a quarry on the hillside. Since operations had been carried on, stones had rolled down the mountain side on to the applicants' land. Applicants desired to cut up their land into plots for building, but could not do so owing to the stones rolling down on the ground.

The affidavit of Mr. G. Trollip, applicants' attorney, stated that on April 3rd, 1903, he wrote a letter on behalf of the applicants to the Rear-Admiral (Sir Arthur Moore), complaining of the way in which the quarrying was being carried on. The contractors, in their excavations, liberated heavy boulders of rock, which had rolled down, and had torn up fir-trees of many years' growth in their path, and had it not been for the forest of trees, would have gone through the houses below. This work of destruction was going on daily, with utter disregard of his clients' rights, and apparently with callousness to the danger to human life. His clients' property had been depreciated, and he requested that the works should be stopped. Replying on the 6th April, the Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief at the Simon's Town Station said that the complaint was being inquired into, and that a further communication would be made on the subject. This further communication was made on the 16th April, and stated that the work referred to had been carried out as far as possible without injury to the surrounding property; but in opening up the quarry, it had been impossible to prevent occasional stones rolling down the hill. Now that substantial benching had been provided, it was thought there would be no further cause for complaint. Any further communication should be addressed to the firm of Sir John Jackson, Limited, to whom the land on which they were carrying out the quarrying had been transferred. The works being necessary for Imperial defence purposes, the Commander-in-Chief was quite unable to give orders that they should be stopped. A letter in identical terms was also addressed to Sir John Jackson, Limited.

The answering affidavit of Messrs. Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset of the 2nd May, said that the applicants appeared to have greatly exaggerated the position of affairs. At the commencement of the excavation referred to, some stones did roll down on to the applicants' property, but no serious damage was done. The applicants' assertion that "the work of destruction is going on daily, etc." was without foundation. A considerable amount of benching had been done at the face of the quarry, which removed the possibility of further stones rolling down. For the actual damage done by stones rolling down occasionally on to the applicants' land, the company were prepared to pay reasonable compensation, but they (the writers) must point out that, for building purposes, the stones would enhance the value of the land.

The replying affidavit of Mr. G. Trollip stated that the estate had suffered damage, because they had been prevented from selling the land.

The affidavit of Mr. Runciman stated that, in consequence of the assurance given by the contractors as to protective measures being taken, they decided to see what the result would be. That was in the month of April last. Nearly nine months had since elapsed, but no improvements had been made; in fact, more stones had come down from the quarry since April last than previously. Last month (December) a huge boulder rolled down from the quarry, weighing several tons. On the 24th December he wrote to the Vice-Admiral (Sir A. Moore), pointing out that the anticipated result from the benching had not been realised, and that on the previous day a huge boulder crashed through the plantation. No one would think of purchasing land under existing circumstances. In order to protect the heirs of the estate, he should at once apply to the Supreme Court for an interdict to stop the work, unless he were assured that full compensation would be paid for the injury of the land. He also pointed out the danger caused to human life by the fall of the stones. The Secretary to the Vice-Admiral wrote that the letter had been referred to the Superintending Civil Engineer for communication to the contractors. The letter added that the Commander-in-Chief fully appreciated the importance of this matter to the public, and considered that there were good grounds for the representations that had been made. On the 28th December the Superintending Civil Engineer (Mr. Macfarlane), in a minute, said that the quarrying operations, as now carried on, were a source of danger to the inhabitants of dwellings lying at the foot of the hill, and great depreciation to the surrounding property, and it was considered that if the matter were taken to Court, there was sufficient evidence to warrant an injunction being given. It was anticipated that, after the benching had been provided at the front of the quarry, and with due care in regulating the blasting charges, accidents would not occur, but it was quite clear that other steps should be taken to protect the surrounding property. In answer to the Superintending Civil Engineer, the managing director of Sir John Jackson, Ltd. (Mr. Edwards) said that the last stone that came down from the quarry previous to the one now complained of was on the 7th August. Just after that date they constructed a rampart to prevent further stones rolling down. Since then no stone had come down into the private property, except the one on the 23rd December. This stone passed the eastward corner of the rampart. They were now extending the rampart, and they thought that the risk of further stones coming down would be obviated. The risk of stones coming down was also being lessened by the benching being widened. The Superintending Civil Engineer in a further minute said that the trench already cut had stopped a good many stones, and it was thought if it were further extended the danger would be lessened. Mr. Runciman, in a letter to the secretary of the Commander-in-Chief, on the 4th January, said that the statement as to this being the only stone which had come down since the 7th August was incorrect. The matter was still as bad as ever, and the property was still decreasing in value. Mr. Runciman, in his affidavit proceeded to say that the statement in the respondents' letter as to the stones was untrue, and only showed the gross and culpable and careless manner in which the operations were carried on on behalf of the respondents. From personal observations he had made he was positive that a good many stones had rolled down since April last, and he believed that the damage had increased since the respondents assured him that steps would be taken to remedy the same. He considered that, had it not been for the fir forest, some of the stones would have rolled into the main street.

An affidavit by the Town Clerk of Simon's Town stated that the matter had been brought under the notice of the Council, and that a resolution had been adopted to support the present application for the safety of the inhabitants. He also called attention to negotiations which had taken place, with a view of having a road opened below the quarry. It was stated that the operations jeopardised the lives of the school children and people using the main road.

An affidavit by Mr. Ernest W. Attridge, the town engineer at Simon's Town, stated that a number of boulders had come down on the fir forest, and described the damage done by the big masses of rock which fell in August and December. He did not consider that the present rampart afforded sufficient protection again accident.

An affidavit by Mr. Miller, builder, stated that the rock which fell in August would have crashed into his house had not its course been stayed by the forest. Several other rocks had since descended.

An affidavit by Mr. W. D. Barrabells, builder, also testified to the danger and damage effected by the operations, and mentioned that one of his tenants had given notice to leave because his wife had become nervous.

An affidavit by Mr. John Richard Black, shipping agent, Simon's Town, was also a similar effect.

The replying affidavit of Mr. H. C. W. Edwards, managing director for the respondents in South Africa, stated that the works were of the very greatest importance, and any hindrance in quarrying would seriously affect and delay the completion of the works for the Admiralty. As to Mr. Runciman's affidavit, Mr. Edwards said that the quarry was of considerable extent, and only one portion of the same was joined up to the estate of the late Mr. Black. Great care had been exercised throughout the operations, but at the commencement a certain number of stones did roll down the mountain side. Considerable benching had now been provided, and this had proved effectual in conjunction with other steps which had been taken to prevent stones rolling down the mountain side. On the 7th August a somewhat larger stone than usual rolled down the mountain side, and deponent then had a rampart erected. In December another large stone fell from the quarry and passed outside the rampart. Deponent then gave instructions for the rampart and the trench to be extended and enlarged to prevent any further accidents arising. He was strongly of opinion that the steps which had been taken were sufficient to prevent any further large stones rolling down the mountain side. He was quite prepared to take any further steps which might be thought necessary in conjunction with the superintending civil engineer and the town engineer. They had gone to great trouble to provide against the descent of stones down the mountain side, and they were quite prepared to incur further reasonable expense, which would have the effect of rendering the position more secure. He was convinced that no stones had descended between the 7th August and the 23rd December. They were willing to meet the Mayor (Mr. Runciman) and others to consider what other steps should be taken to render the position more secure.

The affidavit of Mr. Brooks, agent for Sir John Jackson, Ltd., stated that the benching had been considerably widened. He knew of no stones falling between the 7th August and November, when he was laid up with illness. On his recovery he found that the rampart had been considerably extended. He considered that the precautions now taken were amply sufficient.

The affidavit of Mr. A. A. Frieslaar, Admiralty Inspector of the Works, said he had seen all the blasting which had been done at the quarry between 6.30 a.m. and 6 p.m., but he had not seen any stones pass the benching while he had been at the works. The rampart and ditch constructed below the quarry were, in his opinion, sufficient to prevent any stones from getting over. He considered that every precaution had been taken to prevent any stones from rolling down the hillside.

The affidavit of Mr. C. Baker, assistant foreman, stated that the stones which fell on the 7th August and the 23rd

December were the only ones that descended during that period.

The affidavit of Mr. Frank Davis, foreman in charge of the quarries, stated that no stone had passed beyond the rampart except those on the 7th August and the 23rd December, and a small one which just rolled over the side.

The affidavit of Mr. H. J. Petts, Admiralty Inspector at the Dock Works, stated that he had seen no stone come down the mountain side beyond those of the 7th August and the 23rd December.

Mr. Buchanan for applicants; Mr. Close for respondents.

Mr. Close said that he also had an affidavit by Mr. Macfarlane, which was really in the nature of a reply to the answering affidavits. He did not know whether his learned friend would object to this document being put in.

Mr. Buchanan said his instructions were not to consent to this being done.

In an answering affidavit, Mr. Runciman stated that he was convinced that the provision as now made by the respondents to prevent stones rolling down the mountain side was totally inadequate, and that sooner or later great damage to property and loss of life would result.

A replying affidavit by the Town Engineer stated that he was still of opinion that the rampart and benching below the quarries would not prove adequate to prevent stones being hurled over the rampart down the mountain side. He added that blasting operations had been conducted on one occasion at 2.30 a.m. He was convinced that as the operations extended westward municipal property and other property below the quarries would be subjected to great risk.

Mr. Buchanan said that the applicants did not ask for these works to be stopped, but for protection to life and property. They did not seek to stop the quarrying, but they submitted that the respondents had no right by their operations to endanger life and injure the property below. That position, they contended, was quite a reasonable one. One of the deponents, Mr. Barrabells said that the large rock of the 7th August passed within fourteen feet of his house. The position was one that the Municipality and the executors of Black could not tolerate. The proceedings were brought under the Act 25 of 1898 (section 16). Neither the Admiralty nor Sir John Jackson, Ltd., were authorised by any Act of Parliament to quarry up there at any risk. They must respect the lives of other people and the property of other people. He submitted that the applicants' affidavits had made out a clear case for an interdict. It might be said that respondents were now taking measures to prevent further stones coming down. Well, they said that in April last, and yet on their own admission three stones had descended the mountain side to the danger of the public. The rampart did not do all that it was expected to do. The precautions did not at all seem sufficient. Was it necessary that some injury should be done to life, and more depreciation caused to the property before the respondents were interdicted?

Mr. Close said that, so far from his clients being callous in disregarding human life, they had gone to considerable expense in erecting the rampart. The respondents were quite willing to take any steps suggested to them by experts, and were prepared to carry out the suggestions made to them by representatives of the applicants the previous day. The work was of the greatest public importance, and it was being carried on at a site decided upon by the Colonial Government and the Admiralty. Any unforeseen blasting accident would come within the wide scope of the order asked for by the applicants. He submitted that Mr. Runciman's statements were exaggerated, and that they would not for a moment weigh with the testimony of the other side. His clients, he contended, had taken all precautions that could reasonably be expected of them, and in carrying out the Municipal Engineer's suggestion that the rampart should be lengthened and raised, it proved that the respondents were certainly not callous of the danger to human life. If the Court was in doubt on the evidence produced, counsel submitted that a scientific expert might be appointed to determine whether or not the precautions were sufficient.

Buchanan, J.: The Legislature of this Colony, by the Act 25 of 1898, authorised the construction of certain docks and other works by the Admiralty at Simon's Town, and to carry out these works, the Admiralty entered into a contract with the respondents in this case. It became necessary, in the execution of this contract, for the respondents to open a quarry and to obtain materials, which under the Act they were authorised to take. The quarries were opened on Crown lands, and at a place where they were legally entitled to work. But, in opening these quarries, it would seem from the correspondence that at first a certain amount of these stones were allowed to roll down the hillside, to the prejudice of the applicants, and also to the danger of the inhabitants of Simon's Town. As far back as April of last year representations were made to the Admiralty in reference to the nuisance, and it was then pointed out by the respondents that it was impossible to prevent occasional stones rolling down the hill. Whether it was impossible or not is not a question for me to consider, but I may make one remark in passing. I do not think that the respondents were entitled to open up a quarry to the injury of private property or to the danger of the lives of the inhabitants of the town. However, after the complaint was made in April, steps were taken to put a stop to the nuisance, by means of what is called a benching running along the face of the quarries, which benching was then considered sufficient by the respondents to aver the danger. This benching seem to have allayed alarm, until on the 7th August a large stone, which was loosened by quarrying, came down the hill; and, according to the affidavits, caused great fear among the residents in certain houses situated below the quarries, and might have caused serious injury to life and property. The respondents then erected what they called a rampart, below the benching. This rampart seems to have answered its purpose until the 23rd December, when another large stone missed the rampart and came down the mountain. As the precautions taken were thus shown not to be wholly effective, the applicants now come to the Court and ask for an interdict restraining the respondents from causing further danger to the public. No doubt, when the correspondence commenced, the applicants objected to any quarries whatever being opened on the hillside, but now they limit their application by objecting only to the operations being carried on by the respondents in such a way as to cause danger to life and property. Since the last stone on the 23rd December, the respondents have taken further precautions, but it is not clear on the affidavits whether these precautions are sufficient completely to avert danger. It is alleged that interviews have taken place between the parties since the notice of motion, but what passed between the parties at these interviews is not on affidavit. I think I ought to say that the operations being necessary, and authorised by Act of Parliament ought not to be stopped, but at the same time the respondents are not entitled to carry out the work in such a way as to cause injury to applicant's property, or to create a risk to the lives of the inhabitants, and they will have to take such precautions as will render their working secure. It seems to me quite possible, as stated on affidavit, that the respondents can take such steps; but it is clear that the precautions they have up to the present taken are not sufficient, and, therefore, I am of opinion that the applicants ought to have an order restraining the respondents from causing or allowing any stones to roll down from their quarries on the property of the applicants. This interdict will continue for one month, unless an action be brought in the meantime to make the interdict perpetual, with costs of the application. In that month the respondents will, I suppose, take such further precautions as to render it reasonably certain no future danger need be anticipated

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

{ 1904.
Feb. 1st.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of Alfred Owen Balleine Payne as an attorney and notary.

Admission granted, the oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Idutywa, Transkei.

Ex parte KILFOIL.

Articled clerk—Continuous service.

Where there had been two or three breaks in the continuity of service of Articles, amounting in all to four months: the Court condoned these breaks, but ordered that the applicant should complete four months' extra service, although he had already served five years, and during one of the breaks had been employed by his principal in the management of a branch office.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of William Kilfoil as an attorney. Applicant had served the requisite term, but during a period of four months his principal had been absent in connection with the starting of a branch office.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers appeared for the Law Society.

Mr. Gardiner: The applicant was articled for one year to Mr. Attorney Squire Smith. Then he left, and studied law privately, and then went to Mr. Goddard's office in East London. I must say that in view of Ex parte Gush (11 C.T.R. 160), that management of a branch business, such as the applicant appears to have had charge of for some time, cannot be regarded as service of articles; but I would ask the Court to condone the two or three breaks of service in consideration of the long period (five years) during which the applicant has served; or that at all events the break of four months should be condoned.

Mr. C. W. De Villiers raised no objection to the latter course being followed, provided that the applicant was ordered to complete four months' extra service.

It was ordered that the application should stand over, applicant to serve a further period of four months.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of Alexander John McCallum as an attorney.

Admission granted, and applicant took the oaths.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

DOUGLASS V. GLASS.

Mr. Rainsford applied for the discharge of the order for compulsory sequestration, granted on October 5, 1903.

Granted.

ESTATE OF MARSH V. SAVAGE.

Mr. Rainsford asked for provisional judgment for £900 on a mortgage bond, due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Granted.

BENNING V. COWLING.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers asked for provisional judgment for £2,500 on a mortgage bond.

Granted.

BATE V. ALCOCK.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Granted.

HUTTON V. STREYDOM.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Granted.

BEKLER V. COLE.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Granted.

FAURE AND ZIETSMAN V. WEINTROB.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £63 on two promissory notes.

Granted.

EATON, ROBINS AND CO. V. MILLER.

Mr. Nightingale moved for a final order of sequestration.

Granted.

BARTRAM V. BURRILL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a decree of civil imprisonment in respect of a debt of £190, with £9 costs.

The first respondent, Alexander Burrill, appeared, and made an offer of £1 per month in settlement. He said he had been out of employment for two months, and had only now succeeded in getting a situation. He was beginning work that day at a salary of £14 per month, out of which he had to support a wife.

Mr. Gardiner said that an offer of £2 per month had been made previously. Applicant wrote agreeing to accept this amount, provided that the respondent agreed to pay all costs, etc., but no reply was received.

The respondent said that at the time that that offer was made, he was in receipt of a salary of £20 per month at Port Elizabeth. Since then he had been out of employment, and had come to Cape Town.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you manage to pay £2 per month?]

Respondent replied that he would probably be able to do so in two months' time, as he expected to get an increase on his present salary in two months—that was the agreement with his employer.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When will you make the first payment?]

Respondent: To-day.

A decree was granted to be suspended on payment of £1 per month for the first two months, and £2 per month thereafter, the first payment to be made that day.

ALFORD, WILLS AND ABBOTT V. MARKS.

This was an application for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Defendant appeared to oppose.

There was no appearance for applicants, and the provisional order was discharged.

Subsequently, before Buchanan, J., Mr. Benjamin said he had just been instructed in the matter to move for plaintiffs. He applied that the Court would allow the provisional order to stand pending a fresh summons being issued for the 11th inst.

Defendant was not at this time in court.

Counsel said he understood defendant had come from Somerset Strand.

Luchanan, J. said he thought the man's expenses ought to be paid.

Counsel said he would represent that to the attorneys.

The application was granted.

DE WET V. BENADK.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a final order of sequestration.

Granted.

TABORSKI V. HOFFENBERG.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a Magistrate's Court judgment for £5 13s. 6d., and £3 9s. 7d. costs, and for a decree of civil imprisonment. Defendant had left the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

Granted.

ARDERNE V. PINKUS.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond, which had become payable by reason of the non-payment of interest, with interest and costs, and for certain specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Defendant appeared to oppose judgment. He said he made the bond in favour of a man named Groman, by whom it was ceded to the present plaintiff. It was arranged that Groman should not be paid interest on the bond.

Provisional sentence was granted, defendant being told that if he had any complaint against Groman, he must settle it with Groman.

ARDERNE V. MANSCHESSTER.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300.

Granted.

METROPOLITAN ADVERTISING CO. V. TAYLOR.

Mr. Russell made application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £17 5s., with interest and costs; also for judgment under Rule 319 for £4 10s. for work done.

Granted.

EBROIKEN V. VINK.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £196 2s., with interest, costs, and a commission of 5 per cent., which had been agreed upon for collecting the money.

De Villiers, C.J., said the money had not been collected, and plaintiff had not had to pay 5 per cent. for collection.

Mr. Benjamin: It may look, my lord, like taking the pound of flesh, but I submit it is legally due.

Provisional sentence was granted as prayed, less the 5 per cent. claimed for collecting.

CONSTEIN V. LEWIS.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on four promissory notes for £100, £75, £50, and £100.

Granted.

SADLER V. SECCOMBE.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £52 1s.

Granted.

WIPNER V. HOLLAND.

Mr. C. de Villiers made application for a decree of civil imprisonment upon a judgment of the Court for the sum of £46 3s. 6d., and £19 7s. 4d., taxed costs.

The respondent appeared, and stated that he was an architect, but had no money to discharge the debt. He was married, but had no furniture. He had several sums of money owing to him, but was unable to obtain payment, and cases, in respect of these, were pending in the Supreme Court.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He had landed property in England, valued at about £500, but he could not obtain any money in respect of it, because the probate duty had not been paid. He could not collect his outstanding debts. He had plenty of work, but could not proceed with it, owing to the want of the necessary funds. In November last he had offered to pay £5 per month, but he could not now renew that offer, because his position had become worse.

Decree granted, to be suspended on payment of £2 per month, the first payment to be made on March 1, 1904, leave being reserved to the applicants to move again in the matter.

JACOBSON V. DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Benjamin applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for the sum of £400, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

DEMPERS AND VAN REYNEVELD V. ISAACS.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £400 on a mortgage bond, and for certain hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted

DEMPERS AND VAN REYNEVELD V. PETERSON.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £83 14s.

Granted, specially hypothecated property being declared executable.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

MOOLMAN V. BENADE AND DE WET.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones asked for provisional sentence against the second defendant on a promissory note for £750 5s.; Benade's estate having been sequestrated.

Granted.

AKTERORSKE V. STEPHAN.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £106.

Granted.

HUGO V. PENDERIS.

Mr. Alexander applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

ESTATE WALKER V. KANNES.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £200 and £100, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

WESSELS V. COHEN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £41 9s. 5d.

Buchanan, J., pointed out that the promissory note was not stamped. It had, however, not been negotiated, and provisional sentence would be granted subject to the note being stamped.

S.A. ASSOCIATION V. CLEWS.

Mr. De Waal applied for provisional sentence for £160 10s., interest on a mortgage bond and for judgment under Rule 329d, for £15 11s. 8d., insurance paid by plaintiff for defendant on the property mortgaged.

Buchanan, J., said that the insurance was usually granted in the provisional sentence. Provisional sentence would be granted as prayed.

POWRIE V. WALKER.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £25, balance of the purchase price of certain land, with interest.

Granted.

RIMER V. WHITE.

Mortgage bond—Penal clause—
Estoppel by conduct—Equitable principles.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,000, with interest at 6 per cent. from the 1st July, 1903, and costs of suit, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Mr. Buchanan appeared to oppose the motion.

It appeared from the affidavits that in 1901 the respondent, John Joseph White, purchased from the plaintiff certain property at Newlands for the sum of £7,000, of which he paid £1,000 in cash, the remainder being secured under bond of the property. The bond provided that the capital sum should not become due for a period of four years, reckoned from December, 1902. Subsequently, plaintiff paid instalments amounting to £2,000 and there remained due a capital sum of £4,000. Interest became due amounting to £120 on the 31st December, which was not paid on the due date. Defendant stated on affidavit that he sent a cheque for the amount on the 5th January in response to a letter from plaintiff's agents. Two days afterwards plaintiff's agents denied having received his cheque. Defendant had tendered all interest due, but plaintiff's agents demanded the capital. They had allowed the interest due on June 30 to remain unpaid till July 22nd.

The affidavit of A. J. Chiappini (plaintiff's agent) stated that a notice demanding payment of the interest had been sent to defendant on the 30th December. Deponent had written to the defendant on January 7th, and on the same evening he received the cheque from a post office official. At no time did he agree to give the defendant any extension of time.

Mr. Buchanan: The plaintiffs are estopped by their conduct from calling up this bond for non-payment of interest. They gave the defendant till nearly the end of July to pay up the June interest. Their practice is to send out a memo., calling upon their debtors to pay up their interest as it falls due, but they usually give time. The defendant sent a cheque to Chiappini Brothers immediately he received the memo., and some days afterwards he called and asked whether they had received the cheque. They did not then say it was too late to pay the interest, they merely denied having received the cheque. Having lulled defendant into a feeling of false security, they cannot now insist on the letter of their bond. In cases of insurance where a premium has to be paid within a certain time, if the course of dealing goes against this, time is given. Porter on Insurance (p. 100). I submit that the plaintiff is not entitled to provisional sentence.

Mr. Gardiner: Porter cites only the case of Attorney Gen. v. Continental Life (33 Hun. N.Y. 138), and this does not show that the terms of a bond can be varied by other evidence. In the present case there were only two occasions on which it is said that time was given, and there is considerable doubt as to one of these. One isolated instance cannot constitute a course of conduct. Nothing save a power of attorney signed by the plaintiff could vary the terms of the bond, but here plaintiff's power of attorney is even more in our favour than the bond itself. I submit that provisional sentence should be granted.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff sold to the defendant certain landed property, according to written conditions of sale, for the sum of £7,000, of which £1,000 was to be paid before transfer, and for the remaining £6,000 the purchaser was to pass a kusting brief, or mortgage bond. By the conditions of sale this balance was to be paid four years after the date of purchase, with an option to the defendant to pay off the whole in one sum, or any portion in instalments of not less than £500, on giving three months' notice of his intention so to do. In pursuance of the contract transfer was given, and a mortgage bond passed, containing not only the conditions just recited, but also an additional clause not in the conditions of sale, stipulating that interest on the unpaid purchase price should become due and payable without further notice. The defendant had availed himself of the condition to anticipate the time of payment of the balance, and had reduced the bond by £2,000, leaving £4,000 still unpaid. On the 30th June last he received a memorandum from plaintiff's attorney, showing the amount of interest due to that date, which sum the defendant paid on the 28th July. Plaintiff's attorney deposed that on the 30th December—his clerk stated that it was not later than the 31st December—he sent a memorandum showing the amount of interest due to the end of the year. This memorandum the defendant states in his affidavit was received by him on the 5th January, whereupon defendant the same day sent his cheque for the amount. Owing to some mistake on the part of the postal officials the letter containing the cheque was not delivered till the 7th, when it was returned with an intimation it could not be received, but that the whole amount of the bond must be paid up forthwith, and on defendant through his attorney again tendering the interest, the plaintiff sued for the bond, claiming the enforcement of the penalty. It has been argued for the defendant that he is entitled to rely on the conditions of sale as against the mortgage bond; and that as the conditions of sale contain no reference to a penalty on a default in due payment of the interest, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed; in other words, that the decision of the Court must be given on the conditions and not upon the bond. But I am of opinion the Court cannot now go behind the bond. The bond was passed subsequently to the conditions, and upon a power given to the defendant authorising the insertion of the clause. There have been no steps taken to rectify the bond if it is erroneous, and it now governs the relations of the parties. One thing, however, the conditions of sale make clear, and indeed the same conclusion could be drawn from the bond itself; and that is, that the stipulation was inserted as a security for the due payment of the interest. It is not the principal obligation of the bond, nor is it of the essence of the contract. Nor is it a case of liquidated damages payable on a breach of a covenant. The English Courts of Equity frequently grant relief in such cases. They have applied the doctrine to cases of leases, where a forfeiture of the estate, and an entry for the forfeiture is stipulated for in the lease, in case of the non-payment of the rent at the regular days of payment, on the ground that the right of entry is deemed to be intended to be a mere security for the payment of the rent. Storry, in his Commentaries on Equity Jurisprudence (section 1.316), says: "If it be said that it is his own folly to have made such a stipulation it can equally well be said that the folly of one man cannot authorise gross oppression on the other side. And law, as a science, would be unworthy of the name if it did not, to some extent, provide the means of preventing the mischiefs of improvidence, recklessness, blind confidence, and credulity on one side; and of skill, avarice, cunning, and a gross violation of the principles of morals and conscience on the other. There are many cases in which Courts of Equity interfere upon mixed grounds of this sort. There is no more intrinsic sanctity in stipulations by contract, than in other solemn acts of parties, which are constantly interfered with by Courts of Equity upon the broad ground of public policy, or the pure principles of natural justice. Where a penalty of forfeiture is designed merely as a security to enforce the principal obligation, it is as much against conscience to allow any party to pervert it to a different and oppressive purpose, as it would be to allow him to substitute another for the principal obligation. The whole system of equity jurisprudence proceeds upon the ground that a party having a legal right shall not be permitted to avail himself of it for the purposes of injustice, or fraud, or oppression, or harsh and vindictive injury." Here the correspondence shows there was an ulterior motive for claiming this penalty, quite apart from the non-payment on the due date. Storey further shows that the equitable doctrine of relief is founded on the Civil law. He says (section 1,317), that the Roman law took notice, not only of conditions, strictly so-called, but also clauses of nullity and penal clauses. "The general doctrine of that law was, that clauses of nullity and penal clauses were not to be executed according to the rigor of their terms. And therefore, covenants were not, of course, dissolved nor forfeitures or penalties incurred, if there was not a punctilious performance at the very time fixed by the contract. But the matter might be required to be submitted to the discretion of the proper judicial tribunal to decide upon it according to all the circumstances of the case, and the nature and objects of the clauses. Indeed, penalties were in that law treated altogether, as in reason and justice they ought to be, as mere security for the performance of the principal obligation." Under the circumstances disclosed in this case, I think it would be altogether unreasonable that the bondholder should be entitled to insist on the penalty simply because his interest was offered to him on the 5th January instead of the 31st December. He had previously taken his interest after the due date, and he had not intimated that he expected payment to the day in future. There was no long delay, or considering the holidays, any unreasonable failure on the part of the defendant. I think there have been previous cases in this Court where there has been a refusal to enforce a similar penalty where interest has not been actually paid on the due date. On the broad, equitable ground that this is not a case for the Court to aid in the enforcement of a penalty, provisional sentence will only be given for £120, the amount of interest due, and has this has been repeatedly tendered before summons, the plaintiff must pay the costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

STORK V. STORK. { 1904.
{ Feb. 2nd.

Mr. M. Bisset appeared for the plaintiff, the husband, in an action for divorce on the ground of respondent's misconduct. Affidavits were read to the effect that the respondent was addicted to drink, and had misconducted herself while she had ill-treated the children. The parties lived at Kokstad. Plaintiff, who is a contractor, stated that he had previously tried to obtain a divorce in Natal, where he and his wife had lived for some years, after the marriage, which took place in October, 1891, but a decree was refused, the Court holding that he was domiciled in Griqualand West.

A decree of divorce was granted, plaintiff to have the custody of the children, with forfeiture of the benefits arising out of community.

SHERIFF V. SHERIFF.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order on the respondent, the wife, to make restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for a decree of divorce, with custody of the minor children, and forfeiture of benefits. The parties were married at Caledon on the 10th August, 1897, and it was alleged that the respondent left her husband in 1899, and was now living at Kroonstad, Orange River Colony. Defendant still resided at Caledon.

Evidence having been led in proof of the marriage.

Richard Sheriff was called, and stated that until about five months after his marriage he lived happily with his wife. The cause of their quarrel was that he objected to certain of her actions. She said that she would do as she liked. In July, 1899, she left him, and had not been back since. He treated her kindly. She was now living in the Orange River Colony. If she behaved herself he would take her back; if she did not return he would sue for divorce. He wanted the custody of the one child of the marriage.

His Lordship granted an order for restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent to return before February 28, or to show cause upon March 12 why decree of divorce should not be granted.

Postea (March 15): The decree was made absolute.

SIVERTSEN V. AUSTIN.

Seller and purchaser—Claim in reconvention—Independent contractor.

This was an action to recover the purchase price of certain ground. The declaration set forth that the parties both resided at Observatory-road. On or about the 17th March, 1903, plaintiff sold and defendant bought certain landed property at Observatory-road for the sum of £650, whereof £200 was to be paid forthwith, and the balance six months after the date of the sale. Defendant had only paid £100, and though plaintiff had tendered transfer of the property, defendant refused to pay the balance of the purchase price. Plaintiff claimed judgment for the amount, with 6 per cent. interest, and costs. In his plea the defendant stated that plaintiff had wrongfully and unlawfully made excavations on the property, and removed certain foundations existing thereon at the time of the sale, and carried away certain materials. He claimed that by reason of plaintiff's action, the property had been damaged to the extent of £162 10s. He tendered payment of the balance of the purchase price, less the sum of £162 10s. In his replication plaintiff denied that he had done more than to remove certain stone and debris from the surface, and stated that it was a condition of the sale that he should do this.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Buchanan for the defendant. S. C. Sivertsen was called, and stated that on February 9 he put up certain land for sale. There were the remains of an old building on the land. At the sale, the auctioneer stated that the ruins would be removed by witness. Austin purchased some land by private sale after the auction. Witness had carried out his obligations as regards the removal. He let the work out to Parker, who in turn let it out to a man Brown. Austin objected to the excavation of the foundations of the ruins; but subsequently Austin expressed himself as satisfied; the foundations had been taken out at that time. Austin said that he had arranged with Brown—the man who was performing the work—that he (Austin) was to get one-half of the stone, and Brown the other half.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Parker had purchased the lots of ground in question at the sale, but the sale was subsequently cancelled. The broker's note, sent to Austin, made no mention of the condition that the owner should remove the ruins.

Barry Heatlie, broker, stated that he attended the sale. He had heard the conditions of sale: the debris was to be removed and put into a hollow in another part of the property. The debris was to be removed to the level of the surrounding ground. He took it that the arrangement, agreed to by Austin, permitted the excavations to go below the surface.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He understood the conditions of sale as to be that the debris should be removed from the surface.

James Parker, contractor and builder, of Mowbray, stated that he arranged with Mr. Sivertsen to get someone to remove the debris; he gave the work to Brown. Witness arranged with Brown to remove the debris according to the conditions of sale. Brown had to remove the debris to the natural level of the ground. The ground was originally lower than the adjoining roadway, but he believed that the level of the road had been raised lately. Mr. Austin made complaints, and witness, in order to satisfy him, told him that he (Austin) and Brown could share the stone. Austin appeared quite satisfied. The land was now much more valuable with the debris removed. The cost of removing the debris was greater than the value of the stuff removed. Later on Mr. Austin complained of the removal of the stone, stating that he wanted it all back.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: A lot of this stone had not been taken from below the natural level of the ground. Brown had excavated only very little below the natural level of the ground.

John Brown, builder and contractor, of Observatory, stated that he had undertaken to remove the debris. He started work at the lowest point of the debris. He took some stone out a few inches below the natural level. After having raised some objections to the work, Austin went to see Parker. He returned and told witness that he could go on excavating, and that he (Austin) was to have half the stone. Where witness had taken up stone he had filled in the holes. The debris would have to be removed before Austin could have built on it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Austin had told him he could take out all the stone. Wrensch-road was above the level of the property.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Mr. Buchanan called

Wm. John Austin, the defendant, who said that during the last twelve months he had been a builder and contractor. Witness did not know plaintiff was the seller at the time of the sale. Mr. Heatlie showed witness a diagram of the property, across which the name of Mr. Parker was written. Witness was at the sale, and saw the property knocked down to Parker. Witness saw Brown at work on his property. He was willing to have the debris lowered down to the general level, but he found that more than this should be done. Witness wrote to Mr. Heatlie, and afterwards saw that gentleman, who referred him to Mr. Parker. The latter said that he had come to an arrangement that Brown was to level the ground, and that Brown was to get half the stone and £15, and he (Parker) the other half. Witness agreed to take Parker's place in regard to the agreement, his impression being that the land should be levelled to the level of the road. He never agreed that the land should be excavated, as it had been, 18 inches below the level. The earth had been taken from below the ordinary surface to fill up the hole. Brown took away the stone on Good Friday, and witness had not got half the stone. The land was not better for building upon now. It would be more expensive to build now. He bought the ground for the purpose of building. Witness did not agree with Brown that the latter should take all the stone; the agreement was that half the stone should be left on the ground, and this was never varied.

Cross-examined: Witness had no objection to Brown excavating the land, so long as he was left half the stone. He estimated the half of the stone to be worth £33. When witness's attorneys wrote in May claiming cancellation of the sale, the ground had been excavated. Witness did not then mention as a reason for cancellation that the ground had been injured and the stone taken. The letter claimed that the contract of sale should be rescinded, on the ground that there had been misrepresentation as to the seller. His reason for claiming on this ground was because he had been "diddled" into seeing Parker about the land, while Sivertsen had kept in the background all the time. Witness estimated the building clay removed to be worth £75, and the stone to be worth £33; while the cost of putting the ground in order would be about £60.

Edward James Sherwood, architect, said he knew the old buildings that stood on the land. After Mr. Brown's operations had been completed, witness was called in by Austin to see the ground. The ground had deteriorated in value considerably. About 320 loads of material had been taken off. He estimated that the value of the material taken away was about £120 or £130. This did not include the debris above the natural conformation of the soil. Brown had gone down in many places 3 feet 3 inches below the level of the road, but subsequently he levelled the whole of the ground to 16 inches below the crown of the road. This had been done with loose material, and before he could build, Austin would have to go down 3 feet 3 inches to the solid ground, whence Brown had taken the stone.

John Rainer, builder, said the excavations had been of serious detriment to the value of the land. Witness estimated that the damage done amounted to £188. The damages he had calculated only concerned the operations below the crown level of the road.

Wm. Ellis, foreman to defendant at the time of the excavations, said he took measurements of trenches made by Brown, and found they were 2 feet 6 inches below the present level.

The witness Brown, re-called, stated, in answer to the Court, that he did not take any of the natural soil. Parker agreed that witness should take the whole of the stone. Witness could not now give defendant half the stone, but he would forfeit to him the £15 he was to have received from Parker. Witness had no knowledge of defendant's concern in the matter when he came there on the Good Friday.

Mr. Parker, re-called, said he informed Brown of the agreement between him (witness) and Austin before the Good Friday.

Mr. Heatlie was also re-called, and stated that when the brokers' note was signed, Sivertsen's name was given thereon as the seller.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument, the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, as prayed.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant admits that he bought the property in question for £650. He has paid £100, and there is, therefore, due under the contract of purchase the sum of £550. The defendant, however, claims the right of deducting from this £550 the amount of the damages alleged to have been done to the land by the plaintiff after the sale. In strictness there should have been a claim in reconvention, because it is not a claim of such a nature as to be set off against the plaintiff's claim. The defendant would, therefore, have no right of deduction, and in strict practice there should have been a claim in reconvention. But that is a purely formal matter, and no objection was raised to the defendant's proceeding. I shall, therefore, simply consider the question whether, assuming there had been a claim in reconvention, the defendant has made out a good case for damages. A broker's note was executed at the time of the purchase, and upon the face of that broker's note appeared the names of the purchaser and seller. It is suggested that the defendant was not aware that he purchased from Sivertsen, but that he believed he bought from Parker, but the document itself contradicts that view, because upon the face of the broker's note there is an acceptance by the defendant, and the broker, Mr. Headie, informs the Court that at the time this acceptance was signed by the defendant, the name of the plaintiff was on the broker's note. Therefore, if the plaintiff had taken the trouble to read the broker's note he would have known that he was purchasing from Sivertsen, the plaintiff, and not from Parker. It is not denied that it was understood between the parties at the time of the sale that it should be the duty of the plaintiff to remove certain debris, the ruins of some old buildings, from the property, and to transfer it to a hole in the neighbouring ground. That appears clear from the defendant's own letter of March 19, in which he says: "I am perfectly willing to abide by the conditions of the auction sale, namely, that my ground, lots so-and-so, shall be levelled and filled up, but I shall not permit any excavations, and, further, the contractor employed has taken so much stuff off the surface, which I shall have to have replaced." Now, the material removed was of two kinds: there was the debris on the surface, and there were foundation-stones. In regard to the debris on the surface, I am by no means satisfied that either the plaintiff or the contractors employed by him ever removed more than the surface debris. In the course of removing such debris it is quite possible that a small portion of the natural soil may also have been removed, but that in the nature of things it would have been impossible to avoid. It would have been impossible to remove the debris without taking some portion of the natural soil upon which the debris lay. But I am satisfied that only an infinitesimal portion of the natural soil was removed. The plaintiff has derived no benefit from removal; he undertook to do this purely for the benefit of the purchasers of the lots. He could not, however, do it personally, and he employed a contractor—well, in one sense, perhaps, the contractor was his agent, but he was his agent simply for the purpose of removing the debris, and nothing more. He employed Parker as contractor, and Parker employed Brown as sub-contractor. In the course of the removal Brown came to the foundations, and was going below the surface, but the defendant complained to the broker who had been employed for the sale. Parker spoke to the plaintiff, and in a conversation with the plaintiff Parker was told that he was not to go any deeper. Defendant went to see Parker, and the result of their interview was that it was arranged that Parker should continue to dig the foundations, but that the half of these foundation-stones were to be given to the defendant. That was an agreement made by the defendant with Parker, quite independently of the plaintiff. It was not an agreement made with Parker, as the agent of the plaintiff. The employer had nothing to do with that arrangement. If Parker did not carry out the agreement made between himself and the defendant, that is a matter entirely between Parker and the defendant, with which the plaintiff had nothing to do. The contractor made a certain agreement on his own behalf with the defendant, and, in my opinion, the plaintiff cannot be held responsible for Parker breaking his agreement, an agreement which he had made, not in his capacity as agent for the plaintiff, but in his capacity as the person who had contracted to remove certain materials. In fact that is the position the defendant himself took up at one time, because he issued a letter of demand not against the plaintiff, but against Parker, who had not carried out the terms of the agreement with him. I am not satisfied that any substantial damage was done by Parker by the removal of these stones. I have no doubt that the equivalent of the stones will be given by Brown on behalf of Parker to the defendant, but in my opinion, the plaintiff has nothing to do with that. He has endeavoured to carry out the agreement made, as I have said, for the benefit of the purchasers. He did everything he could to carry out this agreement, and I do not think any of the evidence shows he has done anything which would entitle the defendant to claim damages as against him. For these simple reasons, I think that the plaintiff, as vendor, is entitled to the purchase price, and that any remedy the purchaser may have he must seek against the person who made the agreement quite independently of the seller. Judgment of the Court must be for the plaintiff, with costs.

APPEAL CASES.

GREEN V. LE ROES. } 1904.
 } Feb. 2nd.

Repudiation of contract.

The plaintiff entered into a contract for the purchase of 100 bottles of milk a day from the defendant. The milk was to be fetched by the plaintiff, but on the day on which the first delivery was to be made, the plaintiff did not appear, nor on the second day. From this and other circumstances the defendant came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had repudiated his contract. The plaintiff having subsequently found a purchaser of the milk at a profit, claimed it from the defendant. The Magistrate having found from the whole of the evidence that the plaintiff repudiated the contract; the Court, on appeal, refused to disturb the finding.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Wynberg.

In the Magistrate's Court the appellant sued Le Roes for £100 damages, reduced to £20 for the purpose of jurisdiction. It was alleged that on the 20th September last, the parties entered into an agreement, whereby defendant undertook to supply plaintiff with 100 bottles of milk per day, at 2d. per bottle, for a period of six months. Thereupon plaintiff entered into an agreement with one Searle to supply him with 100 bottles of milk per day, and deposited £100 with Searle as security for the performance of the contract. Defendant failed to supply the milk, and plaintiff was unable to carry out his agreement with Searle, whereupon the latter took possession of the £100. The defence was that it was verbally agreed that delivery should commence on the 1st October, and that for two mornings thereafter plaintiff failed to come to defendant's farm to take delivery. Thereupon defendant told plaintiff that he considered the contract broken. Plaintiff stated that the verbal agreement was that the milk should be taken on the 1st October, or any later date, providing that plaintiff paid for the milk from the 1st October. The written agreement stipulated that the milk should be paid for every fourteen days. Judgment was given for the defendant, the Magistrate, in his reasons, stating that no date was stipulated on the agreement on which the contract was to commence, and the case depended upon the credibility of the witnesses. He had no hesitation in accepting the evidence of the defendant, who was a respectable farmer, and his wife, in preference to that of the plaintiff and his witness, who were Jews of not a very respectable type.

Mr. Gardiner for the appellant. Mr. Benjamin for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant agreed to supply the plaintiff with 100 bottles of milk per day for six months, at 2d. per bottle. The milk was to be fetched by the plaintiff at six o'clock in the morning. The written agreement does not state when the first delivery was to take place, but the evidence clearly shows that it was on October 1; that was the date on which the defendant was to go for the first time to fetch the 100 bottles of milk at six o'clock. There was no desire on the part of the defendant, as far as I can see, to shirk his part of the agreement. On October 1 he had his milk ready, but nobody came for it. On the next, October 2, the defendant had his milk ready, and for the whole of that day nobody appeared to fetch the milk. Considering the perishable nature of the milk, the defendant was justified in my opinion in concluding that the plaintiff was not going to abide by his contract. In a case where a person buys such a large quantity of milk, and fails to fetch it for two days, the presumption would clearly arise that the person did not intend to fulfil his contract. Now, the only point to decide in this case is whether the evidence justified the defendant in coming to the conclusion that there was a repudiation of the contract on the part of the plaintiff. If there was a repudiation, the defendant was not bound by the contract. If the plaintiff's conduct did not amount to a repudiation, the defendant would still be liable. It appears, however, that on October 3 the plaintiff made a contract with another person by which he would make a profit. Thereupon he goes for his milk. But supposing that he had not made that profit, then the defendant would have had to wait for the whole of that period without anyone coming for the milk. Now, in my opinion, having waited for two days without anyone coming, and considering the perishable nature of the milk and all the other circumstances, I think he was justified in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff no longer stood by his contract. That is the view taken by the Magistrate upon the evidence. The Magistrate has had witnesses before him, and if he believed the defendant's witnesses and disbelieved the evidence for the plaintiff, I think he was justified in finding that there was a repudiation on the part of the plaintiff. The appeal must therefore be dismissed, with costs.

CORBEAU V. MATTHYS.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate, Kenhardt.

It appeared from the records in the Court below that the plaintiff sued the defendant for the sum of £2, for the conveyance of his adopted child from Kenhardt to Victoria West and back, the child being a witness in a criminal case heard before the Magistrate at Victoria West. Matthys took the child on a wagon, in which he conveyed two prisoners and two Crown witnesses, for the conveyance of whom he received payment from the Crown. Matthys stated that he agreed to convey the other persons for the Crown for £48, and that subsequently Corbeau came to see him, and asked him to take the girl, to which he replied that he had no objection. Afterwards the authorities declined to make any payment in respect of the conveyance of the girl, and on Corbeau refusing to pay, plaintiff commenced these proceedings.

After hearing Mr. Benjamin (for the appellant), and without calling on Mr. Gardiner (for the respondent, the Court dismissed the appeal, with costs.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the plaintiff seemed to have contracted to take the child from Kenhardt to Victoria West. The plaintiff was not bound to take any other passengers, and he might have refused to take the defendant's child. He had, however, taken the child at the request of the defendant. It was simply a question whether Matthys' evidence was right, and to him it appeared that Matthys' evidence was decisive. The appeal should be dismissed.

HOHN V. LEACH.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the appointment of a commission in London to take the evidence of Major P. E. F. Hobbs and others.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the respondent (the plaintiff in this suit), and consented to a joint commission being issued.

Application for a joint commission granted, Mr. McGuinness being appointed as commissioner.

Ex parte RUNCIMAN AND CO

Mr. Sutton moved for an order cancelling the appointment of Wm. Frost as trustee in a certain estate, in which Messrs. W. Runciman and Co., of Simon's Town, were the largest creditors.

Affidavits were put in showing that at a meeting of the creditors in the insolvent estate in question, Frost, a law agent at Simon's Town, had been appointed sole trustee. Frost had, however, left the Colony for England, and nothing was now known of his whereabouts. No assets in the estate had been lodged with the Master of the Supreme Court.

Application granted, and order issued authorising the calling of a special meeting of the creditors for the appointment of another trustee.

Ex parte STASSEN.

Mr. De Waal made application for leave to sell, for the benefit of the minor heirs in the estate, their shares in a certain farm, situated at Ladismith.

The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Pénalty - Forfeiture—Liquidated damages—Statutory confirmation of contract.

The plaintiff, under an agreement with the defendant, obtained a concession to construct a line of railway within a prescribed period, and the defendant undertook to pay a subsidy for such construction, but stipulated by clause 17 that in case of non-completion within such prescribed period certain large sums of money lodged with or retained by him as security should be forfeited as and for liquidated damages, and that thereupon such agreement should cease and determine, and it should be lawful for the defendant to take possession of the incomplete line and pay to the plaintiff the actual cost, less the moneys so lodged or retained. By the following clause the parties agreed that the ordinary rules of law regarding the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract should not apply to certain specified breaches by the plaintiff after completion of the line.

Held, that the ordinary rules relating to the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract should be applied in case of a breach by the plaintiff of any obligations entered into by him under the 17th clause. The 9th clause of Act 19 of 1900 enacted that the agreement, which was set forth in a schedule to the Act, "is hereby confirmed, and shall have the same force and effect as if it were set forth fully in the body hereof."

Held, that this enactment would not justify the Court in applying different rules of construction to the 17th clause from those which would have been applied if the agreement had not been so confirmed.

Held further, that as the large amounts stipulated to be forfeited, exceeding £110,000, are manifestly out of all proportion to the damages suffered or inconvenience undergone by the defendant by reason of the non-completion of the subway line, the penalty of forfeiture should not be enforced notwithstanding that the sums are made payable "as and for liquidated damages."

This was an action brought by Mr. Hills against the Colonial Government, arising out of the contract for the construction of a railway between Mossel Bay and Oudtshoorn. These matters had been before the Court on a previous occasion, but the construction of this particular railway and the rights of the parties arising out of the contract had not been brought by way of action, although a motion in the matter was made in June, and under the Court's decision, the Government took possession of the railway, the Court, however, directing that all matters, such as actual cost, retention money, and so on, should await the result of further proceedings to be taken by action. The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Arnold Frank Hills, who sues both personally and in his capacity as receiver, appointed by the High Court of Justice in England, of a certain co-partnership venture called the Grand Junction Railways. The defendant is Arthur Douglass, who is sued in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Works, and as such representing the Colonial Government.

2. On the 4th July, 1900, a contract was entered into between the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co. and the defendant Government for the construction of a line of railway from Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn. The terms of the said contract are set forth in schedule 1 to Act 19 of 1900, and the plaintiff prays that this schedule may be considered as inserted herein.

3. The plaintiff has duly acquired by legal cession with the sanction of the defendant all the rights against the Government of the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co., under the aforesaid contract, and has similarly acquired all such rights of the various parties (other than defendant) to the contract of 13th October, 1896, and to the agreements of 2nd August, 1898, and 18th March, 1899, which are referred to in the preamble to the aforesaid schedule. The plaintiff craves leave to refer to the said contracts and agreements when produced at the trial hereof.

4. Under the said contracts and agreements, the work of constructing the railway line from Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn was duly proceeded with, save in so far as the due execution of the work was prevented by causes which are hereinafter set forth.

5. In or about the month of June last the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully terminated the contract of the 4th July, 1900, and after application to this Honourable Court on the 15th June, 1903, based upon the non-completion of the line within the two years specified in clause 17 of the contract, the defendant obtained an order of this Honourable Court, whereunder he has entered upon and has since retained possession of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line.

6. The plaintiff thereupon took the necessary steps to proceed with an appeal to His Majesty the King in his Privy Council against the said order of this Honourable Court, but has now abandoned the said appeal, and instituted the present suit, in consequence of an agreement arrived at between the parties on or about September 4, 1903.

7. The parties hereto under the said agreement agreed that the appeal should be abandoned, that the amount of "actual cost" of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line should, with the sanction of this Honourable Court, forthwith be ascertained by reference to arbitration, that the referees should be guided by the directions of this Honourable Court, made on the 6th March last, in the reference to arbitration in the matter of the Somerset East-King William's Town and Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat lines, but that the question of whether interest should be included under "actual cost," as well as all other questions and disputes between the parties, should remain open for decision by this Honourable Court.

8. The plaintiff says that, in addition to the amount of "actual cost" to be ascertained as aforesaid, he is entitled as part of the "actual cost" incurred in and about the construction of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line to such interest as he has lost by reason of expenditure of capital upon the said line, the said capital having produced no interest whilst used in the construction of the said line—and also to such interest as he has paid or become liable to pay in respect of moneys borrowed by him in the ordinary course of business, and used by him in the construction of the said line.

9. The plaintiff was prevented from completing the line within the time specified in clause 17 of the said contract by causes over which he had no control, to wit:

1. The invasion by the King's enemies in February, 1901, of the districts in which the line was being constructed. The construction was for many months stopped or greatly hampered thereby.

(a) Under martial law regulations the local supply of the dynamite absolutely required for construction work was after the said invasion stopped or greatly limited for a considerable period. (b) The supply of labour was materially interfered with. Large numbers of natives engaged on the works left the same in consequence of the said invasion, and it was impossible for a long period in the years 1901 and 1902 to supply their places.

2. The conduct of the Railway Department acting for and under the control of the defendant, in the following matters: (a) In 1901 detailed plans for bridges over the Malagaten and Gwyang Rivers between Mossel Bay and George were submitted to the said department for approval. The department has never communicated its decision on these plans, though repeatedly requested to give such decision. The plaintiff was unable to proceed with the construction of the bridges without such approval, and this greatly retarded the work of construction of the line. (b)

Shortly after the ratification by Parliament of the contract of 4th July, 1900, the said department expressed strong dissatisfaction with the agreed-on contract route between George and Oudtshoorn as being an impracticable line. Plaintiff was willing and did endeavour to comply with the department's wishes in the matter and in terms of section 3 of the contract, submitted plans for an alternative route, via Kaayman's River Valley. The department has never communicated to plaintiff any definite decision on this route.

(c) The department thereafter requested plaintiff to make further surveys and prepare further plans for a "rack line" (not agreed on or contemplated in the contract) over the Montagu Pass, in order that defendant might consider the advisability of adopting the said "rack line" in lieu of the contract route. The surveys were made under great difficulties owing to the invasion aforesaid, and plans were submitted to the Railway Department. The department in this case also has never communicated to plaintiff any decision on this route. (d) Owing to the strong disapproval by defendant of the contract route and pending decision by defendant (which has not been given) on the questions raised by defendant as to route as above, the construction of the line from a point two miles on the Mossel Bay side of George to Oudtshoorn, necessarily and at the wish and to the knowledge of defendant, remained in suspense, and the plaintiff was unable to proceed therewith.

10. By reason of the facts set forth in paragraph 9, the period specified in clause 17 aforesaid has been in law cancelled and superseded, and the defendant is estopped and prevented from taking advantage of the terms of the said clause, and the contract time limit has become null and void.

11. The defendant holds security deposited by plaintiff to the value of £50,000, which was lodged with the Cape Agent-General in connection with the contract of 4th July, 1900, for the completion of the line.

12. The defendant further holds as "retention money" for the completion of the Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn line under the said contract certain 10 per cent. of the advances of subsidy which the plaintiff became entitled to thereunder. The said "retention money" amounts to the sum of £4,913 2s. 5d.

13. The defendant further holds similarly as "retention money" under certain other contracts of 4th July, 1900 (set forth in schedules G and H to Act 19 of 1900) a sum of £70,689 14s. 5d., the property of plaintiff, being moneys retained (for the completion of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line) by the defendant out of and when paying advances due to plaintiff under the Somerset East to King William's Town railway contract and the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat railway contract.

14. By reason of the premises the plaintiff is entitled to recover the security and retention money referred to in paragraphs 11 and 13 hereof, the defendant by his failure and neglect to approve of the bridge and route plans as aforesaid and by his entering upon and taking possession of the line having prevented plaintiff from proceeding unto the due completion of the line, the construction whereof had been retarded as above set forth, although plaintiff is and always has been ready and willing to carry out the terms of his contract and to duly complete the said line.

15. By reason of the premises the plaintiff has suffered damages which he assesses at the rate of ten per cent. on the ascertained amount of the actual cost aforesaid.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) An order declaring plaintiff entitled to the "actual cost" incurred in and about the construction of the said line. (b) An order by consent referring the ascertainment (subject to the directions set forth in paragraph 7 hereof) of the amount of "actual cost" to referees to be appointed by this Honourable Court. (c) An order declaring that the plaintiff is entitled as part of the actual cost to "interest" as set forth in paragraph 8 hereof. (d) An order referring the ascertainment of such interest to the said referees. (e) Return of the £50,000 deposited as security with the Cape Agent-General in London. (f) Payment of the sums of £4,913 2s. 5d. and £70,689 14s. 5d. held by defendant as 10 per cent. "retention money" as set forth in paragraphs 12 and 13 hereof. (g) Damages calculated at the rate of 10 per cent. on the "actual cost" to be ascertained as aforesaid. (h) Interest a tempore morae. (i) Alternative relief. (j) Costs.

For a plea to the declaration the defendant says:

1. He admits that Arnold Frank Hills is the plaintiff herein, but he denies that he is entitled to sue in any other than his personal capacity, or to sue as receiver of a co-partnership venture called the Grand Junctions Railways; the remaining allegations in paragraph 1 are admitted.

2. He admits the execution of the contract dated 4th July, 1900, referred to in paragraph 2 of the declaration, and craves leave likewise to refer to the terms of Act No. 19 of 1900 of Schedule 2 hereto, and also of the schedules to the said contract mentioned in the said contract, but not printed in Schedule 2, and to the plans, sections, and specifications referred to in the said contract. The said contract dated 4th July, 1900, was preceded by the contracts of 13th October, 1896, 2nd August, 1898, and 12th March, 1899, referred to in the preamble to Schedule 2 to Act No. 19 of 1900.

3. He admits that the plaintiff has acquired by cession with the sanction of the Cape Government all the rights of the said Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co., in respect of the contract dated 9th July, 1900, but says that the Government refused to comply with the plaintiff's request to recognise the firm styled the Grand Junction Railways as assignee of the said contract, or interested under the said assignment. He does not admit the remaining allegations in paragraph 3, and puts the plaintiff to the proof thereof. He says further that the aforesaid contract of 1900 attached to and confirmed by the aforesaid Act No. 19, of 1900, which was substituted for the theretofore existing and thereby cancelled contracts, became and was the only contract subsisting between plaintiff and defendant respecting the aforesaid railway from Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn after the date of such cancellation.

4. He admits that the construction of the said railway was commenced, and certain work done thereon under the said contract and agreements; but he denies the remaining allegations in paragraph 4, and denies that the work of construction was duly proceeded with.

5. As to paragraph 5, he admits that on the 15th June, 1903, on application duly made by him under clause 17 of the said contract, he obtained an order from this Honourable Court declaring that the agreement between the Government and the concessionary (the plaintiff) had ceased and determined, and authorising the Government to enter upon and take possession of such incomplete lines of railway as had been constructed by the said concessionary (the plaintiff), and he says that by such order the said contract became and was determined. He craves leave to refer to the proceedings heard in and order made by this Honourable Court on the said 15th June, for the grounds advanced in support of the application on which the said order was obtained. He also admits that in terms of and as authorised by, and in exercise of the powers given by the said order, he has duly entered upon and retained possession of the said uncomplete line. Save as above he denies the allegations in paragraph 5.

6. Paragraph 6 is denied. Plaintiff obtained leave in this Honourable Court to appeal to His Majesty the King in his Privy Council against the said order, but thereafter failed duly to give the security required by law within the time required by law in that behalf, and thereby the right to prosecute the said appeal lapsed, and was lost to the plaintiff.

7. As to paragraph 7, defendant says (a) that there was no agreement there as between him and the plaintiff other than the arrangement embodied in a letter addressed by defendant's attorneys to plaintiff, dated 10th September, 1903, copy of which is hereunto annexed, marked "A," to the terms of which for greater certainty defendant craves leave to refer. (b) He denies that he entered into any agreement regarding the abandonment of the aforesaid appeal, and save as above in (a) and (b) he denies the allegations in paragraph 7. (c) Defendant is still willing and offers to have the amount of "actual cost" ascertained by a reference and subject to the conditions set out in annexure "A."

8. The allegations in paragraph 8 are denied.

9. The allegations in paragraph 9 are denied, save that defendant admits there was a certain invasion by the King's enemies in the said districts in 1901, and he craves leave to refer to the next paragraph hereof.

10. With further reference to paragraph 9, defendant says: (a) That no detailed working drawings of the bridges over the Malagataar and Gwyany Rivers were submitted to the Government or its engineers. (b) That it was the duty of the plaintiff to construct the said railway in terms of the said contract and of the plans and sections attached thereto or referred to therein and that at no time has there been any approved deviation from the said plans or sections in terms of clause 3 of the said contract, dated 4th July, 1900, nor has the plaintiff, in terms of clause 4, submitted for approval, or at all, any route beyond George towards Oudtshoorn, via Zwart River or Kagma River Valley, either or both, showing a total distance not exceeding 75 miles, nor has the defendant or the Railway Department at any time agreed to any novation or variation of the said contract. (c) That the plaintiff wholly failed and neglected to perform his obligations under the said contract, and that the Railway Department is not responsible for any delay in the construction of the said railway. (d) That such extensions of time were allowed as, in the opinion of the Commissioner, the plaintiff was entitled, under the provisions of his contract, to receive.

11. The allegations and contentions in paragraph 10 are denied. Defendant craves leave to refer to the matters pleaded above in paragraph 10 (d), and to the proceedings and order in the matter heard in this Honourable Court on June 15, as set out above in paragraph 5, and says further that by the said order it was judicially determined that the contract time limit (extended by the Commissioner as aforesaid) had not been observed by the plaintiff, and says accordingly that the plea of res judicata is a good answer to any claim founded by plaintiff in respect of any illegal insufficiency or inapplicability of the said time limit.

12. Paragraphs 11, 12, and 13 are admitted save that as to a sum of £9,455 18s. 3d. being part of the amount of £70,689 14s. 5d. mentioned in paragraph 13, the defendant craves leave to refer this Honourable Court to schedule 17 E. attached to the referees' report of the 11th July, 1903, and to paragraph headed "Retention Money" in the said report.

13. The allegations in paragraphs 14 and 15 are denied.

14. Defendant is ready and willing, and consents that this Honourable Court should make an order referring the ascertainment of the amount of the "actual cost" of the incomplete line now in suit to the referees appointed by the Court on the 6th March last in the matter of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat and another line, subject to similar directions as were given to such referees in that matter, and craves leave to refer to annexure "A" hereto. Wherefore, subject to defendant's consent to a reference as set out in paragraph 14, he prays that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed with costs. And for a claim in reconvention defendant, now plaintiff, says:

15. He refers to the several matters and things hereinbefore by him pleaded.

16. (1) In terms of clause 16 of the agreement of July 9, 1900, annexed on schedule 1 to --, and enacted by the aforesaid Act No. 19 of 1900, the plaintiff (now defendant) was bound within 18 months from the approval of the said agreement by Parliament to complete the section of the line of railway referred to in the said agreement from Mossel Bay to George with the exception of platelayers' cottages and station buildings. (2) The said Act was promulgated on 19th October, 1900, and the said period of 18 months expired on the 18th April, 1902. (3) An extension of time of three months was granted by the defendant or his predecessor having regard to the terms of the concluding paragraph of the said clause, but the plaintiff (now defendant) did not complete the said section of the said line within such extended period, or at all, and therefore forfeited to the Government in terms of the said clause the sum of £10,000 sterling, the delay beyond the extended period not having been proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been caused in the manner set out in the said clause. (4) The plaintiff (now defendant) is accordingly indebted to the Government, as represented by the defendant, in the sum of £10,000, under and in terms of the said clause.

17. (1) In terms of Clause 17 of the aforesaid agreement, the plaintiff (now defendant) was bound within two years of the date of the approval of the said agreement by Parliament to complete the said line from Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn. (2) The said Act was promulgated on 19th October, 1900, and the said period of two years expired on the 19th October, 1902. (3) An extension of time of seven months in all was granted by the defendant, having regard to the terms of the first paragraph of the said clause, but the plaintiff (now defendant) did not complete the said line within such extended period or at all, and thereupon forfeited to the Government as and for liquidated damages in terms of the said clause, the security referred to in this agreement and hereinafter set out, the delay beyond the extended period not having been proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been caused in the manner set out in the said clause. (4) The aforesaid security of (a), the ten per cent (10 per cent.) retention money under the said agreement, (b) the ten per cent. (10 per cent.) retention money under the agreements for the construction of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat and the Somerset East-King William's Town lines, dated 4th July, 1900, and (c) the security lodged with the Cape Agent-General, and is the security referred to and set out in paragraphs 12, 13, and 11 respectively of the declaration; and the plaintiff (now defendant) is accordingly indebted to the Government, as represented by the defendant, in the sums of £4,913 2s. 5d., £70,689 14s. 5d. (subject as to £8,455 18s. 3d., to the matter set out above in paragraph 12), and £50,000, under and in terms of the said clause.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) claims (a) judgment in the sum of £10,000; (b) judgment in the sums set forth in paragraph 17 (4); (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

In his replication, the plaintiff stated that it was agreed between plaintiff and defendants that, on plaintiff abandoning his appeal against the order of the Court on June 15, the defendants should not avail themselves of the plea of res judicata.

Counsel said he did not intend to proceed on paragraph 9, section 2, subsection (a) of the declaration.

The correspondence referred to in the pleadings were the letters put in at the hearing of the motion on the 20th November.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was a judgment of the Court by which it was declared that the agreement between the Government and the concessionary had ceased and determined, and it was ordered that the Government be authorised to enter upon and take possession of such line of railway as had been completed. That judgment stood, and the Court was bound by it.

Mr. Searle: The question now to be considered, I submit, is whether or not the Government cannot enter into an arrangement with us whereby they would be debarred from pleading that.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it your contention that this new agreement amounts to a renunciation by the Government of its right under this judgment?]

That is the case. We say that the Government undertook that the question of deciding whether plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be left open on consideration of the plaintiff abandoning his appeal on the motion. Counsel said he proposed to call Mr. Hills to give evidence as to the agreement which was arrived at at an interview between him and the Commissioner.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are the terms of the new agreement to be derived from the correspondence? Surely the correspondence will speak for itself?]

Mr. Searle replied that it was partly from the correspondence and partly from a verbal agreement made at an interview between the parties. The appeal was abandoned in consequence of this agreement, and the actual cost of construction was to be ascertained. He proposed to call Mr. Hills.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do you want to call Mr. Hills for?]

To give evidence as to what took place at the interview between the Commissioner and Mr. Hills.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the defendant admits all that you claim about the agreement. The agreement was not disputed, only the construction of it.]

The plaintiff would never have given up his remedy unless the Government had agreed to allow plaintiff to sue for damages. If it was decided that this was res judicata, the question of damages would fall away, but the question of the retention money would still remain.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is nothing in the agreement by which the Government renounced its rights under the original judgment.]

The correspondence shows that defendant had refused to discuss the question of reference until the appeal to the Privy Council was withdrawn.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How can evidence be given as to what took place at the interview when the letters embodied the arrangement arrived at?]

I admit that there was no specific renunciation by the Government of its rights under the judgment, but this may be gathered from the general tenor of the letters. The appeal was only abandoned in consideration of their being allowed to enter an action de novo.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is not a word in the letters which would bear that construction. The judgment must stand and any evidence inconsistent with it disallowed. If the agreement altered the judgment, why do you not come into Court to have the judgment altered? The fact that this is not done strengthens the judgment.]

If the judgment stood it will be difficult to argue the question of damages. The penalty cannot be enforced without going into the full circumstances of the case. A penalty of £135,000 was asked for. The judgment gave the Government only the beneficial work, and not the entire work at actual cost, and they were therefore not entitled to claim a penalty. Res judicata must be specially pleaded.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is pleaded.]

It is pleaded, but there may be an estoppel or waiver of the plea. The agreement is a sufficient waiver. Mr. Hills would never have given up the appeal if he did not believe that there had been a waiver.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Mr. Hills wants to get the advantage of getting out of completing a losing contract, and at the same time to get the benefit under the contract.]

That is not Mr. Hills' fault. The Moesl Bay—Oudtshoorn line was most economically constructed, and paying well. The Government have not settled the route of the line beyond George, and this prevents plaintiff from going on with the work. About 33 per cent. of the work was done, and it was provided that the retention money should be returned when one-third of the work was done.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The judgment of the Court must stand, and there is nothing in the agreement to show that the Government renounced its rights under the judgment.]

Then I would direct my evidence to the two questions of interest and the retention money.

Buchanan, J., remarked that the question of the retention money was raised by the defendant.

Mr. McGregor said that he would not say anything on the question of damages, as it was perfectly clear they could not be claimed. The question of forfeiture still remained open, as the Court had made no order on the point.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It will be sufficient to say that no evidence can be led which is inconsistent with the actual judgment of the Court.]

Mr. Searle: We do not say the agreement was contained in the letter.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why didn't you go on with the appeal?]

The time has passed now, because security was not lodged in time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I daresay the Privy Council would give you leave to appeal.]

I contend that the effect of the agreement between plaintiff and the Commissioner was to prevent the Government setting up the plea of res judicata.

[Buchanan, J.: You say you have got an undertaking from the Government, and that, in consideration of that undertaking, you gave up your appeal,

Now you have to prove what that undertaking was.]

Mr. McGregor said the Government denied that there was any such agreement. The Government was quite indifferent as to whether there was an appeal or not.

Mr. Searle said that if the plea of res judicata were held to be good this question of damages would have to fall.

[Buchanan, J.: Do you say the new agreement allows you to go into the question of damages.]

Mr. Searle: Yes. Our position is that we said to the Government: "If you want us to abandon this appeal you must enable us to argue the case before the Supreme Court de novo."

[Buchanan, J.: Where do you say it was agreed to start de novo? In the letters?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is nothing in the letters in the remotest degree suggestive of any such agreement.]

Mr. Searle contended that it was the intention of the parties that there should be no plea of res judicata, and that plaintiff would never have agreed to give up his right to appeal unless he had understood that the Government had waived its right to plead res judicata.

Benjamin Theodore Tompkin, accountant, in the employ of the Grand Junction Railways, said he had prepared an account showing the interest on this section of railway. The interest was £6,318 9s. 7d. on the London expenditure, and £10,344 3s. 2d. on the Cape expenditure. The witness also produced a statement showing that according to the Government statement of work done, £166,900 odd had been paid, from which had to be deducted £17,000.

Mr. Searle said he wished to put this in to show that a third of the value of the work had been completed, it being agreed that a third of the retention money should be returned upon a third of the work being completed.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor, the witness said that the £166,900 included advances made on account of material which had not yet been put into the work. In regard to the interest witness had taken the cost of material, wages, etc., and the amount paid by Government and taken the interest on the difference.

By the Court: The rate of interest was 6 per cent.

Arnold Frank Hills, the plaintiff, said he claimed interest as portion of the actual cost. This was a line the Grand Junction Railways were constructing for themselves as owners, receiving a subsidy from Government. It was necessary to raise considerable capital; he had personally found over £400,000. He had built railways in England, and abroad.

Mr. Searle asked the witness whether it was the custom of commercial men to regard interest as part of the cost of work.

Mr. McGregor objected, contending that it was not pleaded that this was a custom, and that the Court would not admit evidence going to show that interest was due under a custom.

Mr. Searle contended that a reasonable rate of interest should be included in the cost. He would be able to call evidence to show that commercial men always regarded interest as part of the outlay on a work.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The point is whether interest was part of the actual cost. There must be some reason for the use of the word "actual."]

Mr. Searle said he would put the question to the other witnesses in that form; whether it was the custom to regard interest as part of the actual cost.

Mr. McGregor urged that this could not be done unless it were pleaded that interest was part of the actual cost. He contended further that if interest were to be regarded as part of the actual cost, the same view should apply to the amounts advanced by the Government.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the objection be insisted upon the Court will have to allow it, but it is a question for counsel for the Government to consider whether he should not allow the evidence to go in for what it is worth.]

Mr. Searle argued that he had a right to show by expert evidence that interest was what was called "prime cost."

[De Villiers, C.J.: The contention is that it was part of the actual cost. Supposing the contractor was to borrow at a high rate of interest, would the employers be bound to pay that rate?]

Mr. Searle said that only a reasonable rate of interest was payable. Interest would be on the same principle as bank exchange, which was allowed by the arbitrators.

[Buchanan, J.: Bank exchange would rather start on the same footing as freights on goods.]

Mr. McGregor said that the question was either one of interpretation, in which case the Court must decide it or it was one of custom, which ought to have been raised on the pleadings, and this had not been done. If interest was reckoned on the expense, it ought to be on the subsidies.

Mr. Searle said that the Government had specially reserved the question of interest in the agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the question of interest being considered as actual cost is objected to, the objection must be allowed.]

Mr. McGregor said that he would not press the objection.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then the question may be asked by consent, and Mr.

Searle must show that interest was part of the actual cost.]

Mr. Searle (to witness): Did you consider interest as actual cost?

Witness: The only case in which I came across the expression actual cost was in the contract. I carefully considered the meaning of it, and I for one certainly thought that interest was included in the words "actual cost."

The deductions made by the referees over all the contracts amounted to over £155,000. He had been appointed receiver of the Grand Junction Railways, Limited, by the English Courts. The Mosel Bay-George line was an economically constructed and a well-constructed line.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Quite irrelevant.]

Witness cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The most difficult part of the line still remains to be constructed, for the reason that we cannot go on with the work.

Sir Lewis Lloyd Michell said that for many years he was general manager of the Standard Bank, and had been engaged in financial work for forty years. He considered that "actual cost" certainly included a reasonable interest. What a reasonable rate of interest would be depended on various circumstances. Under ordinary circumstances, he would consider 5 or 6 per cent. a reasonable rate.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Witness believed the term "actual cost" was a recognised term in commercial circles. He thought it was a phrase which had a recognised meaning. He certainly attached to the words the meaning that the actual cost should include a reasonable interest.

In reply to a question by the Court as to whether a corresponding interest on the amounts advanced by the Government should be allowed, witness said he thought an interest account should be made out.

Harry Gibson, incorporated accountant, stated that in his opinion actual cost included interest. He had taken this view in a case some years ago, in which he had to deal with the words "actual cost."

John Edwin Paul Close, incorporated accountant, gave similar evidence. He had charged interest as part of the actual cost when he submitted the cost of the Cape Flats Railway, and this was placed before the Select Committee, and dealt with on this basis. Witness would take actual cost to mean the cost to a man.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He did not think that "actual cost" was used as a technical term indicating a definite meaning.]

Mr. Searle said that he wished to call Mr. Pauling, but unfortunately he was not present just then. The only other evidence which he proposed to lead was evidence as to the fact that the Government had sustained no damages owing to the non-completion of the line. This might perhaps be better given after the defendant had made his case. Subject to the right to call this evidence, he closed the case for the plaintiff, after having put in the correspondence.

Mr. McGregor said that he did not know if it was necessary for him to call any witnesses, except as to whether the sum claimed by the Government was as penalty or by way of liquidated damages. In view of the wording of the Act, he contended that it must be regarded as liquidated damages.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you no evidence of what "actual cost" means?]

I am quite content to accept the interpretation of the Court.

Mr. Searle said that if the Government produced no evidence as to damages, it was not necessary for him to call rebutting evidence. The two points then in dispute were the question of interest and the matter of the retention money, of which the latter was by far the more important. Interest would be included by the contractor on the actual cost and not in the profit. Interest was allowed by the Durbanville Railway Act (section 21, Act 7, 1903), and in the last Cape Central Railway Act (section 20, Act 2, 1903). The most recent Canadian Act for the trunk line across Canada assented to last year also allowed interest which was quoted by way of illustration. Actual cost was the expression used in the Act, but the word generally used was "cost" (Encyclopaedia of Accounting, p. 263), which included all the indirect and incidental expenses in addition to "prime cost." With regard to the question of the retention money, the Government was not entitled to that money. Section 16 of the contract of the Mossel Bay-George line embodied in Schedule 1, Act 19, 1900, provided for a forfeiture, and not for anything in the nature of liquidated damages. The matter of penalty was discussed in the Capetown Town Council v. Minder (6 Juta, p. 410), where the Court held that the penalty could only be imposed when damages were proved. Counsel also quoted Fort (45, 1, 13). The fact that the penalty was stated to be so and for liquidated damages did not prevent the Court from going into the question of the extent of damages as was held in Hansen and Schrader v. Deane (3 E.D.C. Report, p. 36), and in Hendrick and Soeker v. Atkins (13 C.T.R., 517). Counsel also quoted a large number of English decisions going on the same principle. In the present case no evidence whatever of damages had been given. And in the contract, the retention money was always referred to as a security or guarantee fund. Taking the Government's own figures, work to the value of £168,000 was done and the whole work was £500,000, and the retention money was to be paid when one-third of the work was done.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This money is only security. If the Government take the line, the security falls to the ground.]

Mr. Searle said that that was his contention.

Mr. McGregor said that Section 9 of Act 19 of 1900 provided that the schedule attached should be taken as if embodied in the Act, and should therefore be subject to the same canons therefore be subject to the same canons of interpretation. As to the interest, there was the decision given in the previous case on March 6, where the same question of actual cost arose and the Court then distinctly held that interest formed no part of the actual cost. None of the witnesses produced for the plaintiff had been able to say that any technical meaning was attached to the words "actual costs," or what they definitely meant.

The plaintiff had entirely failed to prove that he had suffered damage by the plaintiff in the taking over of the railway line from Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn, or that the expression "actual cost" included the interest paid on money borrowed by the contractor for the building of the line. Not a single case was adduced to show that the expression "actual cost" had been judicially considered, which one would have expected if the term were an ordinary and recognised business term. Counsel contended that the provision made for the payment of the interest in Section 21, Act 7 of 1893 (the Durbanville Act), rather strengthened his case than made against it. The point had already been before the Court under exactly the same circumstances, and the Court had held with the defendant and not the plaintiff. As to retention moneys—

[De Villiers, C.J.: Before you enter on that point, I wish to point out that when the work was completed to the value of one-third, the retention money ought to have been repaid, and no evidence has been led to show that one-third of the work has not been completed.]

Mr. McGregor said that the Government Engineer must certify as to the value of the work. He proposed to call Mr. Tippet, the chief resident engineer on the work.

Mr. Searle said that he was going on Mr. Dalton's letter, and Mr. Dalton was the Government Engineer according to the interpretation clause of the Act, which specified that the Government Engineer should be the engineer-in-chief.

Mr. McGregor then called

Allen Grant Dalton, who stated that he was the Assistant Engineer-in-Chief. He was acquainted with the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line, of which Mr. Tippet was the chief resident engineer. In his opinion one-third of the total value of the work was not even yet done.

Mr. Searle said that the procedure adopted was most extraordinary. He had put Mr. Dalton's figures to his own witnesses, and not a single word of cross-examination had been directed to this point by counsel for the defence.

Witness, cross-examined by Mr. Searle, said that the figure £169,000 included nails, sleepers, and other material. His report of the whole cost in April was about £500,000, and that then £134,000 worth of work was done, and since then, on the same basis, the extra amount of £33,000 had been done.

Witness, re-examined by Mr. McGregor, said that he could only give the certificate for the purpose of the return of the retention money, which could only be given on the basis of what was actually worked into the construction of the line. The value of the rolling-stock was about £42,000.

Mr. McGregor (resuming his argument) said that the question of retention money was decided in the case of Jones v. St. John's College (41, Law Journal, 6 Q.B., p. 115), which was very similar to the present case. Time in both cases was of the essence of the contract. The £10,000 deposited with the Agent-General was claimed by the Government under the direct provisions of the contract. Only £4,900 of the retention money arose out of the Mossel Bay—Oudtshoorn line; the larger sum of £70,000 arose out of the other two lines, which had been taken over by the Government. The Legislature had dealt with these three lines as one system, and doubtless for sound reasons had bound up the retention money of the other two lines with the completion of the Mossel Bay—Oudtshoorn branch, so that although the amount seemed large under the circumstances, the Legislature had made it so on account of the importance of the line to the system. One-third of the retention money might be paid over on the completion of one-third of the work, and one-third of the work had not been completed. Consequently the time for payment not having arrived, and as it was now impossible that it could arrive owing to the Government having taken possession of the line under the judgment of Court, the retention money could not possibly be paid over.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What authority is there for saying that a contract embodied in a statute ought to be construed differently from any ordinary contract.]

Mr. McGregor quoted the case of The Manchester Ship and Canal Co. v. The Manchester Race Co. (Chancery Division, 1901, vol. 2, p. 39), and the decision on appeal to the House of Lords, in which the principle was definitely laid down. In Ranger v. The Great Western Railway Co. (5 H.L., 22) it was held that where the quantum of damages could not be exactly determined a sum agreed upon for security for the non-performance of a contract was to be regarded not as a penalty, but as liquidated damages. Counsel distinguished between the cases quoted on the other side, viz.: Cape Town Town Council v. Linden, and Hanson and Schrader v. Deare, and the present case. It would be impossible from the very nature of this case to give specific evidence of damage, and therefore the liquidated damages specified by the statute should be enforced. It had been said that the Government had never approved of the Oudtshoorn-George route. There might have been some shadow of an argument in this if the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line had been completed. But that section was never completed, and consequently the work had not been hindered by the failure to approve.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Before you finish your argument, I ought to direct your attention to the question of the retention money being deducted from the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line.]

Mr. McGregor said that the larger sum of retention money was held back from the amount of the other contracts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How then can the sums on the other lines be claimed for in reconvention?]

Mr. McGregor said that they only claimed to be entitled to the moneys already in their hands.

Mr. Searle, replying on behalf of the plaintiff, said Section 7 of the Act referred to cost of material as being part of the value of the work done. He wished to refer specially to the sum of £116,000. The point had been raised that Section 9 of the Act placed this contract on a different footing, from other contracts, and he did not think that the case of The Manchester Ship Canal Co. helped the other side. In the case of The Sevenoaks and Maidstone Railway v. The London Chatham and Dover (11 Chancery Division, p. 625), it had been laid down that an Act of Parliament only validated a contract to the extent that if any reasonable construction could be placed upon it, it could not be held void for uncertainty. But how did that help the Government in this case, in which there was no doubt as to the construction to be placed on the language of the contract. The contract must be construed as a contract. Parliament approved of it as a contract and because Parliamentary notification was stipulated for, it could not be argued that Parliament did anything more than validate the contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The language of the Act was that the schedules were to have the same force and effect as if embodied in the Act.]

If they had been inserted in the body of the Act, they would still have remained contracts. The English authorities might be useful as to the question of penalty or liquidated damages, but the whole question must be decided by the Roman-Dutch Law. The case of Flazmore and Co. v. The Langlaagte Mining Co. (16 Cape Law Journal, 57), laid down the principle that damages must be proved, and the defendant has admitted that no damages could be proved except the salaries of the inspecting engineers. The decisions in Steyler v. Smuts (1 Menzies), and Otto v. Latagan (9 Juta, 250) were on the same principle. As to the argument that damages were recoverable on the ground of public utility, Section 18 provided that if the line was not being properly worked, Government might take over the line and be awarded damages not exceeding £25,000. How could any larger sum be claimed in face of this provision?

(Cur. Adv. Fult.)

Postea (February 29):

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff by this action claims (1) an order that he is entitled to recover from the defendant, as Commissioner of Public Works, the amount of actual cost incurred in the construction of the railway line from Mossel Bay to Oudtshoorn; (2) an order referring the ascertainment of such actual cost to referees; (3) an order that the plaintiff is entitled as part of the actual cost to interest which he has lost by reason of expenditure of capital on the said line, and also to interest which he has paid or become liable to pay for moneys borrowed by him for the construction of the line; (4) return of the sum of £50,000 lodged by the plaintiff with the Cape Agent-General as security for the completion of the line; (5) payment of the sums of £4,913 2s. 5d., and £70,689 14s. 5d., held by the defendant as retention money for the completion of the said railway line, as well as two other railway lines; and (6) damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant having entered upon and taken possession of the Mossel Bay-George line, and thus prevented the plaintiff from completing the line. The agreement for the construction of the line was entered into on the 4th of July, 1900, between the then Commissioner of Public Works and the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company, and the defendant admits that the plaintiff has acquired by cession, with the sanction of the Cape Government, all the rights of the company in respect of the said agreement. The defendant admits also that he did enter upon and take possession of the incomplete line, which he justifies on the ground that, as the plaintiff had failed to complete the line within the time required by the 17th clause of the agreement, this Court by its order of 15th June, 1903, gave him the requisite authority to enter upon and take possession of such incomplete line. The defendant raises no objection to the first claim, and as to the second claim an order was made by this Court on the 20th of November referring the ascertainment of the "actual cost" of the work done to certain referees, whose report has been submitted to the Court. The defendant denies that "actual cost" includes interest, or that he is bound to return the deposit of £50,000 or pay any portion of the retention money, and, by his claim in re-convention, he asks for judgment not only for the amounts of the retention money and of the deposit, but also for the sum of £10,000 to be forfeited under the 16th clause of the agreement. The question whether interest should be included in the amount of "actual cost," was considered in the case between the same parties relating to the two other lines of railway, and I see no reason for departing from the view there taken. That was the case of a contract with an ordinary contractor, whereas the agreement now in question was with a concessionary undertaking to construct a railway in consideration of a subsidy to be paid to him, but that is no reason for giving a different interpretation to the words in question. Evidence was tendered, and not objected to that the term "actual cost" would in commercial dealings be regarded as including interest, but no definite instance was mentioned in which this interpretation was accepted. The witnesses did not appear to me to give sufficient effect to the limitation introduced by the word "actual." Moreover, the meaning of the phrase must be collected from the terms of the agreement, and not from the opinion of expert witnesses. Under the 7th clause, "the amount of actual cost incurred in respect of the construction of any section of the line shall be ascertained either by the certificate of the Government Engineer or in such other manner as the Governor shall approve, and the total amount of the subsidy shall be computed upon the actual cost of the construction of the entire line, including the cost of such bridges, culverts, tunnels, stations, or other fixed appurtenances of the line, as the Governor may approve. All books, vouchers, drawings, and other documents relating to the construction of the line, whether in the possession of the concessionary or of their contractor, for the purpose of checking the cost of materials or work done, shall be available at all times for inspection by the Government Engineer, or by any other duly-authorised officer." In thus specifying the particular manner in which the actual cost should be ascertained, it is significant that the agreement does not say a word as to interest on the cost of construction, and the whole tenour of this and other clauses relating to the actual cost satisfies me that the parties intended to include no more than payments actually made for materials used and work done by the concessionary. Before considering the question whether the plaintiff has forfeited his right to claim the retention and deposit moneys, it will be convenient to consider the last of the plaintiff's claims, namely, for damages. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant illegally took possession of the line, but he does not claim to be reinstated in the possession, so as to enable him to complete the contract. The defendant did not take possession of the line until he had been thereto authorised by the Court, and that authority was given upon evidence which satisfied the Court that the plaintiff was wholly unable or unwilling to complete the work which he had undertaken to construct. By the 17th clause of the contract, the concessionary undertook "to push forward the construction of the line with all convenient speed, and to complete the same within two years of the date of the approval of this agreement by Parliament." The clause then proceeds thus: "In the event of the non-completion of the line within the time hereinbefore mentioned, unless the delay is proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Public Works to have been caused by the act of God, war, insurrection, rebellion, strikes, lock-outs, or combinations of workmen, or other extraordinary or unforeseen circumstances, beyond the control of the concessionary, or from or on the part of the Railway Department, the security referred to in this agreement, to wit, the 10 per cent. retention money under the agreement, together with the 10 per cent. retention money under the agreements for the construction of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat and the Somerset East-King William's Town lines, and the security lodged with the Cape Agent-General shall be forfeited to the Colonial Government as and for liquidated damages sustained by the said Government for the non-completion of the said line, and thereupon the agreement between the Government and the said concessionary shall cease and determine, and it shall be lawful for the Government to enter upon and take possession of such incomplete line of railway as has been constructed by the said concessionary, and the Government shall thereafter, as soon as the amount of the actual cost of such incomplete line shall have been ascertained, pay to the concessionary the amount so ascertained less such amount as shall have been paid on account of subsidy, and less the amount of retention money and security hereinbefore referred to." According to the evidence given on the previous application, the line was not completed within the time agreed upon, but owing to the disturbed state of the country an extension of time was offered to him, which, under the circumstances, seems to have been perfectly reasonable. He refused to avail himself of the offer, and the defendant, in the performance of the duties which he owed to the public, obtained from the Court authority to enter upon the incomplete line. The plaintiff gave notice of appeal against the order, but subsequently withdrew the appeal in consequence, as he states, of a fresh agreement entered into between him and the defendant. The fresh agreement is said to be embodied in a letter written by the defendant to his attorneys, and by them communicated to the plaintiff. In that letter the defendant expressed his willingness to submit the matter of the actual cost of the work done by the plaintiff to the same referees who had decided the previous dispute between the parties, it being understood that the questions of forfeiture, interest, retention, deposits, and other differences were not to be affected by the fresh agreement. The offer appears to have been accepted, and the reference was made to the referees by consent of the Court. The plaintiff now, whilst taking the benefit of the agreement so far as it allows him to obtain payment of the actual cost to be ascertained by the referees, claims the right to damages on the ground that the defendant illegally took possession of the line. The claim is wholly inconsistent with his previous conduct, and at variance with the express order of Court, placing the defendant in possession of the line. The appeal against that order has been withdrawn, and the claim for damages being inconsistent with the order of Court, cannot be allowed. The claim for payment of the retention moneys and for a refund of the security lodged with the Agent-General stands on an entirely different footing. In the contracts relating to the two other lines already referred to, the following clause appears: "The Government shall be at liberty to retain 10 per cent. on all the above payments to the contractors as a guarantee fund, such retention to be credited to the contractors and taken into account on final settlement, but subject to the terms as regards retention moneys set forth in the contract for the construction of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line." Under the heading "General Conditions," the following clause appears: "As security for the due performance of this contract, a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the amount of every certificate will, subject to the provisions of the contract, be deducted therefrom. Such deductions will remain in the hands of the Government as a guarantee fund, to be applied in terms of the agreement for the construction of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line." Coming next to the last-mentioned agreement, we find that by the 6th and 14th clauses the Government is allowed to retain 10 per cent. of the authorised subsidy as part security for the due construction and completion of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line, to be paid to the concessionary upon the completion of the line to the satisfaction of the Government Engineer. As to the retention moneys of the two other lines, they are placed on exactly the same footing as a certain sum of £50,000 which had been lodged as security with the Agent-General in London. The 15th clause provides that such security, together with the retention moneys of the two other lines, shall be dealt with as follows: Upon the completion of one-third of the actual value of the total work of the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line, one-third is to be paid; upon the completion of two-thirds of the line, a further third is to be paid; and on the completion of line throughout, the remaining one-third is to be paid. In fact, not even one-third of the line has been completed, and the important question arises: what is to be done with the large sums of money in the hands of the Government by way of security? The answer given by the defendant is that the moneys, having been forfeited to the Government under the 17th clause which I have already read, may be retained by him. The answer given by the plaintiff is that the defendant, having taken over the line at actual cost, should pay such actual cost, and that, although taken in its literal sense, the 17th clause would appear to create a forfeiture, yet, when read with the remaining clauses of the contract, and by the light of the ordinary rules of our law relating to the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract, the penal portion of the clause is inoperative, except in so far as it allows the Government to take possession of the incomplete line on payment of actual cost. It is singular that in the contracts relating to the construction of the two other lines no penalty is provided in case the Government should have to take over the lines at actual cost price, although these lines were to be constructed for the Government by the contractors. The retention money was left to be dealt with in connection with the Mossel Bay-Oudtshoorn line, which is a subsidy line, that is to say, the contractors were really concessionaires, who for constructing a line for themselves were to receive a subsidy from the Government. No question arises in the present case as to damages sustained by the Government by reason of the plaintiffs failing to complete the two other lines. In the previous action between the same parties the plaintiff obtained judgment for the amount of actual cost of those lines, but from the amount of such actual cost as ascertained by the referees was deducted the amount of retention money of those lines to be dealt with in connection with the line now in question. In support of the claim for a forfeiture the defendant's counsel mainly relied upon the 9th section of Act 19. of 1900, which not only confirmed the contracts, but enacted that they should have the same force and effect as if they had been set forth fully in the body of the Act. Among the contracts thus confirmed was the agreement now in question. That agreement contained clauses which had not been authorised by the two previous Acts relating to the construction of the railway, namely, 28 of 1895 and 40 of 1898, and it therefore became necessary for the legislature to confirm the agreement in order to render its clauses operative. The object of the legislature in confirming the agreement in such comprehensive terms appears to be to have been to make it perfectly clear that the agreement must be carried out in all its details. The object of the legislature could certainly not have been to defeat the intentions of the parties as embodied in the whole agreement, and, therefore, in construing the 17th clause of the agreement, the important question to be determined is what rights the parties themselves intended to be conferred on the Government. The English case of the Manchester Ship Canal Company (2, Ch. Div., 1900, p. 352), which was relied upon by the defendant's counsel, is really not in point, for there the question to be decided was whether an important clause of the statutory agreement was wholly void for perpetuity as well as uncertainty. A case which is more in point is that of Queen v. Midland Railway Company (19, L.R., Q.B.D., 540), where the question arose as to the effect of a provision in an Act of Parliament whereby an agreement set out as a schedule to the Act was "confirmed and made binding" on the parties thereto. The Court of Queen's Bench held that a clause of the agreement which provided that all questions of difference should be determined by arbitration in manner provided by the Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859, did not confer jurisdiction on the Railway Commissioners to undertake an arbitration upon differences arising between the parties. The ground of the decision was that the object of the confirmation of the Act of Parliament was merely to give statutory validity to an agreement which without such confirmation would not have been valid. In both these cases the previous case of the Caledonian Railway (L.R., 2, "Scotch Appeal Cases," 347) in the House of Lords, was referred to. The question there was whether the jurisdiction of the Courts had been excluded by a clause in an agreement, confirmed by the legislature, that all disputes arising under it must be settled by arbitration. But the terms in which the agreement was confirmed by the legislature in that case were different from the language of our own Act, "The said agreement shall be, and the same is hereby sanctioned and confirmed, and shall be as valid and obligatory upon the company and the Caledonian Railway Company respectively, as if those companies had been authorised by this Act to enter into the said agreement, and as if the same had been duly executed by them after the passing of this Act." The Lord Chancellor (Lord Cairns), after reading these words, said: "Up to this point the enactment does no more than give statutory validity to the agreement, but the clause proceeds in these words: 'And it shall be lawful for the company and the Caledonian Company respectively, and they are hereby required, to implement and fulfil all the provisions and stipulations in the said agreement contained.' Now, my lords, I apprehend it to be clear beyond the possibility of argument, that when an agreement between two companies, who are coming for an Act of Parliament is scheduled to the Act of Parliament, and when an enactment is found in the body of the Act, that each company shall be required to implement and fulfil all the provisions and stipulations in the agreement, every provision and stipulation in that agreement becomes as obligatory and binding on the two companies as if those provisions had been repeated in the form of statutory sections." In the present case the obligatory nature of the stipulations is not denied, but the question is raised whether the parties intended the ordinary rules of construction to be applied to the 17th clause of their agreement. The presumption is that the parties did so intend, and the clause itself contains no indication of a contrary intention. The subsequent clause, however, shows that the parties bore in mind the ordinary rules of our law regarding the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract. Under the eighteenth clause, the concessionary was to be liable to a considerable payment in case of his failing to maintain the line when completed, in a proper and efficient manner, to the satisfaction of the Government, and the clause then proceeds thus: "It is hereby expressly stipulated and agreed that the payment hereinbefore provided for shall be as and for liquidated damages sustained by the Government, and shall not be considered to be in the nature of a penalty, or subject to the ordinary rules regarding the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract." If a stipulation similar to this had been added to the seventeenth clause, it would have been clear that the parties intended to exclude the operation of the ordinary law, and the Court would have been bound, after the ample confirmation of every detail of the agreement by the Legislature to give effect to their intention. The absence, however, of such a stipulation from the seventeenth clause goes far to support the view that the parties intended the ordinary law to apply to the construction of that clause, as well as to the enforcement of the penal stipulations therein contained. If then such was the intention of the parties at the time of the agreement, can it be successfully contended that their intention was defeated by the subsequent statutory confirmation of the agreement? The terms of the ninth section of the Act, comprehensive though they be, would not justify the Court in applying different rules from those which would have been applied if the agreement had not been confirmed. The confirmation was necessary, for, as I have already observed, the Government had no authority under the previous Acts of Parliament authorising the construction of the lines in question, to enter into the agreement as finally adopted. The Legislature accordingly confirmed the agreement, and enacted that it should have the same force and effect as if it had been fully set forth in the body of the Act; but the ordinary rules for the construction of contracts, and for the enforcement of penalties for breaches of contract, upon the basis of which the parties contracted, are not on that account excluded. That the provisions of the seventeenth clause of the agreement are of a highly penal nature does not admit of any doubt. Under the 52nd Clause of the contracts relating to the two other lines, the retention moneys have been deducted from the amount of the actual cost awarded to the plaintiff. Under the seventeenth clause of the agreement now in question, not only the retention moneys, but the security of £50,000 lodged with the Agent-General are forfeited as liquidated damages, and, if the concluding portion of the clause is taken in its literal sense, the retention moneys must be again deducted from the actual cost of the line now in question, and the £50,000 must be also so deducted. The result would be that whilst the plaintiff would receive nothing for actual cost, he would forfeit the whole amount of the retention moneys and security, amounting in all to more than £110,000. The question then arises whether these penal stipulations should be construed in their literal sense or confined in their operation to the damages actually sustained by the Government. The practice of securing the performance of obligations by means of penal stipulations was well established and recognised in the Roman law. The practice led in many cases to great hardship, and to contradictory decisions as to the extent to which such stipulations should be enforced. To remove all doubts as to the principles which should be followed in the enforcement of penalties, Justinian issued a law, the essential portion of which reads as follows: Sanctum in omnibus casibus qui certam habent quantitatem rei naturam, veluti in renditionibus et locationibus et omnibus contractibus, hoc, quod interest dupli quantitatem minime excedere; in alteris autem casibus, qui incerti esse videntur, iudices, qui causas dirimendas suscipiunt, per suam subtilitatem requirere, ut quod reus inducitur damnum, hoc redatur (Cod., 7-47-1). Groenewegen in his commentary on this law remarks that it opens up a wide sea upon which few writers have embarked without peril, and that twenty-five different explanations of the law have been given by as many different commentators. His own view is that a penal stipulation is not subject to the rule limiting the amount of damages to double the value of the thing which was the object of the primary obligation. On the other hand, he is equally clear that the amount which can be claimed under a penal stipulation is not unlimited, and that such amount is subject to reduction by the judge in the exercise of his judicial discretion. He cites Dumoulin as his chief authority in support of this view. Pothier also (oblig., n. 345) accepts the opinions of Dumoulin as correct, and adds that it would be contrary to equity "that the creditor should enrich himself at the expense of the debtor by acquiring from him a penalty too excessive and manifestly beyond the damage which he has suffered from the non-performance of the primary obligation." Bynkerhook (Qu. Jurs. Priv., 2, 14), on the other hand, considers that Dumoulin's treatise increased the obscurity of the law, and that if his lessons were followed the work of the Law Courts would be still further increased. In the end, however, his conclusions do not greatly differ from those of Dumoulin, and he shows from decided cases in Holland that where a penalty is stipulated for which greatly exceeds the damages sustained by the stipulating party, the penalty would not be enforced. In the case of Cape Town Town Council v. Linder (6, Juris, 410), the remark was made by myself that there is a strong disinclination in our law to allow one person to be enriched at the expense of another, and that where a stipulation of this nature is inserted in a contract, the Court will carefully inquire whether it has been inserted as a penal stipulation or as compensation for damages. In that case the amount of £500 claimed was clearly intended as a penalty, but nothing that fell from the Court would justify the view that if the same amount had been made claimable by way of compensation, or as liquidated damages, the Court would have been bound to award it. The objection of our law to the inequitable enrichment of one person at the expense of another exists whether the means through which this is sought to be done be called a penalty or forfeiture, or compensation. Where the payment is stipulated to be made by way of compensation, the presumption is that it was intended as the measure of damages agreed upon for breach of the obligation, and the payment would be enforced unless the amount were manifestly out of all proportion to the damages really suffered, or the inconvenience actually undergone. Where the amount is fixed by way of penalty or forfeiture, no such presumption exists, and the payment would not be enforced unless the amount manifestly represented the measure of the damages actually sustained. I have not referred to the law of England, because the cases there decided are not so consistent with each other, or with the principles of our law as to afford clear guidance for the decision of a case like the present. According to Story (Eq. Jurisprudence, 1,317), "it is not improbable that Courts of Equity adopted the doctrine of relief in cases of penalties and forfeitures from the Roman laws," and he adds that, "penalties were in that hard treated altogether, as in reason and justice they ought to be, as a mere security for the performance of the principal obligation." The Courts of Common Law also in course of time followed the practice of the Courts of Equity. In the case of Hetta v. Bunlo (4 H., and N. 511), heard in the Court of Exchequer, Bramwell, B., said: "It seems as if, by some singular instinct, the Courts have been right, though without referring to the Statute by which they ought to have been governed. I believe that the reason is that the judges have considered when equity would have relieved. I agree with most of the cases. The words, 'liquidated damages,' or 'penalty,' are not conclusive, as to the character of the sum stipulated to be paid, for if the whole agreement is such that the Court can see that the sum is a penal sum, it must so be treated. On the other hand, if it is not a penal sum, it would be incorrect to treat it as a penalty merely because it is so-called in the agreement." In the case of Dimech v. Corlett (12, Moore, P.C.C., 199), Coleridge, J., in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, said: "The law of this country on the question of penalty, or liquidated damages, may now be considered, after a great number of decisions, not perhaps all of them strictly reconcilable with each other, to be at length satisfactorily settled, and the hinge on which the decision in every particular case turns is the intention of the parties, to be collected from the language they have used. The mere use of the term 'penalty,' or the term 'liquidated damages,' does not determine that intention, but, like any other question of construction, it is to be determined by the nature of the provisions, and the language of the whole instrument."

In the present case the sum of £50,000 lodged with the Agent-General, as well as the retention money, is expressly stated to be held as "security" for the performance of the principal obligation, namely, the completion of the line. The defendant, taking advantage of the plaintiff's failure to complete the line within the proper time, took possession of the incomplete line, and thus prevented him from completing it. In so doing the defendant acted well within the rights conferred on him by the agreement, but it does not follow that, without proof of damages, he is entitled to a forfeiture of moneys held by him as "security" or as a "guarantee fund" for the completion of the line. He claims the right to retain the moneys on the ground that they have been "forfeited to the Colonial Government, as and for liquidated damages sustained by the said Government for the non-completion of the line." It is difficult, however, to see what damages the Government could possibly have sustained by reason of the non-completion of the line. The plaintiff was not a contractor for the construction of the line on behalf of the Government, but he was a concessionary who obtained the right to construct the line on his own behalf, and, in consideration of the benefit expected to accrue to the public from the line, was to receive a subsidy from the Government. The non-completion of the line caused no pecuniary or other loss or damage to the Government. The only loss suggested from the bar to have been sustained by the Government was the payment made to its Engineer for the supervision of the construction, but that can hardly be regarded in the light of damages by reason of the non-completion of the line. Even if some damages were sustained by the Government, the amount of the forfeiture appears to me to be wholly in excess of any such possible damages. If this case had arisen between two parties in their individual capacity the Court would have been bound to reduce the amount of the penal stipulation to its proper limits, and the fact that one of the parties to the suit represents the Colonial Government does not alter the duty of the Court. There is really no proof whatever of any damages having been sustained by the Government. The defendant has obtained possession of the different lines constructed by the plaintiff without including in such cost any wasted expenditure or interest lost or paid by the plaintiff. From the amount awarded to the plaintiff in respect of the actual cost of the Klipplaat and Somerset East line has been deducted the amount of the retention money of both these lines. To allow the plaintiff now to retain the security of £50,000 and the retention moneys, amounting to over £66,000, would be contrary to the rule that a penal stipulation should not be enforced for an amount which is manifestly in excess of the damages actually sustained. The plaintiff must therefore succeed in his claim for the amount of actual cost as found by the referees, namely, £73,500 12s. 7d., for the return of the £50,000 lodged with the Agent-General, and for the payment of the retention moneys, namely, £66,146 18s. 7d., with interest from the date of summons and with costs, such costs not to include costs in connection with the plaintiff's claim for damages, which must be paid by the plaintiff. It follows that the defendant must fail in his claim in reconvention for the amount of the security and retention moneys. As to the defendant's claim of £10,000, under the 16th clause of the agreement the forfeiture was, in the face of it, intended as a penalty for non-completion of certain sections of the line, and in the absence of any proof of damage, he is not entitled to succeed. In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to consider the further question whether the defendant has waived his rights, if he had any, to claim the amount of the penalty. The result is that the plaintiff will obtain payment only for such amounts as have been actually and beneficially expended on the different lines, without any allowance for interest, loss of profits, or damages. He undertook the construction of works which were beyond his resources, but the penalties sought to be enforced against him would have been quite out of proportion to the loss or inconvenience sustained by the Government. For his failure to complete the lines within the times agreed upon, he has been deprived of the opportunity of making any profits out of his contracts; but it appears to me that the law would not have been in accordance with justice if it had further condemned him to the loss of the large sums retained by or lodged with the Government as a security for the completion of the lines which the Government has elected to take over in their incomplete condition.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

Mr. Upington said that he appeared for the London and Westminster Bank receivers of the partnership, the Grand Junction Railways, to ask that the amount for which their lordships had just given judgment should be paid to them. He noticed that a motion stood in the list on the part of the London and Westminster Bank, who claimed a preference over these moneys. He presumed that any payment made to the receivers would not in any way affect the rights of the London and Westminster Bank.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will not make any order as to the payment of the money until it has heard the application of the London and Westminster Bank.

GRAHAM V. GRAHAM. { 1904.
Feb. 3rd.

This was an action brought by Annie Elizabeth Graham (born Lloyd) against her husband, Robert Graham, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing that, a decree of divorce.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff and the defendant was in default.

The plaintiff's declaration set out that the plaintiff resided at Knysna, and the defendant's whereabouts at present was unknown. The parties were married in community of property in Knysna on the 14th September, 1896. There were four children of the marriage, who were still minors. The defendant deserted her about March, 1902, and she did not know of his whereabouts. Failing compliance with the order, plaintiff prayed for a decree of divorce, custody of the children, and forfeiture of the benefits accruing from the community of property.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage record of the Colonial Office, produced a copy of the certificate of marriage between Robert Graham and Annie Elizabeth Lloyd.

Annie Elizabeth Graham (plaintiff) said that until the last year she had lived happily with her husband. The cause of the unhappiness was the intemperate habits of the defendant, who ill-treated her when he was intoxicated. He joined an irregular force in Cape Town during the war, and when he returned to Cape Town, she never heard of him again. The letters she received from him while he was in Cape Town were in affectionate terms.

[Hopley, J.: For all you know, he may be dead?]

Witness: I don't think he is dead, my lord.

The defendant was ordered to restore conjugal rights to the plaintiff by the 5th March, failing which, to show cause by the 12th March why a decree of divorce should not be granted, why the plaintiff should not have custody of the children, and why he should not forfeit his benefits arising out of the marriage in community, the order to be published similar to the previous one. A further order was granted, authorising the Master to pay to the plaintiff £50 out of the moneys at present belonging to the joint estate.

ALLIE AND OTHERS V. { 1901.
PORTER AND BARSDFORF. { Feb. 3rd.

Building loan—Mortgage.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the sum of £421 18s. 1d., or to reduce a bond on a certain building of the amount of £1,000 to £579 1s. 11d., and to recover £100 damages incurred by reason of breach of agreement by the defendants.

The declaration set out that the plaintiffs resided at Cape Town, and the defendants at Claremont. About June, 1903, the defendants agreed to give plaintiffs a loan of £1,000 to enable the plaintiffs to complete certain buildings situated at Claremont, for which loan plaintiffs undertook to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and which was secured by a mortgage bond on the said land and property of the plaintiff. On 6th June, 1903, plaintiff executed a bond in favour of the defendant for £1,000, which bond was thereafter reduced without the knowledge of the plaintiff to £800. Defendants advanced moneys, performed services, and supplied goods to the value of £579 1s. 11d., and they now refused to advance the balance of the bond. Plaintiffs claimed the sum of £421 18s. 1d., being the balance of the bond or for a reduction of it to £579 1s. 11d., and £100 damages by reason of certain accounts for bricks and cement, which plaintiffs challenged, and for accounts incurred through the failure of the defendants to keep the agreement.

The plea set out that the money was not to exceed £1,000, but it was merely a covering bond. The defendants had advanced moneys, supplied goods, and performed services to the amount of £747 6s. 11d. The defendants before trial tendered the balance of £52 13s. 1d., and denied that the plaintiffs had sustained any damages by reason of any act of theirs.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Buchanan) for plaintiffs; Mr. Alexander for defendant.

Ahmed Allie, one of the plaintiffs in the case, said that with the other two plaintiffs, he bought a piece of land at Claremont in 1902. It was decided to put up two houses, which with the ground would cost £1,400. The three plaintiffs had about £400 between them, and the building was commenced before the bond was executed. Bricks were supplied by the defendant Barsdorf before any loan was secured, and the rate charged then was 73s. 6d. per thousand. Later, accounts were put in for 76s. and 80s. per thousand. Barsdorf said he would lend witness £1,000, and there was nothing mentioned of "if you want it." The total number of bricks put in for the construction was something like 78,000. He was to receive as much of the £1,000 as he required, and the balance when the house was complete. Barsdorf paid the money to the foreman, and not to witness, who had to pay several accounts, and was subsequently threatened with civil imprisonment. He never promised 5 per cent. to the defendants for buying goods for him. He knew nothing of the bond being reduced from £1,000 to £800.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He did not know that it was difficult to get money at the time. The two defendants were present when the arrangement about the bond was made. The house cost in all about £1,400. Walker was within hearing of the terms of the agreement. A wall fell down, but the kitchen did not collapse. He used the same bricks to rebuild the wall. He had cashed cheques to pay the workmen from Mr. Barsdorf. Porter was asked through his attorney to settle several accounts in connection with the building, and witness had actually disbursed £558 (which included the purchase price of the ground) on the property. He never agreed to pay 5 per cent. on the amount expended by the defendants, but he could not explain why the amount claimed in the summons, £615 1s. 8d., had been reduced in the pleadings to £579 1s. 11d.

Purdon Smailes, Claremont, said that Porter took twenty casks of cement from him last July at the rate of 14s. 9d. per cask.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He had paid 19s. for a cask of cement some time previously.

Francis Scott, partner in the firm of W. and G. Scott, said that his firm were fairly large dealers in cement. About 17s. 6d. less 5 per cent. would have been a fair price for English cement in July last, and a shilling less next month.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: A reduction would be made on a purchase of anything over eight casks.

Harry Clifton, builder, Rosebank, said that the bricks of the quality produced would cost 65s. and 60s. respectively, delivered at Claremont.

He considered the market price for cement last July would be about 15s. 6d. per cask, taking 50 casks. The bricks produced were inferior bricks.

John Tully, member of the firm of Tully and Waters, architects, said that he inspected the buildings at Claremont, and estimated the number of bricks in the building, including wastage, to be 63,895.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He had not allowed for the washaway of the wall. The buildings would have cost about £500 each.

Abdul Solyman, foreman mason, at the works at Claremont, said that he remembered when the foundation was finished. Barsdorf asking him where Allie would get his bricks from, and the former offered to supply the bricks delivered on the spot at 73s. 6d. a thousand. Allie told him to give Barsdorf the order for the bricks. Barsdorf said that he ceased sending bricks because Allie had not paid him and then offered through witness a bond to Allie. Subsequently Allie said he would require £1,050, and witness brought the plans to Barsdorf. Part of the building fell through excessive rains, but there were very few bricks wasted in taking down a wall.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: His conversation with Mr. Barsdorf took place six weeks before the bond was executed. About 500 bricks were wasted on one wall. When the building was nearly completed, he got ten casks of cement from Mr. Reynolds, and he also received three loads of stone. He had given Allie back £10 out of a wages cheque to pay the carpenters.

Christopher Brady, attorney for the plaintiff, stated that on the 9th September, he wrote to Mr. Porter, claiming £1,000 on a bond. Mr. Barsdorf never denied having received 1,200 bricks, 31 bags of lime, and three casks of cement from the building, and witness understood that they would allow for the articles in the accounts. The tender of £52, which the defendants alleged in their pleadings, was tendered, was never offered to witness.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: His client was an ignorant man, and that would explain why he had not disclosed a certain book in the pleadings.

This closed the evidence for the plaintiff.

Edmund George Barsdorf, one of the defendants, said that when he found the plaintiffs were unable to pay for the bricks the bond was entered into. Allie first wanted a building loan, but defendants agreed on the passing of a bond to supply him with stones, bricks, lime, cement, sand, and pay wages. No prices were agreed upon. The money they advanced to Allie was obtained by overdraft, for which they had to pay 8 per cent. It was agreed that defendants were to receive 5 per cent. for paying wages, and looking after the work. The whole of the arrangement was gone over in Mr. Walker's presence. Witness complained to Allie when the walls fell three times, and the plaintiff replied, "What am I paying you 5 per cent. for? Get it covered up yourself." When Allie had drawn nearly £800, witness told him that the bond would be reduced. Mr. Porter and Mr. Hardy heard the conversation about reducing the bond. The prices plaintiffs were charged for bricks and material were the prices ruling at Claremont at the time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The five per cent. was charged to Allie for keeping the defendants' own accounts. He believed Mr. Porter could produce the invoices of the bricks. He had to draw the foreman's attention to soft bricks in the wall. He was neither an architect nor a builder, but as a "general agent" he inspected the building. The defendants were to supply the material, and pay wages up to £1,000, and when the building was complete the balance of £1,000 was to be given to the plaintiffs if the bond could be ceded.

Phillip J. Porter, the other defendant, stated that he remembered the interview in May, when an arrangement was made that Allie and the others were to give defendant a covering bond for £1,000, and defendants in return were to supply money for wages, and also bricks, cement, stones, and lime. The 6,500 bricks objected to arrived after April, and were not included in that month's account. In August Allie was told by witness that the bond would be reduced to £800, and at Allie's request to make it £900, the plaintiff said "All right."

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He only produced vouchers for the items disputed, but he did not think the others were necessary. He had taken a number of tasks off an agent's hands, and retailed them to the plaintiffs at the current rate. The valuation was made with a view to ceding the bond.

John H. Walker, attorney for the defendants, said that he remembered Mr. Barsdorf saying that Porter and himself had agreed to lend the plaintiffs moneys up to £1,000 for the building, and when finished, the intention was to raise a loan, and cede the bond to save expense. The defendants mentioned that the building would roughly cost £1,400, and the plaintiffs were to put in about £400. The material was to be supplied at current local rates. Afterwards, on instructions, he had the bond reduced to £800.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He did not put any of these arrangements into the bond.

R. B. Hardy, accountant, said that he remembered Mr. Porter stating that the bond would be reduced to £800, and Allie appeared to agree.

Thos. F. Penfold said that the firm of Ward and Thorpe sold cement in June, July, and August last year, at 18s. 6d. a cask.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He would bring the delivery notes from the stores.

Martin H. Greve, Claremont, said the two buildings could be put up for £825. The ruling price for Stellenbosch bricks during that time, delivered at Claremont, would have been about £4 per thousand.

Chas. Weidner, architect, Claremont, estimated the bricks in the buildings to be 63,000, and he would allow for a wastage of 9 per cent. on the red bricks, and 50 on the white. If the whole two stoeps were filled up with bricks, it would take another 6,000 bricks.

Abraham Levitan, Wynberg, said that in July and August last year, bricks from Stellenbosch cost 82s. 6d. per 1,000.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: About 30 or 40 per cent. of the bricks he purchased were similar to the one produced, and the remainder were of a better quality.

Counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 11):

Hopley, J.: This case has presented considerable difficulty, not only by reason of the many contradictions between the witnesses on matters of fact, but also of the way in which the pleadings have dealt with the matters at issue between the parties. The contradictions have been rendered to a great extent possible by the very irregular and unbusinesslike mode of procedure adopted, by men accustomed to transact business, in a matter which should have been conducted on ordinary lines of sense and precedence, and which in that case would probably have ended without dispute or litigation. The state of confusion consequent upon the course pursued is also probably responsible for the state of the pleadings, which do not comprehend to the full the points in dispute between the parties; but I do not think that they are so defective in this respect as to render it impossible to deal effectively with the whole matter. The plaintiffs are three Indian tradesmen, who reside and carry on business in Cape Town, and who seem to have combined about April last to purchase a building lot on the Sans Souci Estate, at Claremont, on which they proceeded to erect a house. After they had paid for the ground, their available capital consisted of £400, or, at all events, they represented that they had that sum in hand, and would spend it in the building, which, however, was designed to cost a considerably larger amount. They procured stone and laid the foundations, and then obtained on credit bricks from the defendant Barsdorf, who is a general agent at Claremont, and who was at that time, in conjunction with the defendant Porter, carrying on a business in building materials, other than woodwork and iron. Barsdorf agreed to supply bricks at 73s. 6d. per 1,000, and during April he did deliver 22,500 bricks, with which the walls were begun. The plaintiffs did not pay for all these bricks, but about the beginning of May they approached Barsdorf with a proposition that he should raise a building loan for them, and after some negotiation, an agreement was come to between the plaintiffs of the one part and the two defendants acting together of the other part, that the latter should aid them financially, to enable them to complete the building. Unfortunately, and most unwisely, the agreement was not reduced to writing, as it should have been. I am, however, satisfied as to the general terms of the understanding arrived at. It was agreed that the defendants should receive a covering bond, secured by mortgage of the property in the amount of £1,000, and that they should supply at their current prices such building materials as they were in the habit of dealing in, and, furthermore, advance the wages of the workmen to the amount of the above sum, if necessary. The plaintiffs agreed to spend also the £400 they had in hand on the wood, iron, and carpentry work. The result of this arrangement would be that if the £1,000 to be supplied by the defendants was all expended, as well as the sum of £400, there would be a building which, together with the value of the ground, would give a security worth about £1,500 for the amount due under the bond. The plaintiffs were constructing the building without the aid of a supervising architect or clerk of the works, and I am satisfied that it was agreed between the parties that the defendants, through Barsdorf, who was on the spot, should supervise the building, and that they should have as remuneration for this service and for the general agency in supplying the goods and advancing the money a commission of 5 per cent. on the amount expended through them, including the goods supplied by them. It was a rough-and-ready way of fixing some remuneration for their supervision and trouble, and would work out at the most at £50 in the five or six months to be occupied by the work. The agreement as to Barsdorf's supervision and the remuneration of 5 per cent. is denied by the plaintiff Allie, but I am satisfied that it was entered into, and the significant fact that Barsdorf on one occasion purchased iron to protect the walls from rain, and that his action in this matter and the charge for the iron are not disputed, confirm my belief that his version on this point is correct and that Allie's is untrue. The season was a very wet one, and it is likely that there was a considerable waste of bricks, especially as there is evidence of more than one collapse of walls; but eventually, towards the end of August, the building was near completion, by which time the expenditure through the defendants, according to their books, was something between £700 and £800. The defendants had never intended, as I am satisfied, that they informed the plaintiffs, to retain the bond for their own benefit, but they had all along intended to cede the bond, on completion of the building, to some money-lender; and they had meanwhile found the necessary funds by overdrawing their own account at their bank. When the building was completed, or nearly so, they computed that its value was considerably less than £1,500, with the ground, and they saw that they would not be able to find a capitalist who would advance £1,000 on the security. They therefore told Allie, who acted throughout for the plaintiffs, that they proposed to reduce the bond by £200. He asked whether they could not let it remain at £800, being no doubt anxious to secure the unexpended balance, but the defendants refused, and Allie consented to the reduction to £800. This is denied by Allie, but I am quite satisfied that he did agree to this, and it is again unfortunate that this was not put into writing. This took place on August 22, and on the 9th of September the bond was reduced by the defendants to £800, at which amount it now stands registered. About this date Allie consulted an attorney, with the result that he claimed the unexpended portion of £1,000 and disputed the amount alleged by the defendants to be due to them. With regard to the bond, it is true that in its terms it is an absolute acknowledgment of debt by the plaintiffs for the full sum of £1,000, and they allege that it was reduced without their knowledge or consent to £800. The plea does not specifically set up the consent to the reduction, but there is a general denial of the paragraph of the declaration in which the absence of knowledge and consent on the part of the plaintiffs is alleged; and it seems to me that the onus is on the plaintiffs of proving that a reduction of their indebtedness, prima facie a matter entirely in their interests, was detrimental to them, and that it was done without their consent and in breach of the contract which they had entered into with the defendants. The case they set up is that they wanted the balance of the £1,000 to pay their other tradesmen for wood, iron, carpentering, etc., and that they are entitled to have such balance paid over to them; but I am satisfied that the bond was to cover the defendants for the advances of cash and for goods supplied by themselves only, and I am also satisfied that Allie knew of and consented to the reduction he now complains of. The sole question that remains therefore is the amount which was actually expended by the defendants for the plaintiffs and the amount due to them for materials supplied. They have furnished an account showing the amount to be £747 6s. 11d., and they say that they have tendered and are ready to pay over the balance of the £800—to wit, £52 13s. 1d. Both the amount expended by defendants and the tender are denied by the plaintiffs. They dispute the number of bricks alleged to have been supplied to them, the prices charged for bricks and cement, and the item of £32 3s. 6d. charged for commission on expenditure on the 5 per cent. basis. They also dispute an item of £2 2s., being a fee paid to a competent valuator in September, and his train fare, 1s. 6d. There are, moreover, three items in defendants' account which stand in a peculiar position, namely, under the date of September 25, 1,200 bricks, 31 bags of lime and three casks of cement, which were taken from the building where they had been delivered by the defendants to some premises where the defendant Barsdorf was in his individual capacity constructing some building. These were taken by Barsdorf with the consent of Allie, Barsdorf having promised Allie to pay him for them, and he says that he is quite ready and willing to do so at any time, but that that is a private matter between himself and the plaintiffs. This contention I believe to be the correct state of affairs. It was a private matter between the plaintiffs and Barsdorf, for which Barsdorf is ready to pay them, and it is a pity that such payment was not made and the items struck out of the account. They must, however, be left for adjustment between the plaintiffs and Barsdorf outside of the present action. Now with regard to the prices charged by the defendants for bricks and cement, I am satisfied that in April they were supplying bricks by arrangement with Allie at 73s. 6d. per 1,000, and that price is charged in their account for the bricks supplied by them at that time. After the arrangement, however, that the defendants should finance the operations, I am satisfied that the arrangement was that they should supply all the materials in which they dealt at their current prices, which of course varied with the market, and I am satisfied that the prices charged by them are the prices at which they were, at the several times specified, supplying similar materials to their various customers. To determine the number of bricks actually supplied under the contract is the most difficult matter in the whole of this case. The defendants in their account charge for 79,450, and the onus of proving that such number was delivered at the works and received under the contract rests on them. One might go further and say that, as they were charging a 5 per cent. commission for supervision of the work, it was their duty to see that whatever bricks were delivered were actually usefully expended in the building. It is in this portion of the matter that both sides displayed an astonishing lack of ordinary business methods and precautions, and for this the defendants seem to me more to blame than the plaintiffs. The bricks were delivered by their cart—a man called Southam—and the only guide anyone had as to the number was the reports made verbally by this man to Mr. Porter. No delivery notes seem to have been used, and no receipts were even given, nor was any tally of any kind kept. If Southam had been called at the trial it might have been possible to judge from his evidence whether he had made false reports on the matter to his employers, but unfortunately he had disappeared, and though the defendants have made all possible attempts to find him and produce him at the trial, he has not been discovered. They, however, knew as early as last September that the quantity of bricks was a matter in dispute, and they seem to have made no effort at that time to keep Southam under observation in order that they might not lose the benefit of his evidence. From what was said by defendants' counsel at the trial, there is reason to suspect that Southam has disappeared for reasons best known to himself, but apparently not creditable, as it was remarked that several people, presumably creditors, were anxious to ascertain his present whereabouts. It is obvious that if he were not an honest man he had every opportunity of disposing of the defendants' bricks for his own benefit, and accounting for them by false statements to Mr. Porter. In these circumstances the only remaining way of finding out what was actually supplied is to ascertain by measurement and calculation the number of bricks in the building, and to make an allowance for waste, having due regard to the inclement season which prevailed during the building operations. The best evidence on this point that has been called is that of the architect, Mr. Tully, who estimates the bricks which would have been used at about 64,000, including about 8,600 for waste. His estimate, however, though making a somewhat liberal allowance for waste, is probably something under the mark, as there seem to have been more bricks used in the stoep than he allowed for, and as he probably did not estimate for the collapses and carelessness of the plaintiffs' foreman. Another architect, Mr. Weidner, estimates that there are 63,000 bricks actually in the building, and that at least another 9,000 should be allowed for waste. On the whole, I am of opinion that it would be fair to allow about 70,000 bricks as having been supplied under the contract, and to deduct 8,000 from the number claimed by the defendants as having been delivered. These would not be of those delivered during April, but later, when the prices ruled at 80s. per 1,000—and accordingly £32 must be deducted from the defendants' account on that item. The items of £2 3s. 6d. for the valuator's charges should, I think, be allowed against the plaintiffs, for the reasons that they were usefully and necessarily incurred for the plaintiffs, and, I believe, with their consent and at their request; and it is also significant that in the account furnished by them those items were not objected to. The other items objected to by them were either admitted at the trial or are covered by my finding as to the prices the plaintiffs agreed to pay under the contract. The result is that the total set up by the defendants of £747 6s. 11d. should first of all be reduced by £52 3s. 6d., the amounts charged as commission, which would bring it down to £695 3s. 6d. (for I do not think commission should be charged on the commission of £20 for raising the loan). From the £695 3s. 5d., a further deduction of £32 must be made for the 8,000 bricks not delivered—or at least not proved to have been delivered—which would bring the amount to £663 3s. 5d. On this amount 5 per cent. commission should be allowed to the defendants an amount of, say, £33 3s. 1d., which would raise their account to £695 6s. 6d. And to this amount must be added their commission of £20 for raising the loan of £800—an amount disputed by the plaintiffs, but at the trial admitted to be due. When that is added, the amounts claimable by the defendants against the plaintiffs come to £716 6s. 6d., and the balance of the £800, viz., £83 13s. 6d., is due to the plaintiffs from the defendants. The defendants plead that they tendered, and again tender by their plea, the sum of £52 13s. 1d. as the full balance due to the plaintiff. As I find this was less than the amount really due under the contract, it is not necessary for me to decide the point raised as to whether the tender being made "in full settlement of the matter" was or was not an unconditional tender. I believe that in our practice such a tender has always been looked upon as unconditional in its nature and terms, but there seem to be English decisions in which a contrary view has been expressed. The plaintiffs also claimed damages on the ground that they were obliged to raise funds for payment of other people who had supplied them with materials (not of the kind supplied by the defendants), which course they would not have had to adopt if the balance of the £1,000 had been paid over to them, and for inconvenience and loss sustained by them by reason of withholding such balance; but there was nothing in the contract making it obligatory on the defendants to pay other tradespeople, and the claim must fail. There must, therefore, be judgment for the plaintiffs for the sum of £83 13s. 6d., with interest from the date of the summons. With regard to costs, I feel that both parties are to blame. The plaintiffs have insisted on an untenable claim, that they should have the balance of £1,000; they have made a claim for damages which has failed, and they have disputed charges and items for which they were justly liable. The defendants, on the other hand, have largely contributed to the state of confusion and consequent litigation by their unbusiness-like manner of proceeding; and, finally, from the same cause, have made an insufficient tender. There will, therefore, be no order as to costs.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

CAVANAGH V. HANSEN. 1904.
{ Feb. 4th.

This was an application for the compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate, the defendant having failed to satisfy a judgment. The sequestration would, it was stated, be for the benefit of the creditors.

The affidavit of Martin Christian Hansen, of Newlands, stated that he was not indebted to the plaintiff in any sum whatever, and had never had any dealings with the plaintiff. Deponent's father appeared to have signed the bond in respect of which judgment had been given. The father's name was Martin Christian Hansen, and he was at present detained in the Valkenberg Asylum on an order of a judge of the Supreme Court, though he had not yet been declared to be of unsound mind.

It was admitted that the real defendant was the father, who, plaintiff stated, had passed bonds under the name in which the summons had been issued. Plaintiff further stated that the summons had been left at the son's house as service on the father, this being the father's last known place of residence.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for Martin Christian Hansen; Mr. Gardiner for plaintiff.

De Villiers, C.J.: The matter had better stand over until steps are taken to place the estate of the father under curatorship. The question of costs will also stand over.

MARTIN V. DE JONGH.

Mr. Nightingale moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the R.M. of Queen's Town for £17 and costs, and for certain landed property to be declared executable.

Granted.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,500, and for certain specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

ROSENBLATT V. WILL.

Mr. Gardiner asked for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £800, for interest on certain promissory notes, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

ROSENBLATT AND WESSELS V. WILL.

Mr. Gardiner applied for provisional sentence for £985 19s. 11d. on a mortgage bond, and interest on promissory notes, and for certain specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

LIPSCHITZ V. BOTHA.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £313 16s. 6d.

Granted.

GOLDMAN V. BOTHA.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £68.

Granted.

MCGREGOR V. PENKIN.

Mr. D. Buchanan asked for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £5,250, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

SYFERT V. ROWTOWSKI AND OTHERS.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,750.

Granted, specially hypothecated property being declared executable.

LIND V. NATHAN.

Mr. Nightingale moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £850, and for properties hypothecated to be declared executable.

Granted.

JACOBSON V. PRETORIUS.

Service, short—Costs.

Mr. Nightingale moved for a final order of sequestration of the defendant's estate.

De Villiers, C.J., said there had been short service. The summons must be served afresh, and the return day would be extended until the 18th inst. The costs of the short service could not be allowed.

MEYER V. BOAAF AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence for £73 6s. 8d., on certain conditions of sale.

Granted.

VAN HEERDEN V. WERTH.

Mr. D. Buchanan applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, and for certain specially hypothecated property, to be declared executable.

Granted.

HULIN V. JAMES.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on certain four promissory notes, or I.O.U.'s, for the sum of £5, £10, £13 5s. 3d., and £1. Counsel said that defendant had also been summoned, under Rule 329d, for a sum for board and lodging, but the time in which appearance had to be entered in that case had not expired.

The defendant appeared, and said he was in the railway service, and had come from De Aar to defend this case. In regard to the claim for board and lodging, he denied that he was indebted to the plaintiff therefor, and put in a letter written by Hulin to him, inviting him to stay at his (Hulin's) house as a guest. As to I.O.U.'s, he admitted that the signatures thereon were his, but said that he had a counter-claim for services rendered. Payment had never been demanded from him on account of these I.O.U.'s, and the first intimation he had was on receipt of the summons.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the defendant had a claim for services rendered, that was quite a separate matter. Judgment must be given on these notes.

Mr. Close said that if defendant paid the amount of the notes, the other part would be abandoned.

On the question of costs, defendant said Mr. Hulin knew where he was, and could have applied to him for payment before putting him into court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You should have tendered the amount.]

Defendant said he was ignorant of the legal procedure. He could not pay the amount for three months.

Provisional sentence was granted, with costs, execution being stayed for three months.

ATTWELL AND CO. V. CHANCE.

Mr. Close moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £146 10s. 8d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, and for £27 10s. 10d., moneys disbursed by plaintiff on behalf of the defendant.

Granted.

SMITH V. SMITH.

This was an application made upon summons issued by John Jacob Smith, calling upon Anna Johanna Smith to show cause why she should not be adjudged of unsound mind, and why a curator should not be appointed for the care of her person and property.

Mr. Russell for applicant; Mr. Struben for respondent's curator.

Plaintiff, John Jacob Smith, said defendant was his wife. He saw her about 14 days ago. She was then in Valkenberg Asylum, where she had been confined since March. When he last saw her, she was in a very bad state, and had nothing to say. She owned a farm at Constantia. Under a deed of sale, signed by her, transfer of certain property had to be made to a Mr. Nel, and witness now applied that the curator should pass transfer of this. He also wished to sell certain goats for the benefit of his wife. He wanted to have appointed as curator of the property Mr. Pritchard, of Beaufort West, who had acted as temporary curator bonis. Witness asked that he (plaintiff) should be appointed curator of the person.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: His wife had not shown signs of insanity before this deed of sale was signed in January last year.

Dr. Dodds, superintendent at Valkenberg Asylum, gave evidence showing the woman to be insane. There were only faint hopes of her recovery.

Mr. Struben said he had seen the woman, and was satisfied that she was of unsound mind. He was also satisfied that she was sane when she entered into the contract of sale.

The Court declared the respondent to be of unsound mind, and appointed applicant a curator as to the person, and Mr. Benjamin Pritchard curator as to the property, with power as prayed for in the summons, costs to come out of the estate.

Will — Prohibition against alienation—Mortgage.

This was an application for an order authorising the registration of a certain mortgage bond. The petitioners were Cornelia Elizabeth Margaritha Slabbert and others, all legatees under the joint will of their parents, Johannes Slabbert and Francina Christina Slabbert (born Strydom).

The facts sufficiently appear from the report of the Acting Registrar of Deeds, which reads as follows: "By the will of the late Johannes Slabbert and his deceased spouse, Francina C. Slabbert, all immoveable property found in the joint estate at the death of the first-dying was bequeathed to five of their sons, viz.: (1) Johannes Floris, (2) Matthys Johannes, (3) Francois Johannes, (4) Martin Christoffel, and (5) Jurgen Johannes, in equal shares, but vesting was deferred until the death of the longest living of the testators, who was left in the full, free, and undisturbed possession and use of the land. The will then went on to recite that neither the longest living nor one of the above-named heirs, during their lives, shall sell, pledge, exchange and lease, or alienate, or in any other manner dispose of the said landed property, or any portion thereof, save to one or more of the above-named heirs, and then alone for a sum not exceeding £50, which said sum shall be reckoned as each child's or heir's share in the said legacy of the landed property.

The further provisions were that each heir might dispose of his share by will and that the restrictions above imposed only applied to the children of testators, and not to the children or future owners.

It seems clear that there is a distinct prohibition against alienation or pledge (and in the term "pledge" used in conjunction with the succeeding words, I take it "mortgage" is included) save to one or more of the above-named heirs, and then for a sum not exceeding £50, which said sum shall be reckoned as the seller's or pledgor's share in the legacy of the land. The intention of the testators was evidently to create a fidei commissum in favour of their grandchildren, the restrictions imposed making it almost impossible for the land to go into the hands of strangers prior to the succession of the grandchildren, although, curiously enough, the heir might bequeath his share to anyone he pleased. The purchaser of some of the shares is a brother and one of the residuary legatees, while not an heir to the property in question, and it might therefore be that the wishes of the testators would be carried out by permitting transfer to Renier Johannes Slabbert; but in view of the fact that he is not a co-heir, the Registrar did not feel justified in passing transfer contrary to the direct provisions of the will; and as pledge to a stranger was equally prohibited, he declined to register the bond by Francois Johannes Slabbert to G. S. L. Jones.

On the motion of Mr. Russell, the Court granted an order as prayed.

Ex parte VAN DER WALT.

This was an application by Johanna Alida van der Walt, in her capacity as executrix testamentary of the estate of her late husband, and in her capacity as mother and natural guardian of her minor children, and in her personal capacity, for leave to sell certain immoveable property bequeathed to her said minor son, and after paying the debts of the testator (petitioner's late husband) out of the proceeds to invest the balance of such proceeds in house or landed property in Middelburg, in the name of the said minor son.

The Master recommended that the prayer of the petition be granted.

On the motion of Mr. Schreiner, K.C., the Court granted an order as prayed.

Ex parte DE BRUYN.

This was an application on behalf of Olivia Mason de Bruyn, in her capacity as executrix testamentary, in the estate of her late husband, Daniel P. B. de Bruyn, for an order authorising her to invest certain money due to her minor children from the estate of her late husband in a first mortgage on certain property. The petitioner contemplated entering into a second marriage.

The Master's report was favourable.

On the motion of Mr. M. de Villiers, the Court granted an order as prayed.

JACOBS V. JACOBS.

Mr. Alexander moved to extend the return day of citation, and for leave to make substituted service. Defendant was last heard of in England.

The return day was extended until 14th May, substituted service being ordered to be effected by publication in the "Government Gazette" and the London "Daily Telegraph."

SPANGENBERG V. SPANGENBERG.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis for divorce. The plaintiff was the wife, Johanna Maria Spangenberg, and counsel was prepared to certify in the matter.

The plaintiff appeared, and stated that she was not possessed of any property.

It was stated that defendant lived at Maitland.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on Thursday next, calling on the respondent to show cause why leave should not be granted to sue in forma pauperis.

THOMPSON V. THOMPSON.

This was an action brought by Edith Constance Thompson (born Aitchison) against her husband, John Reginald Thompson, for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground that the defendant had committed bigamy, having previously married one Emma E. Voss in London.

Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The affidavit of the petitioner set out that the parties were married at Claremont on the 10th April, 1901, the defendant stating that he was a bachelor. Three days later the defendant was arrested on a charge of theft, and acquitted. In September or October, 1901, the defendant wrote saying that he was leaving South Africa, and that the petitioner would never see him again, and since that she had never heard of him. Petitioner was informed that in November, 1882, the defendant was married to one Emma Eugenie Voss at East Ham Parish Church, London, and that his first wife was still alive.

Mr. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register, produced the register showing the marriage of the plaintiff and defendant at Claremont, and a witness of the second marriage, Mr. Simpkins, also gave evidence.

Decree granted.

VAN BLONMESTEIN V. { 1904.
HOLLIDAY. { Feb. 5th.

Negotiable instruments — Share certificates indorsed in blank — Agency — Estoppel.

The plaintiff having purchased 100 shares in a Transvaal gold mining company, and accepted as sufficient delivery a certificate indorsed in blank by the registered holder, deposited the certificate with his broker for safe custody. The broker delivered the certificate for valuable consideration to the defendant who had no notice of the plaintiff's interest in the shares, and he having purchased them under stock exchange rules, had them registered in his name. In an action for a return of the shares,

Held, that as the further act of having the shares registered in the transferee's name was necessary to perfect his right the certificate indorsed in blank by the registered owner was not a negotiable instrument.

Held further, that although the instrument was not negotiable, the universal custom in South Africa being to accept certificates so indorsed as being "in order," the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct in leaving the instrument in that form in the hands of a share broker from asserting his right to the shares.

This was an action brought by Onderdewyngaard van Blommiestein against John Holliday, to recover scrip for 100 New Florida Gold Mines, or their value, with costs of suit.

The plaintiff's declaration set out that he was a newspaper vendor, residing in Cape Town, and the defendant, a stockbroker, also residing in Cape Town. On or about February, 1902, plaintiff bought 100 New Floridas from one W. T. Bacon, at 21s. per share. Plaintiff received the scrip, the numbers being 112.101 to 112.200. In September, 1902, plaintiff deposited for safe keeping with J. H. A. Langton, stockbroker, of Cape Town, this scrip, together with other scrip, and received a receipt for the certificates. About September, 1903, Langton disappeared from Cape Town, and his present whereabouts was unknown. He succeeded in obtaining possession of some of the scrip, but he failed to get the 100 New Floridas. About October, 1903, plaintiff discovered defendant had on the 2nd of that month obtained transfer of the New Floridas in the books of the company, and he had since learned that the defendant had the scrip in his possession. Plaintiff did not at any time authorise Langton to deal in the scrip, and he was now entitled to recover the scrip from the defendant, the scrip having been stolen or fraudulently dealt with by Langton, or by some other person, who obtained the same from Langton; but the defendant refused to deliver the scrip. Plaintiff claimed (a) delivery of the shares, represented by the scrip, or their value with interest a tempore morae; (b) alternative relief; and (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea set out that the plaintiff was well acquainted with the customs of the share market, and that the defendant had no knowledge that the plaintiff deposited the New Florida scrip with Langton for safe-keeping. Prior to September, 1903, Langton borrowed sums of money from the defendant, who was a member of the Stock Exchange, and in accordance with the custom and practice prevailing, the said Langton sold certain scrip, including that of 100 New Floridas, for advance, which scrip was resold by the defendant to Langton, redeemable on the 15th September, 1903. The scrip was not redeemed on the said date, and along with the other scrip, was, in accordance with the rules of the Cape Town Stock Exchange, publicly sold by the secretary of the said Exchange, and the defendant bought the New Floridas. The scrip was registered in the name of E. J. Earp and bore an endorsement in blank, signed by him. The scrip was, by the custom of the share market in the Transvaal and Cape Colony, delivered from hand to hand, and the defendant became the legal holder thereof, bona fide, and for valuable consideration. The plaintiff, if he deposited the said scrip with Langton, did so representing and intending to represent, or allowing and intending to allow, the said Langton to represent that the said Langton was entitled to transfer the scrip. The defendant denied that the plaintiff did not authorise Langton to sell or deal in the scrip, and further said that if Langton stole or fraudulently dealt with the scrip, which he denied, the plaintiff by his carelessness and negligence allowed and enabled Langton to do and commit a fraud upon the defendant, who refused to hand over the scrip to plaintiff.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Bissett) for the plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

Mr. M. Bissett then called the plaintiff, Mr. Van Blommestein, formerly of Johannesburg, who said that he was a newspaper vendor. He purchased 100 New Florida shares on 13th February, 1902, and received the scrip. In August, 1902, his box was broken into, and on 16th September he deposited these and other shares with Mr. Langton. The receipt produced did not specifically state "for safe keeping," but that was understood. Mr. Langton had never been instructed to deal in any way with the scrip. In September, 1903, he noticed in the "Argus" that these shares were being sold along with Mr. Langton's other shares. Mr. Barnett, Mr. Langton's clerk, subsequently gave him the other shares at his private house. Witness gave notice when he heard Mr. Langton had "done a bunk," that these shares were stolen. He found out on 2nd October, 1903, that Mr. Holliday had become the transferee, and Mr. Holliday warned him not to take action, as he would lose the case. All his transactions were cash, and he did not know much of the custom of the Stock Exchange.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He did not have "too many" dealings on the Stock Exchange. He commenced dealing in 1902, and his intention was to buy and sell. He trusted everything to his broker. Witness did not recognise the certificate produced, and would not contradict Mr. Holliday if he said the name had been blank when he bought. He admitted lodging Coronation East Syndicate shares, and the receipt produced said distinctly "for safe custody."

Re-examined by Mr. Bissett: Mr. Lomas made out the first receipt and Mr. Barnett the latter, but each had received the same instructions.

Max Barnett said that up to October, 1903, he was chief clerk for Mr. Langton. From time to time the plaintiff deposited scrip for safe keeping. The instructions of the plaintiff was for safe custody. The receipt of the shares was placed in Mr. Langton's share register. The scrip for safe custody was not kept separately, but he would be able to trace it through a ticket attached to it. He remembered Mr. Langton occasionally handing over scrip for safe keeping to cover money received, and in one instance Mr. Holliday received such scrip. Among the scrip handed over he remembered the certificate of the New Floridas. The date on which the defendant called on Mr. Langton to pay his debts was about 15th September, 1903, and, in accordance with the rules of the Stock Exchange a forced sale was ordered. The plaintiff had made repeated efforts to get the scrip for the 100 New Floridas.

The share register produced did not show any distinction between those for sale and those for custody.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He did not hand the Florida scrip over to Mr. Holliday.

Arthur Lomas said he was a clerk in Mr. Langton's employ until September, 1903. From time to time the plaintiff deposited shares with Mr. Langton for safe keeping. There was no particular book for these shares.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: If the shares had been lent to Mr. Langton he would not receipt them as "to be returned on demand." This closed the case for the plaintiff.

Mr. Benjamin called

John Holliday, the defendant, who said that he had been a stock and share broker until the end of last year. He was a dealer, and a contango broker. He first became acquainted with Mr. Langton in the early part of 1900. On the 2nd June, 1903, Mr. Langton submitted a list of shares, and asked him whether he would take them over on contango, and witness gave him a cheque, £3,044 14s., and accepted delivery of the shares. That loan was only for seven days, but Mr. Langton failed to redeem the loan, and the matter dragged on for five weeks, and, as a result, a broker's note was drawn up, which showed that witness was due £2,955, and it was provided Mr. Langton should take the shares up on the 15th September. Finally, witness instructed the secretary of the Stock Exchange to sell out the shares, and witness bought in the 100 New Floridas. Some two or three days afterwards there were rumours about that Mr. Langton was "shaky," and then witness sent up the shares to Johannesburg for registration. It was unusual for the purchaser to have his name entered on the certificate, the shares simply being passed from hand to hand with a blank transfer form, and shares might be transferred a hundred times without being registered. When he got the 100 New Floridas there was nothing to indicate that they had been pledged with Mr. Langton.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bissett: Mr. Langton might have been doing business on behalf of clients. When Mr. Langton required the loan of the £3,000 it was not an unusual transaction. He did not suspect at that time that there was anything wrong, as he was prepared to lend him £10,000; but when a cheque was returned at the end of July, he became suspicious. In August and the early part of September Mr. Langton paid considerable differences, and witness thought he was pulling through. The loan was for seven days, but it was not on a business footing, and its redemption was allowed to drag on from day to day. On the 15th September Mr. Langton did not pay for the shares, but he did not know of a rule compelling him to immediately give notice to the Stock Exchange. It was not until after the forced sale that Mr. Langton was posted as a defaulter. Witness had the shares sent up at once to Johannesburg for registration, because he suspected there was something wrong; but that was merely on his financial position. He had no suspicion that Mr. Langton was dealing with other people's shares.

Charles H. Greenaway, secretary to the Cape Town Stock Exchange, said that he remembered Mr. Holliday instructing him to sell out certain shares against Mr. Langton. The shares were duly sold out on the 25th September, in accordance with the rules, and realised £2,656, the New Floridas bringing in £2 1s. 8d.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bisset: He posted a notice that 100 New Floridas had been stolen, on instructions from the plaintiff. The sale had already taken place then.

Mr. Holliday, recalled, said that he left a letter in Mr. Langton's office, giving him notice of the sale.

William Simkins, a member of the committee of the Stock Exchange, said that it was the custom to hand the scrip over in blank. The person who received the shares was entitled to fill his name in the blank space, and have transfer.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bisset: Many of his clients left shares with him for safe keeping without having any receipt.

Alfred O'Flaherty, chairman of the Stock Exchange, gave further evidence as to the custom of dealing prevailing here.

Chas. Ed. Pearson, secretary of the firm of Blakey and Pearson, Johannesburg, produced the certificate for the 100 New Florida shares. When the scrip came to the office first, it had "J. Holliday" on it, and subsequently it had to be altered to "John Holliday." According to the practice of the Johannesburg Exchange, shares were delivered with a blank endorsement, and the person who bought such scrip was entitled to put his name on the scrip, and if necessary, sue the company, in order to force transfer. This new scrip had not been issued to the defendant on information from the plaintiff. General brokers in Johannesburg got their clients' scrip registered in their own name in order to find out if there was anything against it.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bisset: Mr. Holliday's name appearing in the books of the New Florida, he would be treated as the proprietor of the shares. There was no particular request from the defendant to rush the registration through.

Arthur Mulliner, broker, said he had experience of both Cape Town and Johannesburg Stock Exchanges, and he confirmed what Mr. Pearson had said about the custom in Johannesburg.

Mr. Bisset: The question is, are these scrip certificates negotiable instruments or not? They are not so regarded in England, see Willison on Negotiable Instruments (p. 6); see also Clark v. France (26 Ch. D., 257). Rule 85 of the Stock Exchange shows that there is no difference between these certificates and one with a blank transfer form. No man who accepts an instrument endorsed in blank is a purchaser for value without notice. Williams v. Colonial Bank (38, Ch. D., 388); Grant v. Vaughan (3, Bur., 1,516); Eadie and Another v. East India Company (2, Bur., 1,216).

[De Villiers, C.J.: No amount of evidence can make an instrument negotiable if it is not negotiable.]

As to negotiable instruments, see Glyn v. Baker (13, East., 507); Dixon v. Bogle (4, W.R., 813). We must have express legislation to make an instrument negotiable.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I find great difficulty in holding this certificate to be negotiable, and even if it is, what right has the plaintiff to it?]

In Williams v. Colonial Bank the shares were not registered.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the executors were executors of the registered holder. Here the plaintiff has never been the owner of the shares, and defendant gave value for these shares before he knew of Longton's insolvency. It does not matter that he did not get transfer until after that event.]

On that point I would refer to Crouch v. Credit Foncier (8, Q.B., 374). As to vindication, see Moorrees v. Jackson (1, S.A.R. Rep., 285). The cases of Goodwin v. Roberts (1, Ap., 476) and Rumbolt v. Metropolitan Bank (2, Q.B.D., 194) are both distinguishable from the present case.

As to the question of estoppel, that doctrine does not apply in this case. Langton would be estopped from saying that he was only the agent of the plaintiff, since he held himself out as the owner of these shares. But that does not apply to us. As to estoppel, see Goodwin v. Roberts (1, Ap. C., 15) and Rumbold v. Metropolitan Bank (2, Q.B.D., 194).

Mr. Benjamin (for defendant): The plaintiff is estopped from setting up this case against the defendant. There are many instruments which are negotiable in English Law in addition to the old documents known to the law merchant. For instance, foreign bonds payable to bearer are negotiable. True, it is that these certificates endorsed in blank have not yet been declared negotiable in England, but they have been in America, and the only reason that there is no English decision on the point is because in England all transfers must be by deed. The law merchant in England is by no means so fixed and unalterable that it cannot be amplified by judicial decisions. Thus, quite recently bearer bonds have been added to the number of negotiable documents. Colonial Bank v. Coley (15, Ap., 267). The 12th Article of Association, which prohibits the transfer of unpaid-up shares is not in point. The Credit Foncier case (cited on the other side) has been overruled. The evidence shows that there is a recognised custom in Cape Town of recognising such instruments as negotiable. The equity of the case is in our favour, and equitable principles can be applied by this Court, if they do not come into conflict with any well-established rule of law. See Story's Equity (par. 385) and Smith's Leading Cases (Vol. 1, 473).

Mr. Bisset was not called upon in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 9).

De Villiers, C.J.: This case raises some questions of great importance to persons dealing in Transvaal Gold Mining shares. The plaintiff, having bought 100 shares in the New Florida Gold Mining Company, left the certificate in the hands of his broker, Langton, for safe custody. The document consisted of a single certificate of the company to the effect that Earp was the registered holder, and on the back was an endorsement by Earp underneath a printed form of transfer with the name of the transferee left in blank. It would appear that the New Florida Company, like most other Transvaal Gold Mining companies, reserves the right of refusing to register the shares in the name of the person indicated by the holder only in case the shares have not been paid up in full, or in case the company holds a lien on the shares. Instead of keeping the scrip for the plaintiff, Langton delivered it to the defendant, along with a mass of other securities, in order to cover advances made to Langton. Subsequently the shares were sold under the rules of the Stock Exchange, and purchased by the defendant, who sent the scrip to Johannesburg for registration in his own name. At the time when the defendant bought the shares he had no knowledge of Langton's fraud. The plaintiff having been informed of the sale, gave notice to the company of his desire to stop transfer, but when the notice arrived the shares had already been transferred into the defendant's name. The plaintiff by this action seeks to recover from the defendant the shares, or their value. The defence is, in effect, that the scrip in the form delivered by the plaintiff to Langton was a negotiable instrument, and that, therefore, the property in it was acquired by the defendant, who took it bona fide, and for value, and that even if it was not a negotiable instrument, the plaintiff is estopped by his conduct in the matter from claiming the shares or their value from the defendant.

Upon the question whether or not the scrip is a negotiable instrument evidence has been given of a general custom in Cape Town, as well as in Johannesburg. The 85th bye-law of the Cape Town Stock Exchange provides that "no scrip certificate shall be deemed good delivery, unless endorsed in blank by the registered holder of such certificate, or accompanied by the requisite transfer form signed in blank," and there is an exactly similar bye-law of the Johannesburg Stock Exchange. These bye-laws only carry out what appears to be a general custom in South Africa, namely, that in the purchase and sale of shares' certificates with a blank endorsement by the registered owner are considered to be in perfect order, and are accepted by the purchaser as good delivery of the shares bought. In spite, however, of this general custom, I am not prepared to lay down as a rule of law that share certificates indorsed in blank by the registered owner are negotiable instruments. The holder of the certificate obtains no property in the shares until he is himself registered as owner. The original transferor, who is entered as owner in the certificate and register, continues to be the only shareholder recognised by the company until the transferee or holder for the time being obtains registration in his own name. In the Transvaal case of African Mining Association v. De Catelin (15 C.L.J., 130), one of the learned judges (Jorissen) expressed a decided opinion that shares thus endorsed are, according to the custom of trade in that country, negotiable instruments; but the two other judges were more guarded in their opinion. The Chief Justice (Kotze), although inclining in favour of the view that the certificates are negotiable, considered it unnecessary to decide the question, and Morice, J., pointed out that where the scrip has been taken from the holder by force or robbery, he would be entitled to reclaim the shares from an innocent third party. This last admission, if correct, would at once deprive the instrument of the quality of negotiability. Supposing in the present case the certificate had been kept in the plaintiff's own safe, and stolen without any negligence on his part, the thief would not, in my opinion, pass a good title to a bona fide purchaser for value, whereas if banknotes had been stolen under similar circumstances, the purchaser would acquire a good title to the notes. The defence, therefore, of the negotiability of the scrip must fall to the ground.

As to the defence of estoppel, I must take this opportunity of saying that in my remarks in Merriman v. Williams (Foord's Rep., 172), I had no intention of expressing the opinion that the doctrine of estoppel is entirely unknown in our law. What I did say was: that it is by no means clear that the principles of the English law relating to estoppel are applicable, without any modification, in the law of this colony, and to that view I still adhere. But I am satisfied that neither under the Roman nor under the Dutch law would a person who, by his words or conduct, has wilfully or negligently induced another to alter his own position in the belief that a certain state of facts exists, have been allowed to assert a right against such other person inconsistent with such state of facts. The Digest (l. 7, 25), for instance, mentions the case of a father who allowed his daughter to lead the life of an emancipated child, although the formalities of emancipation had not been complied with. The daughter died after having appointed heirs by her will. It was held by Ulpian that the father was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the will. I am satisfied also that by our law, as by the law of England, a person who by his conduct has clothed his agent with the apparent ownership and right of disposition of a document, whether negotiable or not, is estopped from asserting his title as against a person to whom such agent has sold it, and who received it in good faith, and for value. In the present case the plaintiff himself accepted the scrip as being "in order," although bearing only the blank indorsement of the registered owner. He did not have the scrip registered in his own name, and without even taking the precaution to insert his name as the transferee on the back of the document, he handed it over to his broker, as he says, for safe custody. The document, when so handed over, contained an endorsement which, read by the light of the general custom in South Africa, amounted to a representation that the holder was entitled to deal with and transfer the shares. If the plaintiff had handed the certificate to any other person than a share broker for safe custody, there might have been room for the argument that it was the duty of the purchaser to inquire whether such person had the real as well as the apparent authority to deal with the shares, although I do not say that the argument would be sound. But the certificate was given to a person whose chief business it was to sell and deliver shares on behalf of his customers. A purchaser receiving a certificate in such a form from a broker is as much justified in assuming that the broker is entitled to deal with it as a person entering a shop is justified in assuming that the shopkeeper is entitled to deal with the goods in the shop. To test the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel in our law, let it be supposed that a person has handed over for safe custody to a shopkeeper goods of the kind ordinarily sold in the shop, knowing that the goods would be exposed in the shop, it is clear that by our law the owner would not be entitled—contra suum factum—to vindicate the goods as against a customer who has bought such goods in the ordinary way. The supposed case is an extreme one, but it serves to illustrate the principle. In regard to the law of England, the case of Colonial Bank v. Cady (15 A.C., 267), has been cited on behalf of the plaintiff as showing that the doctrine of estoppel would not apply to a case like the present, but the facts of that case were very different, and the remarks of some of the Lords of Appeal fully support the applicability of the doctrine to the present case. One Williams, was at his death the registered holder of 1,210 shares in a New York company for which he held certificates in the usual form. His executors were desirous of having the shares transferred to their own names, and for that purpose they sent the certificates to Thomas, Sons and Co., their London brokers, having previously as directed by that firm, signed as executors the blank transfer on the back of each certificate. Instead of using the certificates for the purpose for which they were sent, William Blakeway, one of the partners of Thomas, Sons and Co., delivered them to the Colonial Bank in order to cover advances made, and to be made to his firm. It was held in an action brought by the executors against the bank that the former were not estopped as against the bank. "Whether the re-estopped are estopped," said Lord Watson, "from saying that Blakeway had not their authority to dispose of the certificates in question is, in my opinion, the sole question presented for decision in these appeals. Had the transfers been executed by Williams, and the certificates thereafter sent by him to Thomas, Sons and Co., for safe custody, I should not have hesitated to hold that Blakeway, though acting fraudulently, was nevertheless placed by his act in a position to give a title to an honest purchaser, which his employer could not dispute. But that is not the case with which we have to deal. The transfers were signed by the respondents, who were not the registered owners of the shares, and were not named in the certificate. Whatever may be the effect of an instrument so executed, one thing is clear, that it cannot be regarded as, either in law or by custom, equivalent to a certificate, and transfer executed by the registered owner himself." Lord Herschell was equally emphatic on the point, saying that if in that case the transfer had been signed by the registered owner and delivered by him to the brokers, his lordship would have come to the conclusion that the bank had obtained a good title as against him, and that he was estopped by his act from asserting any right to them. In the present case the transfer was signed by the registered owner, and, although the plaintiff was not the registered owner himself, he did not fill in the blank by inserting his own name as transferee, but delivered the certificate to his broker in exactly the same form in which he had accepted it as good delivery. If, therefore, the dicta which I have just quoted correctly lay down the law, there can be no doubt that under English law also the plaintiff would have been estopped from asserting his right to the shares. For the reasons already given I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court should be for the defendant, with costs.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

STEVENSON V. THE LIQUIDATORS OF THE INSOLVENT ESTATE OF W. STABLEFORD AND CO. 1904. Feb. 5th.

Master and servant—Breach of contract—Damages.

This was an action brought by Leonard Stevenson against the liquidators of W. Stableford and Co., Cape Town, for breach of contract. Damages were laid at £2,000.

From the pleadings, it appeared that on August 11, 1903, at Manchester, England, Mr. Stableford entered into a written agreement to engage the plaintiff as manager of the firm's printing works and cardboard box making factory, for a term of five years, the salary to be for the first year, £350, and for the remaining four years, £400 per annum. The defendants admitted this. The salary was to be paid monthly from August 15. It was agreed that the plaintiff should leave England on that date, and take up his duties within three days of his arrival here. This also the defendants admitted; but they alleged that it was essential that the plaintiff on arrival should invest £1,000 in preference shares in the company. It was acknowledged that plaintiff sailed on August 15, and that he was prepared to enter on his duties; but the defendants denied that they wrongfully and unlawfully refused to allow him to take up his duties.

Defendants said that the firm went into voluntary liquidation prior to the plaintiff's arrival. They alleged that the change in the firm's affairs was explained to the plaintiff on arrival, and he was told that as the shares were below their normal value at the time, they could not be issued, as arranged in the agreement. Plaintiff, the defendants said, declined to take the shares under any arrangement other than that set forth in the agreement. The plaintiff claimed damages, to the extent of £2,000, as he had lost his employment, had been put to the expense of coming to South Africa, and had otherwise suffered loss to the extent of the sum mentioned. The plaintiff denied the statement that he refused to take up the £1,000 shares, and the point for consideration was, therefore, which of the parties broke the contract. The defendants admitted that plaintiff placed £1,000 in the bank, to be paid over against the scrip, but they denied that from the time the position of the company was explained to him the plaintiff had ever offered to take up the shares.

Mr. D. Buchanan (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff, Mr. Searle (with him Mr. Close) for defendants.

Mr. Searle said that the defendants now admitted that they broke the contract, because the company, having gone into voluntary liquidation, they could not carry the contract out.

[Hopley, J.: That being so, the jury only have to consider the question of damages to come out of the liquidation.]

Mr. Buchanan called

Leonard Stevenson, the plaintiff in the case, who stated that he was a printer and boxmaker by profession. He had been employed by Messrs. Hugh Stevenson and Co., cardboard box makers, of Manchester, England, as manager of the printing department, where he was in receipt of a salary of £300 per annum. He entered into an agreement with Mr. Wm. Stableford, acting on behalf of the defendant company, on August 11, 1903. Previously Mr. Stableford had seen him, and shown a set of balance sheets covering four years, which his (witness's) accountants had examined and pronounced satisfactory. Mr. Stableford told him that the firm's prospects were very good, and that they were going to start box-making. Mr. Stableford further told witness that his primary object in coming to England was to raise capital, and make the agreement with witness, who had previously had an offer of the position by cable. Mr. Stableford said he wanted to raise £25,000, and he had succeeded in getting the greater part of it. It was arranged that the £1,000 shares should be sent to England to witness's bank there, to be delivered against the £1,000 lying at the bank. He made arrangements for the money to be paid, and then left for South Africa. He was not told anything about the firm being under inspection. On arrival here he attended a meeting of the directors, and tendered his services. Mr. Kidney, the secretary, or Mr. Lait—witness was not sure which—remarked to him that he had had a pleasant voyage out, and that he had better have a look round and go back again. The company made him no offer whatsoever. On September 8 he wrote again, tendering his services, but received no reply. He did not refuse to take up the shares, nor were they offered to him. Witness's salary at Home was £300 per annum, and that position was now lost to him. His travelling expenses came to about £40, and his expenses here averaged about £20 per month.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was advised by his doctor to come out here, but the state of his health in no way compelled him to come. He was not aware of the fact that his brother was a director of the defendant company before he (witness) left England. He had asked his brother to look out for a position in South Africa for him. He was not told that the company was working under inspection. At the meeting witness attended in Cape Town, Mr. Lait refused his services, stating that the company was embarrassed. He had been seeking employment in various parts of the country by answering advertisements. He had not tried to get work in Cape Town; his principal object was to try to secure a partnership business.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: His father had received a letter from Mr. Stableford, prior to witness's departure from England, setting forth a most satisfactory account of the company's affairs. This communication was written five days before the company arranged to work under inspection. At the meeting which he attended, witness asked if he had not a claim on the company, and he received the reply that no doubt he had, but would it not be ungenerous for him to make a claim on the company, as they had saved him £1,000, the money which he was to have invested in shares.

Mr. Maynard Nash, accountant, stated that he had been trying to get a position for the plaintiff, preferably a partnership, but he had not succeeded.

Frank Stevenson, brother of the plaintiff, said that he became a director of the defendant company in June, 1903. On August 5, the inspectors cabled to Mr. Wm. Stableford: "Inspectors decline issue scrip or authorise Leonard's departure." This cable was sent on August 5, but it was not until August 18, three days after his brother left England, witness became aware that such a cable had been sent. Although the cable must have been in England many days before his brother left, his brother was also unaware of the existence of such a cable. When his brother arrived on September 1, witness told him of the cable.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was aware of the fact that there were heavy bonds on the company. He did not suspect that the firm's finances were in a bad way. He thought that the inspectors were appointed to watch Mr. Stableford's interests in that gentleman's absence. He, at the meeting of the directors, had seconded the motion for the appointment of inspectors. He was kept in the dark about the company's affairs, and believed that he and his brother were victimised.

For the defence, Mr. Searle called J. E. P. Close, who stated that he was now one of the liquidators, and formerly an inspector of the company. The inspection started on June 30. At that time it was absolutely necessary that the company should get more capital. He took the plaintiff and his brother into his full confidence; he explained the whole history of the company. He told plaintiff that if he had put his £1,000 in the company, it would have been lost, and that he ought to feel thankful that the company was under inspection, for the circumstance had saved him £1,000.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He thought that, as the plaintiff had been saved £1,000, he should have been content to set it off against any losses he might have sustained.

William James Lait, also one of the liquidators of the firm of W. Stableford and Co., stated that while he had not been an inspector he used to advise the inspectors on technical matters connected with the printing business. Witness explained the position of affairs to the plaintiff on arrival, and then he jocosely made the remark about the best thing the plaintiff could do was to go Home again.

William Stableford stated that on July 1 he proceeded to England for the purpose of raising £25,000 additional capital. Before that date there had been correspondence with the firm of Messrs. Hughes, Stevenson and Co., Manchester, about young Mr. Stevenson coming out and putting some money into the business of Stableford and Co. Before the contract was entered into with the plaintiff, witness told Mr. Leonard Stevenson the position of the company's affairs, adding that unless the money was raised the firm would have to go into liquidation. He also explained that the company was then working under inspection. The last thing he told the plaintiff was that he had raised £8,000 debentures and £5,000 credit, under the provision that the whole of the £25,000 was raised. That statement was made to the plaintiff on the evening before he (plaintiff) sailed for London. Throughout the whole course of the transaction, plaintiff was kept fully informed as to the progress of affairs. When the agreement was made plaintiff had been informed that witness had raised £5,500 and £5,000 credit. The whole of plaintiff's family, as well as the plaintiff himself, knew that the company was under inspection. The firm had been doing a good business, and witness was sanguine of success if the £25,000 could be raised. He was still of the opinion that had the £25,000 been forthcoming, all would have been well. It was to the extreme tightness of the money market that failure was due. During the second or third week in October plaintiff told witness in St. George's-street, Cape Town, that, as he was going to get £2,000 out of Stableford's, he had no intention of seeking employment. Plaintiff appeared quite serious.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He adhered to the statement regarding what plaintiff had said. Plaintiff's remark was that when he got the £2,000 out of Stableford's, it would be time enough to look for work. The balance-sheet produced was never placed before the public. The sheet was merely a draft for a prospectus drawn up by a company promoter in London, and witness sent it to Cape Town from England. The inspectors of the company in Cape Town disapproved of the publication of the document, and it was never placed before anyone in England. The plaintiff had never been shown that sheet by witness.

Mr. Buchanan: The plaintiff brought it with him from England.

[Hopley, J.: How does it come into the plaintiff's possession?]

The Witness: The plaintiff never had that document in England.

Hopley, J. pressed for an explanation as to how the plaintiff could have come into possession of the document if it had been sent to Mr. Kidney.

The witness persisted in the statement that he had posted the document to Mr. W. L. Kidney from England. He did not, however, deny any of the statements in the document; he merely denied the source from which it now came.

Mr. Buchanan: You may be quite correct, and still be quibbling. You might have posted this identical sheet to Mr. Kidney, but you might have struck off a copy and given it to Stevenson.

The Witness: I did make a copy. Mr. Kidney got one, and not another living soul received any other I am not playing with words.

Mr. Buchanan: What happened to the second copy?

The Witness: It was destroyed in England.

Continuing under cross-examination, witness said that he repudiated the document when he saw it—he did not repudiate the figures on it, but he did not use the manner in which affairs were set forth. Witness did not show the cable received on August 5, reading "Inspectors refuse to issue, etc.," to the plaintiff. On the evening of its receipt he was in evening dress, and had not the cable on him. He, in various conversations, however, informed the plaintiff and his father of the position of affairs. He adhered to a statement made in a letter dated August 1, addressed to the elder Mr. Stevenson, that he (witness) had received a cable from Cape Town that the scrip of the £1,000 shares had been issued.

[Hopley, J.: You waited until Leonard Stevenson was on the water before letting the inspectors know that you disregarded their order of August 5.]

The Witness: I thought that the progress I was making in England was a justification for my action. As regards the suggestion that I delayed so that Leonard, being on the water, could not be stopped that never entered my mind.

This closed the case for the defence, and counsel proceeded to address the jury on the question of damages.

Hopley, J., in summing up, remarked that the issues in the case appeared to be simple. The one question they would have to determine was how much damages they would award the plaintiff. They would have to look at the full circumstances under which he was brought to this far country, how the contract was entered into, and how he was treated on arrival. He did not think that the taking up of the shares was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's entering the company's service. There was a good deal in what the plaintiff said when he remarked that he regarded the investment of the money in the company as a guarantee of good faith. It was clear that when Mr. Stableford went to England the company needed money badly. He went there, knowing that the company was under inspection, and he appeared to be the moving spirit in bringing about his mission to England. If Mr. Frank Stevenson, a director of the company, knew all about the affairs of the company, and realised the position, it was scarcely likely that he would not have warned his father against putting money in the company. There was not the slightest doubt but that Mr. Stableford was of a most sanguine disposition as regarded the prospects of the company. Knowing the position of affairs, and the company's need of ready money, Mr. Stableford was naturally anxious to get Stevenson to South Africa and so get the £1,000. As regards the document which Mr. Stableford denied having given to Stevenson, and which Stevenson alleged had greatly influenced him in his decision to come out here, his lordship pointed out to the jury that there were certain pencilled remarks on the document, which would be quite superfluous were the document sent to Mr. Kidney, —as Mr. Stableford said it was—who, as secretary of the company, would be in full possession of the information noted in pencil, but which would be information indeed for old Mr. Stevenson in Manchester. His lordship proceeded to comment on the fact that Stableford, who at the time was in communication with the Stevensons, did not tell them of the receipt of the cable, saying that the inspectors refused to issue the scrip. As regards the amount of the damages, it was usual in cases of wrongful dismissal to award twelve months' salary as a compensation, the Courts usually holding that it was only fair to give a man twelve months to look round for a suitable post. Damages should not be reduced because the Inspectors had with their knowledge of the position refrained from taking plaintiff's £1,000 for what would have been worthless shares. That was proper conduct on their part, but it was only common honesty.

The jury, after fifteen minutes' deliberation, found for the plaintiff, fixing the damages at £500.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment for £500 with costs.

Judgment was entered accordingly.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WALKER V. WALKER. { 1904.
Feb. 8th.

This was an action for divorce on the ground of the misconduct of the defendant, Harriet Jane Frances Walker.

The declaration set forth that the parties were married at Graham's Town on the 3rd July, 1890. Plaintiff now resided at Port Elizabeth, and defendant was believed to be at present resident at Shipley, Yorkshire. Plaintiff alleged that defendant deserted him on the 24th February, 1898, and that thereafter she was guilty of misconduct, a child being born to her in 1900, of which plaintiff swore he was not the father. Plaintiff prayed for a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of benefits arising out of marriage in community.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff, defendant in default.

Counsel stated that at a previous hearing of the case certain evidence was led. See (13 C.T.R., 668 and 1093). He now produced further evidence, taken on commission, as to the misconduct.

A decree of divorce was granted as prayed.

CONNOLLY V. CONNOLLY.

This was an action for judicial separation, on the ground of the defendant's cruelty.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in the Colonial Registry Office, produced the original certificate of marriage.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

Mrs. Connolly said she was married on the 6th February, 1882. For some time they lived happily together, but about ten years ago defendant began to drink. He had treated her unkindly at times when in liquor, and had struck her and thrown things at her.

A decree of separation was granted, with costs, plaintiff to have the custody of the children.

Buchanan, J. added that, as interference was feared, defendant would be interdicted from interfering with any property in the possession of the plaintiff until further order of the Court. If the defendant came into Court and showed that he had any right to any of the property, then the interdict could be removed.

SPIILHAUS AND CO. V. { 1904.
WEBNER. { Feb. 5th.

Guarantee—Verbal revocation—Evidence.

This was an action to recover the sum of £24 7s. 3d. The declaration stated that on the 2nd October, 1900, the plaintiff, Jacob Christian Werner, entered into a deed of suretyship whereby he undertook to be surety for the payment of any sum, not exceeding £25, for which one Johan Christian Werner should become indebted to the plaintiffs. In June, 1902, Johan Werner was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of £27 6s. 7d. His estate was then sequestered, and the plaintiffs only recovered £2 19s. 4d. They now sued defendant for the balance, £24 7s. 3d.

In his plea, the defendant stated that in December, 1900, he had an interview with one of the partners of the defendant firm, in which the defendant withdrew his suretyship, being then informed that Johan Werner was not indebted to plaintiffs in any sum. Defendant pleaded, therefore, that the deed had been revoked, and that he was not liable thereunder.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff. Mr. McGregor for defendant.

Carl Antonia Spilhaus, called, stated that he was one of the managers for

Wm. Spilhaus and Co. In October, 1900, defendant called on him regarding the granting of credit to his son. As a consequence of the negotiations, the deed of suretyship (produced) was entered into. The son was given credit from time to time, as per account produced. Defendant did not come to witness in December, 1900, and ask how much did his son owe; there was no repudiation of the deed.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: In December, 1900, a balance of about £40 was due. Witness did not remember seeing defendant in December, 1900. In December, 1900, defendant did not say to witness that he would not stand good for any further debts contracted by his son; witness would not agree to such a thing, he would have stopped credit. For the defence, Mr. McGregor called Jacob Werner, who stated that he entered into the guarantee for a sum up to £25. He saw the previous witness some time later; he thought it was in December, 1900. He told Mr. Spilhaus that he would not be responsible for any more of his son's liabilities. Witness's son went insolvent in 1902, but it was not until June, 1903, that Messrs. Spilhaus wrote to witness for payment.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: It did not occur to him to ask for the return of the guarantee in December, 1900.

John C. Werner gave evidence as to the drawing up of the guarantee.

This closed the case for the defence.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: It is common cause between the parties that in October, 1900, the defendant's son, being about to start a small shop, applied to the plaintiff for credit. This was refused, unless the father became surety for £25. The defendant thereupon entered into a written contract guaranteeing his son's purchases to the amount of £25. for goods then or at any future time supplied. In 1902, the son's estate was sequestrated. At the time of the insolvency there was an amount of £27 due to the plaintiffs. The defence to the claim now set up is that in the month of December, the father was told his son had paid for all goods purchased up to that date, whereupon the defendant verbally revoked the guarantee. The defendant further states that he had told Carl Spilhaus that the guarantee was only for the first lot of goods ordered. The issue before the Court is whether there has been revocation or not. On this point we have the assertion of the defendant, and the positive denial of Carl Spilhaus. It might have been expected that the defendant would have asked for the document back, or have written a letter cancelling it, but there was nothing of the kind done. We have, therefore, the written document of guarantee against which there is only the contradicted statement of the defendant. On the evidence we must hold that the document stood good, and that defendant was liable. Judgment for the amount prayed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SUTTON V. PHILLIP BROS.

Mr. Gardiner, for the petitioner, moved for an order of release from civil imprisonment. A decree of civil imprisonment had been granted against the petitioner on the 18th September, 1903, and on the 6th October he was lodged in the East London gaol. Petitioner had a wife and six minor children, and he believed that he had lost his position in the Customs through which he was in receipt of £9 per month. If released he would be able to pay off the debt by small sums weekly.

Mr. Buchanan, on behalf of the plaintiffs, opposed the application on the ground that the petitioner had ceded to his wife certain shares to the value of £1,000, and that the debt had been owing for several years.

Order granted as prayed.

THERON V. GREEN.

Mr. Gardiner, moved to make absolute a rule nisi compelling the respondent to vacate a certain store in the district of Stockenstroom. Mr. Benjamin, for the respondent, submitted that his client should be left in possession pending an action.

The interdict in operation restraining the respondent from removing any material from the store was ordered to be continued pending an action to be tried either at the next circuit or before the end of the next term in the Eastern District Court. No order as to ejectment, costs to abide the result, and the applicant to bring the action.

KOENIG V. LANDESHUT.

This was an application for leave to take the evidence of the plaintiff on commission.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the applicant; Mr. Bisset for the respondent.

The affidavit of the applicant set forth that the applicant had been prepared to go to trial during the November term, but on account of an application for commission by the defendant to examine certain witnesses in England and Australia it was then impossible to go to trial. Applicant intended in the course of a few days to go to the Transvaal. The case was set down for the 15th inst. and was the fourth on the list for that date. If prevented from going to the Transvaal plaintiff would probably suffer considerable loss.

On behalf of the respondent William Templer Buissonne, respondent's attorney, deposed that it would be greatly to the detriment of the plaintiff if the defendant did not appear personally in the witness-box. Deponent believed it would be of advantage to the Court, and would lead to a fair decision if the plaintiff were to give his evidence personally, in their lordships' presence.

Mr. Bisset said the action was in respect to the use of certain play rights.

[Buchanan, J.: Does the case depend on the document or on viva voce evidence?]

Mr. Bisset: Yes, it would chiefly depend on viva voce evidence.

Mr. Alexander said that the case would depend chiefly on the documents, and would largely be a matter for argument. There was an award of the arbitrators, and the plaintiff alleged that the award would settle the matter. The evidence of all the defendant's witnesses had been taken on commission, and so far as he (counsel) was instructed the plaintiff was now the only witness who had to give evidence in the case. The matter was originally set down for the 29th of May, but a postponement was then granted on account of the plaintiff's illness.

After hearing counsel in argument, the Court granted the application.

Buchanan, J.: This is an action for a partnership account. The action would have been heard last May, but owing to the plaintiff's illness, it could not then come on. The defendant thereupon applied to the Court for a statement of a partnership account. The action would have been heard last May, but owing to the plaintiff's illness, it could not then come on. The defendant thereupon applied to have her own evidence taken on commission, and also the evidence of her witnesses, who were then, some of them in London, and some of them in Australia, and the Court granted the commission. Owing to a delay in the return of these commissions, the plaintiff could not go to trial until this term. He now applies, owing to pressure of business, to be allowed to give his own evidence on commission; to have granted to him the same concession as has been granted to the defendant. This is opposed on the ground—the only ground so far as the affidavit goes—that it would be to the advantage of the Court in arriving at a decision if the defendant gave his evidence before the Court. In looking at the pleadings, I find that the case greatly depends upon the construction of the documents, and also upon legal argument as to the effect of the agreement arrived at between the parties. I see no reason why the defendant should not be allowed to have the same advantage as the defendant in this case. The Court will therefore grant the application, and appoint Mr. P. S. Jones as commissioner.

Buchanan, J., pointed out that it was usual for the Court to appoint a commissioner, instead of a commissioner being suggested, as had been done in this case.

Mr. Alexander said that the reason the name of Mr. Advocate Jones had been suggested was because Mr. Jones had taken the other evidence in the case.

[Buchanan, J.: That is a very good reason why Mr. Jones should be appointed.]

Costs were ordered to be costs in the cause.

LAITA V. HESSEN.

Mahommedan marriage—Custody of children.

Applicant and respondent had been married according to Mahommedan rites: whether by a duly appointed marriage officer or not did not appear. Thereafter the respondent obtained a divorce from the authorities of his church and retained the custody of the children of the marriage. Applicant now asked for their custody.

Held, that as there was no evidence that the marriage had not been solemnised by a marriage officer, the application must be refused.

This was an application upon notice calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to hand over the custody to the applicant of minor children now unlawfully detained by him; why he should not be ordered to contribute to the support of the children a sum of £3 per month in respect of each; and why he should not be ordered to pay the costs of this application. The affidavit of the applicant set forth that in July, 1898, she was married to respondent according to the rites of the Mahommedan Church. She lived with him until December, 1902, and during that time they had three children, of whom respondent was the father. Two of the children were still living. Respondent had divorced her according to Mahommedan law, and the children were now in charge of one of his Mahommedan servants.

The answering affidavit of the respondent said that he had divorced applicant because of her misconduct. He did not consider her a fit person to have the care of the children. A nurse deposed that respondent had neglected her children.

Applicant filed a replying affidavit, denying that she was guilty of misconduct, or that she had neglected the children.

Mr. Benjamin (for the applicant): The parties were married according to Mahommedan rites, but that was not a legal marriage, hence the children are illegitimate, and the mother should have the legal custody of them. See Bronn v. Bronn's Executor (3 Searle, 313). There the marriage was contracted in 1811, years before the Marriage Ordinance of 1839 was enacted. Section 4 of Act 16 of 1860 provides for the appointment of marriage officers to officiate at Jewish or Mohammedan marriages: but this marriage was not solemnised by a marriage officer.

[Hopley, J.: How does that appear?]

There are no Mahommedan marriage officers here.

[Hopley, J.: Even if the children are illegitimate, does it follow that the mother should have the custody of them? A Kafir would not admit that?]

Native customs are recognised by law in Native Territories, but as to Colonial Law, see Van Rooyen v. Werner (9 S.C.R., 425) and Van der Linden (1, 4, 2). The mother is always entitled to the custody of illegitimate children.

[Hopley, J.: Much depends upon the conduct of the mother: she has been divorced.]

The Court cannot recognise the acts of a tribunal of which it knows nothing. There have been cases in which the Court has given the custody of very young children to the mother, even when she has been guilty of immoral conduct. The law of Scotland agrees with our own law as to the custody of illegitimate children.

[Buchanan, J.: It does not appear on affidavit that these children are illegitimate.]

Then I would ask that the matter be allowed to stand over for further affidavits as to who married the parties.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondent): I simply go on the affidavit, which says that the parties were married according to Mohammedan rites. I do not know that they were not married by a marriage officer. But even if the children are illegitimate, I submit that in the children's interest the Court will not allow the mother to have the custody of them. Applicant's counsel has spoken of her maternal instincts, but she seems to be devoid of maternal instincts. She went away quite happy from Mafeking, and left her children with their father, and when the younger child was ill she grossly neglected it. Then, again, it is not usual to grant the custody of children on motion, unless the motion arises out of a previous action.

Mr. Benjamin asked that the matter be allowed to stand over for further information if the Court considered that the marriage was good in civil law.

Buchanan, J.: The applicant in this case alleges that she was married according to the rites of the Mahommedan Church to the respondent. She cohabited with him after marriage, and certain children of the marriage were born. Since that time she left her husband—or rather, her husband divorced her, according to the rites of the Mahommedan Church. She now claims custody of the children, and in answer to this, the respondent admits the marriage, and states that he divorced his wife according to the custom of the Mahommedan Church. He alleges further that on the separation there was an agreement between them that he was to retain the custody of the children. He moreover alleges that before the divorce there was neglect by the applicant of her children, and this alleged neglect is supported by the affidavit of another witness. He also alleges that the applicant has misconducted herself, and was therefore not a proper person to be entrusted with the custody of the children. The learned counsel for the applicant wishes to take for granted that there was no legal marriage between the parties; and that these children are illegitimate. The mere fact that the marriage was according to the rites of the Mahommedan Church does not necessarily make it illegal. Act No. 16, 1860, which was passed to afford additional facilities for contracting legal marriages, expressly provides for solemnising marriages between persons professing the Mohammedan faith, and in the absence of any allegation, the Court cannot assume that the marriage so contracted was an illegal one. There is no question of a polygamous marriage. If the applicant can say that there was no marriage at all, she can renew her application, or bring an action for the custody of the children. But we cannot brand these children with the stamp of illegitimacy, without some evidence. I am with the counsel so far that the Court is the only body which can pronounce a valid divorce. At the Mohammedan divorce there seems to have been an agreement that the father should have the custody of the children of which he was the father. If the applicant can show she never was married at all, and that she is the proper person to have the custody of the children she can repeat her application or bring an action to have the marriage declared illegal. At present we are not inclined to interfere with the present condition of affairs, and we will make no order. The application will therefore be dismissed without any order as to costs.

Hopley, J.: I am also of opinion that this application should be refused, as it is impossible for the Court to decide the matter on motion. The parties were married according to Mahomedan rites, in a manner which they no doubt thought binding. They lived together as man and wife, and had three children before any rupture between them took place, and the allegation that the intercourse was illicit, and the children illegitimate now comes with very bad grace from the applicant. After some years of cohabitation as man and wife, the respondent "divorced" the applicant according to their religious rites or recognized customs on the ground of her alleged infidelity to him. This, of course, is no legal divorce, presuming the original marriage to have been of legal effect—but at all events, it may have the effect of a separation by consent, and on such an arrangement, the disposal of the children would probably form a part. The respondent alleges that the children were by mutual consent left in his care and under his guardianship, and the fact that their mother left Mafeking without them, or apparently without making any attempt, by invoking the local authorities or the assistance of the High Court at Kimberley, to assert her claims, goes far to confirm the assertion that she consented to abandon her claims in this respect. It is true that she now denies that such arrangement was come to—but that raises an important issue of fact that cannot be determined in the manner now attempted. If the applicant has any rights in the matter, she must assert them in an action.

[Applicant's Attorney: T. P. Peters;
Respondent's Attorney: G. J. O'Reilly]

LOCHNER AND VAN DER HOFF V. GROMAN.

Mr. Buchanan moved to set aside a provisional judgment granted against the applicant on the ground that no summons had been received by him. Counsel put in the affidavit of the defendant, which set out that when the judgment was obtained a tender was made of the amount, less the costs, which was refused.

Mr. M. Bisset, for the respondent, put in replying affidavits which set out that the summons had been served on Mrs. Schwalbe, at 5, Mill-street, where the defendant was living, and that on several occasions the defendant had failed to pay the balance of the purchase price of a certain piece of land at Somerset West Strand.

The application was refused, with costs.

Ex parte KENMUIR.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the sequestrated estate of William Sharp, with whom the applicant had entered into partnership in a contract for alterations and additions at the Town Hall, King William's Town. Petitioner had completed his portion of the work, and several sub-contracts had been entered into with contractors. The work should have been completed on the 15th December last, and there was a penalty of £15 per week for delay, which the architects gave notice of enforcing in February. It was necessary a provisional trustee should be appointed with power to complete the work under the contract, and the name of William George Robertson was suggested as trustee.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SHANAHAN V. SHANAHAN. { 1901.
{ Feb. 9th.

This was an action for divorce instituted by Mary Miriam Shanahan against her husband, Henry John Shanahan, by reason of his alleged infidelity. The declaration set forth that the parties both resided in Cape Town. They were married in community of property at St. Mary's Cathedral, Cape Town, on January 17, 1894. It was alleged that during the latter part of 1902, and the beginning of 1903, defendant had committed adultery with one Mrs. Bagley. Plaintiff prayed for a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of benefits arising out of community, and custody of the two minor children. She also asked for an order on the defendant to pay the sum of £20 a month for the maintenance of the children.

Defendant filed a plea in which he denied the allegations of misconduct. In respect of the property, he said that in 1900, certain property in the joint estate was realised, and that out of the proceeds thereof, the plaintiff was paid her share of the community.

In her replication, the plaintiff admitted the sale of the property, but denied that she had received her share of the joint assets.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers appeared for the plaintiff; defendant appeared in person.

Mary Miriam Shanahan, the plaintiff, said she was married on January 17, 1894, in community of property. Defendant was then a lance-corporal in the Royal Artillery, and she bought him out. There were two children of the marriage, aged eight and five and a half years. They lived happily for four years. At the time of the marriage, witness was lessee of the Diamond Bar, in Harrington-street. In 1898 defendant took to drink, and neglected the business. He used to frequent a low music-hall. Witness then took steps to obtain a judicial separation, but she abandoned the proceedings on defendant promising to amend. There was a disagreement over defendant's conduct with a certain young lady, and for some time there had been an estrangement between witness and defendant. Defendant had no property when married. After marriage, the licence of the hotel was transferred to defendant. Towards the end of 1900, an agreement was drawn up, in which defendant agreed to hand over to witness half the landed property, and to share the profits from the hotel. Defendant signed that agreement; witness did not. The landed property was sold, and an amount of £3,700 odd was realised, this being divided equally between witness and her husband. After receiving the money, witness invested it on her own behalf, and she now had three mortgage bonds. Defendant thereafter had sole control of the business. He had handed witness sums of money from time to time, being her part of the profits from the hotel. Defendant started as a broker, and afterwards opened a tailor's shop, and witness was obliged to look after the business. Defendant was now insolvent, his estate having been compulsorily sequestrated. There was a deficiency of about £1,200. Witness attributed the insolvency to defendant's neglect of the business, which was paying up to about nine months ago.

In reply to the Court, Mr. De Villiers said that the trustees would claim on the property now in the plaintiff's possession for the deficiency; but there would be a surplus, and the plaintiff wished an order from the Court with respect to this surplus.

Plaintiff said this action was commenced before defendant became insolvent.

William O'Brien, formerly a barman at the Diamond Bar, said that defendant did not treat his wife as he ought to have done. He used to neglect his business, and to go out with a young lady he was fond of. He had been with the defendant in the company of two ladies who lived in St. John's-road, Sea Point. One was a Mrs. Bagley, with whom the defendant became very intimate. He had seen defendant with Mrs. Bagley under compromising circumstances. He had seen them, in a bedroom together in Mrs. Bagley's house. They used to go to Mrs. Bagley's house in the daytime, when Mr. Bagley was away. Afterwards Mrs. Bagley lived apart from her husband, going to Observatory-road to live. Defendant and witness visited her house there. In February of last year, Mrs. Bagley became reconciled to her husband, and went to England.

In cross-examination by the defendant, the witness said that when the former discharged him, he (witness) went to the house next day to get his clothes. Defendant then assaulted him, and witness threw a knife at him. He did so because he was alone, and there were three or four other men with defendant. He was not paid for the evidence he was now giving.

This closed the case for the plaintiff.

Defendant called,

William D. Shanahan, nephew of the defendant, who said that he had been with defendant and the last witness to Mrs. Bagley's house on a number of occasions, and had never observed anything wrong about the conduct of defendant and Mrs. Bagley. Witness was in defendant's service at the same time as O'Brien. The latter was lazy and drunk.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: Witness never went to the house at Observatory-road. Witness believed he had seen defendant with his arm round Mrs. Bagley while walking. He had never seen defendant kissing her.

The defendant, Shanahan, gave evidence. He denied the truth of O'Brien's evidence. He never put his arms around Mrs. Bagley, as the last witness had just said.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He had never been in Mrs. Bagley's bedroom, excepting on an occasion on which he had helped to shift furniture. He denied that he went to see her frequently; he had not been to her house more than nine times. He attributed his insolvency to the differences which had arisen between himself and his wife. He denied that he had assaulted O'Brien some days ago.

At the instance of his lordship, the witness O'Brien was recalled. He stated that he had seen the defendant in a compromising position with a Mrs. Smythe.

The defendant, in addressing the Court, attributed the institution of the present proceedings to malice on the part of O'Brien.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court is satisfied that the defendant committed adultery, and the only question now is as to the property. The Court will grant a decree of divorce, with costs; plaintiff to have custody of the children of the marriage, and the Court will declare the defendant to have forfeited the benefits arising out of the community of pro-party. The effect of this will be that the plaintiff will only be entitled to any surplus out of the insolvent estate. On the question of alimony, I don't think we can go further.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SHUTTE V. HEDLEY BROS. { 1904.
 { Feb. 9th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved on notice of motion for the appointment of the Resident Magistrate of Prieska as commissioner to take the evidence of a necessary and material witness in the case, and to fix a date other than the 22nd inst. for hearing.

Mr. Gardiner (for the respondent) raised no objection, but suggested that the commission might be a joint one.

Commission granted, the Resident Magistrate of Prieska to act as commissioner.

RIX V. RIX.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order compelling the respondent to contribute a certain sum, in order that the applicant might bring an action for divorce. The affidavit of the petitioner set out in 1892 she was married in community of property to the respondent, and as there were no children of the marriage. He adopted a child. Up till 1902 she lived happily with her husband, but in the early part of that year he commenced to pay attention to a woman named Sarah Moss, and thereafter they separated, and he agreed to allow her £3 per month for the support of herself and the child.

Mr. Buchanan (for the respondent) pointed out that he only earned £9 a month, and obtained about £1 5s. a month after paying rates, etc., on a property.

An order was granted calling on the defendant to advance the sum of £10 to the applicant, to enable her to bring the action, in addition to the £3 a month which she was entitled to under the agreement.

BEYERS V. GROENEWALD.

Administrator—Removal.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be removed from the office of executor testamentary in the estate of the late Peter Christian van der Groenewald, why the applicant should not solely administer the estate, and why the respondent should not be interdicted from receiving the proceeds of a sale of portion of the estate, pending an action to be brought by the applicant for an account of the administration of the estate. Counsel put in affidavits which set out that the respondent had neglected the estate, and could not account for the rent of certain property in Orphan-lane for ten years. Three years ago the applicant discovered that the respondent was wholly incompetent to administer the estate, and through a deed of assumption, he acted as co-executor. The respondent was addicted to drink, and he had refused to sign documents necessary to the administration of the estate. The respondent was one of six heirs under the will, and the other five, including applicant's wife, agreed that it was necessary the respondent should be removed from his office of trust.

Mr. Benjamin put in the answering affidavit of the respondent, which set out that he was at present farming at the Paarl. He denied he had ever received any rent for the houses in Orphan-lane, or that he had given way to drink. He admitted that the applicant was in a better position to administer the estate than he was. Other affidavits were filed, testifying to his sober habits.

Mr. Benjamin: There is no precedent for ousting an administrator who is willing to administer the estate. The respondent is willing to do so, and the only evidence against him is that on one occasion he refused to sign a document unless its purport was explained to him in Dutch.

De Villiers, C.J.: I don't think justice would be done in this matter without an opportunity of seeing the parties—both applicant and respondent—and the case will be postponed until the 17th. In the meanwhile, I would suggest that the respondent should give an undertaking to the applicant that he will in future attend to his duties, and if an undertaking of that kind is given, I think it should suffice. If no further costs are incurred, I think that, on the whole, as both parties seem to have acted for the interests of the estate, costs should come out of the estate.

Ex parte LATEGAN.

Usufructuary — Expenditure on usufructuary estate — Law costs.

A usufructuary and administrator should obtain the leave of the Court before incurring costs of defending an action in respect of a usufructuary estate in which minors are interested.

This was an application for leave to the petitioner, who is the executrix of the estate of her late husband, Cornelius Johannes de Jager, to raise certain money on bond on landed property in the estate. The petition set forth that petitioner enjoyed the usufruct of the property under the will, but the property was bequeathed to the son—a minor—under certain conditions. Certain money had been spent in defending a law suit; which was lost. The property had been improved, and application was now made to raise money to meet the costs of the law suit, and of improvements. The Master reported adversely to the petition, objecting to money expended on behalf of the minor in the law suit being refunded to the petitioner.

Mr. Buchanan (for applicant): In this case the will gave the property to both children, but the terms of the codicil are not quite in agreement with those of the will. But be that as it may, the applicant not only entered upon possession of works already existing, but has constructed new works; particularly dams.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why did she expend this money without the leave of the Court?]

She says that she was acting under legal advice.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is no evidence that her attorney advised her to go on with the case.]

It is the presumption that he did so, but the Master takes up the position that the Court has already decided against us.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You should have had a curator ad litem appointed to represent the minors.]

Yes, no doubt that would have been more regular.

De Villiers, C.J.: Before defending the law suit, petitioner should have applied to the Court to appoint a curator ad litem. The applicant will be authorised to raise a sum of £650 for payment of the improvements and costs of this application. I think, however, that the Master has very properly objected to the costs of the law suit being included, and that before any costs were incurred on behalf of the minor the Court should have been applied to for leave to appoint a curator ad litem, or at any rate, for leave to defend the action on behalf of the minor. Interest on the bond will not be paid by the petitioner as usufructory.

Ex parte ZACHARY STANLEY BAYLEY AND OTHERS.

Election expenses—Amendment of returns.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain election returns. The petitioners were Messrs. Bayley, Barrable, and Hughes, who were candidates for the Legislative Council. In the return of expenditure made to the returning officer, there had been a miscalculation, and certain items had been omitted. Application was now made to amend the returns under subsection 1 of section 25 of Act 26 of 1902.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Will the total amount exceed what is allowed by the Act?]

No; for a Council election a man may spend £500; or in the case of a joint candidature (such as this) less by one-third, that would be £1,000 in all for the three candidates.

A rule was granted calling on all concerned to show cause on the last day of term why the error should not be amended as prayed, rule to be published once in the "East London Despatch."

The Chief Justice said it must clearly be understood that if this addition should make the expenses exceed what was authorised by the Act, this order must not be held to sanction the excess.

BIRD V. BIRD.

This was an application made by the wife to compel her husband to pay her £30 to enable her to defend an action for divorce instituted by him, and to pay a sum of £2 10s. a week, for the maintenance of herself and two children.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the applicant; Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

The Court ordered the respondent to pay £30 to applicant's attorney to enable her to defend the action, costs to abide the result.

Ex parte PRETORIUS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to transfer certain property in the estate of applicant and her husband. Applicant deposed on affidavit that she lived at Sterkstroom. Her husband left her in May, 1893, and in 1896 it was discovered that he was living at Bloemfontein. There was reason to believe that he was killed in the explosion which occurred at Bloemfontein at that time. Applicant was indebted to certain people for goods supplied for the maintenance of herself and the minors, and she now applied for leave to sell certain property, and to apply the proceeds to the payment of these debts. Counsel cited the case of Hoffmeester (17, Supreme Court Reports, p. 539), and said that in this case it would require nearly all the assets in the estate to pay the debts.

The Chief Justice said an order would be granted in terms of the judgment in the case of Hoffmeester.

HIDDINGH V. ESTATE OF HERTZOG.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the executors of the estate of the late Judge Hertzog, for judgment in terms of a certain letter, in which plaintiff abandoned an action instituted by him to have the validity of a will declared.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there no Rule under which you can get final judgment?]

No; we could only get absolution from the instance, and that will only result in further costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: Application had better be made under the Rule of Court, which provides that a defendant may move for judgment in case an action is not proceeded with within a stipulated period.

Ex parte C. C. DE VILLIERS.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for authority to the petitioner to pass transfer in the estate of the late J. C. Stephan. The matter stood over for a report from the Registrar, who raised no objection, and pointed out the general practice that transfer could not be allowed under general power of attorney.

De Villiers, C.J. said that as the Registrar raised no objection to the transfer in this particular case, the Court would authorise it in reference only to such property as Mr. Stephan had sold prior to his departure for Europe. Confining it to that the Court would make the order without any prejudice to Mr. Stephan's rights if he should repudiate the offer.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TUROK V. CHRISTOPOULOS } 1904.
AND VOYIARITSIS. } Feb. 10th.

This was an action for the rectification of a certain written document—a lease, dated the 10th July, 1903. From the pleadings it appeared that it was common cause that certain premises, consisting of a shop and two rooms and kitchen, were let by the plaintiff to the defendants, and these premises were described in the lease as No. 161, Commercial buildings, Albert-road, Woodstock. The plaintiff alleged that the words "No. 161" were put into the lease either by mutual mistake, or alternatively owing to the fraud of the defendants. The plaintiff said that the premises were not No. 161, but were numbered 165, the latter being the premises understood to be leased, and which, apart from the mistake in number, were otherwise perfectly well identified by the parties when the lease was drawn up. Plaintiff claimed a rectification of the lease, in order that the number of the premises let should be made 165. He also claimed £27 as rent. The plaintiff was the landlord of the premises, and defendants were now actually in possession of No. 165. In their plea, defendants said they had not had possession of the premises let to them under the lease. They claimed in reconvention an order declaring them entitled to the possession of No. 161. They further claimed £25 damages; and as an alternative claim, they asked for judgment for £250 as damages.

The matter had previously been brought before the Court by way of motion, and it was then ordered that the applicant, the present plaintiff, should proceed by action.

Mr. Alexander for the plaintiff; Mr. Pyemont for the defendant.

Hyman Turok, the plaintiff, was called, and said he owned the Commercial Buildings, in Albert-road, Woodstock, the numbers of which were 161, 163, 165, and 167. No. 165 was formerly a fruit shop. There were two rooms and a kitchen behind 165, but there were none behind 161. There were four rooms and a kitchen above 161 and 163, the entrance to which rooms was from Railway-street. Before July last, the tenant of 165 was a man named Cambrez, who used it as a fruit shop. There was a Malay grocer named Saladien in 161. A man named Cammaris occupied the rooms behind 165 in July, and was still there.

Mr. Alexander said that in regard to this, it was stated by plaintiff on the pleadings that he had given this man notice, in order to give defendant possession of the rooms, and had taken no rent from Cammaris.

Witness (proceeding) said in July the defendant Christopoulos came and saw him at the premises, and said he wanted to take the shop. Cambrez said he wanted to give over the shop to Christopoulos. Witness said he could do nothing there, but that they must come to the office of his agent. This took place in Cambrez's shop. Christopoulos and two other men afterwards met witnesses in the office of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, and a lease was made in respect of the shop and two rooms and kitchen. It was agreed that the rent should be £9 a month. Cambrez had been paying £6 for the shop only. Witness ordered that notice should be given to Cammaris, and it was agreed that, as possession of the rooms could not be given in July, the rent should only be £6 for that month. Christopoulos asked witness the number of the shop. Witness said he did not know. One of the Greeks with Christopoulos said it was 161, and so this number was put in the lease. Witness did not collect the rent himself, and did not know the numbers of the shops. There was a clause in the lease which stipulated that no fruit or green vegetables were to be sold in any of the adjoining shops. This was done so that Saladien should not sell fruit or vegetables, while Christopoulos was not to sell groceries. Since then a little fruit, such as tomatoes, had been sold in 161. This was done because the tenant of 161 complained that defendants sold groceries. The witness deposed as to certain correspondence in the case.

By the Court: Saladien was still in possession of 161, and witness was satisfied with him as a tenant. No. 161 had never been let with two rooms and kitchen.

Cross-examined by Mr. Pyemont: Saladien paid £7 10s. for the shop, and rented the four rooms above for £4 a month. There was a way to these rooms through a passage from the shop, as well as from Railway-street.

James Grainer, clerk in the office of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, said he was in charge of the rent-collecting branch. According to the rent ledger, Cambrez paid the shop rent for 165 up to July, and Cammaris paid rent for the rooms behind. Witness gave a receipt in July. This was for £9 paid by the defendants. It was credited to the August rent, and witness took the amount from the lease. £6 was collected from Cambrez for July before the lease was made. Witness gave notice to Cammaris to quit on the 1st August. The four rooms above 161 and 163 were always let as one dwelling-house, and were never let separately.

By the Court: Nothing was said in witness's presence about turning the Coolie out of 161.

S. J. Mostert, articulated clerk in the office of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, said he prepared the lease. He asked the number of the premises. Turok was uncertain, and the interpreter, having spoken to defendants, said the number was 161. Defendants had tendered certain amounts since the case was commenced as rent for 161, but were told the money could not be accepted as rent for 161.

Jno. S. Innes, clerk in the same office, deposed that on August 2 defendants came to the office, and tendered £6 as rent on behalf of Cambrez, and £9 as rent for themselves for 161. The tenders were refused.

Charles Marais, surveyor, Charles P. Miller, and Mohamet Perquhuan also gave evidence. Perquhuan, who is the present occupier of 161, said that about six months ago defendants came to him and warned him not to sell fruit, as they had a lease of the shop next door but one (165). In cross-examination, the witness denied that in July he was told he would have to leave the shop.

For the defence,

Joe Christopoulos, one of the defendants, gave evidence. He said that when the lease was drawn up he went to the office of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, according to arrangement with Turok. Witness first saw Turok in May in his (witness's) shop. Witness then occupied 165. Cambrez was not there then. Witness asked Turok about the shop at the corner (161), and Turok agreed to let him have that shop. They conversed through an interpreter. Witness subsequently saw Turok near the latter's office, and they came to terms. In consequence of that he went to the attorneys' office to have the lease drawn up. The lease was read over to witness by the interpreter, and was in accordance with what he had intended. He had always given Turok to understand that what he wanted was the corner shop (161). Witness afterwards went to the corner shop and saw Perquhuan. An interpreter was present. Witness told the coolie that he had taken the shop. He did not tell the coolie that he had taken a lease of 165. The coolie said he would not go out for six months, and witness thereupon went to see the landlord, and informed him, through an interpreter, of what the coolie had said. Turok said he would see that the coolie was turned out, but on condition that three months' rent was paid in advance. Witness refused to agree to this. Witness then went to his lawyer.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: The interpreter was now in Johannesburg.

By the Court: Witness took the business at 165 from Cambrez in April or May. Witness wanted to go to the corner shop because it was a better one. He was not willing to keep on at 165 if he could not get the corner shop.

Elias Cammaris said he had lived in the rooms behind 165 for nine months, and had never had notice to quit. He paid his rent in August, and had since offered to pay the rent through his brother.

Efthin Yaxoqlaw, tobacco merchant, said he was in the office of the plaintiff's attorneys when the lease was drawn up, and was a witness to the document. Witness explained the lease to the defendants, who signed it as being according to their intent. The figures "161" were there when he read the lease over to defendants.

Joseph Barnard Shaxinowits gave evidence as to the position of certain rooms over 161 and 165.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J. expressed the opinion that counsel for the plaintiff should unreservedly withdraw the allegation as to fraud, as there was absolutely no evidence on that point.

Mr. Alexander said he was prepared to withdraw the allegation.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in his declaration alleges that he was the owner of a block of buildings known as Commercial Buildings, situated at Woodstock, and that on the 10th July last he agreed to let to the defendants a certain portion of the buildings, consisting of a shop and two rooms and kitchen, adjoining for the sum of £9 per month. Thereafter, when this agreement was concluded between the parties, it was reduced to writing in the office of the plaintiff's solicitors, and plaintiff, not knowing the actual number of the shop, it was stated by the defendants to be 161, and 161 was inserted in the written lease. It was discovered, however, that 165 should have been written instead of 161, and the plaintiff brings this action to amend the written document in so far as it describes the number. He also claims for three months' rent, due under the agreement. The defendants admit in their plea that they are in occupation of No. 165, but they say that the agreement of lease was really in respect of 161. The first question we, therefore, have to decide, is: What was the contract between the parties. From the evidence given by Christopoulos himself, it appears that one Cambrez was in possession of a green-grocer's and fruit shop, carried on at No. 165, that in April he bought the goodwill of this business for £50, and that he paid the rent in Cambrez's name before he entered into this agreement. The plaintiff says—and it seems reasonable to think that it was so—that the defendants came with Cambrez, and said they were going to take over this business and wanted a lease of the shop; that he agreed to grant them a lease of the shop, and that he made an appointment with them to appear at the attorneys' office to enter into a contract of lease. They duly appeared at the attorney's office. I think it is beyond all question that the plaintiff in this case intended to let 165, and the two rooms and kitchen behind 165. I think this is beyond question, because of the facts that the rent stipulated for 165, and for the rooms and kitchen behind, was the same as had previously been paid, and that at that time the plaintiff had a tenant for the shop at 161, and for the rooms above at a higher rental, and I do not think he can be presumed to have intended to take a tenant for those premises at a much lower rate. I have no doubt, as far as any rate, as the plaintiff is concerned, that he considered he was letting the shop 165; but the question is whether the defendants also think they were hiring that shop. Now these same considerations induce me to come to the conclusion that the contract they entered into with the plaintiff was to hire the shop 165, and not 161. One reason for concluding so is that on looking at the lease, I find these words: "In which said shop two rooms and kitchen are to be used." Now the only shop which has two rooms and a kitchen available to go with the shop is 165. It is true that there are certain rooms over the shop 161, but these rooms are above both 161 and 163, and from the evidence before us these form one compact building, and not two separate sets of rooms. Moreover, these rooms are available by entrance from the side street, and not from the shop 161 at all, and have been always let separately, and not with either of the shops. Therefore, the description in the lease as to the shop and rooms let is the only one consistent with the contract to let the shop 165, and the two rooms and kitchen behind, and is totally inconsistent with the idea that the shop let was the one at the corner, with two of the four rooms over the two shops. Then we have the fact that after the contract had been entered into, the defendants did not say: "Give us possession of the corner shop," but actually went into and took over Cambrez's business, and were left in possession from that time to the present. I think, under these circumstances the Court is forced irresistibly to the conclusion that it was a clerical error at the attorney's office in putting the wrong number into the agreement of lease. I must say it doesn't reflect very great credit on the clerks—junior clerks, apparently—who drew up the agreement. There was carelessness on their part, but we have evidence before us which shows how this particular number was put in. It was the defendants who suggested the number 161, and I think that while they were not acting fraudulently, they made an erroneous statement, and that while they were intending to take this other shop, 165, they gave the wrong number. If the defendants actually intended to mislead the plaintiff by giving the number as 161, instead of 165, it certainly would have amounted to fraud, but there is absolutely no evidence to show this, and it seems that it was through an inadvertence due to the defendants themselves, and not to the plaintiff that 161 was written. We are convinced from the evidence that the contract was to hire the shop 165, and the two rooms and kitchen behind. That being the case, the error in the lease is one that can be rectified. It does not alter the contract itself; it is only an amendment to make the written document in accordance with the actual contract itself. I think the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to have the contract rectified by substituting the number 165 for 161. The next point is as to the rent. It was agreed under this contract that the rent should be £9, but the parties agreed that as the rooms in the back were in the possession of Commaris, defendants should only pay £6 a month, as for the shop, until possession was given of the rooms at the back. According to his evidence, plaintiff gave Commaris notice to vacate the rooms, but the latter never did so, and plaintiff never took the trouble to eject Commaris, and never tendered to the defendants the use of these rooms. It is the duty of the landlord to tender vacant possession to the tenant. Plaintiff agreed to take £6 per month until he gave possession of the rooms. He claims rent for three months, and judgment will be given for the sum of £18 for three months' rent. The only remaining question is that of costs, and on this subject if it had been simply a question for the amendment of the contract the costs might have been avoided, or very little costs incurred by the defendants, but they have chosen after they got this lease by erroneous information to come into court and defend this case, and to adhere to this erroneous statement in the lease. Under these circumstances defendants should be ordered to pay the costs. As regards the costs of the survey, I think a survey in such a small case as this was unnecessary, and the question of whether the costs of the survey will be allowed will be left to the Master.

SUPREME COURT

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1904.
{ Feb. 11th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the admission of Petrus Joachim van Wyk as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Oudtshoorn.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HOFFMANN V. BLACK.

Sequestration, compulsory—Petition of creditor.

The petition of a creditor who applies for the sequestration of an estate must either allege that the debtor has committed an act of insolvency, or (1) that his claim is for £100 or more, (2) that the debtor is insolvent, and (3) that it is for the benefit of his creditors that his estate should be sequestrated.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent.

The petition of Josef Hoffmann stated that he was a manufacturer, carrying on business in Austria, and that the respondent was a merchant carrying on business in Burgstreet, Cape Town. Some few months ago the defendant executed a deed of inspection, which gave full powers to Mr. Gibson, of Gibson, Croese and Co., to carry on the estate. The defendant owed the petitioner £183 14s. 4d. for goods supplied to him. The petitioner was informed that all the creditors had not signed the deed, and, further, that some of the creditors absolutely refused to do so. Mr. Gibson stated that the conduct of the respondent had been most unsatisfactory, and that certain of his transactions before the execution of the deed required investigation. Judgment had been obtained against him at the instance of another creditor, and certain goods had been attached by the Deputy-Sheriff.

An affidavit by Mr. F. B. Andrews, the petitioner's attorney, spoke to a judgment having been obtained against the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan said that, before he read the respondent's affidavit, he wished to take the objection that the petition was not drawn in conformity with the requirements of Section 3 of Act 38 of 1884. The application was not based upon any act of insolvency, and the section under which the application was made required that the petition should state whether the other party was insolvent, and that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that such estate should be sequestrated, and setting forth the grounds upon which such statements were based. Counsel contended that the petition was absolutely unique in the method in which it had been presented to the Court. It had been held that in such matters the petition should follow the language of the section. There was no specific statement that the respondent was insolvent, and the only point that the application could be founded upon was this deed of inspection, which only showed that the respondent was in temporary difficulties.

The Court: But suppose we hold that the objection is good, would not the only result be that a fresh order would be made?

Mr. Buchanan said if that were done, arrangements could be made with the parties to bring the whole matter to an end. It was of importance to the respondent whether the objection was upheld.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the whole tenour of the petition showed that the respondent was insolvent. He contended that the whole of the affidavits should be read to the Court, and that it would then appear from the respondent's own affidavit that his estate was insolvent. The deed of inspection shows that he is insolvent, and the fact that Mr. Justice Kotzé, in Chambers, saw fit to grant a provisional order, was some evidence of the insolvency of the respondent.

The Court: That is not a good argument.

Mr. Benjamin admitted that there was no specific statement that he was insolvent, but he submitted that the whole tenour of the petition showed that the estate was in insolvent circumstances.

[Buchanan, J.: The only question is whether the petition is in order.]

[Hopley, J.: The petition does not state that the estate is insolvent, or that it is for the benefit of the creditors that it should be sequestrated.]

I submit that there is sufficient in the general terms of the petition to show that the estate is insolvent, and that the exception which has been raised should be overruled.

Mr. Buchanan was not called upon in reply.

Buchanan, J.: If a debtor commits an act of insolvency within the terms of the old Insolvent Ordinance, it is competent for any creditor who can comply with the conditions of the Ordinance to obtain a compulsory sequestration of his estate. In this case, it is not alleged that the debtor has committed any act of insolvency, consequently the Ordinance does not apply. By Act 38 of 1884, certain additional remedies are given to creditors. The third section of that Act provides that a creditor wishing to sequester the estate of his debtor, who has not committed an act of insolvency, must, in the petition which he presents, state certain facts. He must state that his claim is for £100 or more; he must state that the debtor is insolvent; he must state that it is for the benefit of the creditors that the sequestration should take place; and he must state the grounds on which these statements are made. These are the provisions of the Act setting forth what the petitioning creditor must state in his petition. In this case the petition has not complied with these provisions, with the exception that it sets forth that the petitioning creditor has a claim exceeding £100. The learned counsel who appears for the petitioning creditor has to admit that there is no allegation in the petition that the debtor is insolvent, nor is there any direct statement that it would be to the benefit of all creditors that the estate should be sequestrated. When the extraordinary remedies which the law allows to creditors are taken advantage of, it is essential that the conditions on which these remedies are given be complied with. The Court has repeatedly insisted upon a petition complying with the requirements of the statute before granting a sequestration of an estate. Mr. Benjamin urges that if we look at the additional affidavits now filed, these deficiencies will be cured. But that is not the question before the Court. An objection has been taken to the petition itself, that it does not comply with the Act. It may be that this may prove to be only a temporary obstacle to the creditor, and that a fresh application may be forthwith made upon an amended petition; but that we have nothing to do with. The Court must see that the requirements of the Act are complied with. If creditors wish to avail themselves of these extraordinary remedies, they must observe the conditions. The petitioner has not complied with the Act, and the Court has no option but to set aside the sequestration. The summons will be discharged, with costs.

Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

KETS V. NOORDEN.

Conditions of sale.

The defendant had purchased certain property for £8,000 odd subject to the condition that a Trust Company should advance £5,000 on mortgage on the property purchased, and further £1,000 on certain other property of the defendant. The defendant alleged that the Trust Company subsequent to the sale demanded additional security for the advance of £5,000. This security he refused to provide. Part of the purchase price of the property had been paid by defendant, but a balance of £840 still remained due, and for this sum the plaintiff now asked for provisional sentence.

Held, that provisional sentence must be granted as prayed, with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment for £840 1s. 1d. under conditions of sale. The sum due was not in dispute between the parties, and defendant tendered payment thereof—viz., £401 16s. 7d. capital, and £438 4s. 2d. interest. Defendant, however, claimed that on tender being made, plaintiff should fulfil the conditions of the sale. The conditions provided that the Colonial Orphan Chamber should allow £5,000 of the purchase price to remain on bond, and that a further £1,000 should be secured on a second bond on the property to Kets. The affidavit of defendant alleged that the Colonial Orphan Chamber, who acted as agents for the plaintiff, had demanded that to secure the £5,000 defendant should hypothecate this and further property. The answering affidavit of the applicant stated that the Colonial Orphan Chamber were prepared to grant £5,000 on bond on the property at the time the sale was made. Defendant, however, did not take transfer, and owing to the change in the value of the property, and other circumstances, the Chamber advised defendant that they could only give £4,500, unless additional security was given. Defendant had voluntarily tendered additional security, and it was only since summons was taken out that the defendant had taken up the position that he would not hypothecate further property.

Mr. Gardiner (for the respondent) contended that defendant was justified in coming to Court, because plaintiff had not been prepared to pass transfer in accordance with the provisions of the conditions of sale.

Buchanan, J.: The summons in this case is founded on conditions of sale entered into between the agent of the plaintiff and the defendant. By these conditions, certain moneys had to be paid on fixed dates, and the balance of the purchase price of the property, amounting to £6,000, was to be secured first by a mortgage bond for £5,000 in favour of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company, and secondly by a mortgage bond for £1,000 in favour of Kets. The summons calls upon the defendant to fulfil the conditions of sale. It is said that some dispute has arisen between Mr. Steytler, the secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, and defendant; but that is not before us now. Mr. Steytler is not before the Court, and all we can do is to give judgment for the plaintiff as asked in the summons. Provisional sentence will, therefore, be granted for £401 16s. 7d., and £438 4s. 6d., upon the plaintiff giving transfer, and defendant passing the mortgage bonds stipulated for. As there was no actual tender before summons, the costs will have to be paid by the defendant.

ALFORD, WILLS AND OTHERS V. MARKS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final. The matter had previously been before the Court.

No appearance was entered for defendant.

Order granted as prayed.

SUBURBAN ESTATES DEVELOPMENT AND BUILDING CO. V. JANKLOWITZ.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £37, less £16, paid since summons was issued, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

IRELAND V. PENKIN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted as prayed.

PEDERSEN V. KENNEDY.

Novation—Promissory note

Provisional sentence refused where plaintiff still held a promissory note which defendant had given in lieu of that sued upon.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £350, with interest and costs.

Defendant said that there was another note given by him, which would be due on the 20th inst. The other note was given in place of the present one sued upon.

The Court advised the defendant to put the statement on affidavit.

The case was ordered to stand over until Thursday next.

Postea (February 18).

Defendant's affidavit stated that on taking over a certain licensed house he also took over certain debts owed to plaintiff by the outgoing tenants. He gave plaintiff the promissory note now in dispute, but on the due date defendant agreed to accept a new promissory note for the amount, payable on the 27th March, 1904. Plaintiff told defendant to get the new note signed by the persons who had signed the note in suit as sureties. In accordance with this arrangement, defendant drew up a new note, and sent it to plaintiff, minus the signature of one of the sureties. This had never been returned to defendant, and he claimed that the present action was premature on the ground that a novation had taken place, and that he would not become plaintiff's debtor until the 27th March.

In a replying affidavit the plaintiff stated that he only agreed to accept a new note on the express condition that it would be endorsed by the persons who were sureties on the other note. The new note was sent to him without the signature of one of the sureties, and he refused to sign it and returned the document to one Hempel, another of the sureties, who was a personal friend of the defendant and was interested in the bill.

Mr. Russell for plaintiff, Mr. Buchanan for defendant.

After hearing counsel in argument, the Court refused provisional sentence.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant admits that he signed the first note now sued upon, but he says that he afterwards gave another promissory note, which was payable to the plaintiff, and which was sent to plaintiff. That second note has never been returned, and he may still be held liable upon that. If the plaintiff has endorsed the note, the bona fide holder might sue the defendant. The defendant is, therefore, entitled to say: "Before you can sue me on the first promissory note you must hand me back the second." There is no tender of the note. The plaintiff says it has been sent to another person, who is one of the sureties, but the defendant ought to have had this note returned to him. Provisional sentence must be refused, with costs. Of course, if the plaintiff can prove he has lost this promissory note, then different considerations will arise.

GREENSHIELDS V. STEPHAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100.

Order granted.

GOURLAY, CAVANAGH AND CO. V. MOSS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentences on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

HAUSANT V. MANCHESTER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest and costs, and for property specially hypothecated, to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HEINAMANN V. SCHOLTZ.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration.

Order granted.

ORLANDINI V. STRYDOM.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, with interest, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MCLEOD V. LA GRANGE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence for interest on a mortgage bond, and for costs.

Order granted.

HEIDE V. BOYCE.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,200, for interest, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

DALY V. LATEGAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £50 on a dishonoured cheque and for £75 on a promissory note, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

LINDENBERG V. DE JONGH.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence for £900 on a promissory note, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ESTATE HERTZOG V. MACMULLEN.

Mr. Nightingale moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

SMITH AND CO. V. VAN AS.

Mr. Russell moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final. A letter was read from the defendant saying that he had insufficient money to pay his railway fare to attend court.

Order granted as prayed.

GERECKE v. WAGGEMANN. { 1904.
Feb. 11th.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SEDGWICK.

Liquidation—Receivers.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that this was a matter which had been before the Court previously. It first came before Sir John Buchanan. The parties agreed upon a liquidation of the business, and in December application was made in Chambers for the appointment of such receiver or receivers as the Court might deem fit. Applicant then suggested Mr. E. R. Syfret as receiver to look after his interests, and Mr. Douglas, of Johannesburg, to look after respondent's interests. Mr. Douglas's name having previously been suggested by the respondent. Applicant also suggested that Mr. G. W. Steytler should be appointed as a third liquidator, to arbitrate between the two, if necessary. He now asked for the appointment of Mr. Syfret to represent him; Mr. Gibson to represent the respondent, who had already substituted that gentleman for Mr. Douglas; and Mr. Steytler for the parties mutually. The respondent opposed the appointment of Mr. Steytler, contending that two receivers were sufficient.

Buchanan, J., said that when the matter came before him originally, both parties had agreed to go into liquidation, and then there were several names mentioned. He appointed Mr. Syfret as receiver, but he understood some agreement would be come to.

Mr. Gardiner: So I thought, my lord.

[Hopley, J.: The whole matter is as to the appointment of liquidators?]

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, we want Messrs. Syfret, Gibson, and Steytler appointed, and the respondent only wants Mr. Syfret and Mr. Gibson. We say it is necessary to have a third man; they say it is not.

[Hopley, J.: You say there is a possibility of disagreement, and you want this third gentleman appointed as a sort of umpire?]

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, my lord.

Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Searle): Do you object to a third liquidator being appointed?

Yes; we say it is unnecessary, and we also say that no reasons have been set out why Mr. Steytler should be appointed. I think it only fair to mention to your lordships that the application in Chambers was an ex parte application, and we had no notice of it.

Mr. Gardiner: That was so, my lord. Mr. Gardiner then read the petition of the applicant, in which it was set forth that in the first instance Mr. Steytler was appointed liquidator. Being agreed upon mutually by the two parties; but he was subsequently objected to by the respondent, on the ground that he was a director in a rival company, the Van Rhyn Wine and Spirit Co. The petitioner stated that he was the owner of two-thirds of the business, and was entitled to a three-fifth share of the profits. He said, therefore, that he was entitled to more representation than the respondent, but was willing to have equal representation, and he asked for the appointment of Mr. Syfret as an impartial man. He further stated that the delay in the appointment of permanent liquidators would seriously prejudice the business, especially as arrangements had to be made in regard to this season's vintage. He asked for the appointment of the three liquidators named, with full powers to carry on the business, pending liquidation, and to dispose of the business to either of the late partners or to other persons. An affidavit was read, made by applicant, in support of the petition.

Mr. Searle read an answering affidavit by the respondent, in which he stated that he agreed to the appointment of Mr. E. R. Syfret and Mr. Gibson. He stated that he had originally agreed to the appointment of Mr. Steytler, but subsequently found that Mr. Steytler was connected with a rival firm, the Van Rhyn Company, and he objected to his acting.

In a replying affidavit, Mr. Steytler said that on the occasion of his appointment as liquidator, he fully understood that he was appointed by both parties. He denied that he was a director of the Van Rhyn Wine and Spirit Co., and said he had only acted in that capacity temporarily.

Mr. Gardiner said that, although his client owned two-thirds of the capital, he did not ask for any special favour. He simply suggested Mr. Steytler as an impartial man; and he asked for his appointment as such. It had been explained to him that he was not his (applicant's) nominee, but the nominee of both parties. This was a big business, and counsel submitted that it was necessary that three liquidators should be appointed. It was estimated that the respective values of the shares were £80,000 and £40,000. He submitted that the only course now was to have a third liquidator; the applicant wanted Mr. Syfret, and Mr. A. M. Sedgwick wanted Mr. Gibson.

They want their man and we want ours. We quite admit that two such men as Messrs. Steytler and Syfret could liquidate the estate. But the applicants take up the position that they are entitled to appoint two liquidators. I have never heard of any such position being assumed before. It has not been shown that the services of a third liquidator are required, and it is only in very exceptional cases that the Court will appoint a third liquidator. Even in such cases as those of the Union Bank and the Cape of Good Hope Building Society, only two liquidators were employed. Even if three liquidators should be appointed, in the event of their disagreement, it would still be necessary to come to Court, and the Court might possibly decide in favour of the one. A. M. S. Sedgwick has now been absent from the Colony for many years, and it is his interests rather than those of other persons that the Court should protect.

Mr. Gardiner was not called upon in reply.

Buchanan, J.: Application was made in Chambers to appoint a receiver, as the partnership was coming to an end, and the partners had not agreed as to who should liquidate the partnership. I appointed Mr. Syfret as provisional receiver, leaving the parties to agree to the appointment of a permanent liquidator. The parties met, and appointed Mr. Syfret and Mr. Douglas, and these two persons approached Mr. Steytler with the request to act as a third liquidator in the matter. The whole opposition now is as to whether there should be a third person appointed. Looking at the correspondence which has taken place between the parties, it is very likely that there may be difficulties arising in this liquidation. It is a large estate, and under the exceptional circumstances, as the parties object to having one liquidator, I think it fair that there should be three. Each party has nominated one liquidator. The applicant has nominated Mr. Syfret, and the respondent has nominated Mr. Gibson; and the Court feels very much inclined to follow the suggestion of the two liquidators, and to appoint Mr. Steytler, who was nominated by them. Mr. Steytler has been objected to on the ground that he has an interest in a similar business, being a director of the Van Rhyn Wine and Spirit Co. Mr. Steytler deposes that he has not now any interest in or connection with that company, and is no longer one of its directors, and that he had only acted as a director temporarily. I think the experience so gained would assist him in acting in the liquidation of this business. There is now no reason why he should not be appointed as a third receiver. The Court will appoint Mr. Syfret, Mr. Gibson, and Mr. Steytler as receivers to liquidate this partnership, and the costs of this application will be costs of liquidation.

Mr. Gardiner: Will your lordship give authority as to the disposal of the business assets?

[Buchanan, J.: Of course, the liquidators will have power to deal with that.]

I understand that Mr. A. M. Sedgwick will leave for England next week, and I don't know whether the liquidators will have power to give transfer of the property.

[Buchanan, J.: Any property vested in the partnership will now vest in the liquidators.]

Mr. Gardiner: There are assets, I am informed, my lord; two-thirds registered in the name of the applicant, and one-third in the name of A. M. Sedgwick, without mentioning the firm.

[Buchanan, J.: Is it firm property?]

So I understand.

[Buchanan, J.: That will be a question to be found out, and if it is firm property the liquidators will have to deal with it.]

CHABAUD V. HARTMANN.

Mr. Searle, K.C., applied for judgment, in terms of a certain consent paper. The matter arose out of an alleged libel published by the defendant in his newspaper "Scandinavia," in the course of an article headed "Consula." The defendant had made a retraction of all allegations against the plaintiff, and had consented to judgment being entered against him for £25, with costs, as between attorney and client.

Mr. Benjamin (for the defendant) said that he had been unable to see his client, but he supposed he should accede to the application.

Judgment in terms of consent paper.

LYONS V. KELLAWAY.

This was an application to make final a rule nisi restraining the District Paymaster at the Castle, Cape Town, from paying over to any other person than applicant certain moneys in the possession of the said paymaster. Mr. Benjamin was for the applicant, and Mr. C. W. de Villiers was for the respondent. No appearance was entered for George C. Withinshaw, who had been joined as co-respondent.

The affidavit of the applicant said that the respondent entered into a contract with the Imperial military authorities, in connection with the Wynberg Camp. Petitioner guaranteed to the Imperial authorities the due performance of the contract, and undertook to make advances to the defendant, and, in consideration, he was to receive 5 per cent. commission on all moneys thus advanced, and was given the respondent's power of attorney, authorising him to receive all moneys due and payable to him upon any contract with the military authorities. There was still due to the applicant £638 18s. 3d. for cash lent, and goods supplied, and money paid on his account at his request. At the termination of the last contract there still remained £270 in the hands of the paymaster in Cape Town, but this was not paid to the applicant, because the power of attorney had been withdrawn in favour of a third party—Withinshaw.

The affidavit of the respondent's brother stated that the respondent died in December, 1903, and that deponent was appointed executor. Deceased had informed him that he cancelled the power of attorney, because the applicant would not render him a proper account.

The applicant, in an answering affidavit, denied that he had refused to render an account, and said that he should be quite willing to render an account to the executor. He had since ascertained that the sum in the hands of the paymaster was £224.

Mr. Benjamin, replying to the Court, said that an action had not yet been instituted by the applicant.

Mr. De Villiers having been heard in argument,

The rule nisi was made absolute, costs to be costs in the cause, and applicant to proceed with his action forthwith. The following words were added to the order: "Unless by consent of the parties, it is agreed to pay the moneys into the hands of the Registrar of the Court, the moneys will be attached pending the result of the action."

CORBALLIS V. PHILLIPS AND CO. AND ANOTHER.

This was an application to make final a rule restraining the Customs officers at East London from parting with certain cases of whiskey to anyone except the representatives of Alexander and McDonald, of Leith, Scotland. Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent, John J. Ellis, auctioneer and commission agent, East London. Phillips and Co. were not represented.

The affidavit of the petitioner stated that he was the representative in South Africa of the firm of Alexander and McDonald. The firm were unable to secure payment of the debt from the defendant firm, and deponent understood that the firm of Phillips and Co. would be placed under sequestration in a few days. J. J. Phillips, the principal of the defendant firm, has been arrested on a charge of embezzlement.

The affidavit of John J. Ellis, stated that he had advanced £150 to Phillips on security of the goods in dispute, which the said Phillips alleged to be his property. Phillips produced the bill of lading. Deponent added that the estate of Phillips and Co. had been placed under provisional sequestration, and the principal, J. J. Phillips, had been arrested. Deponent was willing to surrender his right to the goods on payment of £150 and interest.

The answering affidavit of the applicant, Corballis, said that he was not fully acquainted with all the details of the transaction in question, but the fact remained that no duty had been paid by Phillips, that he had not attempted to take the whiskey out of bond, and that the whiskey was still retained by the Customs authorities in transit.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard in argument on the facts,

The rule was made absolute on condition that within two months the applicant first discharged the claim of Ellis for advances made on the bill of lading, applicant to pay costs.

Ex parte NCHORIN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the petitioners, who lived in the district of Matatiele, and were widows, who had been married according to Basuto custom, for the payment of the sum of £100, standing to the credit of one Adam Nchorin, in the Post Office Savings Bank. A sum of £10 was in dispute as to succession.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on all interested to show cause why the prayer in the petition should not be granted, one publication in the "Kokstad Advertiser," the rule to be returnable on the 12th March, a report to be obtained from the Resident Magistrate of Matatiele as to the right of one Elizabeth Nchorin to receive the sum of £10, part of the said £100, with interest thereon, as successor to her late husband.

Postea (March 17th).

The rule was made absolute.

Ex parte ALLY.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain mortgage bonds by the insertion of the correct name of petitioner's principal, and also authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of a mortgage bond passed in favour of petitioner's principal, which had been destroyed by fire.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Thursday next, pending a report by the Registrar.

ASTON V. ASTON.

Mr. Rowson moved for leave to sue by edictal citation. Petitioner stated that he came out to this country to improve his position, and obtained an appointment on the C.G.R. He was now domiciled in this colony. He had repeatedly requested respondent to come out and join him, but she refused, and the last letter that he received from her said she would rather die than come out, and told petitioner that he had better obtain a divorce. The parties were married within the county of Salop in England. The wife's present whereabouts were unknown, though two months ago she was living with a minister's widow in Radnor.

Leave was given to sue by edictal citation, citation to be returnable on the 14th May, personal service to be effected, with leave to serve intendit and notice of trial with citation.

KOENIG V. LANDESHUT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the inclusion of Frank Wheeler as a witness to be examined by the Commission appointed to take evidence in this action. Mr. Wheeler was about to leave town for a while.

Order granted.

Ex parte MONGAMELE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent petitioner in an arbitration on legal proceedings which were pending. Petitioner was a minor. The matter had been referred to the Resident Magistrate of the district of Eastern Pondoland, who suggested that Mr. Charles Behr should act as curator ad litem.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Behr as curator ad litem.

VAN DEN HEEVER V. CLOETE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved as a matter of urgency for a rule nisi calling upon the respondent or any other person who may become possessed of a certain sheep lease to show cause why he should not deliver up the same to the applicant upon payment to the respondent of the sum of £16 10s., or be interdicted from disposing of the said lease. The lease had been given to one Zinn as security, and had subsequently been ceded to the respondent. Zinn had been away in Johannesburg, and was intending to return there, and the petitioner proposed to bring an action against him. The parties lived at Lady Grey, in the division of Aliwal North.

Rule nisi granted as prayed, to operate as a temporary interdict, rule to be returnable on the 25th inst.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSE.

BENNETT V. BENNETT AND J. 1904.
ANOTHER. } Feb. 12th.

This was an action brought by George Bennett, now of Johannesburg, and formerly of Cape Town, against his wife, residing at Sea Point, for divorce, on the ground of her alleged adultery with one Garrett.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in January, 1884, in the parish of St. Giles, Cripplegate, London, and that there were four children issue of the marriage living, all being minors. The plaintiff was domiciled in this colony, but at present resided in Johannesburg. It was alleged that the defendant committed adultery with Garrett at divers times in 1902 and 1903 in Cape Town.

The defendant, in her plea, denied that the plaintiff was domiciled in this colony, and declared there were five children of the marriage, all minors, still living. She denied the charges of adultery. As a claim in reconvention, she craved leave to refer to the foregoing allegations, and she went on to declare further that during the past two years her husband had failed to provide for her and the children, in consequence of which she had had to expend £100. For twelve months they had lived apart from each other. She claimed a decree of judicial separation, judgment for £100, custody of the three minor children of the marriage now living with her, and reasonable access to the two children now living with the plaintiff. She also asked for maintenance at £6 a month for herself and £3 a month for each of the three minor children until they should attain the age of 21 years, or should marry.

The plaintiff, in his replication, denied that there were more than four children issue of the marriage, or that he had neglected to provide for his wife, and declared that she had always refused to join him.

Defendant, in her rejoinder, said that since her plea was filed the youngest child of the marriage had died, and she prayed for judgment, except in regard to the youngest child.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers for plaintiff.

Mr. Alexander for defendant.

Mr. De Villiers said he understood that his learned friend had abandoned the position set up in the pleadings, and that he was prepared, subject to proof of adultery, to come to terms.

Mr. Alexander said that he did not propose to call any evidence in support of the allegations in the plea or the claim in reconvention, and he would simply put the plaintiff to proof of the adultery alleged against the defendant. The defendant admitted the plaintiff's domicile. Counsel was instructed to ask for custody of the two girls now living with her, and to ask for maintenance for the two girls at the rate of £6 a month until they should attain the age of 21 years, or should marry. As to the claim for £100 as money expended on maintenance, the defendant had accepted £25, and therefore she abandoned that claim. Really, they only came into court now for custody and maintenance of the two girls.

Evidence was then called.

George Bennett, the plaintiff, said that he came out to this colony from Home about 14 years ago. He first lived at Northcote House, Cape Town. Mr. Garrett lived there for some time. Witness afterwards lived at another place, where Garrett went also. His wife kept a boarding-house at that place. She seemed to be frequently in Garrett's company, and took his breakfast to his bedroom. Witness remonstrated with her, but she said Garrett was only the same as any other boarder. They had quarrels almost every day on the subject. Witness afterwards went to Johannesburg. He requested his wife to get rid of Garrett.

Caroline Jophta, a coloured servant in the employ of Mrs. Bennett, spoke to the intimate relations between the defendant and Mr. Garrett at the house kept by the defendant.

Corroborative evidence was given by another coloured girl.

This closed the evidence.

Mr. Alexander moved for custody of the two girls. Replying to the Chief Justice, counsel said that the defendant was keeping a boarding-house in the Gardens. His learned friend did not object to the retention by the defendant of the two girls.

Mr. De Villiers said the defendant was quite prepared to pay £6 a month for the maintenance of the children. He did not ask for any order as to costs.

The Court granted a decree of divorce, plaintiff to have custody of the two sons of the marriage, and the defendant to have custody of the two daughters, so long as she should live a chaste and virtuous life, the plaintiff paying £6 per month in respect of the daughters until the daughters should have attained the ages respectively of 21 years, the parties to have access to the children at all reasonable times and places; no order as to costs.

APPEAL.

VERGOTINE V. CERES { 1901.
MUNICIPALITY. { Feb. 12th.

Voluntary payment—Protest—Duress of goods.

The plaintiff having under protest paid licence money demanded from him by the C. Municipality for the grazing of his cattle on municipal pasture land, sought to recover back the money so paid, but produced no evidence that the cattle would have been detained unless the money were paid, or that there was duress of any kind.

Held, that the payment must be regarded as voluntary and that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Ceres, in an action brought by the appellant against the Municipality to recover the sum of 10s., paid under protest by him for a licence to pasture certain ten head of cattle on the common lands. The Magistrate found for the defendant, and in his reasons for judgment, said that the plaintiff was not a resident householder of the Municipality, and that the Municipality had acted bona fide in making the charge for the licence. Mr. Close was for the appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Mr. Close said that the main point in this case was, had the Municipality powers to levy rates or grazing fees or licence fees, or whatever it might be called, in respect of commonage lands. There was no question that the plaintiff held a Municipal erf.

The appellant has occupied his small erf for about twenty years. The Magistrate seems to have distinguished between householders and erf-holders, and to have held that only the former had rights of pasturage. If the appellant was not a resident householder he would not have obtained a grazing licence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Section 26 of the regulations defines a resident householder, and the Magistrate held that the appellant was not one.]

By the mere fact of issuing a licence to him they are estopped from denying that he is a resident householder.

[De Villiers, C.J.: A resident householder does not require a licence.]

Oh, yes; see section 29 of the Municipal regulations.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Section 29 refers only to persons who are not resident householders.]

Section 27 does not allow persons who are not resident to be licensed at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the land is subject to the control of the Town Council, surely they can allow anybody to graze cattle there?]

There is nothing to show that the appellant does not occupy a house, and he pays £2 10s. a year for his erf.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He paid his licence voluntarily, and now he wants to recover the money, but how can he do that?]

When he paid this money he was in ignorance of his rights, and when he ascertained what those rights were he at once protested. And then he was, in a sense, under duress at the time he paid. He could not do without grazing, and therefore he paid: not unconditionally, but under protest—a genuine, bona fide protest.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He has continued to pay for three years.]

Yes, but he does not now seek to recover these payments, because they were out-and-out payments.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondents): I submit that the Magistrate's decision was quite correct. In the first place, the appellant cannot recover what he has paid. See George v. Kimberley Town Council (2 Lawrence, 231).

[De Villiers, C.J.: This point was fully discussed in the case of Cook Bros v. Colonial Government (12 S.C., 86.)

That case goes to show that there must be something in the nature of duress to entitle a man to recover money paid under protest.

In the next place, I submit that the Municipal regulations are quite ultra vires. Counsel for the appellant holds that the term "resident householder" is used in one sense in the Act and in another in the regulations. These regulations are framed under the Act, and there is nothing to show that the appellant is a registered householder. The onus is on him to prove that, and that onus has not been discharged. Hence he is not entitled under the 25th section of the regulations to graze cattle, and the only section under which he can have any right is the 29th. It appears from the regulations that every householder has the right to pasture a certain number of stock, and people who are not resident householders may pasture stock under licence. The appellant, having taken out a licence, is bound by its terms. The case of Langfield v. Whittlesea Board (4 C.T.R., 231) is not in point, because there the regulation was framed for the purpose of raising revenue, but here it was only for the purpose of protecting the pasture land.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that in this case the payment must be regarded as a voluntary payment. There was nothing in the nature of duress. If it had appeared that the Municipality would have detained the cattle unless the money were paid, and the plaintiff had then paid the money under protest, there would have been sufficient duress to entitle the plaintiff to recover the money. But there is nothing of the kind in the present case. For all the Court knows the plaintiff could have obtained his cattle without payment of the money, but he chose to pay it. No doubt at the time he paid the money he said that he reserved the right to recover the money back. But that is not enough to make the payment involuntary. As to the effect of such a payment, I adhere to the views expressed in White v. Treasurer-General (2 Juta, 322), which it is unnecessary to repeat. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte THE CREDITORS (1904.
OF PENKIN. (Feb. 12th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the sequestrated estate of Levy Penkin on the petition of the two largest creditors, the S.A. Milling Company and the City Flour Milling Company, to whom the estate was indebted to the amounts of £994 18s. 9d. and £220 5s. respectively. The estate consisted of certain perishables, and there were several orders to be executed.

Order granted. Mr. John Edmund Paul Close to be provisional trustee.

LIQUIDATOR OF BROMLEY (1904.
AND CO. V. SHENKER. (Feb. 12th.

Companies Act—Voluntary winding up—Attachment—Interdict.

After the respondent had obtained judgment against a company, a resolution was duly passed and advertised for the voluntary winding up of the company. Notwithstanding such winding up, the respondent claimed the right to attach property of the company in execution of the judgment.

Held, that the Court had the power under the 186th section of the Companies Act, 1892, to restrain such attachment.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order calling on the respondent to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining him from taking further proceedings in a certain suit, in which he had obtained judgment against the company in the Magistrate's Court. The petition was supported by the affidavit of the applicant, which set out that on the 23rd December last at a meeting of the shareholders it was resolved that the company should be voluntarily wound up. This was confirmed at a further meeting on the 4th January, and on the 7th January the respondent obtained a judgment against the company for the sum of £10 3s. 11d., and thereupon a writ was issued, and, as a result, the messenger of the Court, attached certain goods. In consequence of the action of the respondent, the company would become liable for a certain amount of unnecessary legal expense, and the interests of the creditors would be seriously injured.

Mr. Close, for the respondent, read the affidavit of Mr. De Kock, a clerk in the office of the respondent's attorneys, which set out that the claim of a certain firm for the goods was ultimately agreed to.

De Villiers, C. J.: The company in question has been voluntarily wound up, and it has not been suggested to the Court that the winding up has been otherwise than in good faith. If there had been any proof that the winding up was for the purpose of defeating the creditors different considerations would have arisen, but for the purposes of the present case, the Court must assume it to be a bona fide winding up, and that the liquidators have been honest in the performance of their duty. The first consequence to ensue from the voluntary winding up of a company is that the property of the company shall be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities in the legal order of their preference, and subject thereto shall, unless it be otherwise provided by the regulations of the company be distributed amongst the members according to their rights and interests in the company. I can quite understand that supposing, before the winding up took place there had been an attachment of property belonging to the company the creditor could object to his pignus practorium being defeated by the voluntary winding up. That point, however, does not arise in the present case, because although there has been an attachment the goods so attached have been claimed by third parties, and have been given up to those third parties. The question which now arises is whether the applicant is entitled to an order restraining any future attachment in respect of the judgment already obtained. If the respondents had at once said to the applicant that they would surrender all their rights under their judgment, and that they would undertake to have no further attachment, we should have heard no more about the case, but the respondents led the applicants to believe that they insisted upon their rights to attach more goods. Consequently it became necessary for the applicant to come into court to restrain any further attachment of goods. The 186th section of the Act gives very large powers to the Court, and these powers should be liberally construed for the purpose of enabling the Court to give effect to the different sections of this Act. If creditors were to be allowed to continue to bring actions, and to issue attachments against the property of a company, which has been voluntarily wound up, the first part of section 182 would be wholly ineffectual. It would be wholly impossible for the liquidators to apply the property of the company in satisfaction of its liabilities in the legal order of their preference, or to distribute the property amongst the members. In order, therefore, to enable the liquidators to perform their duty under section 182, it appears to me the Court is quite justified in construing section 186 as large enough to enable the Court to restrain any such attachment as was contemplated. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order prayed for should be granted, with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred
 [Appellant's Attorneys: Herold and Gie; Respondent's Attorneys: Faure and Zietsman.]

KELLER V. STEYN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Russell moved for an order for payment of costs of an application made in this court for ejectment and trespass. The Court granted a rule nisi, and afterwards made it absolute, but gave no direction as to costs.

De Villiers, C.J., said that an order would be granted as prayed, in respect to the application; but there would be no order in regard to the present application.

SPANGENBERG V. SPANGENBERG.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said that this was the return day of a rule nisi for leave to the plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis. There had been service of the rule, and counsel now asked that the rule be made absolute.

Rule made absolute, Mr. De Villiers consenting to act as counsel in the matter.

KALK BAY MUNICIPALITY V. JOSEPH

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for an order requiring the respondent, Mrs. Joseph, wife of Henry Walter Joseph, of Cape Town, to remove a certain fence, and for an interdict restraining her from encroaching upon a certain public road known as Hillside-road, at Muizenberg. Counsel produced affidavit of service upon the respondent and her husband. No appearance was entered for the defendant.

An affidavit by the Mayor of the Kalk Bay Municipality stated that the respondent was the owner of a certain plot bordering on the Hillside-road, Muizenberg. On the 8th March last a galvanised iron fence was erected on the property, which encroached 12 feet on the public road. Respondent had been given notice to remove the fence, but without effect.

[Hopley, J.: What seems to have happened is, that these people have enlarged their backyards at the expense of the road.]

Mr. De Villiers: Quite so, my lord.
 De Villiers, C.J.: There is no appearance on behalf of the respondent, and we must therefore take it that the facts are admitted, that there is this encroachment on the road, and the respondent must therefore be ordered within 14 days to remove the fence as prayed, failing which, the Court will authorise the applicant to remove the same, the respondent to pay the costs.

Ex parte BERNING AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the petitioners, who were the only unmarried daughters of the late Hannah M. Berning, for leave to sell certain property at Worcester. The property was bequeathed by the deceased lady to her daughters, and was now registered in their names, three of the daughters being married. All the daughters, married and single, consented to the application. The petitioners said that they desired to sell part of the property, but to retain the house occupied by them as unmarried daughters, in terms of the will. They were informed that, in view of the high prices now realised by landed property in Worcester, they could obtain a price for it which, if invested, would yield a much larger income than was derived from the present rent. They proposed to invest the proceeds at first mortgage on landed property. The Master, in his report, expressed his opinion that the proposal was contrary to the terms of the will, but counsel submitted that the provisions of the will would not be violated. Under the will, the property was left to the unmarried daughters, to be occupied by them until their marriage, in which case the property was to be sold by public auction for the benefit of all the daughters. The land proposed to be sold was vacant, and practically produced very little income.

De Villiers, C.J.: An order will be granted authorising the sale, it being understood that the interest must be paid to the unmarried daughters, the sale and mortgage to be to the satisfaction of the Master of the Supreme Court.

Ex parte ELTON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a further order authorising the sale of certain property at Port Elizabeth for £400, instead of £500, as set out in the original order. The parties had been unable to obtain the original figure, and they now asked for leave to sell the property for £400, and pay the costs of the application out of the proceeds.

Order granted as prayed.

GRAAMANS BROS. V. RENARD.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order setting aside the rule nisi made absolute on the 16th November last, applied for by the respondent, whereby certain eleven cases of motors and cycles, the property of the applicants, now lying at Port Elizabeth, were interdicted, the ground of the application being that service of the notice of the proceeding was irregular.

No appearance was entered for the respondent, Jacques Renard.

The affidavit of Marius Gosinius Hendrik Graamaus, of Johannesburg, set out on the 18th October, 1903, the respondent purchased from Van der Laun and Co., of Rotterdam, eleven packages of goods, to be consigned to him by the S.S. Mashona. The conditions were that the respondent should pay for the goods on the afternoon of the day of purchase. The respondent failed to pay for the goods, and they were bought by applicants for the sum of £189 3s. 6d. The consignor instructed the shippers to cable to Messrs. Bucknall Bros. not to deliver the goods in Cape Town to the respondent, but to tranship them to Port Elizabeth for delivery to the applicants' agents. On the 11th November, the respondent obtained an interdict, restraining Bucknall Bros. from delivering the packages to the applicants' firm. On the 14th December, 1903, deponent received a letter from his agents informing his firm of the rule nisi having been granted, and it was not until the 31st December that formal notice of the proceedings came to the notice of the firm. Other goods, to the value of £81 10s., had also been interdicted, but there was no mention of these in the respondents' petition. Since the rule nisi had been made absolute, the respondent had admitted he had no right to the goods by offering to pay the sum of £133 8s. 8d., which had been refused.

Order granted as prayed, with costs of this application.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

ADAM V. ADAM.

This was an action for divorce, instituted by the wife against the husband, on the ground of misconduct.

Mr. Sutton appeared for the plaintiff, the defendant appeared in person.

Maria Adams, the plaintiff, deposed that she was married to the defendant in August, 1881, at Kimberley, in community of property. They lived there for some 15 years, but their relations were unhappy, owing to defendant's fondness for drink, and his intimacy with other women. She ultimately left him, with his consent, and went to Johannesburg, subsequently to Kronstadt, where she worked as a cook. She came to Cape Town in 1902. About three months ago the defendant came to her house at West London. Up to that time she thought her husband was dead. He told her he wanted her to give him a divorce, as he was married to a woman named Dora. She found that he was living at Helliger-road in a house with Dora. There were children there. Dora admitted she was defendant's "wife."

In answer to the defendant, the witness denied that she ever lived with a man named Black Tom for four years subsequent to 1895. She rented a house from Black Tom, and got a living by keeping a coffee shop. Tom lived in the same house. She did not take any money or a wagon away with her.

By the Court: She wanted to keep the property now in her possession; it was all hers. When she left Adam, he had a good deal of property.

Sophia Abrahams, defendant's daughter, said defendant came to her house in January last, with Dora and five young children, whom he said were his.

The defendant admitted that he was living with Dora, and had had children by her. He alleged that the plaintiff had been living with another man. "If his wife would not divide the property, he would not give her a divorce."

Hopley, J.: In this case there is nothing on the defendant's plea, which was drawn by an advocate of this Court, alleging any improper conduct on the part of the plaintiff, nor is there any allegation that she has obtained the small property she is now possessed of by means of capital which she unjustly possessed herself of at the time she left the defendant. It appears that many years ago, these people, who were not getting on well together, parted. Defendant says in a loose way in Court that his wife went away with another man, and he apparently throws out the allegation that she was living in adultery with this man, Black Tom. But that should have been specially pleaded, and I cannot help thinking that this is an after-thought which comes to him, because if he had told his counsel of this, counsel must have pleaded it, and it would have been a complete defence to the action. I cannot, therefore, have my mind influenced by these allegations. With regard to the money said to have been taken away, I may say that defendant does not seem to be the sort of man who would sit still and see a theft of his property. He would, at all events, have been able to claim half of it, by virtue of the marriage in community. For all these years he has been lying quite still about this, and now he suddenly comes into Court, and lays claim to something on this ground. He himself admits he cares nothing about the woman. All he wants is to get a portion of the property, which, by her own industry, it seems to me, the plaintiff has gained. He admits that he has been and is still living in adultery with this woman Dora. He must have been living with her for some years, treating her as a wife, and having children by her, and he says he is now perfectly prepared to desert this woman and the children and to go back to the plaintiff, practically for the reason that he thinks he will be able to get hold of some of her property. That is an absurd position to take up, and one which, of course, cannot be acceded to. A decree of divorce will be granted; defendant will be declared to have forfeited all benefits arising out of the marriage in community. He must also pay the costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir J. BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

EATON V. EATON. } 1904.
 } Feb. 15th.

This was an action brought by Isaac Philip Eaton, gardener, Mowbray, against his wife for divorce, on the ground of adultery.

The declaration set forth that the parties were married in community of property at St. Paul's, Rondebosch, in 1891, that there were three children of the marriage, and that the defendant had deserted the plaintiff and gone to live with one Window, with whom she had committed adultery on divers dates. Plaintiff prayed for a divorce, for custody of the three minor children of the marriage, and for the defendant to be declared to have forfeited all the benefits of the marriage in community.

The defendant in her plea admitted paragraphs 1 and 2 as to the names of the parties and the marriage, but denied the allegations in the subsequent paragraphs.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for plaintiff; Mr. S. Williams for defendant.

Mr. Williams applied for an order against the plaintiff for payment of £20 security for the costs of the defence.

The Court held that the case was now ripe for trial and must be proceeded with.

Isaac Philip Eaton, plaintiff, said he was a gardener at Wheatfields, Mowbray. The children born of the marriage were respectively in their twelfth, sixth, and fifth years. They were all living with the defendant. Witness and his wife first kept a boarding-house and shop in the Main-road at Rondebosch. His mother-in-law lived on the premises. A man named Window came and visited his house as a friend. Witness had occasion to tell defendant that his mother-in-law had informed him that Window had been sitting on her lap, and that after witness went to his work Window went to her room. His wife left him on September 22, 1899. Window denied that he had been sitting on his (witness's) wife's lap. He told Window that he must clear out of the place. His wife said that she would go as well if Window had to go. On returning to his home one night he found that half his furniture had been removed. On the following morning he locked up the place, but, on going there in the evening, he found that a window had been broken and that the rest of the furniture had been taken away. His wife went away and lived first with her mother and Window, and afterwards at a house in Woodstock with Window. His wife and Window were keeping a boarding-house in Norfolk-street.

Cross-examined by Mr. Williams: He had not beaten his wife. He knew a man named Alfred Taylor (his wife's brother). He did not know that Taylor had remonstrated with him for beating her; Taylor was always interfering between witness and his wife. He had not bought an action previously because he had been without means. He was now head gardener for Mr. P. J. Marais.

Catherine Rosa Dan, a midwife, said she attended the wife of the plaintiff in 1901 at 3, Sussex-street, Woodstock. She was known to witness as Mrs. Window. Mr. Window called in witness. The defendant and Window were now keeping a boarding-house. Witness attended the defendant for a second child just before last Christmas.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Evelyn Eaton, the defendant, said she left the plaintiff in August, 1899, on account of his ill-treatment.

The Court pointed out to counsel that there was no allegation of that kind in the plea, and evidence, therefore, could not be led on the point.

Witness, replying to the Court, said she admitted the adultery, but she declared that the plaintiff had neglected to support her and the children during all the time. Replying to Mr. Buchanan, she said that plaintiff now had access to the children; she sent them to the day and Sunday-school.

Alfred Taylor, brother of the defendant, said that the plaintiff ill-treated the defendant. He had flogged her on several occasions, and had also chased her out of the house while she only had on her nightgown. Witness had been living with his sister until he got married recently.

The plaintiff (recalled by the Court) said he desired to have all the three children in his custody. He should be prepared to obtain places for them in a home.

The Court granted a decree of divorce, and gave the plaintiff custody of the children, ordering the defendant to deliver them to him by the end of the month, and giving her right of access to them at all reasonable times and places.

HYMAN V. HYMAN.

This was an action for divorce, brought by Abram Hyman, of Cape Town, against his wife, on the ground of her malicious desertion and of adultery with divers persons unknown to the plaintiff.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, who appeared for the plaintiff, said that the Court had granted leave to sue by edictal citation. The defendant was in default, but personal service had been effected upon her at Delagoa Bay.

Abram Hyman, the plaintiff, said that he had lived in Cape Town for three years. He was married to the defendant before a J.P. in New Jersey, America, in 1890. After marriage, they lived in New York. Four years later, in 1894, his wife left him without making any statement to him. He found subsequently that she was living in a house of ill-fame at Buenos Ayres. He had several times seen her soliciting in the streets there. He offered her a home, but she refused. He remained in Buenos Ayres for five months, and then returned to New York. When he married the defendant she was a poor servant girl. He had obtained information to the effect that she was now living in Delagoa Bay. The property that he had now was entirely his own, and no part belonged to the defendant.

Harry Jonklovitz, a tailor, now of Cape Town, said he had known the defendant in Buenos Ayres. He saw the defendant with a man named Callas in Buenos Ayres, with whom she was living as his wife. She next lived in a disorderly house, a little way from the place where she lived with Callas. She went to England, and afterwards came out to South Africa with Callas.

A decree of divorce was granted, with no order as to the property.

KOENIG V. LANDESHUT. { 1904.
Feb. 15th.
" 16th.

Copyright—Plays—Award of arbitrators—Res judicata—Partnership.

This was an action brought by Julius Koenig, general merchant, Cape Town, against Alice Landeshut, theatrical proprietress, late of Australia. The matter arose out of the South African tour of Hall's Australian Juveniles, a company which was recently dispersed after an unfortunate split, and the plaintiff claimed from Mrs. Landeshut a sum of £1,260, or, in the alternative, an account of the alleged partnership.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a general merchant, carrying on business in Cape Town. The defendant is a theatrical proprietress, lately residing in Cape Town, but at present in Australia, and represented in this action by her attorneys, Messrs. Van Zyl and Buisinne, who hold the defendant's general power of attorney, dated February 1, 1902.

2. The plaintiff is and was at the dates hereinafter referred to, by lawful assignments, entitled to the sole and exclusive right of representation and performance in South Africa of the following plays, to wit, "The Girl From Up There," "The Gay Grisette," "The New Barmaid," "Morocco Bound," "An American Beauty," "The Transit of Venus," and the "Dandy Fifth."

3. The defendant has staged and performed the said plays at various places from the 20th July, 1902, up to and including the 29th November, 1902, as will more fully appear by reference to the annexed statement and accounts, which have been duly stated and rendered to the defendant.

4. The plaintiff notified to the defendant that he would require payment of the sum of £15 15s. for each and every performance of any of the said plays. The defendant did not agree to pay the said sum, but from time to time staged and performed the said plays as aforesaid.

5. The defendant is liable to the plaintiff in the sum of £15 15s. for each and every performance of any of the said plays, which amount is a fair and reasonable remuneration to the plaintiff by reason of the premises.

6. The defendant is by reason of the premises indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £1,260, as will more fully appear from the statement and accounts aforesaid.

7. All things have happened, all conditions have been performed, and all times have elapsed and passed, necessary to entitle the plaintiff to claim, and he has claimed payment of the said sum from the defendant, but the defendant has refused and still refuses to pay the said sum or any part thereof.

8. In the alternative to paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 7, and in case this Honourable Court does not grant judgment in terms thereof, but not otherwise, the plaintiff says that he has not authorised the defendant to stage and perform the said plays or any of them as aforesaid, for her own account and benefit, and by reason of the premises the defendant is bound to render to him a true and correct account of all moneys by her received from the public attending the performance of any of the said plays, to debate such account, and to pay to him the profits of every such performance.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) Judgment in the sum of £1,260 sterling with interest a tempore morae, or in the alternative an order compelling the defendant to render forthwith a true and correct account of all moneys received from the public attending the performance of any of the said plays, and to debate such account with the plaintiff, and judgment for the amount of profits found after debate to have resulted from every such performance. (b) Alternative relief. (c) Costs of suit.

For a plea to the declaration the defendant pleaded as follows:

1. Paragraph 1 is admitted.

2. On or about the 24th day of January, 1900, the plaintiff entered into a written agreement with the defendant and one Harry Hill, jointly. A copy of the said agreement is hereunto annexed marked A, and the plaintiff craves leave to refer to the terms thereof as if inserted herein.

3. By the said agreement it was inter alia provided that in consideration of a certain advance therein set forth to be made by the plaintiff to the defendant jointly with the said Harry Hall for the purpose of financing the defendant, and the said Harry Hall in a certain joint theatrical enterprise known as "Hall's Australian Juveniles," the plaintiff should become entitled to and receive 20 per cent. of the net profits of the said joint enterprise from and after the date upon which the said advance should be repaid until the expiration of a period of two years from the said date.

4. The said advance was made, and was duly repaid on the 21st day of July, 1900.

5. Thereafter, in or about the month of October, 1900, and during the existence of the said agreement, the plaintiff, who was then about to proceed to England and America upon his own business, agreed, in consideration of the premises and for other and valuable consideration, to purchase out of the funds of the said joint venture, and acquire for and on behalf of the defendant and the said Harry Hall, jointly in their said enterprise and for the purposes and benefit thereof, the sole and exclusive rights of representation and performance in South Africa of sufficient and suitable plays for the said purposes.

6. The defendant and the said Harry Hall thereupon furnished the plaintiff with letters of introduction to certain theatrical agents and proprietors of the said rights, and supplied him with valuable information, for the purpose of enabling him to carry out the said undertaking, and the plaintiff received under the said agreement and for the said purposes the sum of £1,500 sterling from the funds of the said joint enterprise.

7. Thereafter the plaintiff proceeded to England and America, and made use of the said letters and information, and there purchased the sole and exclusive right of representation and performance in South Africa of certain plays, including the plays set out in paragraph 2; but the plaintiff wrongfully, unlawfully, and in breach of his duty under the said agreement, and without the knowledge and consent of the defendant or the said Harry Hall, obtained assignments thereof, in his own name, which are the assignments referred to in the said paragraph.

8. Thereafter, on or about the 2nd day of April, 1901, the partnership which had theretofore at all times material subsisted between the defendant and the said Harry Hall was dissolved by mutual consent, and the defendant thereupon became entitled to all the right, title, and interest of the said Harry Hall in and to the said joint enterprise.

9. The defendant admits that she has staged and performed the said plays set forth in paragraph 2, as alleged in paragraph 3, and also admits the allegations in paragraph 4.

10. Save as above, the defendant denies all the allegations contained in paragraphs 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

11. By reason of the premises, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim from the defendant in respect of the said performance more than the sum for which plaintiff is himself liable in respect thereof as assignee of the said rights, namely, the sum of £295 7s., which said sum the defendant has always been ready and willing and now tenders to pay to the plaintiff, together with taxed costs to date.

Wherefore, subject to the above tender, the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, said, with regard to that portion of the plea dealing with the playing rights, these rights were dealt with in the arbitrator's award.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Alexander) for plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendant.

Mr. Searle said that the action was to recover £1,260, being in respect of certain contracts made for rights of plays which the plaintiff alleged were his property, or, in the alternative, for, an account of the moneys received from the public in the performances of those plays during certain dates, when it was admitted that the plays were performed, and to pay to the plaintiff such amount of the profits as was found to be due to him. Koenig and Landeshut were connected with theatrical performances during a certain period. Koenig came in originally by advancing a certain sum of money to Mrs. Landeshut and her partner, Mr. Hall. The first agreement was in January, 1900, when he advanced £700 to Mrs. Landeshut and to Hall, on certain conditions set out in an agreement, the main conditions being that this sum was to be repaid from time to time as they could repay it, and that from the date when the £700 was to be repaid and for two years afterwards he was to get a certain percentage of the profits of the company. The amount was actually repaid in July, 1900, and from that date for two years onward Koenig was entitled to a certain percentage (20 per cent, originally) of all the profits of the company. Then, in April, 1901, Hall having in the meantime dissolved partnership with Mrs. Landeshut, Mrs. Landeshut carrying on, Mrs. Landeshut and Koenig entered into a further agreement whereunder the percentage was increased to 30 and a certain remuneration, £50 a month from a certain date, was to be given to Koenig. In July, 1902, the agreement came to an end, and thus the claim was from the 19th July, 1902, to the 29th November, 1902. There were a number of disputes between Mrs. Landeshut and Koenig arising partly in the year 1901, but more particularly in 1902, and in April, 1902, a deed of submission was entered into between the parties in favour of Mr. Nash. Great delay ensued in bringing the disputes before Mr. Nash, and the arbitration actually commenced in September, 1902, and continued until December, 1902, when Mr. Nash made his award in the matter. It was admitted that he had not to deal with the question raised in the present case, because the deed of submission was signed long before. Their (the plaintiff's) position was that

Mr. Nash, whose award must be put in and read, decided in the award that these plays belonged to Koenig, and they (plaintiff) said that that concluded the matter. The defendant denied that. The plaintiff had taken up the position throughout that the award decided the matter as to the ownership of the plays. The question of the particular remuneration was not before Mr. Nash, because he only dealt with the accounts of the parties up to the date of the deed of submission. The first question was as to the ownership of these plays. The plaintiff said that the plays were his, and, if not, then he said that he was a partner with Mrs. Landeshut in these plays, and that he was entitled to an account of the money she had made by producing the plays, and to an equal share of the profits of the performances. If it should be held that the agreement terminated, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to the same percentage as before, then he should be entitled to only 20 per cent. The plaintiff said that originally the playing rights were his, and that he was entitled to make the charge he had made. After a certain date, the defendant disputed his rights. There was no dispute between them as to the profits made. The plaintiff said that he was the sole owner of the playing rights, and that he was entitled to fifteen guineas for each performance, but if it were a partnership affair, then the defendant must account to the plaintiff for the profits she had made out of staging these plays, and pay over the proportion of profit to which the plaintiff was entitled. The plaintiff rendered services up to July, 1902, but after that date, he rendered no services. He claimed a sum of £1,260, but at 30 per cent, it would probably be found that the plaintiff was entitled to more than that sum.

Mr. Upington (interposing) said that the books of Hall's Juveniles, which formed the joint venture referred to, were out of the country. They had made every effort to obtain the books, but without success.

Mr. Searle said that Mrs. Landeshut, in her evidence, stated that the books were at the office of Mr. Nash, and that they would be produced at the trial.

Mr. Upington said that, while defendant disputed that Koenig was the owner of these assignments, she also took up the defence that he was her agent in acquiring these playing rights, that in undertaking the assignments in his own name he committed a breach of trust, and that therefore he could not make any profit out of these plays. He (Mr. Upington) only mentioned this as a good defence, and not to show that defendant claimed the assignments.

Mr. Upington called George Herbert Smith, partner in the theatrical firm of Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler, who said he had had about four years' experience off and on in theatrical management in South Africa. He had seen four of the seven plays now in question, and knew the others. A charge of 15 guineas per night for any of these plays was absurd. He considered that a fair charge for performing any of these plays was £3 per performance in the two principal towns, Johannesburg and Cape Town; £2 for Durban and Pretoria; and £1 for the smaller towns. A juvenile company would probably be charged less.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Occasionally in London 10 per cent. of the gross receipts were taken for the playing rights. Witness's firm had never paid 10 per cent., nor had they paid higher than £5 a performance. Mr. George Edwardes was a partner in witness's firm, and there was a special arrangement with him as to the Gaiety pieces produced out here.

By the Court: Quite the highest charge would be £5 a night for the two biggest towns in South Africa, and £3 for the other towns, £3 would be fair; £5 would be liberal.

Mr. Searle read the award and notes of the arbitrator under the deed of submission, and contended that by this award the question of the ownership of the rights of the plays was determined in the plaintiff's favour.

Buchanan, J., said that before deciding this the Court would hear the evidence adduced on commission.

Mr. Searle read the evidence, given on commission, of Julius Koenig, the plaintiff, who deposed that after the agreement of partnership was entered into he went, in October, 1900, to England on certain private business. He arranged with Mrs. Landeshut (then Mrs. McKirby) to acquire certain playing rights, of which a list was given him. This list did not comprise the plays now in suit. Before he left it was arranged that he should be paid £60 a month extra, and it was understood that a letter embodying this agreement would be despatched after he sailed. Instead of this being done, a letter was forwarded to him by defendant, stating that she had understood the arrangement to be that a man should be engaged here to look after the affairs of the company during his absence in England. In the course of further evidence the plaintiff said that he obtained from Mr. Musgrove's representative the playing rights of "The Belle of New York." Certain fees were remitted from time to time by Mrs. McKirby at the rate of five guineas for each performance. Under the agreement of the 24th January, 1900, he banked £850 in his own name to form the capital account of the company. He kept a separate account until the capital was paid up. After the capital was paid up, he kept a separate account for the company. When he went to Europe he took £3,000—£1,500 of his private money and £1,500 of the firm's account. His travelling expenses were about £1,000. In connection with the power granted to one Wilkinson, on behalf of the Australian Juveniles in London, he expended about £516 18s. 6d. He brought back from Europe money belonging to his private account to the amount of £1,092. He paid £385 17s. 6d. for the playing rights out of the firm's money. He did not refer to the company when he spoke of "the firm." He arrived in England in October, 1900, and returned from Europe in March, 1901, and saw Mrs. McKirby. He told her the terms upon which he would be prepared to let the playing rights to her. She agreed to the terms. In April, 1901, he sent her an account for (1) playing licences, (2) sundry expenses, (3) advances to Hall. Witness charged £30 for the playing rights of the "New Barmaid," which he had acquired outright. His charges were based on actual cost. It was understood that he should receive towards travelling expenses at the conclusion of his interest in the company an allowance of £300. Mrs. Landeshut did not object to the terms. In cross-examination he admitted that he had had no previous experience in theatrical enterprise. He had practically sole charge of the commercial management of the venture. It if had not been for his financial interest in Hall's Juveniles, he should not have sought the playing rights.

Mr. Upton read the evidence taken on commission on behalf of the defendant.

Frank Wheeler said that he was a theatrical manager, carrying on business in South Africa. He remembered the plaintiff meeting him on one occasion at Mr. Wilkinson's office in London in 1900. They had an interview in regard to certain playing rights. The impression that he gathered from the interview was that the plaintiff was going to America, and that he was wishful to do Hall's Juveniles a good turn in regard to securing them certain playing rights. As to the terms charged by the plaintiff in his account, witness had never paid more than three guineas for the right to produce any play in this country. There was one exception, when they paid five guineas for the playing rights of the "Casino Girl." That price was quite exceptional. The charge for most plays in South Africa of the class, for instance, of "Florodora," "San Toy," and so forth, was 30s. a night. With regard to the charge of fifteen guineas made for one of the plays, he would not have the play at all. He had never heard before of such a charge being made for the playing rights of a piece in South Africa. He considered that, generally speaking, the amounts offered in the defendant's tender were quite reasonable. He fancied that Collins and Wilkinson were trying to make a little money out of the plaintiff. Only a few of the plays which plaintiff mentioned had been a success. Witness paid 30s. a night for the playing rights of Gaiety plays. He had an arrangement with Mr. George Edwardes for his Gaiety pieces. He also paid Mr. Edwardes a certain percentage of the profits; but Mr. Edwardes allowed him to use his name, and also arranged the matter of the wardrobe.

Miss May Pollard deposed that she formerly played in the "Belle of New York" with Mr. Musgrove. In 1899 she left London with her brother to play in the "Belle of New York" and "The Geisha" in South Africa. Mrs. McKirby was her sister. When the plaintiff expressed his intention of going to Europe he offered on behalf of the company to attend to the matter of getting new plays for the company in London. When Mrs. McKirby was in South Africa she was married; but she subsequently obtained a divorce from her husband in Victoria.

E. H. Collins, formerly manager for Geo. Musgrove, deposed that he was waited upon in London by the plaintiff, who had a letter of introduction from Miss May Pollard. He was asked to assist the plaintiff to secure the rights of production in South Africa of several plays. Witness spoke to introducing the plaintiff to several of the proprietors, from whom Koenig obtained rights of production in South Africa. Witness added that the plaintiff told him that he had a big financial interest in the company, and he understood that the plays were obtained for the benefit of Hall's Juveniles. He knew of no set being made against Hall's Juveniles in London. He advised the plaintiff to take the rights in his own name, so that he should protect his own financial interests. Hall's Juveniles could have secured the plays in their own names, if they had paid the fees and guaranteed future fees. He did not think any one in London would have assigned the plays to Hall's Juveniles. He did not think any one in London knew the combination.

Mr. Wilkinson, solicitor, of London, deposed that he acted as plaintiff's attorney in acquiring certain playing rights. Plaintiff told him he was financing Hall's Australian Juveniles.

Mrs. McKirby, in her evidence on commission, said that plaintiff took with him to England £1,500 of the company's funds, which she understood were to be spent in acquiring playing rights and various stage properties. She had no idea that plaintiff was going to buy playing rights on his own account. When Koenig returned to Cape Town in March, 1901, he did not tell her that the arrangement for the purchase of the playing rights was to be revoked, or that the arrangements were in his name. She gave Koenig, before he left, letters of introduction and information to enable him to acquire playing rights.

Postea (February 16).

Mr. Searle, K.C.: It is quite clear that the plaintiff is entitled to an account in any case.

[Hopley, J.: What for?]

To ascertain the sum to which we are entitled. Mrs. Landeschut undertook to produce her books at the trial, so she cannot now say that she is unable to produce books as they are in Australia. An undertaking was given to produce the books in order to show how these large profits were made.

[Buchanan, J.: The whole question is, are you entitled to an interest in these plays or not?]

Yes; and the defendant, in her letter of August 20, admits that we have a share in these plays.

[Buchanan, J.: Did a partnership ever exist?]

[Hopley, J.: Or is it not merely a question of a loan? When did they secure this loan?]

Long after the £700 was paid off. If the transaction between the parties was not a partnership, it was at all events a joint venture. Plaintiff spent large sums of money in order to obtain these rights, and there is nothing to show that he ever got back any of the money. He undertook to produce his books.

[Mr. Uppington: No, he volunteered to do so.]

Well, yes, he volunteered. Both the parties hold this to have been a joint venture, and the plaintiff, in his letter of July 28, actually speaks of Mrs. Landeschut as his partner. Surely that is good evidence to show that Mrs. Landeschut considered that Koenig had an interest in the business. Then again, there is the letter of July 28, from which it is evident that the plaintiff made the whole concern.

Then as the letters of November 15 and January 1 show, the rights in these plays were assignable. To be sure, in the case of one play, there is a prohibition against assignment: but that was not so in the case of the other plays.

The arbitrator found that Koenig obtained the plays for himself, otherwise why had he disallowed the sum of £300 odd travelling expenses? The arbitrator put in these remarks to show why he had disallowed those expenses. If the award was interpreted in any other way, then it was senseless.

[Hopley, J.: It is unfortunate that Koenig, if he did not want to play a fair game with these people when he got home, should not have said outright that he had determined to secure these plays for himself. The whole thing was wrung out of the documents by means of innuendo and suggestion.]

A month after the agreement as to the 30 per cent. of the profits had terminated, a letter was written to the plaintiff acknowledging that he was a partner with regard to the plays. Surely it was not sufficient that one of the partners should be paid merely the charges that he had to pay to the owners of the plays, while the other partner took all the profits.

[Hopley, J. (interposing), said he did not think that the profits were entirely due to the plays which were staged. He supposed that the company would have drawn good houses as juveniles, whatever the plays had been.]

The juveniles performed these plays, and they must have some means of attraction. The position taken up by the defendant in the plea was that, although the plaintiff should go on remitting the fees to the owners of the plays, he was not entitled to share in the profits of the performances. It is very difficult indeed to understand the tender of the defendant (£285 7s.). In some cases it was based upon the fees the plaintiff had to pay to the owners, and in other cases it was not. For example, the defendant offered five guineas for the performing rights of "The New Barmid." As a matter of fact, he (plaintiff) had acquired that play outright. The defendant said that the plaintiff's interest ceased in July, 1902, and yet the company went on performing these plays of the plaintiff's, and never obtained an assignment from him, while he was liable to the owners all the time for the playing fees.

[Hopley, J., observed that it was quite evident that somebody was the lamb was getting fleeced, but he did not know exactly who. The plaintiff was getting £50 a month remuneration, and 20 or 30 per cent. of the profits that remained, and yet he had no risk. It seemed to him that except for his name and the little business acumen he brought to bear, the plaintiff had very little work to do.]

It does not seem to affect the question whether the plaintiff did much or little work, though the letters show that Koenig did an enormous amount of work for the company, as had been acknowledged by Mrs. Landeshut herself. We have now to consider the legal principles at issue. The whole point is whether the plaintiff has or has not an interest in the plays set out in the declaration? If he has, as I submit he has, then the declaration is sufficient to cover his claim. Any assets acquired in the course of the agreement should be divided when the agreement terminated, and if the arbitrator decided that the assets belonged to the company, that will mean Koenig and Mrs. Landeshut. The plaintiff has spent considerable sums of money, and I submit that under the circumstances he had got some claim as having some interest in the plays. If the Court should consider that Koenig was not the sole owner, but that he had an interest, then the plaintiff is entitled to an account, and it could then be determined what interest the plaintiff had.

Without calling upon Mr. Upington, Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff's declaration alleges that he was entitled to the sole and exclusive rights in certain plays as performed in South Africa for the period of six months named, and that during this period the defendant staged and performed these plays at certain places, and on certain dates between the 20th July and the 29th November, 1902, in infringement of plaintiff's rights. Plaintiff says that he had informed the defendant that he would require from defendant 15 guineas for each performance of any of these plays, that the plays have been performed a number of times, and that there is now due to him a sum of £1,200, for which he prays judgment, or, in the alternative, for the defendant to render a true and correct account of all moneys received for the performance of these plays, and pay him the profits gained by such performances. The defendant pleads that these plays were acquired through her own agency by the plaintiff on a visit to England, and were acquired by the plaintiff for the defendant and her then partner (Mr. Hall). She admits that for the performance of these plays during the dates mentioned in the declaration there were certain royalties payable to the assignee of the plays in England amounting to £259 7s., which amount she tenders with taxed costs up to date of plea. In his replication, the plaintiff alleges that the matters raised by the plea, viz., the right of the defendant to these plays, was fully dealt with in an arbitrator's award, which declared the plaintiff to be the sole owner of the plays. It will thus be seen from the pleadings that the question on which this case depends is whether the plaintiff or the defendant was the owner of these plays. With regard to the replication alleging that there has been a decision in favour of the plaintiff that the plays were his, I may say that it has been admitted that the reference to the arbitrator did not include a reference on the question of the ownership of the plays. The reference was only in regard to certain accounts in dispute between the parties. But it is said that the decision of the arbitrator on certain items in the accounts was in effect an award in favour of the plaintiffs. Now, I must say, on looking at the arbitration, I cannot find that the arbitration can in any way be set up as res judicata, on the question of the disputed ownership of the plays. The questions submitted to the arbitrator arose before this dispute arose between the parties as to their rights in these plays, and the award of the arbitrator makes no reference whatever to this question. It is true in the notes that the arbitrator has appended to his decision, which may be looked upon more or less as giving his reasons for certain decisions, he does refer to a charge of £300, which the plaintiff claimed from the defendant as travelling expenses on the occasion when these plays were secured. The arbitrator refuses to allow this sum of £300 on two grounds—one was that the plaintiff had taken these plays in his own name, instead of the name of the so-called partnership; and the other was that he had afterwards been remunerated for his services in this matter. But, as far as the decision of the arbitrator is concerned, it is plain and distinct against the plaintiff. He says: "I have decided that, although the playing rights are in Koenig's name, they were secured on behalf of the company by him." If, therefore, there is any res judicata in this matter, it is to the effect, that the plaintiff had no right in these plays. But to ascertain whether or not the plays belonged to the plaintiff or the defendant, we must look at the nature of the transaction between the parties. In January, 1900, the defendant (Mrs. Landeshut) and one Harry Hall, wished to start what is called the Hall's Australian Juveniles' Company, a company to be formed for the purpose of performing certain plays in South Africa. They were short of means, and they applied to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff entered into an agreement which has been annexed to the plea. By this agreement the plaintiff was to advance the sum of £700 for the purpose of enabling these persons to finance their undertaking. It is said that the plaintiff became a partner with the other two, but looking at the agreement, it is clear that no partnership in the true sense ever existed between Mrs. Landeshut and her partner Hall and the defendant; on the contrary, the plaintiff makes a certain advance, and takes security for the advance. For making this advance, plaintiff was to receive the gross takings of the company, and out of these takings he was to recoup himself for the money he had lent to the undertaking, plus interest and expenses. As an additional inducement to him to lend his money, it was agreed that as soon as the amount was repaid, for at least two years thereafter he should have 20 per cent. of the profits of the venture entered into by Hall and Landeshut. The agreement further goes on to state that Koenig was not to be liable in any way for any of the debts or engagements, but merely that he financed the venture to the extent of £700; it also provides that the whole of the assets were to be ceded to Koenig as security, and also that Landeshut and Hall and Company (that must mean the so-called Juveniles' Company) were to pass a bond in his favour as collateral security for the advance made. It was an advance made by the plaintiff, the security was given by the takings of the company, a general bond, a cession to him of all the assets of the company; and, as a further inducement, he was to take the 20 per cent. during the period of two years, should the company prove successful. Had there been a sequestration of Hall's Juveniles' Company, under this agreement it could not possibly have been said that Koenig was a partner. He would rather have stood in the position of a secured creditor, and would have come forward and claimed against the estate. The venture proved successful, and in July, six months after the agreement was entered into, the total amount advanced by Koenig was repaid to him, and the two years began to run from that date. Later on in that year Koenig also lent his assistance as a manager, looking after the commercial interests of the company, and for this work he received a sum of £20 a month. Towards the end of the year, the plaintiff being about to proceed to Europe on other business, it was further agreed that he should also secure additional members of the company, and secure rights of acting plays for the benefit of the company; and for this purpose he took with him moneys of the company. In England and America he obtained additional members for the company, and he also bought the right to perform certain plays. Some of these rights were bought out and out, while for others he secured the right to perform for a certain number of times, after which a royalty was to be paid for further performances. On his return to the country, and before disputes had arisen, Mrs. Landeshut had dissolved partnership with Hall, as appears from an agreement between them, to which plaintiff gave his assent, but was not otherwise a party. The defendant thus became sole proprietor of the company. She thereafter made an agreement with the plaintiff to give him £50 a month from the commencement of the two years from the 1st August, 1900, as an extra remuneration for his services, and also agreed to increase the percentage given to him during the running of the two years from the 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. Disputes arose between the parties in respect of their accounts, and these were referred to Mr. Nash. Among other things, the plaintiff claimed £300 travelling expenses. The arbitrator considered the plaintiff not entitled to this amount, and, although he expressly says that the plaintiff had bought these plays for the company, in the reasons he gives for disallowing the amount, there is some slight grounds for plaintiff's contention, as he gives as one ground for his decision on the item in dispute that the plaintiff took cession of the right in the plays in his own name. That is one of the reasons, but the arbitrator also gives another reason, namely, that the plaintiff was further remunerated by getting a monthly allowance of £50 and by having his percentage increased from 20 to 30 per cent. The plaintiff took cessions of the plays in his own name, but I am convinced from the evidence, and from the correspondence in this case, this was done for convenience sake only, and that the plaintiff never had any personal right to these plays at all. They were bought with the company's money, he charged the whole expense that they cost to the company, he was remunerated for his labour in obtaining these plays, and he had no claim whatever to them in any way. True, these plays, when obtained, caused greater success to the company during the remaining period of two years, but the plaintiff got the benefit of the extra profit. He has been most handsomely repaid for the £700 or £800 which he advanced. But that does not dispose of the question as to whether these plays did or did not belong to the plaintiff. I think from the evidence these plays were never intended to be bought for the plaintiff. His taking cession in his own name is a matter that the defendant might have complained of if she had chosen. She might have brought an action to compel him to cede the rights to her. But the present action is founded solely on the ground that these plays belonged to the plaintiff. On the evidence we cannot hold that the plays ever belonged to the plaintiff, and if the plays did not belong to the plaintiff the plaintiff's cause of action falls away entirely. The defendant, it is true, has tendered an amount, but has not tendered the amount on the grounds on which the plaintiff has brought his action. It was tendered in accordance with the statements contained in her plea. These statements amount to this, that after the agreement between the plaintiff and herself came to an end, and after the reference to Mr. Nash as arbitrator, she continued to perform these plays which had been bought for the company, and on each of the performances a certain amount of royalty was due to the persons who had ceded the plays to the plaintiff. As the plaintiff still continued to be personally liable for these amounts, she tendered this amount to the plaintiff with costs up to the filing of the plea. The evidence is not very clear as to the amount actually payable, but, as far as the evidence does go, the tender seems to be more than absolutely was necessary, and is certainly the full amount, if not in excess of the amount that the plaintiff would have to pay to the persons who ceded the playing rights. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff on the tender for £250 7s. with costs, to date of plea, but after that, the plaintiff must pay the subsequent costs of the action.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon.
Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

WRIGHT V. WRIGHT. { 1901.
{ Feb. 16th.

This was an action brought by Rose Mary Wright against her husband, Daniel Wright, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in Melbourne in December, 1895, and there had been one child of the marriage. Shortly after the marriage they came to this colony, with the intention of settling here. The defendant had a good position with the Cape Town Gas Company, but on the 12th October, 1901, he went to Melbourne in connection with a partnership in a produce business, which he was to establish there and return to South Africa. Since then he had sent his wife no money towards the maintenance of herself and child, and had wrongfully and maliciously deserted her. Plaintiff claimed an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, custody of the minor child, forfeiture of the benefits under marriage, and payment of £5 a month for the support of the child, together with the sum of £72, being the amount of debt incurred for maintenance during the defendant's absence.

Mr. Close for the plaintiff. Defendant in default.

Rose Mary Wright (plaintiff) said that within a day or two of the marriage her husband left for South Africa to find employment. About six months afterwards she joined him here, and they intended settling in the Colony. The defendant developed a bad temper, and finally she had temporarily to leave him and stay with a friend. The defendant left his position in the Gas Company, and entered into a partnership in a produce business with one Pickering

In consequence of the partnership agreement, her husband, in October, 1901, went to Australia to establish the business there, and promised to send money every month towards her support. He paid no attention to a request she sent to him for money, and the defendant had further written to her telling her to apply to his brother or his brother-in-law for money. The defendant's brother told her that the defendant had written telling him to give her no money.

Mr. Close said that when a letter of demand was sent through the attorneys, the defendant replied that, instead of applying to him for £72 for twelve months' maintenance of the child, that it would be better to reply to his two previous letters. On the 20th September, the defendant's attorneys wrote from Melbourne that their client had written to his wife that if she was willing to come to Australia, that her passage and that of the child would be secured, but plaintiff's attorneys in Cape Town replied that the defendant's conduct had been so extraordinary that they advised their client that it would be hazardous on her part to run the risk of desertion again in Melbourne; and further, that she could not leave until her debts were settled. The defendant, in reply to that through his attorneys, refused to make any offer towards support, but again offered to pay her passage money to Melbourne.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you ready to go back to him if he sends you money?]

Witness: Yes.

How much? My passage money and the amount of my support in Cape Town.

Wm. Alfred Humphreys, assistant manager of the Cape Town Gas Co., said that while the defendant was with the company, he had a permanent position. When he left, witness understood that he was going over to make the preliminary arrangements in Melbourne, and then return to the Colony.

Wm. Anderson stated that he understood from the defendant that he would return to the Colony and make it his home.

Alfred Thomas, stepbrother of the plaintiff, said that the defendant was quite satisfied with his prospects in the Gas Co., and when he left, witness was under the impression that he would return to Cape Town. Witness never got anything towards the board and lodging of his stepister, and, further medical expenses had been incurred.

De Villiers, C.J.: A decree of restitution of conjugal rights will be granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th July. I allow ample time, so that the defendant may make all the necessary arrangements to bring his wife back, provided it will be a sufficient compliance with this order if the defendant sends to the plaintiff's attorneys, on or before that date, a sum of £100 for the payment of the passage money of the plaintiff and the child of the marriage, of the costs of suit and other incidental expenses. Failing compliance with such order, the Court grants a rule calling on the defendant to show cause on the 1st August why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, and the plaintiff declared to be entitled to the custody of the child of the marriage, and why defendant should not pay to the plaintiff the sum of £5 per month until the child attains the age of sixteen years; with leave to the defendant to raise the question of jurisdiction. It will be understood that this £100 is to be sent to the plaintiff's attorneys, and they will be responsible for the distribution of the money. If she doesn't go back, the money is not to be paid to her; the attorneys will have to see that no part of this £100 is paid until the passage is taken for plaintiff and the child.

VAN HOLDT V. BLAKE. { 1901.
Feb. 16th.
Mar. 28th.

Sale and purchase—Patent defect.

This was an action to recover the sum of £237 5s. 6d. for certain bricks, stone, and granite, supplied to the defendant. The declaration set forth that in April or May, 1903, plaintiff, who is a brick-maker, residing at Rosebank, sold, and defendant, a builder, of Newlands, bought, 300,000 bricks of the quality known as seconds, at a price of 7s. per thousand. Plaintiff had delivered 77,500, the purchase price of which amounted to £290 12s. 6d. Plaintiff had been ready and willing to deliver the balance, but defendant had refused to accept the same. Plaintiff made a further claim in respect of concrete and stone supplied. He said that payment had been made of £180, and that a further sum of £237 5s. 6d. was due, for which he prayed judgment.

In his plea the defendant said that the agreement was that the bricks should consist of a quality known as seconds, to be delivered in quantities of not less than 20,000 per week. Thereafter the plaintiff delivered 40,000 bricks, and in June the defendant notified plaintiff that he refused to accept the balance of the contracted number, and called upon plaintiff to deliver bricks according to contract. In regard to the contract for the supply of concrete and stone, the defendant alleged that, instead of the price being 9s. and 8s., as alleged by the plaintiff, it was 7s. 6d. and 6s. per load respectively, and he put the plaintiff to proof as to the amount delivered. He pleaded that the sum of £180 covered his indebtedness to the plaintiff. As a claim in reconvention, the defendant alleged that he had suffered £500 as damages through breach of contract on the part of the plaintiff, he having been compelled, by reason of such breach of contract, to purchase bricks at an enhanced price, and to abandon the construction of certain premises.

The replication was general.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for defendants.

Hendrik Christian von Holdt, the plaintiff, said that in April last defendant came to see him at the brickfields. The bricks there were all burnt at the time, and defendant examined them, and said he was satisfied with them, and wanted to purchase 400,000. Witness agreed to let him have 300,000 bricks. It was arranged that the price should be 75s., delivered at the building in Palmyra-road. Defendant examined the bricks thoroughly. Witness delivered a certain quantity, and afterwards received complaints from defendant. Witness produced certain vouchers. Some were not signed, owing to no one being there to sign them.

Mr. Benjamin said the plaintiff had not got vouchers for certain concrete and stone claimed to have been struck out of the account annexed to the declarations. The concrete was reduced by seven loads, and the stone by twenty.

Witness (proceeding) said that in June he received a letter of complaint from defendant, wherein the latter said 50 per cent. of the bricks were not fit to use. In July, defendant again wrote, saying he would hold plaintiff responsible for any damages. After those letters, defendant still continued to take a considerable quantity of bricks. Witness did not reply to these letters, as he considered that if defendant had any complaint he should make it personally. He had many opportunities to see witness. Subsequently, witness went down to the building, and found a few bricks had got a little soft. He offered to allow for these. There was a good deal of rain at that time. Witness went with defendant to see the Municipal Inspector at Claremont. They saw one of the clerks there, who said the Municipality would not object if good bricks were used. Blake took some of the bricks with him, but the official said nothing as to these. Witness gave instructions to his foreman to give Mr. Blake the best bricks, and so far as he saw, good bricks were delivered to Blake. Witness had supplied other parties with bricks from the same kilns, and had received no complaints. It was agreed that the price of the stone should be 9s. a load, and of the concrete 8s. Witness supplied other people at these prices at the time.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The Municipal Surveyor, Mr. Richardson, had not complained on the ground in witness's presence of the quality of the bricks.

Sir H. Juta: How many thousands of the bricks you brought there turned into clay on the ground?

Witness said he had no idea.

In further cross-examination, witness said he did not know that the Municipality had applied to the Court for an interdict to stop the building. Witness agreed that the bricks should be sorted, and approved or rejected by a municipal official. Witness had to send seconds, which were a good class of brick. Witness understood the objection of the Municipality to have been made because the bricks were white, not because they were bad bricks. The bricks at these eight kilns were all of one quality—seconds.

By the Court: Defendant inspected the kilns before buying. Witness considered he bought the bricks in the kilns. [De Villiers, C.J.: You don't say so in your declaration. You say "300,000 bricks of the quality known to us as seconds."]

Witness: They were all seconds.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If you say he bought the bricks at the kilns and was bound to take them, why were you willing to take some of them back?—No answer.]

John Henry Wood said he obtained 70,000 bricks from plaintiff between March and October last year. They were white bricks, made from white clay. The bricks were the best and hardest witness could get at the time. Witness tried three other kilns, but could not get such good bricks as those from plaintiffs. The bricks supplied by plaintiff were of the quality known as seconds.

Cross examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness used these bricks in a building in the Claremont Municipality. No objection was made to the quality of the bricks by the Municipality.

Edward Blumberg, plaintiff's foreman, said he remembered Blake coming to plaintiff's brick yard. Witness saw the bricks as they were put on the wagons, and these were all right. They were seconds. Wood had the same bricks as Blake. There was not much difference in the bricks made at these kilns.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Bad bricks were put aside. There might have been many thousands of bad bricks. Witness had never heard Blake complain about the bricks. He used to come there, and tell them to send the best bricks. He said he had paid for the best, and so he wanted the best.

Phillip Kleins, brick packer, in the employ of Mr. Van Holdt, said the bricks were "second," and were of good quality.

Alexander Barron, contractor, said that in May, June, and July he purchased bricks from the plaintiff. They were uniformly good "second" bricks.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Sir H. Juta called

James Richardson, surveyor in the employ of the Claremont Municipality, who said that it was his duty to supervise the building which defendant was erecting. He saw the bricks brought there. Some 40 per cent. of the bricks were not seconds, and witness complained. Witness told Mr. Blake in plaintiff's presence, that about 40 per cent. of the bricks were not fit for use. On this occasion witness dug his knife into some of the bricks to show that they were bad. Blake promised that only the good bricks should be used. Plaintiff said nothing. About 60 per cent. of the bricks were usable as "seconds." As to the others, one could take a brick in one's hand and break it. Witness allowed the work to go on on the understanding that only good bricks would be used. In June, plaintiff and defendant came to witness. Van Holdt produced bricks which he contended were good. Witness thereupon produced two bad bricks which he had taken from the property. It was understood that the bricks would be sorted, and only good bricks used. Witness found that this was not done, and proceedings were then taken by the Municipality to obtain an interdict to stop the building. These proceedings were withdrawn on condition that Mr. Blake would get good, hard brick to build the outside walls, and that the best of those supplied by the plaintiff would be used on the inside walls, the brickwork already constructed to be cemented. Witness considered 7s. a fair price for seconds.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: When the conversation witness had spoken of took place, plaintiff was standing within a yard of witness and Blake. Witness thought plaintiff must have heard what was said. There were very heavy rains at that time, and the bricks were stacked in the open without covering.

Wm. David Jones, assistant engineer, in the employ of the Claremont Municipality, gave corroborative evidence as to the conversation between Richardson, Blake, and Van Holdt, in the office of the first named. Witness saw the bricks on Wood's property, and considered that these were generally of a decidedly better quality than those on the defendant's ground. He only very occasionally saw bricks on Wood's property as bad as those on defendant's land.

Leopold Hendricks, a mason said he was engaged on the building in Palmyra-road in June. He had to complain of the bricks. Witness saw Van Holdt, and told him he must send better bricks. Van Holdt said he would send good bricks. Subsequently witness complained to the men who brought the bricks. The bricks were often short. Some of them melted when the rain came. Witness heard a conversation in June, in the course of which Blake told Van Holdt that he would only pay for the bricks that were used. Van Holdt then said nothing, except that he would send good bricks. Witness had been stopped building three times by the Municipal authorities.

Robert Esdon, civil engineer, said in his opinion the brickwork in Blake's building consisted of fair seconds. He saw heaps on the ground which were not good enough to be called "seconds." They were raw. There were large numbers of halves lying about. There were about four or five thousand bricks lying in the floors of the building submerged in water, which should not have been there, having regard to their quality. A well-burnt brick should stand a good winter's rain.

Alfred Walter Blake, the defendant, said he contracted with plaintiff to buy 300,000 bricks, nothing worse than good seconds to be delivered to him, in not less quantity than was sufficient to keep four masons at work, and not less than 20,000 a week. Witness went to the brickfields, and on the outside of the kilns he saw some good bricks. He expected to find better bricks inside. Witness told plaintiff to strip the outsides properly. There were some bricks not burned, and plaintiff said he would strip the outsides, and burn them in another kiln. The masons continually complained to witness about the unusual number of halves. Witness had previously told plaintiff that he must not send so many halves, and that a number of the bricks were not burnt. Van Holdt said that his (Van Holdt's) boys were humbugging him, and that he would allow witness for such bricks. Witness frequently complained to Van Holdt, personally, and through messengers. The witness confirmed the evidence of Richardson. Witness had once refused to take the whole of a load of bricks, because they were all bad. Witness told Van Holdt about the interdict proceedings. When Van Holdt wanted a settlement, witness told him he could not settle until the bricks were measured in the walls, and the account against Van Holdt made out. Witness measured the brickwork in the building, and on the most liberal allowance there were not more than 46,000 or 47,000 bricks used. Witness had had to buy 14,800 bricks from the Rochester Company at 25s. per thousand to use in the building, and he had had to allow £10 for extra work to the bricklayers on account of their having to use halves. He had also had to spend £18, £13 10s., and £27 8s. 6d., for cementing, plastering, and sorting respectively. He was building some cottages, but could not get bricks from Van Holdt to do so.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness was manager for the Cape Lime Company. That company was the plaintiff in an action against one Schoeman, which action was dismissed, because the Court came to the conclusion that the defendant did not know what he was signing when he signed the document on which the company founded its claim. The bricks delivered by the plaintiff were not counted as they arrived, for the reason that they could easily be counted in the building. Witness was glad to get Van Holdt's bricks at the price. He did not try to get Rochester bricks, because there was no necessity to use these superior bricks. The 47,000 bricks in the building included an allowance for wastage.

Joseph van der Riet, builder and contractor, deposed to having heard Blake ask Van Holdt "when he was going to shift his muck." Van Holdt replied that he would do so in the following week, as his carts were busy then. Blake said that the sooner he did so the better for him, as he wanted to occupy the premises.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 28th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The evidence in this case shows that the defendant before he purchased bricks from the plaintiff had an opportunity of inspecting the bricks which he purchased. He looked at one of the kilns, and inspected it thoroughly, and, after having inspected it, he purchased a certain quantity. He had ample opportunity, therefore, of knowing the class of bricks which would be supplied to him by the plaintiff. The class of bricks which he bought was seconds, which is, admittedly, not the best quality, and the bricks in question had the admitted defect that they had not the proper colour, that they were white in colour, and were not considered on that account equal to an ordinary second; but this defect, if defect it were, the defendant also was aware of after the inspection of the bricks. The plaintiff proceeded to deliver the bricks from time to time as they were required, and the bricks were received on the premises apparently without any objection. The delivery notes were given, and the driver said that no objection was made by anyone as to the quality of the bricks. Subsequently, however, the Municipality found fault with the quality of the bricks, and I am satisfied that if the Municipality had not interfered, this dispute would not have arisen. Unfortunately for all parties, it was a very bad season—a very wet season—and these bricks being exposed to the rains, did not all survive, and many of them crumbled away and perished. A considerable portion of the bricks, however, were used for the purpose of the building. The defendant admits that 47,000, at all events, were used. The quantity actually supplied was 77,500, and the first question to decide is whether the plaintiff should recover for the amount actually delivered, or the amount actually used. Well, after the plaintiff's own undertaking that only those bricks should be paid for which were of good quality and could be used, I do not consider that the plaintiff is entitled to recover for more than the bricks which were actually used in the building, and that would be for 47,000 bricks at the rate of 75s., which would be £176 5s. The concrete allowed at the rate of 8s. would be £13 10s., and the stone, allowed at the rate of 8s., would be £20 8s., making a total of £210 3s., which, with other minor items, would amount to £210 17s., and, if there were no counter claim in the case, that would be the amount for which the Court would give judgment, less £180 paid. There is, however, a counter claim for expenses, which the defendant has had in sorting, for cement, which he had to use for stoppage of the work, and for the Rochester bricks, which the defendant had thought necessary. As to the sorting, I think that it would not be fair to direct the plaintiff to pay the whole of the expenses of sorting, because the defendant himself is to blame for having bricks that could not be used brought on the ground. If he had at once insisted upon bricks that were of bad quality being taken back, all this difficulty would not have arisen, but he allowed his men on the spot to receive these bricks, and when there was an accumulation it became necessary to sort them, and I consider it would be only fair that the expense of sorting should be equally divided between the two, as they seem to be equally responsible for the accumulation of bricks, some of which could not be used. I am inclined, therefore, to allow the sum of £13 10s. to the defendant for his expenses of sorting, that is, one-half of the expenses, the plaintiff bearing the half-share. As to the cement, I am quite satisfied that the requirements of the Municipality at that time would have been that any seconds would have required cementing. It does not appear that the bricks which were actually used were one whit worse than any ordinary seconds. The evidence on this point is somewhat conflicting, but I am inclined to accept the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff, and that is that the bricks supplied to the defendant were equal to the bricks which he had supplied to Wood and to Barron, and would fully serve their purpose. The evidence is, as I say, conflicting, but the impression on my mind is that the plaintiff supplied the defendant with the same quality of bricks as he supplied to Wood and to Barron. I can conceive of no reason why he should have acted differently—he was equally willing to supply a large customer like the defendant as he was to supply Wood and Barron—and the men employed by him on his own premises said that the bricks were exactly of the same quality, and it seems to me to stand to reason that that would be the case. The cement, I think, was not required owing to the bad quality of the bricks, but owing to the peculiar requirements of the Municipality. As to the stoppage of work, I am not satisfied that there was any stoppage on account of the plaintiff's own fault. As to the Rochester bricks, these bricks were of the best quality, red hard, which the plaintiff never undertook to deliver. Even if the plaintiff had delivered seconds, it is quite possible that these Rochester bricks would have had to be ordered. Anyhow, I am not satisfied that it was a necessity of the case that Rochester bricks, red hard, should be used in lieu of the seconds which had been ordered from the plaintiff. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that there should be judgment for the plaintiff for £30 17s., less £13 14s. 3d., which, I think, might fairly be allowed for the expenses incurred by the defendant in sorting the bricks, leaving a balance in favour of the plaintiff of £17 2s. 9d., for which judgment must be given for the plaintiff with costs.

TRIAL CAUSES.

NETTLETON V. NETTLETON. ^{1901.}
(Feb. 16th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, or in the alternative for divorce, brought by Emily Sarah Elizabeth Nettleton, of East London, against her husband, who resides at Windsorton.

The declaration set out that the parties were married out of community at Queen's Town on the 1st September, 1874, and that there were three children now living, all majors. In 1886, and at East London, the defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff, and refused, and still refused, to return to her. She claimed an order directing the defendant to return to her, or in the alternative a decree of divorce, and prayed for forfeiture of benefits under a certain ante-nuptial contract.

Mr. Upton for the plaintiff. Defendant in default.

C. W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Emily Sarah Elizabeth Nettleton, the plaintiff, said that for some time after the marriage they lived happily together. Seven children were born of the marriage, three of whom now survived—two sons and a daughter. About twelve years after the marriage they were living at East London, when her husband left her, stating that he was going to make a living and provide a home for her. He was a bookkeeper. He was away for two years, and wrote to her from Kimberley and other places. He sent her no money. At the end of two years he returned to East London, and stayed at an hotel at Cambridge. She frequently saw him during the month. She stayed with her father. After a month he went away to Willow Park, where he said he was going to put up a hut, and would have her living with him there. The defendant did not send for her, and had not supplied her with any funds. She had had to bring up the children out of her own money. In October her attorneys wrote to the defendant last year, but no reply was received by witness to that letter. In the same month her attorneys received a letter from defendant, enclosing a communication to herself. On the 22nd December her attorneys wrote a letter without prejudice. The letter from the defendant contained certain allegations, which were groundless. Witness was about to leave for England with a lady as her companion.

A decree of restitution was granted, defendant to return to and receive the plaintiff on or before the 1st June, failing which, the defendant to show cause on the 16th June why the prayer of the petition should not be granted.

ROWE V. FISHER.

Building contract—Bills of quantities—Architect's fees.

This was an action brought by Henry Rowe Rowe, architect, Cape Town, against John Fisher, a builder, carrying on business at Rondebosch, to recover the sum of £200 12s. 6d. for professional services rendered.

The declaration set out that in June, 1903, the plaintiff, acting as architect for one Robert Gilbert, prepared certain plans and specifications for a building proposed to be erected in Hall-road and Railway-street, Wynberg, and prepared certain bills of quantities. Upon the basis of these quantities tenders were called for by public advertisement for the erection of the building. In reply, the defendant applied for the quantities, and submitted a tender for £7,205 on a form supplied by the plaintiff. This being the lowest tender, it was accepted. Thereafter Gilbert and the defendant represented to the plaintiff that Gilbert was unable to make certain financial arrangements, and that he had thereupon determined to abandon the erection of the building. Gilbert paid to the plaintiff 2½ per cent. on the plan and specifications, viz., the sum of £180. Thereafter the plaintiff discovered that the defendant had been employed by Gilbert, as builder in the erection of the building which was now being proceeded with by the defendant, and the plaintiff claimed in consequence that he was entitled to receive from the defendant 2½ per cent. on his tender (£180 2s.) and £20 10s. 6d. for disbursements, to cover typewriting, advertising, etc. He claimed that the building was being erected on the same plans and specifications as were prepared by the plaintiff.

The defendant in his plea, admitted the allegations in paragraphs 1 and 2. He put the plaintiff to proof of the allegations in paragraph 3 as to the arrangements made by Mr. Gilbert. He admitted that he sent in a tender to the plaintiff to the amount of £7,205. He denied that he applied for or received or made use of the bills of quantities, and denied that Gilbert notified his intention to accept or did accept his (the defendant's) tender. Otherwise, he said he had no knowledge of the contents of the paragraph. He had no knowledge as to the abandonment of the building. He said that he was being employed by Messrs. Gilbert and Sheriff to erect the building, but not upon his original tender.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. M. de Villiers) for the plaintiff. Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Gardiner) for the defendant.

Henry Rowe Rowe, architect and quantity surveyor, practising at Burmeister's Buildings, Cape Town, said he prepared plans for the erection of a building near the railway station at Wynberg. The plans were submitted to the Municipality. He also prepared bills of quantities. The usual thing was for architects to prepare the quantities or direct them to be prepared by quantity surveyors. In the quantities a clause appeared to this effect: "Include the sum of £20 10s. 6d. for typewriting and advertising, and 2½ per cent. for quantities to be paid out of the first instalment." The charge was in the first instance, paid by the builder, but was subsequently repaid by the owner of the buildings. He inserted an advertisement in the "Cape Times" calling for tenders. Fisher called upon him several times for a copy of the quantities. A copy was handed by witness to the defendant on the 12th June. A number of builders applied for copies, and some eight or nine sent in tenders. Defendant's tender was the lowest, £7,205. Fisher also asked for the plans and specifications, and was supplied with them. He had the plans for one day, and the specifications for one day. The defendant could not, from the plan and specifications, in that time have prepared an approximate estimate. Defendant did not return the quantities to witness. Witness's brother also tendered, his estimate being the next lowest. He afterwards saw Gilbert, who, he believed, opened all the tenders. Mr. Gilbert approved the tender of the defendant, and said that he intended to accept it, and he applied to the Colonial Orphan Chamber for a loan. Gilbert did not actually accept the tender, though he notified his intention of doing so. He saw Gilbert when the answer from the Orphan Chamber had been received about the 30th July. Gilbert said he could not get the money from the Orphan Chamber, but he was going to apply to one Bishop. Fisher afterwards called upon him on or about the 29th July and informed him that he had come for Mr. Gilbert to say that, being unable to raise a loan, he had decided to abandon the building, and he wanted witness's account. Witness made out an account for 2½ per cent., on the plans and specifications, and Gilbert called and paid. About a week or so afterwards, from information he received, witness went to Wynberg and found that the building was being proceeded with. He was informed that John Fisher was erecting the building. He subsequently saw the defendant, who asked him about the boundary of the property. In further conversation defendant said that he was erecting the building on commission. Witness was objecting to receive instructions from Gilbert to superintend the work. He made a remark to that effect to the defendant who replied that he (the defendant) was using his own money, and the arrangement was that there should be no architect to superintend. Witness later on sent in an account to the defendant for commission on the quantities, and sundry disbursements. One of the letters that he received was endorsed: "See Gilbert; otherwise pay what you owe." He did not know what that meant. The building was erected substantially in accordance with his plans. The only difference was in regard to a little decorative work to reduce cost; everything else, windows, doors, and piers, was strictly in accordance with the plans.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He premised a commission to Fisher, who was at that time a broker, if he introduced witness to Gilbert. He agreed to give Fisher a third as broker, but in case Fisher was the successful tenderer he should pay no commission. He paid £30 as an instalment towards the £60 that Fisher would have been entitled to if the building had been abandoned. He had decided not to apply for a refund for that £30, but to fight Fisher on the present issue alone. If buildings were not proceeded with, he had to run the risk of not getting any pay for his bills of quantities. It was not possible to prepare a reliable estimate of the cost from the plans. Witness did not take any steps to help Gilbert to raise the money that he would have required. He should be surprised to hear that the building had cost £6,000, because he understood that they had raised £7,500 upon it. It was customary to charge 2½ per cent. for quantities on the tender, and also to make a charge for disbursements. He was positive that Mr. Fisher received a copy of the quantities.

Re-examined: He told Mr. Gilbert that if the building had a mansard roof the cost would be about £7,500.

Jas. Collins Tully, architect, Cape Town, said that the practice in the Colony was for architects to supply their own quantities. He had never heard of a builder in this colony engaging his own quantity surveyor. Quantities were always taken out for large contracts. In case the building was not proceeded with nothing was paid for quantities. It was the usual condition that the 2½ per cent. and the amount of disbursements should be paid out of the first instalment. He did not consider that it would be safe to estimate for such a large building from the plans and specifications. An estimate could be prepared on the basis of the cubical contents of the building.

Edwin Austin Cooke, architect, Cape Town, also gave evidence as to professional custom.

Thomas Howard, of the firm of Howard and Scott, contractors, Cape Town, said that the clause as to percentage and disbursements was a usual one. The amount for the quantities was added to the first certificate. As to the cubing system of tendering, the only thing he could say about it was that it would be an excellent way of landing them into the Bankruptcy Court. That system was not adopted, as a rule, on jobs over £2,000.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Many men had been landed in the Bankruptcy Court through "cubing."

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He had never seen a contract containing a clause relating to the charges for the quantities.

Thomas Sherwood, quantity surveyor, Cape Town, said that the clause in the quantities as to 2½ per cent. was the usual one. The disbursements claimed by the plaintiff were the usual disbursements of architects. Witness produced a standard book on architects' charges, which gave a form of summary. The builder, he said, was always liable to the architect for the bills of quantities. The 2½ per cent. was the fixed charge of the Architects and Surveyors' Association in London. There was no association of that kind in this country, though, he believed, an Architects' Association was in process of formation.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: It was customary to put in the bills of quantities a clause as to the charges for quantities and disbursements. The builder would understand that the quantities were to be free, if no clause appeared in the quantities with regard to the charges.

By the Court: There were cases in which the owner of the building paid for the quantities by special arrangement with the architect or quantity surveyor. Quantities were not always prepared by the architect; witness often prepared quantities for the profession.

John Laing, Municipal Building Inspector, Wynberg, produced the plans of the building as approved by the Wynberg Council. He said that he had had the buildings under his supervision since they were commenced. In the main, the building had been carried out in accordance with the plans and specifications approved by the Council. He was not aware that any of the walls had been altered inside. There was a little less decorative work than was shown in the plan; an imported brick of better class was used, and the front was pointed, instead of being plastered.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Certain modifications that were in accord with the Council's bye-laws might have been made with the sanction of the Municipal Engineer and without witness's knowledge. The building had to be set back at one end.

Jacob Hendrick Hablitzel, auctioneer, Cape Town, said that he had made a valuation of the property at the request of Mr. Fisher about six weeks or two months ago, just before the property was completed. Fisher did not tell him how much the building had cost.

George Rowe, brother of the plaintiff, said that he was a builder and contractor, and arrived in Cape Town from England last May. He remembered the defendant calling at his brother's office and asking for quantities. The quantities were not then ready. Defendant called again about a week later, and was supplied with the quantities by witness's brother.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He should contradict the defendant if he (defendant) said that he saw the bills of quantities in witness's hands after he had sent in his tender.

William Ernest Lyall Thompson, an architect in the plaintiff's office, said he lent the plans to the defendant on the 28th May. Defendant brought back the plans on that day or the following one. On the 12th June, Fisher called for a copy of the quantities, and witness saw him come out of Mr. Rowe's room with a set. About a couple of days before the tenders were due, the defendant came for the specifications, but they were not put in defendant's hands until the following day. The defendant said he wanted to look more fully into the matter before he sent in his tender.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Fisher repeatedly called for the quantities, and witness was absolutely confident that he was supplied with a copy on the 12th June.

Lucien Adrien Lobinski, architectural draughtsman, formerly in the plaintiff's service, spoke to visits paid to the plaintiff's office by the defendant for the plans, specifications, and quantities. Fisher applied for the quantities several times. He remembered Thompson sending the defendant into the plaintiff's private office, when he called for the quantities after they had been prepared.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He thought it would be very risky for any man to send in a tender on the "cubing" system for a contract over £1,500 or £2,000.

Mr. Benjamin (to witness): But it would be possible?

Witness: Oh, yes.

Mr. Justice Hopley: There is no limit to folly, of course.

Hubert Willis Cox, builder, Cape Town, said that the charge made by the plaintiff for the quantities was quite a customary one in the building trade. It was usual for the builder to be supplied with bills of quantities in all large contracts.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He had not heard of many cases of tendering on the "cubing" system. He should not like to tender on that basis.

This concluded the evidence for the plaintiff.

The defendant, John Fisher, was then called. After describing the early history of his association with the work, he said that he was a broker for three months. Then he became a builder again. He saw the plan prior to the advertisement from Saturday to Monday. He was assisted by his foreman bricklayer, a joiner, in getting out an estimate. He did not see a copy of the quantities until after he had sealed his tender. He was asked to send in a tender, and, though he sent in an estimate, he had no serious intention of doing the job if it were offered to him. He prepared the tender on the basis of cube measurements. He had a good idea of the work that was to be done, and he obtained his dimensions from the plans lent to him by the plaintiff. He understood that if the tender were accepted he should have to pay 2½ per cent. for the quantities to the plaintiff. He did not know of the existence of the quantities until the very day when he handed in his estimate. His estimate was not accepted. He had nothing whatever to do with the efforts of Gilbert to finance the building at that time. He was requested by Gilbert to ask Mr. Rowe to send in his bill for preparing the plans and specifications. Subsequently witness had a conversation with Gilbert as to the building scheme. A contract was entered into on the 16th August, under which it was provided that witness should erect the buildings as per plan prepared by the architect, Mr. H. Rowe Rowe, and the defendant undertook to commence the building on the 15th August and complete it on the 15th February. Witness was to supply under the contract the materials at cost price, as well as all the labour and wages and out of pocket expenses. The owner was to pay him full cost of the materials, and the full amount of his disbursements for labour, and he was to pay on that account £1,500 on the 15th October, if so much had been spent, and provide the balance on completion of the building. Witness was to have the cost of materials and labour repaid to him, and, in addition to that, he was to receive first of all 10 per cent. on the gross or total cost of the buildings as remuneration, and 3 per cent. on the gross or total cost of the building, after deducting the sum of £1,500, on account of witness finding the balance of the money. Witness had guaranteed the balance of the cost over and above the £1,500 that Gilbert was able to raise. He had to pay 8 per cent. to the bank on his overdraft. He was to receive £5 a week for out of pocket expenses. The building was now complete, and the actual cost, roughly speaking, was inside £5,500, exclusive of the 10 per cent. witness was to receive. There were two accounts still outstanding of £205 and £145. Witness had provided £4,000 towards the cost of the building, £2,000 of which he had raised from the bank.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had only done two contract jobs in this country. He saw the quantities at the plaintiff's office, but he did not read them. His tender was sent in on the 20th June. He did not use the quantities, because, he believed, they were not in order. He had heard that the quantities were put up in order to keep other people out. One of the clerks in the plaintiff's office told him while they were having a drink Rowe's brother put in the next lowest tender. He believed that the man who told him about the quantities being too high was Thompson. He had not seen the specifications when he prepared his tender. He tendered for the work merely on the plans. He knew from what Rowe had told him that the front was to be of teak.

By the Court: He had had conversation with the owner from time to time, and he based his estimate on this and on his examination of the plan.

Cross-examination continued: He denied that he went to the office of the plaintiff time after time to ask for quantities. He asked for the plans several times. He was a speculative builder; not a contractor.

By the Court: He made out his tender on a form given to him by the plaintiff the day before the tender was sent in. He gave to other builders three forms handed to him by the plaintiff.

Cross-examination continued: When he sent in his tender for £7,205 he expected to make about £1,000 profit in case he got the contract.

Robert Gilbert, retired hotel keeper, said that he was proprietor along with Mr. Sheriff of certain land at Wynberg. He instructed Mr. Rowe to prepare plans for a building, to cost about £5,000. He could not raise the necessary money after the tenders had come in. He never saw any bills of quantities.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He should have accepted defendant's tender and gone on with the building if he had been able to raise necessary money. The defendant afterwards agreed to finance witness.

This concluded the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument, on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in this action, an architect, claims from the defendant, a builder, a certain sum of money, as being the cost of taking out certain bills of quantities in respect of a certain building erected for one Gilbert. The declaration alleges that in the month of June last the plaintiff, as architect for Gilbert, prepared the plans and specifications for the building proposed to be erected, and also prepared certain bills of quantities in respect of the said buildings, at the request of the said Robert Gilbert. It goes on to allege that upon these bills of quantities tenders were called for, that the defendant was the lowest tenderer, and Gilbert expressed an intention to accept the defendant's tender; but that, owing to his being unable to make financial arrangements, the tender was not accepted. As the matter stood, therefore, up to that time Gilbert had employed the architect to draw plans and specifications, and the declaration says that he also employed him to take out these bills of quantities. On this point the evidence does not support the declaration. There was no request on the part of Gilbert to take out bills of quantities, but it seems to be the custom of some architects here, when they are preparing plans, also to take out bills of quantities as a speculation, and if a tender is accepted on their bills of quantities, they put into the contract the fact that the builder must pay them, the architects, out of the first instalment he receives from the owner of the property the 2½ per cent. for taking out these quantities. But the plaintiff himself admits that if there is no tender accepted, there is no payment made by anybody for these quantities. It is a speculation on his part, dependent on the tender being accepted and a contract being entered into, on which the builder will pay him 2½ per cent. But the declaration says that though no tender was accepted, the plaintiff discovered that the defendant (the builder) had been employed by Gilbert in the erection of the building which is now being proceeded with, and because the defendant was building this building for Gilbert, he further alleges that he is entitled to the 2½ per cent. Then counsel for the plaintiff puts this claim under this section of the declaration as being one for a quantum meruit, that is, a payment for work done beneficial to the defendant. But there is no allegation in the declaration, and it is not proved, that in the work subsequently done the taking out of quantities was any use to, or necessary, or used by the defendant in any way. When we look at the contract entered into between the defendant and Gilbert, we find that what was then done was that Gilbert and his co-partner, Sheriff, agreed with the defendant to erect the building according to the plans and specifications prepared by the architect for the owners of the property. The reason why the bills of quantities are taken out is to enable the contractor to ascertain with accuracy what amount of materials may be required, and to frame a tender on the materials so required. Under this contract, however, it was utterly immaterial to the builder what amount of materials was used. The contractor, it is true, was to have control of the erection of the buildings, but the owners were to decide as to the quality of the materials, and they agreed to pay for materials at cost price, as well as the cost of labour. The remuneration to be paid to the builder was to be a sum equal to 10 per cent. on the gross total of the cost of the building. There are one or two other stipulations in the contract, but these are the main points. After Gilbert had found that he could not have this building completed by tender, he then undertook to have the building erected himself, and engaged the defendant as builder under him. The declaration does not allege that the plaintiff was aware of the fact that the bills of quantities were used by the defendant in any way in connection with the building. True, the plans and specifications were used, and Gilbert was liable for these plans and specifications, but before he entered into any contract at all he paid the plaintiff the fee which is usual to be paid for drawing plans and specifications. That being so, and having acquired the plans and specifications, he was entitled to use them without any further remuneration to the plaintiff. If Gilbert has used the bills of quantities also which would be payable by the builder, it is quite possible that Gilbert may have to pay for them, and, if the allegation in the declaration had only been proved, that these bills of quantities had been prepared at the request of Gilbert, then a very strong case might have been made out as against Gilbert, but the evidence so far does not support any such claim, even as regards Gilbert. If there had been a colour of suspicion that this second contract was simply a variation with the object or intention of evading the architect's commission, I think the Court would not look favourably upon any such contract, and it would not be too anxious to find an excuse for the builder, but would rather be inclined to compel him to pay for the work done, and of which he had the benefit. But in this case I fail to see how the plaintiff's work has been used by the defendant (the builder) in any case, and if that is so the dictum which has been cited from Chief Justice Monahan supports the plea that the architect is not entitled to any payment. No doubt, where there is a contract, and where the bills of quantities are drawn as they are drawn in this case, and this clause is included as to payment to the architect, the builder is the person who has to pay for them, and not the owner of the property, at least not directly. The builder pays the architect, and charges it in his account, and the owner has to pay eventually no doubt. But in this case there has been no such contract; there has been no tender accepted, and there is nothing to reduce what was the architect's stipulation into a contract which he may recover from the defendant. Simply because, as the builder, he has used the plans and specifications prepared by the plaintiff, I cannot find any legal ground for saying that he must pay for the bills of quantities which were prepared for a totally different object, which he did not need, and which he did not use in carrying out the building. On the evidence, I cannot find that the defendant in this case has used the bills of quantities or been benefited by them in any way. Under these circumstances, though it is with some regret that I come to this conclusion, and I think the plaintiff has been rather hardly dealt with, still I cannot find legal grounds for finding in his favour, and I think the Court is bound to give judgment for the defendant with costs.

TRIAL CAUSES.

LORENTZ V. LORENTZ. { 1904.
{ Feb. 17th.

In this case, the plaintiff, the wife, sued for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce. The parties were married at Arnheim, Holland, in 1890, and there were two children, both minors. The defendant is at present domiciled at Paardekraal, Beaufort West, and the plaintiff is at Arnheim. The defendant deserted plaintiff in Paris, and had not returned to her. She required money to enable her to come out to him.

Mr. Russell for plaintiff; defendant in default.

The evidence had been taken on commission in Holland, from which it appeared that the plaintiff is 39 years of age, and that the parties first came to South Africa in 1893. They returned to the Netherlands in 1900, and visited the South of France. Then, in Paris, with the approval of defendant, plaintiff returned to Holland, to which country the defendant was to return, and they were to await the time until they could return to South Africa and Pretoria. However, he left for South Africa.

The Court ordered defendant to return to plaintiff on or before April 15, failing which to show cause on June 1 why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

WENTZEL V. STEPHAN.

This was an action to recover £47 12s. 6d. for work done. In his declaration the plaintiff alleged that he entered into a verbal contract with the defendant to lay out the defendant's garden at Observatory for £70. £23 had been paid, and there was still due a sum of £47, together with incidental items amounting to 12s. 6d., which defendant had refused to pay.

In his plea the defendant alleged that plaintiff was indebted to him in a sum of £35 in connection with a previous contract, which plaintiff had failed to complete, and to complete which defendant had had to spend this sum of money. He also alleged that plaintiff had been paid £50 on account of the present contract, and that he had taken £2 10s. worth of gravel from the garden. He claimed, therefore, that he was not indebted to plaintiff in any sum.

Mr. McGregor for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Plaintiff gave evidence bearing out the allegations made in the declaration. He said that on one occasion Stephan promised to give him a cheque at his (Stephan's) house, but on witness going there Stephan got into a temper, and said he would not pay a halfpenny. Witness was still owed £47 12s. 6d.

Robert Templeman, florist, said that in his opinion the work was properly done, and £70 was a reasonable amount to charge.

Judgment was granted as prayed for £47 12s. 6d., with interest a tempore morae and costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1904.
{ Feb. 18th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the admission of Cecil Charles Wilson as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Hermann Hirschberg as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer.

Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of William Michael Mostert as an attorney-at-law, notary public, and conveyancer.

Application granted and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HOFFMANN V. SOEKER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £85, less £65 paid on account since the issue of summons. Counsel asked for judgment against one of the defendants, Allie Soeker, under the Act 19 of 1893.

Order granted.

JACOBSON V. PRETORIUS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final order for the adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

WRENSCH V. CRAFTFORD.

Sale and purchase—Principal and agent—Promissory note—Consideration.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note, put in at a previous hearing (when the case was ordered to stand over) with interest and costs. Counsel now put in an affidavit showing that Mr. Ibbetson approved of the action taken on his behalf by Mr. Wrensch, who sued.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for the defendant) urged that the plaintiff had made a misrepresentation as to certain tiles, perhaps under a mistake.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But did she give the promissory note after she found the tiles to be defective?]

Mr. De Villiers: That is so. Counsel said that after the misrepresentation by the plaintiff that she was liable for the defective tiles, she signed the note, but it was only because she was led to believe that she was liable for the tiles. Defendant desired to cancel the sale, but she was told by the plaintiff or his agent that she could not do any such thing. Counsel quoted Leak on Contracts.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the plaintiff had full authority to act on behalf of Ibbetson. Mr. Ibbetson had confirmed Wrensch's authority to take the note in his name. As to the consideration for which this note was given, he contended that there was ample consideration.

Mr. De Villiers contended that there was no reasonable ground for a valid claim against the defendant of £250, and that the only valid claim against her was one of £100 as to sheriff's charges and so forth.

De Villiers, C.J.: If this action had been brought by Ibbetson, there would have been no difficulty in the case, because, as between Ibbetson and the defendant (Mrs. Craftford), there was a good and sufficient consideration. The defendant knew at the time when she signed the promissory note that there had been what she considers a misrepresentation on the part of Wrensch in regard to the property. Notwithstanding her knowledge, she signed the promissory note as a compromise of her dispute with Ibbetson. The difficulty, to my mind, has been that Ibbetson is not the plaintiff, and that it is Wrensch who sues, and the promissory note is made by her in favour of Wrensch. The difficulty, then, is this: What consideration is there for this promissory note as between Wrensch and Craftford? That difficulty has been partly removed by the affidavit, which Ibbetson has now made, stating that whatever Wrensch has done he has done on his behalf, and in all the circumstances the Court is inclined now to give provisional sentence, but the question of costs is to stand over, and the Court gives no intimation as to whether in the principal case Wrensch will be entitled to succeed or whether it should be Ibbetson who should become the plaintiff in the principal case. At present we grant provisional sentence, but no order as to costs, the question of costs to stand over to abide the result in the principal case. It will then be competent for the defendant to enter appearance and raise any objections which she thinks should be raised as against Wrensch suing.

Mr. De Villiers applied for stay of execution for three months.

De Villiers, C.J.: Certainly, she is entitled to stay of execution for three months, the question of costs to stand over.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: W. Wrench; Defendant's Attorneys: Sauer and Standen.]

BARKER V. FOUNTAIN.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, with interest and costs, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

NORDEN V. VINK.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Order granted.

PEROLD V. BAILEY.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest and costs, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

DREYER V. SAMSODIEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £450, less £11 5s. paid on account, with interest and costs, and for the property to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. MERRY.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town for the purchase price of goods sold and delivered, £21 10s., and taxed costs, £1

19s. 7d., and for certain property transferred to the defendant on the 19th October to be declared executable. Return of nulla bona was put in.

Order granted.

ESTATE GRAHAM AND SMITH V GRAHAM.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest issued against the defendant, and executed on the previous day. The plaintiff was the trustee in the insolvent estate of Graham and Smith, of which the defendant was a member, and the latter was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £40 3s., taxed bill of costs. Defendant was about to leave for Australia by the Oowestry Grange, and had booked his passage when he was arrested.

Defendant said he admitted the debt. Judgment given as prayed.

De Villiers, C.J. (to defendant): You can go now; you may leave the Court, but I don't say you may leave the Colony.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL { 1904
V. BOYCE. { Feb. 18th.

Mr. Struben moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £27 15s. 5d. rates, and £15 15s. for water supplied, and costs.

Order granted.

GORDON MITCHELL AND CO. V. KAPLAN

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £280, goods sold and delivered, and costs.

Order granted.

REYNOLDS V. GOODMANSON.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment on the plaintiff's interdict for £100, with interest a tempore morae and costs, plaintiff tendering transfer of certain land, and also for £400 for money lent and advanced.

Order granted.

TOERIN V. DIETERIE.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 319, on a declaration calling on the defendant to hand over a certain promissory note, which was to be given by him in payment for certain sheep purchased by defendant. The promissory note was to be made payable on the 10th January. The plaintiff prayed for an order calling upon the defendant to hand over the promissory note as described, endorsed by his wife, to be drawn on the 10th January, or in the alternative, for judgment for £180 19s. 6d. Counsel moved for judgment in terms of the alternative plea.

Defendant appeared, and stated that he had had no benefit out of the transaction. He was unable to pay at present, and had offered to give the plaintiff back the sheep on the sale being cancelled, or, in the alternative, to pay £10 a month until the sheep could be slaughtered. He was a butcher carrying on business at Robertson. The sheep were not at present in a fit condition to be slaughtered, but might be so in eight months. If he were ordered to pay forthwith he would be forced to apply for sequestration.

Judgment was given for plaintiff for £180 0s. 6d., with costs, a stay of execution being granted pending payment of £10 a month until the debts and costs are paid, the first payment to be made on the 2nd March, with leave, failing which, to the plaintiff to apply to the Court for an immediate execution.

REX V. SANGO. } 1904.
} Feb. 18th.

Master and servant—Act 18 of 1873.

A journeyman mason is not a servant in terms of Act 18 of 1873.

Buchanan, J.: As the judge of the week, the case has come before me for review of Rex v. Sango, who was charged with having contravened section 4, clause 6. of the Master and Servants' Act (Act 18 of 1873), in that he unlawfully departed from the service of his master, a contractor. There are two objections to the conviction. One arises from the question as to whether or not the accused comes under the Master and Servants' Acts, and the second refers to the indefinite nature of the engagement. Accused was a mason's assistant, engaged to assist during building, and the master says that there was no time fixed for the engagement, but that accused could leave at any time without notice when the building was finished. But the more important question is, does a mason come under the definition of a servant under the Act? The Act says that a "servant" shall be construed and understood to comprise any person employed for hire, wages or remuneration to perform any handicraft or other bodily labour in agriculture or manufactures or in domestic service, such as a porter, etc. The matter has been referred to the Attorney-General; he is not prepared to support the conviction, and I think the Act was not intended to do and does not include a person like a mason at work on a building. Under these circumstances, as the prisoner does not come under the Master and Servants' Act, this conviction must be quashed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WILLIAMS V. JUPP. } 1904.
} Feb. 18th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order declaring the defendant of unsound mind, and appointing the applicant, Robert Williams, who is the defendant's son-in-law, as curator of her person and property.

Dr. Dods, medical superintendent of the Valkenberg Asylum, said that the defendant had been under his care for some years. The case was one of extreme melancholia. The respondent's mind was practically unchanged since she first came under his care. The respondent had once been allowed out on probation, but came back in a few days.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (the curator ad litem) did not oppose.

An order was granted as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

BEYERS V. GROENEWALD.

Mr. Searle, K.C., mentioned this matter, which was an application for an order for the removal of the respondent from executorship. Both parties had, he said, been in Court as requested, but he understood that the respondent had now gone away again.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the respondent had now given an undertaking that he would act in harmony with the applicant, and, after the Court's expression of opinion, there might be no further difficulty. There would be no order upon the present application, and the costs would come out of the estate, but leave would be reserved to the applicant to apply again in case the respondent failed to do his duty to the estate.

WILLIAMSON AND ANOTHER V. SHEPSTONE, WYLIE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for an order for the release of certain theatrical scenery, effects, and property now at Port Elizabeth, from attachment under an order granted ad fundam- dam jurisdictionem. Counsel read an affidavit sworn by George H. Smith of the firm of B. and F. Wheeler, theatrical proprietors, in support of the application. The property, it appeared, had been in use by the Australian Opera Company, and it was believed that it was the intention of the respondents to remove the same to Perth, Western Australia. Part of the property belonged to Williamson, the applicant, who was now in America, and whose agent was the deponent, G. H. Smith. Certain effects also belonged to the deponent's firm.

A rule was granted calling upon Tom Pollard and W. O'Sullivan to show cause in terms of the notice why the property of the applicant should not be handed over to C. A. Brewster, rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime, restraining the respondents from removing or parting with the property, the rule to be served by telegram, and to be returnable on Thursday next.

TRIAL CAUSES.

ALLIE V. HARDIE.

Mr. Nightingale (for the plaintiff) said that the plaintiff in this case was in court with his witnesses, and it was desirable that the Court should take the case as at early a date as possible. The plaintiff had a good many witnesses, and it would be difficult for him to keep them together if the case were not heard this term. He was an Indian of considerable standing, and he desired to proceed to Mecca.

Mr. Close, for the defendant, said that he had not yet had his brief delivered to him. The attorneys had been under the impression that the case would not come on for a few days, as it stood a good way down the list.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the case was in the list for that day, and it must now stand over until next term, as the defendant was not ready, and leave would be given, as asked, for the plaintiff's evidence to be taken on commission. Counsel would be given leave to mention the matter again.

REX V. LOUW.

{ Feb. 18th.

Treason — Rebellion — Acts of regular warfare.

The appellant was tried before a jury for five distinct assaults, with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The evidence showed that the accused, who was a British subject, committed the assaults while engaged in rebellion, that the assaulted persons were severely beaten, and in some cases kicked without previous trial, and that the accused himself had not been tried for treason or rebellion. There was no evidence that the accused had been recognised by the British authorities as a belligerent, or that the acts complained of were acts of regular warfare, and the best evidence was not produced that he had been commanded by his superior officers to commit the acts complained of. The judge, at the trial, charged the jury that such evidence would constitute no defence to the indictment.

Held, that even if the charge was not correct in law, the judgment should be confirmed in the absence of proof that the acts complained of were regular acts of warfare.

This was an argument on a point reserved for the decision of the Supreme Court. The accused, Abraham Gert Willem Louw, a farmer, residing in the Calvinia district, was charged on five counts at the Criminal Sessions last November, before Sir John Buchanan and a jury, with assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. He was found guilty, and sentenced to five months' imprisonment, and a point of law was raised by his counsel, which was reserved by the judge in the following terms: "That there was a misdirection on the part of the presiding judge in charging the jury that orders received by the prisoner from superior military officers of the Republic—the enemy—if any such were given, constituted no defence in law to the charge laid in the indictment, prisoner being a rebel in arms, and, therefore, not entitled to take advantage of his own wrong, he not having been convicted or acquitted or high treason."

Mr. McGregor appeared on behalf of the accused; Mr. Howel Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) for the Crown.

Mr. McGregor said that the accused Louw was an ex-rebel and commandant in the forces of the late Republics. After the war he left the Colony, but subsequently returned and surrendered himself to the authorities. He was charged with two sets of offences. On one indictment he was charged at the Criminal Sessions of the Supreme Court, held in November last, with assault on five counts; but the other indictment, charging him with high treason, was not presented to the Court. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty, and thereupon the accused's counsel asked leave to reserve the point which now came up for decision. Accused had since been liberated on bail.

The then presiding judge had made the following report: The accused was charged on an indictment, containing five counts, with having committed the crime of assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. He pleaded not guilty. The prisoner was defended by Mr. Advocate McGregor, who, in going to the jury, while admitting the assault, claimed an acquittal on the ground that the prisoner, though a rebel, was acting under the orders of the Free State Generals, and was consequently entitled to the privileges of a belligerent enemy. This, as a proposition of law, appeared to me utterly without foundation, and I charged the jury accordingly. After verdict, and before sentence, prisoner's counsel applied to have a point reserved for the consideration of the Court of Appeal in criminal cases, which point was entered as follows: "That there was a misdirection on the part of the learned presiding judge in charging the jury that orders received by prisoner from superior military officers of the Republic—the enemy—if any such were given, constitute no defence in law to the charge laid in the indictment, prisoner being a rebel in arms, and therefore not entitled to take advantage of his own wrong, he not having been convicted or acquitted of high treason." In this case the point reserved has but an academic importance. It refers to a part only of the directions given to the jury, and I had grave doubts whether I ought to grant the application made by prisoner's counsel. I pointed out this difficulty at the time, but counsel urged that the question was one of great public importance. Moreover, the evidence does not establish the line of defence set up. The other directions to the jury were not questioned. As to the verdict, the prosecutor had stated to the jury that the prisoner had surrendered under His Excellency the Governor's Proclamation of the 11th June, 1902, which intimated that, upon complying with its provisions, certain rebels surrendering themselves before a date fixed therein would not suffer the punishment of death, fine, or imprisonment, provided they had not been guilty of murder or other acts contrary to the usages of civilised warfare. I pointed out that this Proclamation had never been embodied in any Statute, and was, therefore, only an indication of executive intention, and was not binding as a legislative enactment. As, however, the Crown sought to have the test of the proviso in the Proclamation applied to prisoner's acts, I left it to the jury to convict or to acquit, according as they found whether or not the prisoner's conduct stood the test. The evidence given by the accused himself shows that the jury were amply justified in finding against the prisoner. There was no specific command given to prisoner to inflict the floggings; the persons assaulted were not formally charged or tried in any way. Though a commandant, the prisoner had personally assaulted the different persons named in the indictment, causing them most severe injuries, compared with which, according to the medical evidence, the effect of lashes inflicted as a judicial punishment in gaol by cat-o'-nine-tails was merciful. The "usages of civilised warfare" is a very indefinite term, but I agree with the jury's view that prisoner's acts could not be justified under such a designation.

Mr. McGregor urged that in time of war an occurrence of this sort should not be regarded as it would in time of peace, the criminality not being present in a condition of war. He submitted that what he termed the "war ægis" was not only extended to belligerents, but to one's own subjects in respect to the criminality of their acts, otherwise than from the point of view of treason. The mens rea was the important point, and on this point he would refer the Court to the case of Rez v. Smith (12 C.T.R. 907). Louw, he contended, was acting for the enemy then in military occupation; he was acting as an instrument, and, while it might be that he was wrong in inflicting this punishment, and that his superior officers were wrong in their line of conduct, the question had to be considered whether, under the circumstances, his act was not absolved from criminality. Counsel went on to refer to the evidence of the witnesses with regard to the orders given by the Boers. He said that one of the most important witnesses, Daniel Anthoniessen, who said he saw Boer proclamations, which told people to remain quiet, and if they did not do this they were threatened with a fine or flogging. Jacobus Adrien Anthoniessen also gave similar evidence. He said: "I saw some of the proclamations, which threatened people with fine and flogging if they did not stop on their farms." So much for the evidence for the Crown. Then there was the evidence for the defence. There was the witness called Nel

Mr. Howel Jones (interposing) said that objection was taken at the trial to that evidence, and it was ruled inadmissible.

Mr. McGregor said that all the same the evidence appeared in the record. He proceeded to allude to the case of Watson v. Bradley (13 C.T.R. 596), and also to the case of Maritz, heard at Mafeking, and quoted at some length from the judgment of Justice Solomon as reported in the "Mafeking Mail" of the 8th November, 1901.

Buchanan, J., said that he had often thought about that judgment and he was totally unable to follow the reasoning.

Mr. McGregor went on to argue that there might be occasions when it would be good business, if one might use such a term, not to adopt too strict a view of a matter of this kind.

Buchanan, J., said that that was a matter rather for the Executive than for a Court of Law. There was the case of "Colonel" Lynch heard in England. He was sentenced, and then after he had been imprisoned for a short time he was released, but that was a matter of policy for the Executive.

Mr. McGregor called attention to the case of Goldenhuis, heard at the Criminal Sessions, Cape Town, in January, 1903, and also to the case of Rex v. Burns (12 C.T.R. 882).

De Villiers, C.J., said that if he remembered rightly in the latter case the accused was sent by a superior officer to take field-glasses, and instead of that he took a watch, and, moreover, he converted it to his own use. The judgment in that case proceeded on the ground that there was no evidence that the taking of the property of a private person for private purposes was an act of regular warfare.

Mr. McGregor said that on that point it was difficult for him to cite authority. In the first place, there was no evidence as to what were acts of regular warfare. In the second place, acts of regular military warfare were largely what the military force found to be necessary at the time to effect its end.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose a British military officer had flogged a man and had been tried and found guilty by a jury, would this Court interfere with the verdict of the jury?]

Yes, my lord, if there were a general order from Lord Roberts, or any responsible military officer that it was the duty of that officer to do this.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Which would have to be proved.]

Yes, there would have to be such evidence as would satisfy the jury.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The onus would be on the prisoner to prove, if the act was contrary to civilised warfare, he had authority to do it.]

Mr. McGregor said that in cases he had quoted the men who actually gave the order were not called.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If there were evidence to show that the act was authorised or that the act was according to the ordinary rules of civilised warfare, possibly the Court might say: "We order that the prisoner be released"; but if there is no such evidence how can the Court order the release of the prisoner?]

Mr. McGregor said that in this case there was the fact that there were witnesses on the part of the Crown, who said in cross-examination that they had seen a proclamation which said that people who disobeyed orders should be flogged or fined.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is that evidence, if the proclamation could be obtained? Is it evidence to say, "I saw a proclamation," if that proclamation can be obtained? If you could not obtain the proclamation you should have proved that in evidence, and you could then have produced secondary evidence. Because I am not satisfied that there was such a proclamation. I am not satisfied that either General Hertzog or General Smuts gave that general order to flog people. We have not heard either Smuts or Hertzog. I cannot assume these people gave the orders.]

Mr. McGregor cited Hall, on International Law (3rd edition, page 113), Whetton, on International Law (page 439, section 346b), and said that, of course, he must admit that if it were held that a rebel could not claim any belligerent rights or status, then his argument must fall away. Counsel also referred to the case of Rex v. Burns, and said that in regard to the proclamation there was evidence on record in the present case that General Smuts had made a speech in which he gave the order to commandants to flog all people who would not keep quiet. Counsel again referred to the case of Smith, and said that Captain Cox, who gave the order to Smith to shoot the native in that instance, had not tried the man before giving the order.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If Cox had been tried in the Supreme Court he would probably have been found guilty and punished, but the military took care he shouldn't come here; they kept him out of the jurisdiction. The Attorney General intended to prosecute him, and afterwards I think the military allowed him to come to give evidence here on condition that he was not to be prosecuted.]

Without calling upon counsel for the Crown,

De Villiers, C.J.: The accused is a British subject. He was tried in the Supreme Court on an indictment charging him with five distinct acts of assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. A plea to the effect that the accused had been recognised as a belligerent, and that the acts complained of were ordinary acts of warfare would, according to the decisions of Solomon, J., in Maritz's case, be a good plea, but the onus of proving that they were ordinary acts of warfare would lie on the accused. The judgment of Mr. Justice Solomon, which was a well-considered, well-reasoned judgment, commends itself to me as containing the law of the country. That judgment was followed by my brother Hopley in the case of Goldenhuis. It was acted upon in that case, and its correctness was recognised also by this Court in the case of Watson v. Bradley. (13 C.T.R. 596). No such defence, as I have stated, was taken, no such plea was raised, but there was evidence given which would have been evidence in support of such a plea. And the only question which to my mind really arises is whether that evidence was sufficient to prove the defence which I have just stated. The accused may be taken to have been a belligerent, but the question is: Has he proved—because the onus clearly lay upon him to show—that the acts were acts of regular warfare? There were five distinct acts of assault. In one case he was charged with striking a man with a sjambok, and a whip; in another case with striking a man with a ring of leather; in another case with striking a man on the chest, and kicking him on the side of the body, and with a sjambok, and a whip striking and beating him on the buttocks, legs, and body; in another case with striking and beating a man with a sjambok and a whip, giving him divers injuries and hurts; and in the last case, where a hawk was assaulted, with a sjambok or whip striking this hawk upon the head, shoulders, and buttocks. Now the acts do not strike one as being ordinary acts of warfare, and I think if they had been, the defendant should have adduced evidence to the effect that all these acts were acts of regular warfare; but there is no evidence to that effect. But, then, it is said that even if they are not regular acts of warfare, they were authorised, if not commanded, to be committed by a superior officer of the accused. Upon this point also the evidence is wholly inconclusive. It is true several witnesses state that they have seen proclamations in which General Smuts and General Hertzog had authorised acts of this kind to be committed, but the proclamations were not produced, and until I see such proclamations, I am not inclined to believe that any orders of this kind were issued by these officers. It is possible that there were such proclamations, but it is not alleged that these proclamations have been destroyed, or that it would have been impossible to produce them. These proclamations would have been the best evidence as to the nature of the commands given by the superior officers of the accused, but there is a total dearth of conclusive evidence as to such commands being given. There was ample evidence before the jury to justify them in arriving at the conclusion at which they did arrive. There was no proof that the act was an act of regular warfare, and if I understand the report of my learned brother Buchanan correctly, the point was placed before the jury. I will read the concluding portion of his report. He says: "The 'usages of civilised warfare' is a very indefinite term, but I agree with the jury's view that prisoner's acts could not be justified under such a designation." Then, in another portion of his report, the learned judge says: "As, however, the Crown, sought to have the test of the proviso in the Proclamation applied to prisoner's acts, I left it to the jury to convict or acquit according as they found whether or not the prisoner's conduct stood the test." The Proclamation to which I refer now is the Proclamation of the 11th June, 1902, which intimated that, upon complying with its provisions, certain rebels surrendering themselves before a date fixed therein would not suffer the punishment of death, fine, or imprisonment, provided they had not been guilty of murder or other acts contrary to the usages of civilised warfare. But that Proclamation is not now before the Court, and my decision does not proceed upon that. For the reasons already stated, I am of opinion that the judgment appealed against must be confirmed.

Hopley, J.: I concur entirely in the view expressed by the Chief Justice, and for the reasons given by him.

Buchanan, J.: The applicant in this case was recently tried before me at the Cape Town Criminal Sessions on an indictment charging the crime of assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. He pleaded not guilty, but the defence set up was that, though he had flogged the several complainants, in so doing he was acting under the orders of superior officers in the enemy's forces, and consequently, though a rebel in arms against his own Government, he was entitled to acquittal. I charged the jury that, even if proved, these facts would not constitute a defence in law. After verdict, at the request of counsel, I reserved for the consideration of this Court the point stated, which questions the validity of my direction to the jury on one point of the case. I have again gone over the authorities cited at the trial. These have been cited again today, and there has not been any new light thrown on the case. Their lordships have decided that the conviction must be sustained, though expressing a dissent from the ruling on the point raised. There is no doubt the verdict of the jury can be justified on other grounds, which I have briefly referred to in my report, and I will not now go into them. Those grounds so strong against the prisoner are what I alluded to in remarking on the academical nature of this argument. I wish now to confine my remarks to the special matter under review. In the Court below, and again here, prisoner's counsel relied mainly on the case of Watson v. Bradley, heard in the Supreme Court last June, quoting from a newspaper cutting, as the case has not yet appeared in the law reports. That was an appeal from a Magistrate's decision in a civil action, giving damages against a rebel for appropriating a mare belonging to the plaintiff. The magistrate had founded his judgment on the earlier case of Steenkamp v. Kyd (15, S.C. Reports, p. 221), also an appeal from a Magistrate's decision, holding rebels liable in damages for an assault committed upon the plaintiff, even although the defendants were not all present when the assault had been committed. There the Supreme Court unanimously upheld the Magistrate's decision on the ground that citizens who had gone into rebellion with a common purpose were severally and individually liable for the consequences of acts done in carrying out such common purpose. The learned Chief Justice said in that case: "It is nowhere laid down in express terms that a person who conspires with others to wage war against the Queen, and joins them in appointing a leader to conduct the war, is responsible for damage done to individuals by the orders of such leader, if such orders might reasonably have been contemplated as a consequence of the conspiracy. But such a rule may be fairly deduced from the cases relating to the law of agency. And if, in future cases, the rule is construed by the light of the facts of the particular case in which it is judicially laid down, no danger can arise from its being somewhat too broadly or too narrowly stated." And again, further on: "If an attack on the plaintiff might reasonably have been anticipated as a consequence of the rebellion, the defendants must be held liable in damages for the injuries inflicted upon him." In Watson v. Bradley the force which took the plaintiff's mare, and which force the defendant had joined, did not consist solely of rebels, but was a commando of a belligerent enemy. The mare was taken by orders of an official of the enemy, and, the defendant stated, by a Free State burgher, not by himself. The ground for distinguishing this case from that of Steenkamp v. Kyd is thus put by the learned Chief Justice: "The question in this case is, whether a British subject who joined a commando of Orange Free State burghers after they had invaded the Colony, and had been recognised as belligerents, is civilly liable in damages for any act of regular warfare committed by such commando in this colony, even if he has neither personally committed such act, nor derived any benefit from it." Stress was in argument laid on his lordship's use of the words "recognised as belligerents," and it was sought to apply them to the rebel joining the commando, but this is evidently not the interpretation to be put on them. His lordship was allowing to the enemy's forces as being recognised belligerents as opposed to the force of rebels who, in the case of Steenkamp v. Kyd, had banded themselves together and who were then referred to as being an "unlawful assembly." That these words are not intended to assign protection to the rebel is clear from a subsequent remark in his lordship's judgment to the effect that he was not prepared to say that a British subject joining a belligerent enemy stood on exactly the same footing in regard to civil liability as the enemy himself. I fully concur in a remark made by his lordship during the argument in the case of White v. Barnard (13 C.T.R. 160): "The rights of war would apply to the enemy, but not to the citizens of this country." These cases, however, were all civil actions and do not necessarily conclude the proposition when set up in a criminal trial. Leaving the question of civil liability aside, there were certain remarks made by the learned Chief Justice in the case of Watson v. Bradley, which prisoner's counsel quoted as indicating his lordship's opinion as to the criminal liability of rebels. His lordship had said: "If the plaintiff's contention is correct, the defendant would be equally liable to a criminal prosecution for the theft of the horse, and if a single person was killed by the commando after he joined it, he would have been guilty of murder. As I have already remarked, he was certainly guilty of high treason in joining the commando at all, but it does not follow that every act of regular warfare rendered him liable to criminal prosecution for such act." These words must be read in conjunction with the facts of the case under consideration. I take them to mean that the defendant was not necessarily involved in collective responsibility for all the acts of the enemy, whose commando he had joined, not that a subject joining the enemy, thereby received a special protection for any acts committed by himself while in rebellion. Counsel also strongly relied on the succeeding sentences of his lordship's judgment, viz.: "This question appears to have been carefully considered in the case of Maritz, who was tried for murder before the Treason Court at Mafeking on the 7th November, 1901. 'It has been urged,' said Solomon, J., delivering judgment on behalf of the full Court, that this carrying out of orders of his superior officer would not be a defence on the part of the prisoner Maritz, as he was a rebel, and cannot cover himself under the order of Snyman. True, he was an insurgent, and had joined the Republican forces, and therefore every single act he performed with them was an act of treason; but to say that, because he was a rebel, he is not entitled to a belligerent's ordinary rights, would be going too far. If we did so, we should have to say that every shot fired by rebels is the crime of attempted murder, but no such charge has been brought before us, although there were some hundreds so engaged. The insurgents who joined the burghers must be placed on the same footing as those burghers fighting against us." Now, if this was intended to be a statement of our common law, I can only say that I cannot find any authority in support thereof. It may have been intended to be laid down as a rule to be followed by the Special Court in carrying out the special duties entrusted to it by a very exceptional Act of Parliament, an Act which created the tribunal in question to deal only with crimes of a political character, and required them to discriminate between what were called "principal offenders" and the rank and file, and which directed that the latter, though guilty of high treason, should suffer only certain political disabilities. That Court was guided in its decisions by questions of policy as well as by principles of law. I do not find that the learned Chief Justice endorsed the bald proposition contained in the last sentence cited, though it was stated it had been followed by other judges in the trial of criminal charges, and it is significant that, after making this quotation, his lordship made the remark before referred to, that, in regard to civil liability, he was not prepared to say that a subject joining the enemy stood in exactly the same position as the enemy himself. The Special Court judgment admits that the rebel may be punished for his treason, but to assert that such a rebel can only be punished as a traitor, and is exempt from trial on other criminal charges because he is a rebel, even though he should not have been charged with treason, appears to me, beyond doubt, an assumption utterly without legal foundation. A defence might possibly be set up to a charge founded on some specific act of the rebel, where the accused had been tried generally for high treason, on the ground that the major crime covered the minor offence, but the mere statement of the converse case, that a rebel cannot be convicted of an assault because he had committed the crime of high treason, shows how untenable is the position taken up in this case. High treason is the most serious crime that can be committed in any State, and it is with us, theoretically at least, punishable with death. If a death sentence was inflicted upon conviction for high treason, it would be a work of supererogation to consider the liability of a rebel to punishment for minor acts committed by him. But it is quite a different matter where there has been no attempt to punish for the grave offence, to hold that because he has committed the more serious crime, therefore there can be no punishment inflicted for any acts committed by a rebel which may amount to some lesser crime. The contention relied on for the accused is that the rebel must be excused because he was acting under orders. Orders from whom? From a public enemy, under whose command the rebel, contrary to his allegiance and his duty, had voluntarily placed himself. The acceptance and acting on orders so given was in itself an offence, not a privilege conferring any immunity. If the accused took the field at all, his duty was to his own country, and to repel the invader, not to attempt to destroy his countrymen who remained loyal. To excuse a rebel under such circumstances would be in effect to say that the more serious the act of rebellion, and the more the treason was evidenced by overt acts, and the greater the lengths to which disloyalty was carried, the more complete the protection to which the rebel was entitled. I have already shown that the proposition that citizens who have joined the enemy must be placed on the same footing as the enemy's burghers, is not supported by the Supreme Court cases cited, as far as civil liability at any rate is concerned, and I do not see any principle upon which it should be applied to criminal cases. I find no solid reason for granting to a person guilty of high treason exemption from liability for his other crimes simply because he was a rebel when he committed them, and at the same time holding that such exemption would not extend to a person guilty of any other serious crime besides treason. I must say it caused me some surprise to hear it seriously argued in a Court of Law that a person could take advantage of his own misconduct, and set up as a defence for his commission of one crime the fact that he had also at the same time committed another, and much more serious offence. The fact that there was a state of war between two countries does not excuse the misconduct of a subject towards his own Sovereign. Belligerents may as between themselves adopt certain rules for the conduct of the war, which after all is a contest by force between nations, just as duellists may have their code of honour. But law abhors the settlement of questions by the strong hand of armed men. Restrictions imposed by international comity are outside the law of a country dealing with its own subjects. I have not heard anything urged during the arguments to raise any doubt in my mind as to the correctness of the direction given to the jury. It may be a question of policy how far the sentence of the law, after it has been pronounced, should be carried into effect, but that is not a matter for the consideration of the Court. The proper and only safeguard to take is to be guided by legal principles, and not to infringe upon the functions of the Executive. If this distinction between law and policy had always been kept clearly in view, I believe no conflict of decision could have arisen. Though I may differ from the individual opinion of my brother judges, I must, of course, consider myself bound by a decision of this Court, which is that of a Court of Appeal.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

MALCOMMESS AND CO. V. { 1904.
FARMERS' CO-OPERATIVE CO. { Feb 19th.

Purchase and sale—"More or less"—Estimate—Guarantee.

The plaintiffs bought from the defendant company 18,000 bags—more or less—of good sound potatoes, at 11s. per 100 lbs., the broker's note adding that a large quantity of the potatoes were still in the ground, that the number of bags was mentioned as a fair estimate, and that if the number should be less, the sellers should only deliver "all they have purchased and all they have rights over."

Held, that there was no guarantee that the number of bags would be near 18,000.

Held further, that the company, which had branches in the adjoining divisions of Queenstown and Cathcart, was bound to deliver all the potatoes it had purchased or had rights over in both divisions, and was liable in damages in respect of potatoes which it had purchased or over which it had rights in one of those divisions and afterwards sold to other purchasers.

This was an action brought by Malcommess and Co., carrying on business as merchants at East London, Cathcart, and elsewhere, against the Farmers' Co-operative Company, whose head offices are at East London, to recover £1,000 damages for breach of contract upon a broker's note for the sale of potatoes.

The plaintiffs' declaration set forth that the plaintiffs carried on business in partnership at East London, Cathcart, and elsewhere, under the style or firm of Malcommess and Co. The defendants were the Farmers' Co-operative Company, Ltd. On the 19th July, 1902, the parties entered into an agreement whereby the defendant undertook to deliver to the plaintiffs, at 11s. per 100 lb., about 18,000 bags of potatoes, more or less, in good, sound, and merchantable order, such potatoes being guaranteed good, sound eating potatoes, delivery to be completed by the end of August, 1902, and payment to be made as each parcel was delivered. The defendant specially undertook that the quantity to be delivered should be very close to 18,000 bags, and should include all such potatoes which the defendants had purchased, and all which they had rights over. The plaintiffs were ready and willing to receive the said potatoes, but the defendants committed a breach of the contract, in that they only delivered to the plaintiffs before the end of August 3,000 bags, and failed and neglected to deliver to the plaintiffs all such potatoes as they had purchased and had rights over. Plaintiffs claimed £1,000 as damages for breach of contract. The broker's note referred to by the plaintiffs in their declaration was dated the 19th July, 1902, and was in the following terms: "Bought on account of Messrs. Malcommess and Co., Cathcart, of the Farmers' Co-operative Co., Ltd., in good, sound, and merchantable order, about 18,000 bags (more or less), guaranteed good, sound eating potatoes, at 11s. per 100 lb. net, potatoes to be delivered at stations between Thomas River and Queen's Town. Trucks to be supplied by buyers, delivery to be completed by August, payment as each parcel is delivered at station. The sellers will render assistance in securing trucks as far as lies in their power, and will load potatoes if trucks are supplied. Seller to pay brokerage and stamps—(Signed) F. Coutts and Co., Brokers, East London."

In their plea, the defendants stated that it was specially stipulated, inasmuch as large quantities of the potatoes referred to were still in the ground, that, if the amount received by the defendant was less than 18,000 bags, the company was only bound to deliver all that they had purchased and had rights over. At the date of the broker's note, the defendant company had purchased 8,050, and had offers of 5,200 more, but the sellers only delivered 3,176 bags out of the 8,050, and none of the 5,200 offered were delivered. The 3,176 bags were offered to the plaintiffs, but only 2,986 were accepted by them. The defendant company had not received the balance of the bags sold to them as aforesaid, by reason of the plaintiffs inducing the sellers to the defendant company to enter into fresh contracts with them (the plaintiffs) to sell and to deliver to them, and they also induced the persons who had offered to sell to the defendant company to sell and deliver to them (the plaintiffs) instead, in consequence of which the defendant company did not receive the bags sold them and offered for sale to them. The defendant company, when this came to their notice, protested against the course followed by the plaintiffs. The defendant company contended that if there was any failure (which they did not admit) on their part to carry out the contract set forth in the broker's note, the same was occasioned by the action of the plaintiffs in inducing the aforesaid sellers, and the persons who had offered to sell to them, to break their contracts, and that the plaintiff could not, therefore, now take advantage of any lesser number of bags being delivered to them.

As a claim in reconvention, the defendants (plaintiffs in reconvention) said that, of the 2,986 bags accepted by Malcomess and Co., they had paid for 2,951 only, leaving a sum of £34 10s. 9d. due to the company. They, therefore, claimed this sum.

In their replication to the claim in reconvention, the plaintiffs (defendants in reconvention) admitted that the sum of £34 10s. 9d. was due, and tendered the same. They joined issue on the plea to the claim in convention.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for the plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for the defendant.

Charles Anthony Dormer, manager at Cathcart, for the plaintiffs, said that he was from their side the person who had dealt with the contract. Mr. Turner negotiated the broker's note. The contract was signed 19th July, 1902. Of the total amount to be delivered, the amount delivered was 2,986. That included as many as were taken after a quantity had been sorted from an unsatisfactory lot. The defendants tendered 3,176 bags. The difference was rejected as not being "good, sound-eating potatoes." The potatoes were delivered at the stores at Cathcart. It was a rising market, and the plaintiffs had large orders for Johannesburg, Bulawayo, and other places. Potatoes of the best class rose as high as 14s. between July and October. Potatoes of good average quality were sold at 12s. 6d. or 13s. The plaintiffs had large contracts with the Repatriation Department for the supply of the very best potatoes. Plaintiffs had an agent in the country buying potatoes, and witness was also buying. Not to his knowledge did they set themselves to break their contracts with the defendants. It was possible that they might have bought potatoes which the defendants intended to buy. They paid about 10s. 6d. to 10s. 8d. a bag, weighing about 180 to 185 lb. No protest or remonstrance was made to witness by the defendants with regard to the plaintiffs buying against them. The only remark made by any representative of the defendants was an observation by Mr. Stephen, who said that the farmers seemed to sell first to one and then to another. A fair figure for damage due to loss of market through non-delivery would be 1s. 6d. per 100 lb. They had a market for all the potatoes they could have got.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The bags sent to Johannesburg, Bulawayo, and Kimberley consisted of about 150 lb., but a bag about Queen's Town, Tarkastad, and that district was always understood to contain about 180 to 185 lb. They sold to Mr. Lawrence, of Kimberley, at 11s. 6d. to 12s. That was about the commencement of the season. Later on, about October, they sold to Mr. Lawrence at 12s. 6d. to 13s. He remembered Mr. Stephen coming to him and saying that the plaintiffs were buying potatoes from Wiggall, which the defendant company had bought for this order. He remembered Stephen warning him in July that if the plaintiffs went on buying the company would not be able to carry out their contract. Witness took the warning in a friendly way. After the conversation he bought further potatoes from Wiggall. Practically speaking, there were no large buyers on the spot except plaintiffs' and defendants' representatives. A certain number of people, however, were sending up orders from the coast. He believed the plaintiffs had bought some potatoes from the farmers which the latter had sold to the company. He knew that some of the people from whom he was buying were the same as those from whom the defendants were buying. He did not remember Mr. Stephen selling 2,000 bags of potatoes to him which the defendants had bought. They rejected 190 bags from Hart's supply. The good potatoes were sorted out. Between August and September plaintiffs purchased about 9,900 bags. In the Cathcart district the potatoes were delivered by the farmers in their wagons. They afterwards bought 127 bags from Hart at 9s. 6d. per bag. Out of the 16 people from whom the company had bought the plaintiffs had bought from twelve. The plaintiffs purchased from these people 2,017 bags. In one or two cases the farmers brought in wagons of potatoes to the order of the defendant company, but they did not deliver them, because the defendant company were not paying cash. He did not sell 8,000 or 9,000 bags to the De Beers Company at 9s. a bag, or any other price. He might have sold so large a quantity to a Port Elizabeth firm at 12s. 6d. a bag.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The parties from whom the plaintiffs bought when the defendants would not pay cash were Mr. Wiggall and Mr. C. F. Miller. The potatoes from Hart's supply they rejected, and subsequently they bought them from Hart at 9s. 6d. a bag, and sorted out the unmarketable ones. He did not know whether all the members of the defendant company were farmers; he knew that a number of farmers were members. The plaintiffs did not bind themselves under their contract not to buy from anyone.

John H. Bailey, chief goods clerk in the C.G.R., at Queen's Town, said he produced consignment notes of potatoes sent during August, September, and October by the defendant company from the Queen's Town Station to Johannesburg, Mafeking, and Aliwal North.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Wm. Temple Noorse, managing director of the defendant company, residing at East London, said that the company was registered. In 1902, when the contract was entered into, they had no branch at Cathcart. A branch had since been opened, and Mr. Stephen, a director of the company, negotiated the contract for the company. Mr. Stephen acted for the Cathcart district. Certain potatoes were purchased by the company for the farmers. Memoranda were forwarded by Mr. Stephen to the company, giving details of his purchase. The documents showed that 8,050 bags had been purchased. Witness purchased 400 bags; the rest were all purchased by Mr. Stephen. Mr. Stephen also obtained offers from other persons amounting to 5,200 bags. Witness believed those persons were all shareholders in the company. The farmers' bags averaged about 190 or 200 lb., and they varied a good deal. In transactions between dealers the bags were usually about 150 lb. When the brokers' note was entered into all the crops were in the ground. A rainy season followed after the contract had been entered into, the crops were late, and they were not so large. The defendant company had delivered to the plaintiffs all the potatoes they had received, or had rights over. Not one of the farmers from whom they had options delivered any potatoes to the company. The options were all verbal. As to the Queen's Town consignments, those referred to transactions from the Queen's Town branch, and had nothing to do with the Cathcart contract. Witness did not know anything definite with regard to these consignments. It was possible that those consignments might have been sent by the company on behalf of some of the shareholders. The company did not sell to anyone but the plaintiffs; he could not speak as to the operations of the branches. They did everything they possibly could in order to fulfil the contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness identified the signature of G. P. Noorse on letters sent from Queen's Town to Johannesburg as that of his brother, who was a director of the company. The letters referred to two consignments, each of over 100 bags, sent by the company to Johannesburg. They delivered to the plaintiffs all the potatoes they could; that was as far as the head office was concerned. They did not send any bags under the contract from East London. The Queen's Town branch was under separate management, and could enter into separate contracts. They had not instituted any actions for damages against farmers who had not kept to their contracts. Certain of the contracts between the company and the farmers had been destroyed in the fire. Three contracts were produced; in only one of these was any quantity stated.

Thomas Alfred Stephen, director of the defendant company, said he was commissioned by the company to buy up during May and June all the potatoes in the Cathcart district. After entering into the transactions, he made certain memoranda (produced), showing the results of negotiations with the farmers. At the time they purchased only 400 bags were out of the ground. The memoranda showed the farmers' estimate of what there was going to be. All the potatoes except the 400 bags sold by Warden, were negotiated by witness. In August, 1902, witness had a conversation with Dormer about Wiggall's potatoes, and Dormer told him he was aware of the fact that three loads of potatoes he had received from Wiggall had meanwhile been sold to the company. Witness told him that this was not the only case in which potatoes belonging to the company had been supplied to him, and he warned Dormer not to enter into large contracts on the strength of getting 18,000 bags from the company. Witness made every endeavour to get potatoes to fulfil the contract, and even paid for potatoes a price which left no margin of profit. The season was a bad one, the yield being very bad indeed.

By Mr. Schreiner: When witness spoke to Dormer, what he meant to convey was that if Dormer bought from the farmers he could not expect to receive the potatoes from witness's company. Witness paid up to 10s. 6d. in order to fulfil this contract. He had offered this price to Mr. Francis in August, and to E. Gibbons and Sons. The latter was one of the firms who had given an option. No price was agreed upon when the option was given.

Norman Mackenzie McDonald, secretary of the defendant company, produced a return of the options arranged by Mr. Stephen and of the purchases from farmers made by the plaintiffs that the defendants had previously secured. He said that a fire took place in the company's premises, and a large number of documents were destroyed. He could not say whether there were documents burned under which potatoes were sold to the company.

By the Court: He did not know anything with regard to the Queen's Town consignments.

Counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. Schreiner first addressed himself to the broker's note. He said that the broker's note said "about 18,000 bags." Latitude, of course, should be allowed, but it could never be contended that one-sixth of the quantity was "about." Counsel quoted Benjamin on sales. He said that the contract must be read as stipulating that the quantity which the defendants would deliver would be close to 18,000, or reasonably within the neighbourhood thereof.

[De Villiers, C.J., put it whether the 18,000 was merely an estimate.]

Mr. Schreiner said that the broker's note stipulated somewhere in the neighbourhood of or close to 18,000 bags.

[De Villiers, C.J., said that the question was whether the sale was bona fide. The defendants could not deliver more bags than they got.]

Mr. Schreiner said that the note said "the quantity should be very close to that." He contended that they must construe the document as a whole. The primary stipulation was to sell "18,000 bags more or less." The plaintiffs, because this was a large contract representing over two million pounds of potatoes, said they would give 6d. more per bag than the prices they were paying. He had come into court prepared to say perhaps 20 per cent. shortage would be a reasonable margin, but when the defendants' shortage was something like 85 per cent. then were they to be heard when they said that they had not committed a breach of contract? He submitted that the measure of damages should be the difference between the quantity supplied and the quantity stipulated, giving a reasonable and fair and even liberal deduction from the 18,000 bags that the defendants should deliver. He contended that the evidence given for the defendants did not justify them in claiming that they had entered into the contract in good faith. The method upon which the defendants had proceeded might be smart business, but it was not good faith in law. The defendants had undertakings for 8,050 bags, and the rest they said they had options for. As a matter of fact, the defendants complete breach was something like 8,000 bags, which would work out at £600, and, taking the profit at 1s. per bag, or £900 taking the profit at 1s. 6d. per bag. He urged that the plaintiffs were entitled to a substantial measure of damages.

Mr. Searle said that this was not an action founded upon false, reckless, or gross misrepresentation. The action was for breach of contract in failing to supply the quantity of potatoes set out in the note. The potatoes were in the ground at the time. He submitted that the only person who had anything to do with the matter, so far as the company was concerned, was Mr. Stephen, except for the small amount of 400 bags. He contended that they had endeavoured to carry out the contract. The defendants thought they had rights of option over certain farmers, which, as a matter of fact, they found they could not enforce. The contract was really a Cathcart contract. He could not give any opinion in regard to the transaction of the Queen's Town branch. The matter was dealt with bona fide by the defendant on the basis of Stephen's purchase. The contract said that the potatoes should be delivered at stations between Thomas River and Queen's Town. As a matter of fact, the deliveries were made at the stores of Messrs. Malcomess. He submitted that the plaintiffs must have known they were buying from the defendants' own people, and, as a matter of fact, they purchased 4,647 bags from people who had entered into contracts or had promised options to the defendants. The plaintiffs were not entitled to take advantage of their own wrong. With regard to the contracts that the defendants had with the farmers for the supply of 8,000 bags, the defendants actually supplied to the plaintiffs 3,000 bags; the plaintiffs purchased 2,000 bags from people who were under contract with the defendants; and the remaining 3,000 bags were short through failure of the crop. With regard to the Cathcart contract and Mr. Stephen's purchases, the company had handed over to the plaintiffs everything they had received. If the defendants had committed a breach of contract, then 1s. on each bag would be a fair balance, and, as to the number of bags to be taken as the basis of damages, he contended that a fair method would be to take the difference between the quantity actually received by the defendants and the quantity they delivered to the plaintiffs.

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The terms of the contract are in writing. A broker's note was executed by which the plaintiffs bought from the Farmers' Co-operative Company, Ltd., in good, sound, and mercantile condition, about 18,000 bags (say 18,000 bags, more or less), guaranteed to be sound eating potatoes, at 11s. (say 11s. sterling) per 100 pounds potatoes, to be delivered at stations between Thomas River and Queen's Town, trucks to be supplied by buyers, delivery to be completed by the end of August prox., payment as each parcel is delivered at the station. As a large quantity of the potatoes are still in the ground (ready for digging), it is difficult to tell the exact quantities, but, in stating 18,000 bags, a fair estimate has been made, and the amounts should be very close to that." If the contract had stood here there would have been force in the argument that the number of bags was only mentioned as a fair estimate, and not by way of guarantee that anything approaching that number would be delivered. But the contract continues: "It is, however, understood that if there are more, the buyers shall have the option of accepting surplus, and if less, the sellers are only bound to deliver all they have purchased, and all they have rights over." In point of fact, the quantity was less. The sellers are, therefore, bound to deliver all they have purchased; all they have rights over. The defendants have satisfied the Court that so far as Cathcart branch is concerned the sellers have delivered all they had purchased, and all they had rights over, but it appears that the company also has a branch at Queen's Town, and at Queen's Town they have undoubtedly made sales after the 19th July, and the presumption is that any potatoes so sold by them after that date were potatoes which they had purchased or potatoes in respect of which they had rights. It is said, however, that this agreement could not be extended to Queen's Town, and it was said, supposing there had been potatoes from George, would such potatoes also have been included? Of course, a provision of this kind must be reasonably interpreted. We know that Cathcart and Queen's Town are in the immediate neighbourhood of each other. The defendant company carried on business at both places, and at all events, that would be a reasonable area within which the parties must be understood to have included the potatoes which the defendants might purchase or have rights over. The onus lay upon the defendants to prove that they have delivered all they purchased, and all they had rights over. In regard to Cathcart, they have discharged that onus, but not in regard to Queen's Town. The presumption appears to be that all these potatoes which were sold at Queen's Town after the 19th July were such potatoes as they had purchased, and they had rights over. The evidence was not complete on this point. The information on this point came to the Court by way of telegram, and if the defendants had insisted on further evidence, the Court could not very well have acted on that telegram. But I think the defendant's counsel has been well advised in not incurring any further costs, because it seems to me only reasonable to suppose that even if the whole of that quantity had been purchased—a considerable quantity had probably been purchased—the difference in damages would be very small. As to such potatoes sold at Queen's Town. I am of opinion clearly that there was a breach of contract.

It was the duty of the defendant company, when this broker's note was completed, of which they had full knowledge, to have advised their different branches of the sale, to have advised the branch at Queen's Town not to sell any further potatoes to anyone else on behalf of the company, but to keep them in store on behalf of the plaintiffs, so that the defendants might be enabled to complete their contract to deliver up to 18,000 bags of "good, sound, eating potatoes." To that extent, I am of opinion that the defendants are bound to pay damages. As to the measure of damages, it would seem to me that 1s. per 100 lb. would be a fair estimate of damages. That seems to me, upon a fair consideration of the whole of the evidence, to be the difference between the market price and the purchase price of these potatoes. The total amount, therefore, would be £54 10s., for which amount there should be judgment for the plaintiffs. As to the claim in reconvention, the plaintiffs admit that they owed £34, but they did not tender that amount, because no claim was made. In any case, there is a balance in favour of the plaintiffs, and therefore the plaintiffs, in my opinion, are entitled to the costs of this action. Judgment will be for the plaintiffs for £54 10s. on the claim in convention, and for the defendant for £34 10s. on the claim in reconvention, defendant to pay the costs, except costs of postponement from last term, which will be paid by the plaintiffs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

DREWFS V. DREWFS. { 1904.
Feb. 19th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, instituted by the husband.

Mr. Upington appeared for the plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Counsel stated that the residence of the defendant was unknown, and she had been served by edict, in accordance with the order of the Court, which directed that, failing personal service, service should be effected by publication in the "Government Gazette" and in a Johannesburg newspaper. He now produced an affidavit as to the service.

Fritz Heindrik Julius Drewfs, the plaintiff, said he was a barman, residing at Carnarvon. In April, 1894, he was married to defendant at Hamburg, Germany. They came to this colony in November, 1897, and went to reside at Carnarvon, finally coming to Cape Town in 1901, and starting a boarding-house in Tree-street. There had been quarrels between them. Six weeks after coming to Cape Town, defendant left him without his consent, and went, witness believed, to Stellenbosch. Witness sent her a letter asking her to come back. She said she would never return to him. There were no children of the marriage. The marriage was in community. There was no property.

By the Court: Witness believed his wife was now in Johannesburg. She went to Stellenbosch to work as a dress-maker.

Defendant was ordered to return to plaintiff on the 1st April, failing which, to show cause on the 15th April why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

Postea (April 15th). The rule was made absolute.

HALL V. HALL.

This was an action for divorce, instituted by the wife on the ground of her husband's alleged adultery.

Mr. De Waal appeared for the plaintiff.

Helen Hall, the plaintiff, said she was married to defendant in community of property on the 8th April, 1902, at Sea Point. Two months after marriage defendant went away with the Army Service Corps on duty. He was a draughtsman at the Post-office when witness married him. There was no quarrel between them before he went away. There were no children of the marriage.

Charles Wm. Hy. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register, produced the record of the marriage.

Henry Ford Carey gave evidence in support of the charge of adultery.

A decree of divorce was granted, with costs.

VON WEILLIGH V. VON WEILLIGH.

In this case, the plaintiff, the husband, sued for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for a decree of divorce.

Mr. De Waal appeared for the plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Charles William Henry Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register, produced the register of the marriage of the parties.

Gideon Retief von Weilligh, the plaintiff said he was a land surveyor. He married defendant at the Paarl on the 12th May, 1885. He was now living at Claremont. In 1899 witness left defendant at Stellenbosch to go to the Transvaal as Surveyor-General. During the war he remained in the Transvaal. Afterwards he came to Cape Town, and went into the hospital to receive treatment for his eyes. He sent four telegrams asking his wife to come to him. On the 18th day she came, and she told him she did not care for married life. Defendant was a sickly woman, and had lately undergone an operation. He was willing to receive his wife, but she had refused to come back. He did not want the custody of the children. He had offered to hire a house at Stellenbosch, where they could live together. There were three sons and one daughter issue of the marriage, all being minors.

An order for restitution was granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 1st April, failing which a rule nisi be granted calling on defendant to show cause on the 15th April why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

Postea (April 15th). The rule was made absolute.

ESTATE OF OLIVIER V. VAN ZYL. { 1914. { Feb. 19th.

Insolvency—Undue preference— Contemplation of insolvency.

This was an action to set aside a certain sale on the ground that it constituted a fraudulent and undue preference in insolvency.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was an attorney residing at Barkly East, and was suing in his capacity as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Olivier. This estate was sequestrated in January, 1903, and on the 5th March, 1903, the plaintiff was duly confirmed in his position as sole trustee. A year previous the insolvent sold to the defendant certain property for the sum of £500, and transfer of the property was passed by Olivier to the defendant. Plaintiff said that at the time of the said transfer Olivier contemplated the sequestration of his estate, and that the said transfer was undue preference, the result of collusion between the parties. Alternatively, the plaintiff said that the defendant was surety upon a bill for the insolvent for £100, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and that the discharge of the bill was undue preference, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant, and also a forfeiture by the defendant of any claim on the estate. Plaintiff said that at the time of the sale the calculated liabilities fairly equalled the calculated assets of the insolvent estate, and, the said sale not being made bona fide, he prayed that the sale might be cancelled and declared null and void, and that the defendant should be ordered to restore the property to the plaintiff, or to pay £600, the value thereof.

The plea admitted the sale of the property, but defendant denied he was a creditor of the said Olivier at the time, and denied that the value of the property was £600. The sale took place in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. M. de Villiers (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

Mr. De Villiers called

Hendrik Adriaan Meintjes, trustee in the insolvent estate of Olivier, who said that in October, 1902, certain claims were handed to him against Olivier. He had a conversation with Cramer, and, as a consequence, he saw the insolvent, who told him that he had sold the farm. Witness sued the insolvent in October on a promissory note, and the proceedings were precipitated in order to prevent transfer. Witness recovered £128. By the time the return had been made transfer had been carried out. When the estate was sequestrated the liabilities amounted to some five or six hundred pounds, and the assets nil. The farm would be valued at £600.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The Divisional Council valued the farm in 1902 at £330, but he valued it now at £600. There was only one dissatisfied creditor.

Julius Cornelias said that the insolvent owed him £228 12s. 4d., according to a note, dated 2nd April, 1901. The insolvent never intimated that he had sold the farm to Van Zyl. In February, 1902, the insolvent brought him some wool, and informed witness that all the stock in his possession was his own. In May the insolvent promised to pay witness £80, but he failed to do so.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The insolvent was indebted to his firm to the amount of £278 in February, 1902, and, with other accounts, it was over £300. When he bought the wool he did not know that the insolvent was in a bad way.

The insolvent Olivier stated that in May, 1901, he borrowed £100, and gave a promissory note to pay in nine months. Some time before the bill fell due he saw Mr. Van Zyl, who told him it would be unnecessary to meet the bill in the stipulated time. The farm was on a lease, and witness got £50 a year for it. £500, he thought, was a fair price to put on the farm.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Mr. Gardiner did not call any evidence, and Mr. M. de Villiers having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff's declaration in this case complains of the alienation of certain landed property to the creditor at the time sequestration was in contemplation by the debtor, with an intention to prefer the creditor. It turns out, however, that the defendant was not at that time a creditor of the insolvent, and therefore an alternative clause has been introduced into the declaration, representing that the defendant was surety on a promissory note for the sum of £100, and that the alienation was made with intention to prefer the defendant in the matter of his suretyship. It has been laid down in the Privy Council's decisions that the person bringing the action must prove the contemplation of sequestration and the intention to prefer. No doubt as has been stated, this question must be gathered from all the circumstances of the case, and that the denial by the insolvent himself is not necessarily conclusive. It is, however, one of the elements to be taken into consideration. In consequence of the very great difficulty found to exist in proving these facts, the Act of 1884 was passed, by which Act the onus of proving contemplation and intention was shifted from the person bringing the action upon the person who received the benefit, provided, however, that the transaction took place within six months of the sequestration of the estate. Here, unfortunately for the plaintiff, the transaction which is questioned took place over a year before the sequestration. Consequently, the Act of 1884 does not apply in this instance, and this case must be tried like one of the old cases before that Act. The learned counsel has admitted that there is great difficulty in proving these requirements, and urges the Court to assume that they existed mainly from the fact that the property alienated was the chief asset in the estate. But under the circumstances, is this fact sufficient? In the first place, let us take the value of the property when it was sold at the beginning of 1902. The insolvent states, and he is not contradicted, that he had offered his farm for sale before he treated with defendant, and that he could not find a purchaser. At that time there was a bond on the farm for £200, and a general bond for £200. He thought both these bonds were charges upon the farm, and that this £400 would have to be taken off the purchase price. He offered the farm to the defendant for the sum of £500. Now, it does not seem to me that the price given by defendant is itself any indication of anything wrong. I think it proved that £500 was a fair sum to pay for the farm under the circumstances. I see by the valuation of the Divisional Council in the year 1902, the farm was valued at £330, and in 1904, at £300 for Divisional Council purposes. It is true the trustee now says that in his estimation it was worth £600, but under the circumstances the price given was not so inadequate as to raise suspicion. The insolvent wished to relieve himself of the two bonds, and also of his debt due to Potgieter. It appears in 1901, the insolvent had borrowed £100 from Potgieter, and gave him a promissory note payable nine months after date, to which the de-defendant became surety. The insolvent stated that before the note became due he spoke to defendant about getting it, and the defendant said that Potgieter was not in a hurry for the money. The insolvent, however, did not like this debt hanging over him, and agreed that, after payment of the two bonds, the balance of £110 should go in settlement of this debt. A question has been raised: when was the property sold? Now, it is alleged by the insolvent it was sold in February, 1902. It is true in April an agreement was reduced to writing, but I find from the declarations of the purchaser and the seller, that they both give the date as the 10th of February, 1902. These declarations were made long before any question of undue preference had been raised, and they afford corroboration of the other evidence, that there was a sale in February, 1902. The only creditor who is interested in the estate is Seligman, and several times after the sale complained of he himself received money from the insolvent. The farm had been let by the insolvent, and the year's rent was paid to Seligman in April or May. Subsequently he had further transactions with the insolvent, and returned the £50 rent, on condition the insolvent paid him £80 out of his earnings as a transport rider for the military. The insolvent failed to pay this £80. Seligman took action, obtained judgment, and cleared off the whole of the insolvent's movable property, and recovered another £120. Now, under these circumstances, it is difficult to hold that the sale alone is proof of contemplation of sequestration or intention to prefer. There was consideration for the contract, and valuable consideration, in the payment of the debts of the insolvent. There does not seem to be any reason to suggest a collusive arrangement between the parties; the agreement of sale was reduced to writing in the office of an attorney in the town, and everything was done openly. It is true transfer was not given at the time, but it has been satisfactorily proved that the purchase had taken place months before, and the money had gone to pay other creditors. I cannot find on the evidence in this case there was any intention to prefer, or that there was contemplation of sequestration at the time this property was sold. Judgment will, therefore, be absolute from the instance, with costs.

VAN DER MERWE V. VAN DER MERWE AND VICE.

Mr. Close, for the defendant, moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of commissioners in Bombay and Dublin, to take the evidence of Lieutenant McKenzie and Lieutenant Shaw respectively.

Mr. M. de Villiers, for the plaintiff, consented on behalf of his client.

Order granted, Mr. Edward Cumming, of Dublin, and Mr. Leslie Crawford, of Bombay, being appointed as commissioners.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

STEVENS V. STEVENS. { 1904.
Feb. 22nd.

Restitution of conjugal rights.

The Court granted a decree for restitution of conjugal rights even though the applicant appeared somewhat unwilling to rejoin her husband. The husband was directed to furnish the applicant with means wherewith to defray costs of her journey.

This was an action instituted by Wilhelmina Caroline Stevens, against her husband, Frederick Stevens, now of Tasmania, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, on the ground of his unlawful and malicious desertion.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (who appeared for the plaintiff) said that leave had been granted to sue by edictal citation. The defendant had written saying that it would be impossible for him to be here in February, but he would be here in March.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register at the Colonial Office, produced the entry of marriage in 1890.

Wilhelmina Caroline Stevens, the plaintiff, said that after the marriage she lived with her husband for two years at Woodstock. In July of that year he left her, and said he was going to Australia. He told her that she could go and look for another fellow. Defendant originally came from Australia. Defendant wrote to her about a year ago, and she received another letter from him about a fortnight ago. One child had been born of the marriage, but it was now dead.

De Villiers, C.J. (after examining the letter of a fortnight ago) said it seemed to be a very affectionate one.

Witness, in answer to the Chief Justice, admitted that she had told the defendant in her letter not to write to her or send for her. She also told him not to come to her. Defendant said that he did not want her to write to him or go to him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then why do you ask him to come back to you now?]

Witness did not reply.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This does not appear to be a bona fide action.]

Witness, replying to further questions, said that if the defendant returned to her she was willing to receive him. Defendant had not contributed towards her support, and he had not offered her a home. He would not work here unless he could get £3 a day. He was a jeweller.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the defendant sends you £50 are you prepared to go to him in Australia?]

Witness: I suppose I shall have to go.

De Villiers, C.J.: A decree of restitution will be granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th July, provided that it will be a sufficient compliance with this order, if the defendant sends to the plaintiff's attorneys the sum of £50 to enable her to return to him, and to pay her necessary expenses. Failing compliance with this order, a rule will be granted calling on the defendant to show cause on the 1st August why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs. The only ground on which the Court grants a decree of restitution at all is that it was the duty of the defendant on leaving this country if he wished his wife to follow him to provide her with means to follow him, and she apparently has not had them. It is now for him to show that he is prepared to receive her back if he provides the means, and it is clearly understood that if the means are provided she will not be entitled to a decree of divorce. We consider that £50 will be a fair amount to pay her passage money and other expenses, as well as any costs which the plaintiff has already incurred in respect to this action. Upon payment of that amount it is to be considered a settlement in full, and the money will not be handed over to her, but to her attorneys, and will be expended by them on her behalf, and in seeing that the passage money is obtained out of that money.

Postea (August 1st).—The rule was made absolute.

BYDIEN V. ESTATE RAMOA.

In this action, which was for the setting aside of a certain transfer, no appearance was entered for the plaintiff.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said he appeared, along with his learned friend, Mr. Alexander, for the defendant.

De Villiers, C.J.: As no evidence is offered, we must give absolution from the instance, with costs.

Mr. Searle said that the defendant was in the position of executor, and he wished to administer the estate, and it would be more satisfactory to him if he got judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: said that after this there might be no further difficulty in the case. There would be judgment of absolution from the instance, with costs, including costs of the previous application for a rule.

DUNN V. ESTATE DUNN.

Will—Ordinance 15 of 1845.

The Court set aside a will, the testatrix having neither signed it nor acknowledged her signature in the presence of one of the witnesses.

This was an action brought by James Dunn to have set aside a document, dated June 11, 1897, purporting to be the last will and testament of his sister, Mary Emma Dunn, a spinster, the defendant being Morris Greenwall (executor under the said will).

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was the brother of Mary Emma Dunn, who died a spinster, without surviving parents, on the 5th September, 1903, in the district of Swellendam. Plaintiff was by law entitled to succeed to her property. The defendant took out letters of administration as the executor appointed under the will. The document purporting to be the last will and testament of the said Mary Emma Dunn was not legal, because, although it purported to have been signed in the presence of two witnesses, it was only signed in the presence of one of the signatories, one James Joubert, while the other signatory, one Dunoon (not Dunn, as originally stated) did not witness her signature. The document did not purport to appoint any heirs, but bequeathed the whole of the property, movable and immovable, for the purpose of erecting and supporting a destitute home at Ilfracombe, in Devonshire, England. The declaration further alleged that the testatrix was not capable of executing a will at the time of the document, and that she was not of sound mind. Plaintiff prayed for an order declaring the will null and void.

The defendant, in his plea, said that the document was signed by one Joubert and one Dunoon, and that the testator was of sound mind when she executed the document in question. Defendant did not admit that the will was null and void, and he said that he acted bona fide as executor aforesaid. Save as above, he submitted to judgment, and prayed that he should be held harmless as to costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers) for plaintiff.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell) for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner said that the plaintiff depended upon the first part of the allegations, namely, as to non-execution. He also admitted that, as alleged in the plea, there were children living of other brothers—one brother of the whole blood and two other brothers of the half blood. The plaintiff prayed that the will should be declared null and void. The plaintiff's share, counsel added, would work out at about three-eighths of the estate.

Rene Dubois Steyn, record clerk in the Master's office, produced the document in question.

George Dunoon, now of Pretoria, said he was formerly a member of the Cape Civil Service, and in 1897 he was the Resident Magistrate's Clerk at Swellendam. Mr. James Joubert, Civil Commissioner's clerk, came into witness's room, and asked him to sign the document produced as a witness. Witness attached his signature. Miss Dunn was not present. He had only been in the Civil Service for a few months, and did not know the state of the law in regard to wills at that time. As a matter of fact, he was temporary clerk, and had not passed his examination. He had never spoken to Miss Dunn, and had not been in her presence, though he had seen her.

Jacobus Gerhardus Tobias Joubert said he was formerly Civil Commissioner's clerk at Swellendam, and now occupied a similar position at Bedford. He was known as James Joubert. He spoke as to the testator calling at his office, and bringing the document, and afterwards calling again, at his request, and bringing the original and a copy. Witness was usually very particular about the witnessing of documents. Miss Dunn acknowledged her signature in the presence of Mr. Dunoon. He either took her to Mr. Dunoon or Mr. Dunoon came into his room. He took the document, he believed, into Mr. Dunoon's room, and told him which was Miss Dunn's signature.

Mr. Schreiner (to witness): I want you to be very careful, because your evidence, you see, is inconsistent with Mr. Dunoon's. Is it possible that you took the document to Mr. Dunoon's room, and that Miss Dunn was not present when he signed?

Witness: Yes. Replying to further questions, witness said that he had recently had an accident, and had sustained an injury to his head. As a consequence, he had been very much shaken, and his memory was not clear.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He thought that Miss Dunn was present when Mr. Dunoon signed. As far as he could see, Miss Dunn was in a fit state of mind to make a will. Mr. Dunoon had only been at Swellendam a short time. He thought it was probable that Mr. Dunoon was mistaken when he said he signed in his room without anyone else being present.

Re-examined: He could not say that he had previously witnessed a will. He thought Mr. Dunoon was correct in what he had said. He felt so discomposed in his memory that he did not like to commit himself as to anything that happened.

By the Court: He should not like to pit his money against Mr. Dunoon's.

James Dunn, the plaintiff, was called, but was not examined.

This concluded the evidence for plaintiff.

Morris Greenwall, the executor, said he drew the will upon the instructions of the deceased. He thought the deceased was of sound mind. He did not know anything about witnesses not being present when the will was signed. Miss Dunn died in September, 1903. The estate consisted of fixed property, and cash in the bank. The land was sold by public auction, and realised £400. He administered the estate fully. The money was still in his possession. He corresponded with the Master, and, at his suggestion, he opened communications with the Mayor of Ilfracombe. The deceased told him that she had lived in Ilfracombe in her youth. The estate realised £1,250, and after payment of succession duty, and other out-goings, £1,199 remained. The Ilfracombe people said they would make provision to accept the bequest.

Mr. Searle said that after the clear evidence of Mr. Dunoon he could not support the will, but he was quite prepared to support it on the other questions than as to the witnessing.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear, after what Mr. Dunoon has said, that the will cannot be sustained. He states that the will was brought into the room by Mr. Joubert, and signed by him (Mr. Dunoon) in the absence of Miss Dunn, and that there was no subsequent acknowledgment by her of her signature. Under these circumstances, the Ordinance clearly has not been complied with. It is true Mr. Joubert has expressed the view in one part of his evidence that this was not correct, and that Miss Dunn was present, but, on being pressed, he said he would not set his evidence against that of Mr. Dunoon, who was positive that he was not present when the testator signed. The defendant, I think, was quite justified in defending this action, because he had been appointed executor, and it is his duty to protect the will until it is set aside. The Court will order that the will be set aside, and that the costs of this action, including the defendant's expenses as witness, be paid out of the estate. As to the commission of the defendant, I think he is entitled to part, if not the whole. He has performed the duties of executor when he had no reason to believe that the will was not valid. He has performed duties of which the estate will have the benefit. The Court will further order that an executor dative be appointed to the estate, and that such executor dative be authorised to pay to the defendant Greenwall such commission for his administration as the Master of the Supreme Court shall approve. The costs of this action will include the plaintiff's and defendant's witness's expenses.

HADIE V. HADIE.

This was an action brought by Abdol Hadie, of Cape Town, against his wife, Gadeja Hadie, for divorce, on the ground of her adultery with one Hadje Gamja.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in community of property on the 12th August, 1901, and that there was no issue. On divers dates in August, September, and October, 1903, and more particularly the 10th October, the defendant committed adultery with Gamja. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce, and an order declaring the defendant to have forfeited the benefits of marriage in community.

The defendant, in her plea, denied the allegations of adultery. She claimed in reconviction that on divers dates since between the date of the said marriage and November, 1903, plaintiff had been guilty of ill-treatment and cruelty towards her. Owing to the said ill-treatment and cruelty, it was dangerous and intolerable for her to live with the plaintiff. She claimed a decree of judicial separation and division of the joint estate.

The plaintiff, in his replication, denied the alleged ill-treatment.

Mr. McGregor for plaintiff. Mr. Alexander for defendant.

Harry Willis Lynch, private detective, said that he received instructions from Abdol Hadie to make inquiries in regard to his wife. That was in the latter part of last year. He found that Gadeja, the plaintiff's wife was in the habit of going to the house, 189, Loop-st., which was occupied by several Malay tailors. He saw a man named Hadje Gamja there, and he employed him to do certain repairs. On the second occasion when he went, a Saturday, he looked into a room occupied by Gamja as a bedroom and workshop, and saw the defendant and Gamja in a compromising position.

By the Court: This was on the 10th October, 1903. It was before the plaintiff had been convicted.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He knew Gamja when he was sent to the place on the second occasion. He had never seen Gamja's wife. He was informed that Gamja was a married man. He had been to the place three times.

The Court (to Mr. Alexander): What was the conviction?

Mr. Alexander: The plaintiff was convicted of attempting to poison a man and his family, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

By the Court: Witness's fees were a guinea a day, irrespective of whether he succeeded or not.

Hadje Gamja said he was a tailor, carrying on business at 189, Loop-street. He knew the plaintiff and his wife. He admitted committing adultery with the respondent on the 10th October last, and on several other occasions. He had paid the defendant sums of money. He admitted seeing the detective look in the room.

By the Court: There had been no arrangement between the detective and himself.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He was married according to Mohammedan rights. His wife had previously been married. He denied having authorised a letter to be written to Gadeja to the effect that he had received an offer from Abdol Hadie, of £65, if he would give evidence compromising Abdol's wife. He could not write, and he had not authorised the letter to be written. He did not know whether Abdol Hadie was a rich man. He had heard that Abdol owned property. Abdol had not offered money to him. Witness had been summoned to attend the Court.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Gadeja Hadie, the defendant, said that her husband went to Mecca in June, 1902, and he was away until June, 1903. He left her with Shiek Alie. Witness and her husband lived together in Hanover-street until the end of June. She afterwards proceeded against him in the Police Court for assaulting her with a belt and with threatening her.

Mr. Alexander said that for assaults on his wife the plaintiff was in July fined £5, or in default committed for one month, and in August he was committed for 14 days.

Witness (continuing) said that the plaintiff had been ordered to pay her £1 a week. She denied the alleged adultery with Gamja. She admitted that she saw the detective on the 10th October. She received the letter produced, which was signed by Gamja.

By the Court: Abdol was an Arab. She believed he had other women, but he was not married to them.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: When the detective called she was sitting on a chair in Gamja's room. She remembered Lynch looking in the room. She had never been in Hadje Gamja's house on any other occasion than the 10th October.

By the Court: Gamja was a good friend of the plaintiff's.

Cross-examination continued: She called at the invitation of Gamja's wife. Witness had not previously spoken to Gamja. Gamja's wife went out of the room for a little time to make some tea. There had been trouble over a promissory note. Plaintiff had also accused her of adultery with Shiek Alie.

Re-examined: The plaintiff was found guilty of trying to poison Shiek Alie.

Jacobus C. Faure, clerk in the office of the R.M., produced the records of the two cases in the Magistrate's Court.

Shiek Alie said that the plaintiff left his wife in charge of witness and Abdol Casin when he went to Mecca. There was no complaint as to her conduct.

Mr. McGregor having been heard in argument on the facts, without calling on Mr. Alexander the Court gave judgment for the defendant.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am by no means satisfied in this case that the adultery charged has been proved. The whole story seems to me an extremely improbable one—that this defendant, a married woman, should have called at the house of the man Gamja and should there, with the door open and in broad daylight, have committed adultery, and that this adultery should have been committed at a time when both parties to the act knew that there was a stranger in the house calling out their names. The evidence of the detective is that he spoke loud enough for the people themselves to hear, and, notwithstanding that, afterwards, when he put his head into the room, he saw these two people in the act of committing adultery. The whole story seems to be extremely improbable. But, then, if it were true, it seems to me extremely probable that the defendant must have been led into a trap by the detective and Gamja acting in concert. I do not say that this was done, but I do say that if the defendant was tempted into committing adultery by an agent employed by her husband, the plaintiff, the latter is not entitled to a decree of divorce. As to the defendant's claim in re-convention, the marriage was in community of property, the plaintiff has been cruel to her, and he has been twice convicted of assaults upon his wife, one of these assaults being of a somewhat serious nature. In addition to that, the plaintiff is at the present time undergoing a term of ten years' imprisonment. That circumstance, taken in conjunction with the cases in the Police Court, is quite sufficient to entitle the defendant to a decree of judicial separation. The claim of the plaintiff will, therefore, be dismissed, and judgment will be given for the defendant. Upon the claim in re-convention, she will be given judgment for a decree of judicial separation. There will be a division of the joint estate, and the Court appoints Mr. Roos (secretary of the Board of Executors) as receiver, to divide the property between the parties, after payment of the costs of the action out of the joint estate. Considering that the whole of the estate comes from the plaintiff, I think it is only right now that the costs should come out of the joint estate.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon., Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ANDERSON V. CALEDON { 1901.
BATHS, LIMITED. } Feb. 23rd.

Mr. Close, as a matter of urgency, moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of Dr. John S. Nairns, who was about to leave by steamer.

Application granted, Mr. M. de Villiers being appointed as commissioner.

STARK V. BROOMBERG. { 1904.
 } Feb. 23rd.

Encroachment on neighbouring land—Removal of building—Measure of damages.

Where a building which encroaches on neighbouring land has been erected without protest from the owner of the land encroached upon and has stood for a year or more without the owner of such land demanding its removal, it is not the practice of the Court to order it to be removed, but to award damages to the person damaged. In estimating such damages, the Court will not look merely to the value of the land occupied by the encroachment, but will be guided by the loss which such encroachment has caused the owner of the land.

This was an action brought by James Stark, builder and contractor, Observatory-road, against Joseph Broomberg, of Cape Town, for an order for the removal of a certain encroachment, or alternatively, for the payment of £250 damages.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was the registered owner, by transfer, passed to him on the 19th February, 1903, by one Hoffman, of a plot of ground on the Rochester Estate and situate in Cooke-street, Observatory-road, being lot No. 3. The defendant was also the registered owner of an adjoining lot. The plaintiff had discovered and notified to the defendant that certain of the walls of the building erected on the defendant's land encroached upon portion of lot 3, and that the eaves of the said building further overhung the said land. Therefore, that portion of lot 3 was a loss to the plaintiff, and he had demanded damages in the sum of £250. Plaintiff had called upon defendant to pay him compensation in the sum of £250 by way of damages or otherwise, in which case the plaintiff was willing to transfer to the defendant that portion of lot 3, which was encroached upon by the said wall and eaves. Defendant had not paid the said compensation, and he unlawfully continued the encroachment. The plaintiff prayed for an order for the removal of the said encroaching walls and eaves, or alternatively, for the plaintiff to be ordered to pay him compensation in the sum of £250, in which case he tendered transfer of the portion encroached upon.

The defendant in his plea, said that the building encroaching on the plaintiff's land was not erected by him, but by his (defendant's) predecessors in title upwards of ten years ago. He tendered to pay to the plaintiff £25, as purchase price of the land encroached upon.

The replication of the plaintiff, said that he admitted the tender, but that it was insufficient.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the plaintiff. Mr. Benjamin for the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan said he thought it would be admitted by his learned friend (Mr. Benjamin) that the encroachment came to about 2 ft.

[De Villiers. C. J.: It is really a question then of the value of the land?]

Mr. Buchanan: But it is more than that. We say it is not a question merely of the value of the land, but also of damage to the remaining portion of the lot by the taking away of this strip.

[De Villiers. C. J.: Are you prepared to remove the encroachment?]

Mr. Benjamin: I don't think it can very well be removed, because the alleged encroachment consists of the wall and eaves. We purchased the land quite ignorant of the fact that it was an encroachment.

Mr. Buchanan: We offered to make this a party wall if defendant would pay the costs.

Mr. Benjamin said that at the time the offer was made defendant had provisionally arranged for the sale of the land and buildings.

It was agreed that one of the defendant's witnesses, who desired to go away, should be heard first.

Jacob Heindrich Hablutzel, of the firm of J. J. Hofmeyr and Son, auctioneers, said that he was asked his opinion of the value of the land about October last. The estimated value was £15. He still considered that amount to be a fair value. The whole lot was about 80 ft. by 90 ft. The present value was between £400 and £500, perhaps about £450. About 1897 he sold lots on the opposite side of the road. Lot No. 3 at that time would be of the value of about £300 at the outside. The strip in dispute would be worth about £7 or £8, about 7 or 8 years ago. He sold the buildings thereon by instructions of the Sheriff in the early part of last year.

Cross-examined: When he sold the buildings, he was informed that there was an encroachment, but he said that had nothing to do with him. Mr. Courtis, the purchaser, would no doubt know about the alleged encroachment. He considered that £15 was a good value for the strip in dispute. His valuation of the whole of lot 3 was £450, as things were at the present moment. It was true that things were very quiet just now. There had been a great increase in land values since 1897.

Mr. Buchanan then called evidence.

James Stark, the plaintiff, said he bought Lot 3 in February of last year for building purposes. He figured out the plot, which was 90 feet by 80 feet, and he calculated that he should be able to erect upon it five cottages and a shop. He had had plans prepared. He discovered the encroachment about two or three months after the sale, when he was looking for the pegs. He had afterwards had the ground surveyed. He was present when the adjoining land was sold by auction by order of the Supreme Court. He told Courtis, who purchased the ground, about the encroachment. The buildings on the defendant's land had been erected about six years.

By the Court: Witness could only erect four cottages on the ground in stead of five, in consequence of the encroachment. He could only erect five by reducing the size of the rooms, but that would mean great difficulty in letting, and the rentals would be £3 or £4 a month less. There would be also a considerable waste of materials in building smaller rooms.

Mr. Buchanan put in the correspondence, which showed that the defendant had tendered £25, with costs to date in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim. This offer was refused. The plaintiff subsequently offered to settle the matter if the encroaching wall were made a party wall, and costs were paid by the defendant. The defendant did not reply.

Cross-examined: His plans were for the erection of five cottages fronting to Cooke-street. The buildings on the defendant's land had been erected about six years.

George Heywood, builder and contractor, said he had inspected the land encroached on. The drain pipes of defendant's building sloped down towards the plaintiff's ground. He should say at the very least the plaintiff had lost £100 in consequence—that was by the taking away of the strip and the extra cost that would be incurred in building. It would cost about £30 or £40 to remove the eaves, and make a larger gutter. The roof would have to be altered.

Cross-examined: He had not formed an estimate of the value of the plaintiff's lot. He knew that Mr. Stark had had an offer of £550.

John Wm. Goodman, builder, said that he made the plaintiff an offer of £550 for the ground. He did not think he should give much more than £400 now as long as the land had this encroachment. If he had known of the encroachment at the time he made the offer he should have bid about £60 or £70 less.

By the Court: It would not be possible to take the difference off one cottage only, because it would involve an infringement of the Council's regulations. The rooms shown on the plaintiff's plans were practically as small as the Council's byelaws would allow.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Joseph Broomberg, the defendant, said he bought the property in July last. He did not know at the time that there was an encroachment. He instructed Mr. Hablutzel to make an estimate of the value of the strip. The value was estimated to be £15. Witness thought that £25 was a fair offer. The proposal as to a party wall came too late for witness to entertain it. He had an option for the purchase of the property, to be exercised on the 1st March. He did not think the contract would be taken up, and in that case he should be willing to let the plaintiff have the wall as a party wall.

Cross-examined: He knew that there was a dispute as to the encroachment at the time he entered into the contract. He did not know of the encroachment when he purchased the land from Courtis. The plaintiff demanded £650 for the whole of his land, or £250 for the strip, or the removal of the wall.

By the Court: If he removed the wall, he should have to take it away from the whole terrace. It was a passage wall. The cost would be considerable. He had suggested to the plaintiff that he should wait till after the 1st March.

Mr. Benjamin said he believed the buildings were erected by a lady who was now dead.

Mr. Buchanan said that the plaintiff did not know anything before as to this proposal of the defendant to give the plaintiff party rights over the wall after the 1st March.

Mr. Buchanan: The defendant takes up the position that he is bound only to pay for the actual piece of land on which he admits he has encroached; but the value of the whole property has been decreased by this encroachment. We do not ask that the defendant should be ordered to pull down this wall, but we do ask that he should meet us liberally in the matter of damages. It is true that the encroachment occupies only a strip of land some two feet broad, but the whole frontage is only 90 feet, and this encroachment prevents the plaintiff from deriving from his property the benefit which, but for it, he would have derived.

Mr. Benjamin: The defendant is bound to pay only the value of the land actually encroached upon. Grotius (2-5); Myburg v. Jamieson (4, Searle 5). This building has now stood six years and the Court will not order it to be destroyed, but will only grant damages. As to the value of the land encroached upon, we must look to the time when the encroachment was made. The plaintiff's predecessor in title could only give the plaintiff rights which he himself possessed. Two feet is a very small amount out of a frontage of 90 feet, and the tender of £25 is liberal even looking to the present value of the ground. Ford (8-4-6) is speaking only of certain local customs. I submit that the defendant's tender is ample.

Mr. Buchanan (in reply): Whatever is built on a man's ground is his property subject to certain rights of the builder to compensation. Institt. (2-1-30); Dig. (41-1-7-10). Should the Court hold that the wall cannot be taken down it will award compensation on a liberal scale.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is very much to be regretted in this case that the parties did not come to terms. The plaintiff first of all claimed damages, and the defendant admitted his liability to damages by tendering £25. It is clear that there was an encroachment upon the plaintiff's land. The encroachment was effected by the predecessors in title of the defendant's land; but still the plaintiff is the owner of the land, and we must take it that as the owner, he is prima facie entitled to claim that an encroachment made upon land belonging to him as the registered owner shall be removed. It has not, however, been the practice of the Court to order such removal where for any length of time, where for a year the house has been standing without any objection being raised on the part of the owner of the land, more especially where the building has been completed without anything in the nature of a protest on the part of the owner of the land. But, in estimating the damage, the Court is not in the habit of looking merely at the value of the strip of land encroached upon, but must regard all the circumstances of the case. It is quite clear in the present case that it is a great inconvenience to the plaintiff that this encroachment should have taken place. The land was very limited in extent, and he is restricted from building the number of cottages which he would otherwise build, and the damage sustained appears to me to be more than the amount tendered. Moreover, the offer made by the plaintiff to withdraw his claim for damages if the defendant would allow the wall to become a party wall and would pay the costs to date, appears to me to have been a very reasonable one. The plaintiff was entitled to treat a wall thus encroaching on his property as a party wall, and the least the defendant could do was to pay the costs incurred by the plaintiff in asserting his rights. The plaintiff has elected to claim compensation which I assess at £40, and for this amount judgment must be given with costs, but it will still be open to the parties to agree upon the wall being accepted as a party wall, in which case the compensation would fall to the ground.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and a Jury.]

DU PLESSIS V. BLUMBERG.

Slander.

This was an action brought by Gert Jacobus du Plessis, of Petrusville, against Israel Jacob Blumberg, of the same place, to recover £1,000 damages for alleged slander uttered on the 28th November, 1903.

The declaration was as follows:

(1) The plaintiff is and was at the time of the occurrences hereinafter set out a law agent and auctioneer, carrying on business at Petrusville in the division of Colesberg, of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope. (2) The defendant is and was on the occasion hereinafter set forth a member of the firm of Muller and Blumberg, carrying on business at Petrusville. (3) On or about the evening of the 28th day of November, 1903, and in the house of one S. P. Naude, at Petrus-ville, the defendant in the presence of the said Naude, one T. J. E. Tiech, and others, falsely and maliciously spoke and published of and concerning the plaintiff in the Dutch language, the words following or to the same substance and effect that is to say: "Ik zal mij nie van you laat mij verneuk Gertje du Plessis," which said words being translated into the English language, have and were intended and understood to have the meaning and effect following, that is to say: "I shall not let you swindle me, Gertje du Plessis," meaning that the plaintiff was a cheat and a swindler. (b) "You verdomde loofer en dronkloper, ik zal mij nie van you laat verneuk," which words being translated into the English language, have and were intended and understood to have the meaning and effect following, that is to say: "You damned loafer and drunkard, I shall not let you swindle me," meaning that the plaintiff was a man of bad character, of vagrant and intemperate habits, and a cheat and swindler. (4) By reason of the premises the plaintiff has been greatly injured in his character, credit, and reputation, and in his said business. Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) £1,000 damages; (b) Alternative relief; (c) Costs of suit.

For a plea to the plaintiff's declaration the defendant said: (1) He admits paragraphs 1 and 2. (2) He denies that he spoke or published of or concerning the defendant the words set forth in paragraph 3, but he admits that he on or about the time and at the place set forth in the said paragraph, and in the presence of the said Naude and certain others, spoke to and concerning the plaintiff the following words in the Dutch language: "Ja, ik is een gemeene man omdat ik mij nie wil van jou verneuk met Barend van der Linde's bewijs voor £350; jij is dronk, en Barend is nie goed genoeg voor de geld nie," which words translated into English mean: "Yes, I am a mean man, because I will not allow myself to be humbugged by you with Barend van der Linde's promissory note for £350. You are drunk, and Barend is not good enough for the money. (3) The words in the preceding paragraph set forth were used by the defendant under the influence of great anger, provoked by the plaintiff who previous to the use by the defendant of the said words, approached the defendant, and prepared to strike him, and spoke of and concerning the defendant the following words in the Dutch language: "Het is omtrent tijd dat gij uit de huis gaan want jij is de gemeenste man dat ik in mij lev-gezien het," which words, translated into English mean: "It is about time that you go out of the house, because you are the meanest man that I have ever saw during my life," and in divers other ways provoked the defendant. (4) The defendant further says that the words set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, were used by him without malice, and without any intention of injuring the plaintiff, and that the said words did not injure the plaintiff. (5) He denies the allegations in paragraph 4 of the said declaration. Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff's replication was as follows: (1) The plaintiff denies that the defendant spoke and published of and concerning the plaintiff the words set out in paragraph 2 of the defendant's plea, or words to the same substance and effect as alleged by the defendant. (2) The plaintiff denies that the defendant received the provocation alleged or any provocation at all. (3) The plaintiff denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph 4 of the defendant's plea. (4) Save as aforesaid and save in so far as it consists of admissions the plaintiff joins issue with the defendant on his plea, and prays for judgment, with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendant.

G. J. du Plessis, the plaintiff, stated that there had been certain unsatisfactory transactions with regard to a promissory note. The libel had been spoken at the house of Mr. Naude. Plaintiff said to defendant, "What do you know of waterworks?" The defendant then uttered the libel complained of.

By Mr. Gardiner: He could not swear that his business had suffered. He had a good reputation, and was neither a swindler nor a drunkard.

S. P. Naude said he was present when the conversation took place. Blumberg said he would give a picnic when the waterworks were finished. Du Plessis said what do you know about waterworks, and he thought he said it in a joke. Blumberg said he knew too much to be swindled by Du Plessis. After a slight disturbance, Blumberg said he would not be swindled by a loafer and a drunkard, and added that he would prove it in court. Witness said to Du Plessis, "You have driven one of my boarders away." You must clear your character. He did not hear Du Plessis say to Blumberg, "You are the meanest man I ever met."

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He did not think that he had stated to a Mr. Lewis that he was busy, and did not take particular notice of what took place. Frederick J. Tyke stated that he heard Blumberg say he would not allow Du Plessis to swindle him. Blumberg also pointed his stick at Du Plessis, and said, "You damned loafer and drunkard. I won't allow you to swindle me." Blumberg asked for his account, as he would never again sit down with Du Plessis. Du Plessis said, "You have said quite enough," and Blumberg replied that he would prove what he had said in court.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

I. J. Blumberg, the defendant, said that in November, 1903, Du Plessis asked him to advance money on a bill, but witness said he would not discount the bill. He told Du Plessis that if a bond was given he would do it, but otherwise the man was not good enough. Du Plessis said, "You are the meanest man that I have seen in the world." When the conversation turned on waterworks, Du Plessis said, "What do you know about waterworks?" "You are the meanest man on earth." Witness said, "You are drunk. I take no notice of you." He was so angry that he did not know what he said.

By Buchanan, J.: He might have said the plaintiff was a loafer and a scoundrel.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He told Du Plessis, if the bank was willing to discount the bill, he would do it. When a telegram was received from the bank, witness took the bill from Du Plessis, but he never promised to give the latter a cheque. It was a kind of "bet" that he was making when he said: "If the waterworks were ever completed, he would give a picnic." He said: "Is it because I did not allow you to swindle me over that bill?" in reply to the plaintiff's accusation of the "meanest man." He could not repeat exactly what he did say, but he did remember saying to Naude to make up his account and he would leave at once.

John R. Frame said he heard Blumberg say that if the waterworks were completed he would give a picnic. Du Plessis then told Blumberg that he was the meanest man he had ever seen. Du Plessis was in a fighting aspect, and witness then walked out. He did not think anything less of Du Plessis from what he heard. They were both angry.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not hear the remark which the defendant admitted having made about being swindled over a promissory note.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., summed up, and after explaining the law of defamation, said that he was struck by the evidence of the teacher as a fair indication of what took place. He heard nothing about swindling, and it was significant that in the letter Du Plessis wrote three days after the affair there was no mention of being called a swindler. The jury would have to consider all the circumstances of the case, and the relation between the parties, to see whether there had been malicious defamation.

The jury retired, and after a few minutes returned with a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment was entered for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D. (Chief Justice), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

ESTATE OF GREEN V. SOUTH AFRICAN MUTUAL INSURANCE SOCIETY. { 1904.
Feb. 24th.

Insolvent Ordinance—Undue preference—Usual and ordinary course of business.

Within six months of his insolvency, G., who was the agent in a country district of the defendant Insurance Society, paid to the Society the amounts of premiums which he had received on behalf of the Society during the preceding six days. The payment was made in presence by an inspector of the Society and by means of cheques given to G. by third parties.

Held, that the fact that the identical money received by G. from insured persons had not been paid over by him to the inspector did not constitute the payment an undue preference.

Held further, that the payment was protected as having been made in the usual and ordinary course of business.

This was an action brought by Robert Radcliffe Lindsay Sands, as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Alma Green, of Cradock, against the South African Mutual Insurance Society, to have certain payments made by the insolvent in favour of the society, declared to have been preferent and to be forfeit.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was the sole trustee in the insolvent estate. The defendant was the South African Mutual Life Assurance Society, whose head offices were at Cape Town. Within six months before the sequestration of the estate the insolvent made certain payments to the defendant society, being heavily indebted to the society. The following payments had been made by the insolvent in favour of the society: 7th July, £204 14s. 2d.; 15th July, £293 7s.; 6th August, £57 9s. 10d.; 6th August, £64 18s. 5d. The payments were made by insolvent when he was contemplating insolvency. The plaintiff prayed for an order declaring the forfeiture of the aforesaid sums and for judgment accordingly.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal allegations, and went on to say that Green was appointed district agent at Cradock in 1898, his duties being to obtain insurance business for the society, to collect renewal premiums upon policies, and to pay into the bank moneys which he had so received. He had no authority to receive interest on bonds belonging to the society. He was dismissed from the said agency about the beginning of August, 1903, owing to its then being discovered that he had embezzled certain premiums belonging to the society. Thereafter he was prosecuted for embezzlement and convicted. On the 10th July, 20th July, and 3rd August the insolvent paid over to the society the following sums, respectively, £290 14s. 2d., £293 7s., and £57 9s. 10d. These were monies paid over by insolvent as agent of the mortgagors. Green received no payment or commission from the society in respect to such money. The company denied preference. The remaining sum of £64 18s. 5d. represented premiums collected between the 1st and 4th August, on behalf of the society by the insolvent, and which it was the duty of Green to place in the bank day by day, to the society's credit. The said amount was paid to the society's inspector on the 4th August. The said payments were made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and were protected by the 86th paragraph of the Insolvent Ordinance, even if Green did contemplate sequestration, which the company denied. The defendant society specially denied that any collusive arrangement existed between themselves and Green. They prayed for the claim to be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

The records of insolvency were put in.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. (Close) for the plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him, Mr. Gardiner) for the defendant.

Robert Radcliffe Lindsay Sands, the trustee in the estate, said that the schedules were drawn up on the 12th September. The Mutual Society proved against the estate for £1,140 9s. 3d., which referred to interest or loans and capital repaid on loans. One of the items, £48 15s., was also proved by Mr. Michau against the estate, and the society had evidently paid this sum. The society had also proved against the estate for the Rev. Reinecke and Coetzee, which items were the subject of the charge of embezzlement. According to the schedules, the insolvent estimated his liabilities at £2,327 5s. 11d., and he valued his assets at £565 14s. The actual proved debts, outside the Mutual Society's claims, were £1,217 15s. 7d. This amount included £48 15s., which the Mutual subsequently paid to Mr. Michau. In July, 1903, the only assets he could trace which he was unable to trace afterwards, were a pair of horses. These horses would form the subject of an action between witness and the Union-Castle Steamship Company. The assets actually realised £179. This did not include two life policies of £200 each upon which the insolvent had, according to his books, raised a loan on the 29th July. Mr. Green had two accounts at the Standard Bank—one called "A. Green, Mutual account," and the other "A. Green, private account." Witness produced cheques drawn by Green upon this private account in favour of the Mutual: 7th July, £290 14s. 2d.; 15th July, £293 7s.; 6th August, £57 9s. 10d. On the 6th August the insolvent had been suspended from his duties. Witness produced copies of paid-in slips from the bank, showing that the insolvent paid in on the 29th July, £59 6s. 4d. (loan from the society) and £4 (rent received as agent). On the 31st July the credit standing to the insolvent's private account at the bank was £62 3s. 1d. There was an item of £64 18s. 5d. paid over to Mr. Smuts, who went up from the society's headquarters, by way of cheque and cash. This payment was made on the 6th August. The society said that it was made on the 4th August. Witness arrived at the conclusion that the 6th August was the correct date, because part of the payment was in the form of a cheque for £55 7s. from Michau and Hofmeyr, in favour of the insolvent. The society, he believed, claimed that this money was collected between the 1st and the 4th August. Witness found that between the 1st and 19th August all the moneys paid in to Green's credit had nothing to do with the Mutual Society, but referred to payments received for the Union-Castle Steamship Co. and his salary as secretary to the hospital. On the 27th May witness took action on behalf of one Du Plessis against the insolvent, in respect of a promissory note for upwards of £500. Green called and saw witness and another member of his firm. Green then said—

Mr. Searle objected that they could not have evidence of what Green had said without calling Green.

Mr. Schreiner said that it was agreed between them that Green's health was such that it was impossible for him to give evidence.

The Court ruled that the evidence was admissible.

Witness (continuing) said that Green stated that if he were pressed by creditors, he should have to surrender his estate. His only assets consisted of his furniture and cart, and a few other things, and insolvent said that, if pressed, he would have to surrender. He added that he was willing to give his wife's endorsement to the bill. Witness advised Du Plessis not to accept this, but his advice was disregarded. The idea was that Mrs. Green was a woman of means; as a matter of fact, she was absolutely without means. Debts actually proved against the estate were not debts incurred after July.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Of the debts proved, amounting to £1,217, all except an item of £48 15s. were personal debts, incurred by Green in connection with his own business. This item of £48 15s. referred to interest on a loan paid by Michau to the insolvent for the Mutual, and unaccounted for by Green. He was agent, not only to the Mutual, but also to the Union-Castle Company. Green also carried on a discounting business. He believed that Green was suspended on the 3rd or the 5th August.

By the Court: He believed that at the trial of Green the insolvent said that he did not regard the two accounts—the Mutual and private—as distinct; but that he used either as he thought fit.

S. Alexander Hofmeyr, of the firm of Michau and Hofmeyr, attorneys, Cradock, said that he took action on behalf of a client against Green for one A'Bertyn, the claim being about £60. A compromise was arranged, under which Green had to pay £7 a month. Green made three payments. On the 6th August Green came to see witness with three promissory notes, two of them being from Van Heerden and one from Myburg. Green discounted these promissory notes with witness's firm. The cheque for £55 7s., given to Green, was in witness's handwriting. The face value of the promissory notes was £64 10s., thus showing a difference of £9 3s. The difference consisted of £1 13s. interest, and £7 10s., payment for the month.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

John Robb, secretary of the defendant society, said he knew the insolvent, who was appointed agent for the Cradock district in March, 1898. The letter specified that Green should secure new business in the town and district of Cradock, collect renewal premiums, and issue receipts and bank the money received in the name of the society from day to day. The first appointment was on the 4th March, and related to Kimberley; but later on in the same month Green was appointed to Cradock, to succeed Mr. Gie. The first three cheques—£290, £293, and £57 odd—were all of the same class, and were in payment of interest due on mortgage bonds of the society or loans on policies. These payments had nothing whatever to do with premiums. Green had regularly remitted amounts of this class half-yearly, in accordance with clause 16 of the Instructions to Agents. The interest came to the society both direct to the head office and through the insolvent. On receipt of the amounts, the society issued a receipt from the head office. Green's account would not be credited in any way with these amounts. Green might give a temporary receipt of his own when payments of this class were made, until the receipt was sent from the head office. Coming to the fourth payment in question, witness said that premiums had been received by Green as the Society's agent, and it was his duty to bank them as received in the Standard Bank. At the head office they calculated the premiums that were due, and they issued receipts during the previous month for collection. Green had to collect the premiums due, and to countersign the receipts. At the close of the month he had to make up an account, sending to the head office a remittance in settlement of all the premiums he had collected. After the expiration of the grace days, to which the insured was entitled, Green returned to the head office the unpaid receipts which should balance his account for that period. Witness produced counterfoils of receipts. Premiums payable on the 1st August were collected by the insolvent between the 1st and 4th, amounting to about £240. The inspector took charge of £178 lying in the bank in insolvent's name, and Green made up the difference of £64 18s. 5d., in cash. The inspector went up to Cradock about the end of July or beginning of August in consequence of some suspicion of irregularity on the part of Green. Green was enabled to commit the fraud by giving temporary receipts, and not notifying the head office of payments he received for the society. There were a large number of premiums every month unpaid. The insolvent received payments both for loans and premiums, for which he failed to account to the society.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He did not apply to have the proceedings withdrawn, and he was unaware of the application made to that effect at the preparatory examination. Mr. Garlick represented the society when he made that application. He had satisfied himself that all the items appearing in Green's letters as "interest items" did not include "premium items." If Mr. Green made application for loans on policies the forms might be sent to him and the loan effected through him. Mr. Green was called to Cape Town in order to make certain inquiries about his failure to bring in new business. After the trial, generally speaking, they recognised all the payments made by the persons appearing in the indictment. He did not realise that Green's book, which was at Cradock, was necessary to the case. The correspondence from Mr. Smuts, he thought, had no bearing on the case, otherwise it would have been produced. He had no idea that Green was in difficulties in July. When he got the letter from Cradock, asking for a receipt for a premium paid to Green, he did not become suspicious. He followed Green up with the inspector on receipt of a confidential letter from a friend in Cradock that a clerk of Green's had embezzled some £51.

After the adjournment witness produced the confidential letter, which was examined by the Court, and then handed over to Mr. Schreiner for his inspection, the Chief Justice remarking that he did not think the writer's name should be disclosed.

Further cross-examined: Witness went on to say that it was in consequence of this letter which was dated July 29, that the society suspected there was something wrong. About two months previously a letter had been written to Green requesting him to come to Cape Town. He admitted that the endorsement as to paying interest and principal on the pledge forms at the head office in Cape Town was a subsequent endorsement. Witness also produced a letter addressed to Green dated 27th April, in which the society complained that Green was not doing a sufficient amount of business, and suggested his removal to another district. On the 27th August they wired to Smuts stating that the Board would be willing to withdraw prosecution, if possible. They saw the Attorney-General, who said that he could not interfere in any way with the Magistrate's discretion. They then wired to Smuts to this effect, and asked him not to unduly press the case. Green had, in the meantime, thrown himself on the Society's mercy.

Charles Fischer Smuts, inspector of the defendant society, said he reached Cradock on the 3rd August. He checked the insolvent's July account and passed it. Witness asked him if he had seen the Rev. Reinecke in regard to Mr. Robb's letter. Green said it was not his business to go and see him. Witness saw Reinecke. Witness checked Green's account for August, and discovered a deficiency of £70 odd. He compared the amount in the bank and the receipts issued. He saw that Green had issued premium receipts for £70, but that he had not paid over the money. Witness afterwards received a letter from Mr. Reinecke, and suspended Green from his duties. On the 4th he asked Green to pay in the premiums that were short. On the 5th or 6th Green presented bills in payment of the shortage. Witness declined to accept it, and Green went and discounted the bills, and handed witness a cheque for £55 7s., bearing the signature of Hofmeyr and Michau. Witness also received Mr. Reinecke's cheque for £8 17s. 6d., made payable to the secretary, and the balance of 13s. odd was sundry cash. To the best of his knowledge all the money had been collected on behalf of the society by Green between the 1st and the 4th August.

Mr. Searle read a letter sent by Green to the Board in Cape Town, stating that his clerk had absconded with a sum of £51 15s. 3d. He (Green) had also borrowed from policy-holders sums to the amount of £923, which he had intended to repay during that year.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Mr. Garlick told witness that an action had been brought against Green in the Eastern District Courts for £600. Witness also inquired from the gentleman who wrote the confidential letter. He ascertained this on the 4th August. He did not know at that time that Green was in an insolvent position. On the 5th or 6th he learned that Green owed money to the storekeepers. It was true that on the 7th he wrote to his Board in Cape Town, saying that Green was "hopelessly involved," and that he had been living far beyond his means. He discovered on the 5th or 6th that Mr. Erasmus had a claim. After the 4th he heard that Mr. Green's wife possessed nothing. He found that Green was in debt all over the town, and that he had been borrowing sums of money from policy-holders. He did not bring pressure to bear upon Green to make a statement. He admitted, however, writing to the head office to the effect, "it was with great difficulty that he prevailed upon Green to make a clean breast of it."

This closed the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument.

De Villiers, C.J.: For the purposes of this case, I may assume that the insolvent was a creditor. I may assume also that the insolvent was agent of the society, and that he did not pay the moneys which are set out as the agent of the different other creditors of the society. I am clearly of opinion that, with regard to the payments, which are impeached up to the 20th July, there is no proof whatever of any intention on the part of the insolvent to prefer the society to his other creditors. The only payments in regard to which any question can possibly arise are the payments made early in August, namely, on the 6th August. A payment was made in respect of premiums which had been received by the insolvent. It was the clear duty of the insolvent as the agent of the society immediately upon receipt of these premiums either to deposit them in the bank to a separate account, the account of the society, or to forward the amount to the society itself. Counsel for the plaintiff admits that if either of these courses had been adopted, the society would not have been liable, that if the money which was actually received by the insolvent had been paid over to the society, or if the money had been deposited in a bank to a separate account, and a cheque drawn upon the bank, on that separate account, the payment would have been in order. But he contends that because the payment was of a different nature, because the property had become vested in the insolvent, it became an undue preference when he paid over the amount, whether by means of a cheque of his own or by means of cheques of other persons. In my opinion, the payment which was made was made in the ordinary course of business; but it does not, in my opinion, affect the case in the least, whether the identical moneys were paid which he received, or whether he paid by means of his own cheque or by means of a cheque of another. It was the bounden duty of the insolvent immediately upon receipt of this money to pay it over to his principal, and it makes no difference what his mode of payment is, provided he does the duty of paying over to his principal. Certainly, I cannot see how the mode of payment can in any way affect the question as to whether it is in the usual and ordinary course of business. There is no proof whatever in the present case that the insolvent did not still possess the identical moneys which he received for the different premiums. It is quite consistent with the evidence that he might still have had the identical moneys in his possession. The fact that he gave the cheques of other persons does not affect the case in the least. The payment had to be made, and it is made in the ordinary and usual course of business. He happened to have a cheque in his possession which had been signed by others, but it made no difference whether that was his own cheque or whether it was the cheque of others. That cheque could be converted into money in the same way as the money itself which he had in his possession. The 86th section of the Insolvent Ordinance protects payments made under such circumstances, for it enacts "that every alienation, transfer, cession, delivery, mortgage or pledge as aforesaid, and every payment made by any insolvent to any creditor in the usual and ordinary course of trade or business, shall prima facie be held and taken to have been made or given bona fide, and without intention to give to such creditor any preference, although such insolvent may at the time have contemplated the sequestration of his estate as insolvent, and in every case it shall be necessary for the trustee or trustees seeking to set the same aside to show the existence of some collusive arrangement, mutual understanding, or common consent between the insolvent and the creditor, the one to give and the other to get the preference over the other creditors of the insolvent under colour of a transaction in the usual and ordinary course of trade or business." In my opinion, there is no proof whatever in the present case of the existence of any such collusive arrangement, mutual understanding, or common consent, and in the absence of such evidence, I am of opinion that this payment is protected as a payment made in the ordinary course of business, and that the payment is consequently valid. The judgment of the Court must, therefore, be for the defendant, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

CUNNINGHAM AND CORTESE (1904.
V. RUTHERFORD. (Feb. 24th.

Sale and purchase—(Conditional purchase.

This was an action brought to recover the sum of £49 18s. 6d., being the balance of account for work and labour done, and material supplied.

The declaration set out upon divers dates between August and September, 1902, certain work was performed, and there was still a balance on account of £49 18s. 6d. in respect of the sale of an engine, and its erection on the mountain at the Wynberg Waterworks. The defendant refused to pay the balance.

The plea admitted the accuracy of the account, except the item of August 31. "sale of 6 h.-p. second-hand oil engine, £80," which the defendant disputed under circumstances detailed hereafter. He denied the sum of £49 18s. 6d. was owing, and said there was a balance in his favour of £40. In reconvention, the defendant claimed as follows: On or about August 19, plaintiff agreed to supply a 10 h.-p. oil engine, and erect it on Table Mountain for £95. It was part of the agreement that if the engine did not work satisfactorily up to the h.-p. mentioned, plaintiffs should repay the cost of the engine and all expenses. The engine was erected, but did not work satisfactorily, and the defendant returned it, and also asked for the price and the expenses. Plaintiff refused to pay the £20 for taking the engine up the mountain and back again, also the other expenses incurred in making a concrete bed, £15, and other expenses, amounting in all to £50. Defendant says after deduction of the £90 there would be £40 1s. 6d. due to him.

Plaintiffs in their replication stated that the engine in question was a 6 h.-p. engine, and the price and additional £5 was charged for erecting. Plaintiffs denied the paragraphs as to the erection, and the other expenses incurred.

Mr. Burton for the plaintiffs; Mr. Upton (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers) for the defendant.

Lyon Cortese, plaintiff, said that in August, 1902, Mr. Rutherford came to witness's workshop, and explained he had some aerial gear, and thought he would require a 10 h.-p. engine to drive it. Witness went up the mountain, and saw the gear which had been erected in connection with the Wynberg Waterworks. Witness told him he did not think a 10 h.-p. engine was required, and that he could supply him with a 6 h.-p. engine from Shepperd Bros., Stellenbosch, and would let him know the price in a few days. Rutherford said he would take the engine, which was ultimately sent up. The price arranged was £90 for the engine and £5 for fixing it. Rutherford wrote on the 19th August confirming the purchase, it being stipulated witness was to keep the engine in repair for six months. It was also agreed in the event of its not being suitable it was to be taken back, and the purchase money to be returned. This letter was brought by a Mr. Roberts, and as witness was not willing to agree to these terms, he told Mr. Roberts to take it back. Later on he found the letter in his order-book. Two fitters went up to fix up the engine, and they were occupied for about a fortnight. Rutherford had had another engine up the mountain, which was repaired by witness's men. Witness erected his own engine to work with the other, which was an 8 h.-p. one, and they worked satisfactorily. Payments were received in September and November, the last payment being on November 15. About the end of November, the defendant refused to pay any more. Defendant said he was dissatisfied with the engines, and asked witness to receipt the balance of £40, and he would return the engine, and later he asked witness to try and sell it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upton: Witness was going to pay Shepperd the £90, if he got it. He had paid Shepperd £30 or £40 in respect of the purchase price of this oil engine. Rutherford came down on several occasions and saw the engine, and finally he agreed to buy it. Subsequently the bookkeeper brought a letter, the terms of which witness did not like. Hence he crumpled the letter up, and told the man to take it back. The engine was afterwards taken up the mountain, and erected by witness's men. Witness did not know that the engine was barely strong enough to work an empty stone crusher, and that it would not stand any strain. There were not continual complaints about the engine. The expense of taking the engine up and down the mountain would be about £10.

By the Court: For a new engine, £20 or £25 would be charged for every horse-power. Half-price was charged for second-hand engines.

Fred Traves, engine-fitter in plaintiff's employ, said he went with another fitter to fix up the six horse-power engine on the mountain. They worked for a fortnight. The other engine was an eight-horse break. The engines worked in conjunction. Witness fixed up the engine in working order, and saw it working a couple of days before he came down. Afterwards witness went up to repair the other engine, which Rutherford said had been broken, owing to the carelessness of one of his own men. The cylinder had been broken, and this threw more work on Cortese's engine. The latter worked while the other was being repaired. It was driving the crusher satisfactorily. He could not say exactly what horse-power the engine was working to at the finish, but he was certain it would go over five horse-power. He had not seen the engine work the crusher when it was full of stone. It was not because they could not get the new engine to work that they coupled it to the other.

Robt. Jas. Meadwell, engine-fitter, formerly in the employ of the plaintiff, said he went with the last witness to erect the engine on the mountain. He was there driving the small engine for a fortnight, and the two together for a month. He could tell the small engine was working at about six horse-power. It was working very satisfactorily, and no one complained to him about it. When he left the engines were working well, and doing the work required of them. When he left, a man was put to work the engine who knew nothing about it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The six horse-power engine was old and worn, and was working at about five horse-power. After the cylinder and the valve had been put in, the engine worked all right for the six weeks witness was there.

John Robertson, formerly in the employ of defendant, said he remembered taking a letter from defendant to plaintiff. Witness read the letter to him. Cortese shook his head, and, so far as witness remembered, he intimated that he could not agree to the terms of the letter. Witness did not remember Cortese saying anything about the ten horse-power engine. Witness returned to defendant, and told him Cortese did not agree to the terms of the letter.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

For the defence,

John Gibbs, engineer, said he made an inspection of the engine after it was brought down in October last. Two horse-power might have been got out of it, but it would hardly do more than work itself.

Charles Rutherford, the defendant, said in July, 1902, he had a contract to construct the masonry of the dam on top of the mountain. He had need of an engine to assist the one he already had up there. He saw the plaintiff, who had previously done other work for him. Witness asked him if he had an engine about eight horse-power, and plaintiff said he knew of one at Stellenbosch. Witness told him he had better come up the mountain and see the work the engine was wanted for. He went up with witness, and he (witness) explained that he wanted the engine to work the crusher. Plaintiff said the engine he had would run away with it, being 12 h.p. Witness went to see the engine, and remarked that it did not look to be like a 12-h.p. engine. Plaintiff said he would guarantee that it was 10 h.p. He described the work it had done for Shepherd, and witness was convinced that it was 10 h.p. Witness sent the letter on the 19th August by Robertson, who returned, and told him Cortese did not like the idea of undertaking to keep the engine in repair for six months. Witness saw Cortese next day, and the latter told him he did not like the stipulation about repairing the engine, saying witness might have an accident, and might expect him to do the repair, resulting therefrom. Witness told him the letter safeguarded him in this respect. Nothing was said about the power. Witness said he would not take it if he thought it would require repairs, and Cortese then agreed to the stipulation. The engine was taken up to the mountain, where it never worked satisfactorily. It failed to drive the empty crusher. He sent the engine down because it would not work, and he had to buy another engine of 13 h.p. in its place. The money witness had paid to plaintiff was not on account of the purchase price of the engine, but on the whole account between them. Witness paid £20 to get the engine up and down, and also put a concrete bed for the engine, at a cost of £3 15s. per yard. The bed was 9 feet by 4.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The two engines when working together were not powerful enough to do all the complained to Cortese about the work, to his knowledge. Witness had gone. Witness did not make a claim against Cortese before the latter brought action against him. He did not do so because he did not want to come into court.

F. D. Woodroff, superintendent of the new reservoir at Newlands, said that in August and September he was inspector for the Wynberg Municipality, and had to inspect all the work done by the defendant. He did not consider the engine ever worked in a satisfactory manner.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He had had considerable experience in machinery and with mechanical appliances. He repeatedly complained of the engine being unable to do the work. As soon as they tried to put regular feeding into the crusher, the engine stopped.

Solomon Leyden, brickmaker, said that last year he wanted an oil engine, and he spoke to Mr. Humphrey. Subsequently he saw Mr. Cortese, who spoke of the engine that was with Mr. Rutherford.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs sue on an account for work and labour done, and for the price of a certain oil engine, which they describe in their account, as "our own make." The total account amounts to £154 18s. 6d. The items of the account for work and labour done are all admitted, and the only question in dispute is with regard to the engine, for which £90 is charged. On this account the defendant has paid from time to time certain sums amounting to £95, and there is also certain iron supplied by him to the defendant to be allowed for, leaving a balance of £49 18s. 6d. The defendant denies purchase of the engine charged in the account, but says that the contract was for an engine of a different kind, and he claims the right to have the engine supplied to him returned to the plaintiff, and the purchase price taken out the account. The whole question in dispute, therefore, is as to this engine. Some facts are common between the parties. The defendant had work on Table Mountain, for which he required certain engine power. The power was required in the first place for working an aerial tramway, and secondly to drive a stone crushing machine. The evidence showed that the engine of 8 h.p., which he then had on the mountain was not sufficient to do both these things at the same time, but that it would only do one or the other. Rutherford called on the plaintiffs, and asked them if they had an engine of 8 h.p., to supplement the other engine. He told the plaintiffs what he wanted this engine for. The plaintiff Cortese said he could not give his opinion as to the power of the engine required until he had seen the works. Cortese then went up the mountain and inspected the machinery for which the power was needed. Here we have a conflict of evidence as to what took place on the mountain. According to the defendant, Cortese said: "We have an engine which can run away with the work. We have an engine which can do work up to 12 h.p." Cortese, however, says he represented he had an engine which could do work up to 6 h.p., that this engine was at Stellenbosch, and belonged to Shepherd Bros., and that he would write to Stellenbosch and get the engine down, and sell it to the defendant. It was agreed that that engine should be sent for to Stellenbosch. It was sent for, and on its arrival it was erected in plaintiffs' workshop. Plaintiffs put the engine in order, and attached it to his own machinery to run it. The defendant, Rutherford, seeing the engine, said he did not think it was a 12 h.p. engine. In the course of conversation, Cortese is stated to have said he would guarantee it to run at least 10 h.p. Now this engine was designed and manufactured in Cortese's workshop, therefore Cortese must have known what its capacity was, and what work it could do. Cortese declared that he sold this engine as a 6 h.p. engine.

The defendant says he represented it as being of 10 h.p., and he agreed to take it as such. The engine was taken up the mountain, and when applied to the work, after a number of breakdowns and repairs, it is clear that it had not sufficient power to do what the defendants required it for. Cortese several times visited the mountain. After it had been put up, first the lining of the cylinder proved defective, and then some of the valves went out of order, and had to be repaired. After this occurred Mr. Woodroff, who has been called for the defendant, says that the engine was hardly of sufficient power to work the stone crusher when running "light," or, as he afterwards explained, when empty. It certainly would not crush the stone, and was therefore of no use to the defendant for the purposes for which he required it. The engine was taken up in August, and in September defendant took it down and removed it to his own yard in Chiappini-street. Cortese came there, and set up the engine, and it is common cause that it was resolved that the engine should be sold. Cortese says it was agreed that both he and the defendant should try to sell it to settle the account. The defendant, however, says it was for Cortese to sell it. In the direct conflict of testimony we have in this case it would be difficult for the Court to decide which of the accounts is correct, but we have written documents which very materially assist the Court in determining the issue. On the very day the bargain was concluded a letter was written to Cortese by the defendant in which he confirmed the purchase, on condition that the plaintiffs maintained the engine in proper repair for six months, and guaranteed it to work up to the full power, namely, 10-brake horse power. Cortese says that when this letter was brought to him, he did not accept it as containing the true contract. He says that he threw it away, but he afterwards found the letter, and is able to produce it to-day. There was no repudiation of this letter, here is no reply to it; but after the receipt of that letter the engine was sent to the defendant. Rutherford says that the day after he wrote and while the engine was still with the plaintiff, he went to see Cortese. Some conversation took place between them, and defendant says Cortese agreed to the terms of the letter. Now here is a written statement of the terms of the contract made before any dispute arose, on the very day the agreement took place, which distinctly states that this was to be a 10-brake horse-power engine. This is not denied in writing at the time, and I am convinced that there must have been a representation made by Cortese to the defendant that this engine was of 10-brake horse power. I am sure, had the representation been made to the defendants that the power would only be 5 horse-power, as it is shown to be, in reality by the evidence, he would never have taken it, but that he took it relying on the representation that it was of 10-brake horse-power. On this fact, I must find against Cortese in this case. When the engine was brought down and erected in Rutherford's yard by Cortese, there were evidently attempts made by Cortese to sell it. Several people were communicated with, and there is a significant letter written by Cortese, in which he says, "It is now out of the question that we take the oil engine back from you. You have been asked three or four times to send it back, because we had a sale for it. Now, you had better keep it for good." This letter is altogether inconsistent with the idea of an out and out purchase, and quite consistent with the agreement to take the engine back if it were found not to be equal to the wants of the defendants. On these grounds I am of opinion that the defendant must succeed in this action. Deducting the amounts of the payments made, now the engine is declared the property of the plaintiff, there is a balance due to the defendant of £40 1s. 6d., and for this the Court will now give judgment. Some stress has been laid on the fact that payment had been made on account of the contract, instead of it being repudiated. But there were other items due by the defendant to the plaintiff, and the defendant made payment on the account generally. It was in September that the engine was taken down, and from that time to the present the defendant has not paid anything on account which would have the effect of ratifying the contract. The defendant claims, in reconvention, damages to cover his expenditure in taking the engine up the mountain and bringing it down, and in making a concrete bed, and he alleges that he has suffered £50 general damages in consequence of the breach of contract. No general damages have, however, been proved. But there has been a breach of contract, and the plaintiffs ought to pay the expenses which the defendant has incurred in taking the engine up the mountain and bringing it back. Cortese himself is willing to allow £10 as a fair charge for taking the engine up and down, and £3 for laying the concrete bed. I think £12 10s. will be a fair amount to give as damages, and this amount will be added to the £40 1s. 6d., making £52 11s. 6d., for which judgment will be given for defendant (plaintiff in reconvention), with costs. Plaintiff will be entitled to the engine on payment of the judgment and costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. } 1904.
} Feb. 25th.

Mr. Upington moved for the admission of Clemens Gutsche as an advocate.

The application was granted and oath administered.

Mr. Schieiner, K.C., moved for the admission of Charles Richardson Hime as an attorney. Counsel said that the papers seemed to him to be in order, but he observed that the secretary of the Law Society had noted that he was not prepared to certify as to the identity of the applicant. Petitioner, who was now at Butterworth, said that he had been admitted as a solicitor of the Supreme Court of Ireland. Affidavits of identity were put in.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Butterworth.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Walter George Chubb as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

KRUMM V. BLACK.

Sequestration, compulsory—Petition of creditors—Proof of insolvency.

The petition of creditors for the compulsory sequestration of a debtor's estate must state clearly that the estate is insolvent and that it is to the advantage of the creditors that it should be sequestrated. The facts that considerable debts are due and unpaid and that judgments obtained against the debtor remain unsatisfied are not conclusive proofs of insolvency, but coupled with other circumstances, raise a strong presumption of insolvency.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final. Petitioners, who carried on business in Germany and England, said that respondent owed them £564, that he had not paid this amount, and that there were several unsatisfied judgments against him.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan, for the defendant, took objection that no specific grounds had been stated for the application. No reason, he said, was given in proof of the assertion in the petition that defendant's assets were less than his liabilities. The allegations were altogether too vague. Counsel proceeded to read an affidavit by the respondent, who stated that he had been caused considerable difficulty by the appointment of Mr. Harry Gibson as curator, on the granting of a provisional order on the petition of Hoffman. Mr. Gibson had locked the door of witness's office, and had refused him admission ever since the order was granted. Deponent was quite willing that the assets of his estate should be thoroughly realised, and that the proceeds should be paid over to some person elected to represent the creditors. He denied that his liabilities, fairly valued, exceeded his assets, fairly valued, and, therefore, that his estate was insolvent. Deponent declared that Mr. Gibson's attitude had been antagonistic to his estate throughout. He annexed two balance-sheets.

Mr. Benjamin read an affidavit by Max Franck, of Cape Town, representing the petitioning creditors. Deponent said that Black had grossly misrepresented facts, and had repeatedly made promises and given undertakings which he had failed to carry out. He had also given deponent a cheque which had been dis-honoured at the bank. Mr. Benjamin also read an affidavit by Harry Gibson, who had been appointed curator bonis on the petition of Hoffman. Mr. Gibson, referring to the balance-sheets put in by the respondent, stated that he found the books to be unsatisfactory, incomplete, and unreliable. Goods were included in which the defendant had no property. Deponent unhesitatingly said that the estate of the respondent was hopelessly insolvent, and that the creditors would be fortunate if they obtained 10s. in the £. His conduct had been most unsatisfactory, and deponent had no hesitation in saying that the respondent was one of the most unreliable men he had ever met. Many of his transactions required thorough investigation. It would be in the interests of the creditors if the estate were declared insolvent and finally sequestrated. Counsel also read affidavits by Osmond Furniss, accountant, and J. E. Close, accountant, speaking as to the unsatisfactory state of the defendant's books. One of the deponents said that there were debts amounting to £800 against the estate, which did not appear in the books. Both stated that it would be in the interests of the creditors if the estate were sequestrated.

Mr. Buchanan said that no details were given on the petition, no specific points were brought forward, and the respondent had no definite allegations to meet. The specific allegations were laid in the answering affidavits put in on behalf of the petitioner, and to these affidavits the respondent had no chance of replying. The petition said that his liabilities exceeded his liabilities. That was not a proper ground; it was simply like saying that the respondent was insolvent because he was insolvent. It was said further that there were outstanding judgments against the respondent. It did not follow, however, because of that fact that the estate was insolvent. Counsel, referring to the affidavit of Mr. Furniss, asked how it was that he managed now to water down a credit balance of £1,000 to a debit balance of £1,192. According to Mr. Furniss's own showing in the balance-sheet, the estate would realise 16s. in the £. He submitted that if Mr. Furniss had proved anything at all he had proved that his own balance-sheets were most unreliable. He asked the Court to say that the petitioners had not proved conclusively, absolutely, and clearly that the respondent's estate was insolvent.

Without calling upon Mr. Benjamin, Buchanan, J.: I quite agree with learned counsel for the defendant that when a debtor has not committed an act of insolvency, any creditor who petitions for the sequestration of the debtor's estate under Act No. 3^d of 1884 must, in his petition, state certain requisites. This view of the law was exemplified in the application for the sequestration of the same debtor's estate at a recent sitting of the Court. There the petition of the creditor, who was a creditor, for a sufficient amount to justify him in making application under the Act, did not state that the estate of his debtor was insolvent, or that it would be for the benefit of creditors to have the estate sequestrated, nor did he set forth the grounds upon which such statements were based. Affidavits were filed supplementing the petition, but the Court said the petition itself must set forth these requisites, and as that petition did not do so, the Court set aside the provisional order of sequestration. Thereupon other creditors of the defendant immediately took steps to have the estate sequestrated, and in their petition, which was presented in Chambers, they did state that the estate was insolvent, and that it was for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated, and they set forth the grounds on which such statements were based. These grounds were that the debtor owed a sum of £568, which was due and payable, and had not been paid, that there were several unsatisfied judgments against the defendant, and that it was for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated. True, these statements are not conclusive, but they raised a very strong prima facie case that the debtor was insolvent, and that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated. Now, on the return day of the summons issued on the petition, the debtor comes into court, and does not deny either the debt or that there are these unsatisfied judgments standing against him, but he denies that his estate is actually insolvent. It was open to him to do so, and he has attempted to prove by means of balance-sheets that his estate is not insolvent. It appears that the debtor got into difficulties, and had to place his estate under inspectorship, and that, for the purposes of this inspectorship, certain balance-sheets were drawn up. These certainly do show that the debtor's estate is not insolvent, but I need only take one of them to exemplify what reliance should be placed on these balance-sheets. One of these, made by Mr. Furniss, shows a slight balance in favour of the defendant. The defendant says some property was omitted from that balance-sheet. Mr. Furniss says this balance-sheet was drawn up wholly on information supplied to him by the defendant, but that, after looking through the books and accounts, and learning the actual facts, and after taking stock he says that the information supplied to him by the defendant was wholly unreliable. He states the books were not written up, and that there were creditors to the extent of £800 who were not brought up in the original balance-sheet. He says that, from his knowledge of the estate from the actual state of the accounts, he has come to the conclusion that the estate would not pay more than 10s. in the £. The matter is reduced mainly to the question: Is the defendant insolvent or not? The petition set forth enough to raise a prima facie case of insolvency, the allegation of which was fully justified by the further investigation which had taken place.

The defence set up by the defendant in this case cannot be sustained. The provisional order will therefore be made final, and the estate adjudicated insolvent.

Ordered accordingly that defendant's estate be adjudicated insolvent.

HAMMERSLEY-HEENAN V. THOMAS.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest a tempore morae and costs, and payment of £2 8s. 3d., premium of insurance, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

STAMPER AND ZOUTENDYK V. HEYNS.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on a magistrate's judgment for £68 and costs (£2 odd), and for certain landed property to be declared executable.

Mrs. Heyns said she owed the money, but the debt was contracted by her husband, who was now an invalid. She could not pay at present. She had paid £82 odd of the total debt. She was to pay £7 10s. a month.

Mr. Alexander said that there had been no payment since October last. The original debt was £140.

Defendant said she hoped to be able to resume the instalments shortly. She had had negotiations for the sale of the land.

Order granted, execution to be stayed on payment of £7 10s. per month, the first payment to be made on the 1st March, payments to be continued thereafter on the 1st of each month.

WIENER AND CO. V. RABINOWITZ.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £51 12s. 6d., with interest from the 10th February.

Order granted.

STANDARD FLOUR MILLS V. COHEN.

Mr. Gardiner applied for a provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be discharged.
Application granted.

LITTMAN, LANDSBERG AND CO. V. FELDMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Defendant said he had no statement to make.

Order granted.

THONON V. BURGER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a notarial bond for £150, less £50 paid on account.

Order granted.

SCOTT V. HEESON.

Mr. De Waal moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on a judgment for £8 15s. 5d., and £11 odd costs.

Defendant said that he was willing to pay £3 a month. He was a carpenter. He had no movable property, but he had a house at Plumstead which was mortgaged for £700.

Cross-examined: He did not know what the value of the property was. The house was at present untenanted.

Mr. De Waal said that the total indebtedness of the defendant was now about £30.

Defendant said he could pay £3 on the 1st March, and £10 in April.

Order granted, execution to be stayed pending payment of £3 on the 1st March, £10 on the 1st April, and £3 a month afterwards.

CAVANAGH V. THOMAS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for three months' rent of house, £21.

Defendant said that he was only earning £12 a month. He was employed in the C.G.R. He had a wife and family to support. Witness had thought of letting off part of the house, but had been unfortunate. He was now paying £4 a month to other creditors. He was willing to pay £1 a month. When he had paid off the other £4 a month, he would be willing to increase his payments to plaintiff.

Order granted, execution to be stayed on payment of £1 a month, with leave to the plaintiff to apply for the amount to be increased when the other debt shall have been paid off.

FLYTOHNER'S WHOLESALE { 1904.
AND OTHERS V. SKUY. { Feb. 25th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Defendant asked for a postponement of the application, because he expected to be able to provide security. He was a shopkeeper and the proprietor of the property, he believed, would stand surety.

Final order granted, not to be enforced for ten days, to enable the defendant to obtain a surety.

ESTATE TILLEY V. GRUNEBERG.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £5,000, with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of notice having been given.

Order granted.

BRAND V. KOTZE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £146, together with interest from the 3rd October and costs, upon an account signed by defendant as correct.

Order granted.

KAISER V. BANKS.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Magistrate's Court for £50 and costs (£1 19s. 7d.).

Replying to the Court, counsel said he did not know what was the object of this procedure. There would be no extra costs incurred by this application. The plaintiff had also an application to make for judgment, under Rule 319, for the cancellation of a certain lease and an order for ejectment from certain premises by reason of the rent not having been paid for a period of thirty days or more.

Provisional sentence and judgment granted as prayed.

ESTATE BULL V. LE ROUX AND FRANK.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £1,060, less £130 2s. 6d., paid on account, plaintiff tendering transfer.

Order granted.

HERMANN V. ABDOL KADER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £45, due by reason of the defendant having fallen in arrear with his instalments, whereby the whole amount had become due and payable.

Order granted.

IMMELMAN AND CO. V. HOFFMANN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £249 10s. 9d.

The Court intimated that a telegram had been handed in from Dr. Steyn, stating that the defendant, who was at Moorreesburg, was unable to appear owing to an attack of influenza.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 29th inst.

Postea (Feb. 29th). Provisional sentence was granted as prayed.

Granted.

Mr. Benjamin asked that a similar application on behalf of Max Rabinowitz might be allowed to stand over until the last day of term, in order that certain affidavits could be filed.

The application was ordered to stand over.

Postea (February 29th). The application was ordered to stand over till March 12th.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte RIGG.

Mr. McGregor moved to make absolute a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act.

Mr. Russell appeared for the North End Congregational Church, Port Elizabeth, to oppose.

This was an application to have made absolute a certain rule nisi calling upon the Town Council of Port Elizabeth and all other persons concerned to show cause why the applicant should not be registered as the owner of certain land. The matter had on two previous occasions been brought before the Court by the Town Council of Port Elizabeth. (See 13 C.T.R. 210 and 451). There was now no appearance for the Town Council who had intimated by letter to the applicants' attorneys that they left the matter in the hands of the Court specially requesting that the interests of the Congregational Church should be protected.

It appeared from the petition, and the affidavits in support thereof, that the ground in question belonged in 1860 to one Green, from whom the applicant alleged that the firm of W. and C. Rigg bought it in 1876. They had not, however, been able to obtain transfer, owing to Green having disappeared. Between 1881 and 1886, the firm paid rates on the ground, which was registered in their name on the Divisional and Municipal rolls. Petitioner stated that the property had been sold to him by the firm. The Town Council some time ago asked to have the ground declared to be the property of the Council, but Rigg appeared to oppose, and the rule was discharged. Petitioner prayed that the Court should order the registration of the title to the property in his name, subject to payment being made to the Town Council of Port Elizabeth of the balance of the purchase price not paid to the Council by Green, with interest due thereon, and of the unpaid rates due on the property.

Mr. Russell read an affidavit made by David Walter, Town Clerk of Port Elizabeth, in which deponent stated that the Council had permitted the Church to enter upon the ground when it was vacant, providing the Church indemnified the Council against any claim which Green or his representatives might afterwards make with respect to the lots. The Church had occupied the property bona fide, and had considerably improved it, and the Council, therefore, asked that the rights of the Church be protected.

A further affidavit was read, made by the treasurer of the North End Congregational Church. He said a church costing upwards of £2,600 had been erected on the property. The trustees had been under the impression that Green was the only person who had a claim, and as he had disappeared many years previously, it was not expected that there would be any interference with the Church's occupation. Deponent prayed the Court to protect the rights of the Church, as bona fide occupants and improvers.

Mr. Russell urged that applicant should be put to prove his claim by way of action.

Buchanan, J.: In giving judgment, said the matter of compensating the Church for any improvements they had made was not now before the Court, and would be a matter for subsequent adjustment. He saw no reason to doubt the bona fides of the present applicant, and he thought that the proper order of the Court would be to make the rule absolute, and to order that the petitioner Rigg be registered as the owner of this land, after, of course, he had satisfied the Town Council of Port Elizabeth for whatever sum might be in arrear on the land. Then Rigg became the owner of the land, and the Congregational Church might come to terms with him. If not, then possibly the Church might again come to the Court, who would then have to adjust the matter between them. The present application would be granted, and the rule made absolute. Costs of opposition would have to be paid by the Congregational Church.

Ex parte WIEHMAN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order directing the Registrar of Deeds to pass and execute transfer of petitioner's seventh share in certain property situate in the Riversdale Division. The petitioner succeeded to the said property owing to the predecease of her father, who was a son of the testators, John Heindrick Wiehman and his spouse. The will bequeathed to "all our children already born or still to be born of this marriage, an equal share of all our landed properties which we may possess at the death of the first dying," and further imposed a condition (set out in Dutch) upon the legatees, which was translated thus: "Shall be able to let, sell, dispose of, or alienate only to each other, but to no stranger whatsoever, not even with the consent of all." Petitioner had sold her share for £100 to some one outside the family. The Registrar declined to register the transfer in view of the restriction. The question was whether the restraint applied merely to the children, or also extended to subsequent grades. Counsel argued that the restraint was only personal to the children.

The matter was ordered to stand over, pending further information as to the precise terms of the will.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT AND HARBOUR BOARD.

Mr. Searle said that this was an application on notice to the Secretary for Agriculture and the Table Bay Harbour Board, calling upon them to show cause why the Government should not be restrained from making any grant or lease of certain land, pending an action to be brought by the applicants. A letter had now been received from Messrs. Reid and Nephew stating that the Government would undertake not to issue a grant to the Table Bay Harbour Board of land at Fort Wynyard, pending the result of an action to be brought by the Town Council next term, costs to be costs in the cause. To this letter the applicants had replied that they did not see their way to withdraw the application on condition that the action of the Town Council should be brought to trial next term, as they were anxious to have the matter settled. Circumstances might prevent them from being able to go to trial next term, as some of the material witnesses might be absent. Mr. Searle said that his clients were quite willing to accept the undertaking of the Government on condition that they (the Council) should make every effort to go to trial next term.

Mr. Howel Jones (for the Government) said that it might perhaps meet the matter if his lordship granted an interdict until the last day of next term, unless the action were previously brought, the applicant to have leave to apply again in case it were impossible then to go to trial.

An interdict was granted, the Government giving an undertaking not to issue a grant pending an action to be brought by the applicant, to be heard, if possible, next term, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte CARSON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order on behalf of the executors dative confirming the sale of certain property to the second named petitioner, who was the surviving spouse of the late owner.

Order granted as prayed.

SWARTZ V. FICK AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order empowering the applicant to sell, surrender, or otherwise dispose of a certain policy of insurance effected with the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for £400, on the life of Johannes Fick, in favour of the second-named respondent (Maria Fock), his wife, and ceded by her to plaintiff as collateral security for a debt.

Buchanan, J., said that a telegram had been received from the Commissioner of Robben Island stating that the respondents were fever patients, that they had no funds to engage an attorney, but that the first-named respondent desired to defend the action. The matter would stand over until the 12th March.

Ex parte THE SECRETARY FOR AGRICULTURE.

Mr. Howel Jones moved on behalf of the Secretary for Agriculture for an order authorising the re-issue of certain titles. The petition stated that some years ago a grant was made to one Becker of certain erven at Vryburg. Becker had failed to pay the quitrent and the erven had been left derelict. Becker had disappeared, and could not now be found. Government now applied for leave to re-issue the titles. The erven had been sold by Becker to another person named Boyd, and the Government had been paid the arrears of quitrent.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on all persons concerned to show cause on the 15th April why the petition should not be granted, rule to be served on the Registrar of Deeds at Vryburg, and to be published once in the "Diamond-fields Advertiser" and in a Vryburg paper.

OHLSSON & CAPE BREWERIES (1904.
V. THOMSON. (Feb. 25th.

This was an application for an interdict restraining the respondent from interfering with certain water pipes belonging to applicants, and from allowing drainage from his premises to run on to the applicants' property. There had been an action between the parties in respect of their rights (see 11 C.T.R. 275), and the judgment of the Court on that occasion was supplemented by a written agreement. Applicants alleged that respondent had committed acts in violation of this agreement.

The respondent did not oppose the granting of the interdict in regard to the drainage, but claimed, so far as the water was concerned, that he should be allowed to attach a rubber pipe to the applicants' tap, to carry the water to his premises, pending the applicants providing a tank or tanks to enable respondent to exercise his dipping rights.

It was stated that the agreement had not been signed, but that it embodied the terms agreed upon by the parties in an interview.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for the applicants. Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent.

Mr. Searle said respondent was entitled to water, and if he were not allowed to take it as he had been doing through the pipe, he would not be able to get water until the tank was erected by applicants. Counsel suggested that the interdict should be granted, but that a time should be fixed by which applicants should provide a tank, the respondent to take the water through a pipe in the meantime.

Mr. Schreiner said that if the respondent would sign the agreement, applicants would undertake to provide a tank in a fortnight's time, defendant to take the water through the pipe in the meantime.

Mr. Searle contended the matter of the agreement was outside the case, and respondent could not be required to sign the agreement now. The applicants could proceed by action, to compel respondent to sign it.

Buchanan, J., said that an interdict would be granted, with costs, execution to be stayed for a fortnight, with leave to apply again.

Mr. Schreiner asked that it should be entered that it was by consent.

His Lordship: Very well, I can say "by consent of Mr. Schreiner."

Mr. Searle said he did not admit that the other side had any such rights. It should be also stated that the respondent, on his part, consented.

Buchanan, J.: I will enter it "by consent of both parties."

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ESTATESCHEUBLEV. GALPIN. } 1904.
ESTATE LLOYD V. GALPIN. } Feb. 26th.
ESTATE HUTCHONS V. GALPIN. }

Purchase and sale—Prescription.

In 1853, the late L. purchased certain lots of land from the late K., but did not receive transfer or occupation. In 1895, the executors of K. sold by public auction the landed property in the estate, including the interest of the estate in the said untransferred lots, which were purchased by the defendant, and transfer was passed to him. In 1903, the executor of L. instituted an action against the defendant for transfer of the lots by reason of the previous sale to L.

Held, that the claim was barred by prescription.

These consolidated actions came up for the hearing of argument on exceptions.

The issues in these three cases were precisely similar, and the following pleadings in Hutchons's case were in all respects similar to those in the other two cases.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is William Gurney Dixon, of Port Elizabeth, who sues in his capacity of executor dative in the estate of the late William Charles Hutchons, of Port Elizabeth; the defendant is George Luck Galpin, of Port Elizabeth, a medical practitioner.

2. Prior to the year 1853 the late Johanna Cornelia Korsten (born Hoets) and the late Maria Johanna Charlotta Chase (born Korsten) were the registered owners of the farm formerly called Papenkuilsfontein, and now called Cradockstown, or Cradock Place, situate in the district of Port Elizabeth, by deed of transfer, dated April 27, 1841.

3. On or about June 30, 1853, the said Mrs. Korsten and Mrs. Chase sold certain portions of the said farm, in lots, and the said late W. O. Hutchons purchased lots 24, 25, 65, 175, 177, and 184; transfer duty was paid on or about December 30, 1853, and the necessary declarations of seller and purchaser were duly made, but transfer was not passed.

4. Thereafter, after the death of the said late Mrs. Korsten, her executor transferred the half of the remaining extent of the said farm, registered in her name, to the estate of the said late Mrs. Chase, who had also died previously; included in the remaining extent transferred as aforesaid were the said lots purchased by the late W. C. Hutchons.

5. Thereafter the said remaining extent was transferred to several persons in succession, and on or about June 5, 1882, was transferred to one Francis Henry Carpenter.

6. After the death of the said Carpenter, to wit, on or about February 26, 1895, his executor sold by public auction certain portions of the said farm Cradock Place, and also "the interest in whatever claim the estate may have in the untransferred Korsterven," and the defendant purchased the said property and also the said interest; "the untransferred Korsterven" above referred to included the lots purchased by the said Hutchons, together with certain lots purchased by a certain J. Scheuble and a certain Lenox Lloyd.

7. The defendant purchased at the said sale with notice and knowledge that there were claimants to the erven or lots aforementioned.

8. The plaintiff has demanded transfer from the defendant of the aforesaid lots purchased by the late W. C. Hutchons, or in the alternative, damages calculated at the sum of £2,400; but the defendant neglects and refuses to pass the said transfer or to pay the aforesaid sum.

The plaintiff claims: (a) That the defendant be ordered forthwith to pass transfer to the plaintiff of the aforesaid lots, Nos. 24, 25, 65, 175, 177, and 184; or, in the alternative, payment of the sum of £2,400 as and for damages. (b) Alternative relief. (c)

The following was the defendant's exception to the declaration. Before pleading, the defendant excepts to the plaintiff's declaration, on the ground that the alleged cause of action arose in the year 1853, and has become barred by prescription, by reason of the lapse of time, and the plaintiff has now no right to sue on the cause of action alleged. Wherefore the defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be set aside, and quashed, with costs. Should the above exception be overruled, the defendant further excepts to the declaration as insufficient, embarrassing, and bad in law, inasmuch as it alleges neither that plaintiff gave (or was to give) any consideration in respect of the purchase of the lots in suit, nor what the consideration (if any) was, nor whether nor when it was paid; and, further, inasmuch as the plaintiff makes no tender of payment as against the transfer claimed by him in this action. Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's declaration may be set aside, and quashed, with costs.

Further, for a plea in abatement, the defendant says:

1. The plaintiff sues on an alleged contract of purchase, to which he does not allege that defendant was privy as a party or otherwise.

2. The plaintiff does not allege that defendant is in law a representative of the alleged seller of the lots named in the declaration, nor does he allege that the defendant is in any other way liable to plaintiff, than by having obtained transfer of the lots as one of a series of successors in title to the said seller.

3. The defendant became registered owner of the lots in 1897, and thereafter (but prior to the present claim having been brought to the notice of defendant), the defendant sold and transferred lots 24, 25, 65, to Mrs. Kerkhoff, who is now the registered owner thereof.

Lots 175, 177, and 184 still remain registered in defendant's favour.

4. The defendant contends that plaintiff in his declaration discloses no causes of action against defendant, and that, by virtue of the premises, the plaintiff is not entitled to the judgment asked for.

Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be set aside and dismissed with costs.

And should the above exception, and plea in abatement be overruled, but not otherwise, the defendant pleads over and says:

1. He admits paragraphs 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration, subject to what is hereinafter stated, more particularly with regard to the alleged purchase by Hutchons, and save that defendant says that the allegations in paragraph 6 as to sale to Lloyd and Scheubele are immaterial in this action.

2. As to paragraph 3 the defendant admits that on or about the date mentioned therein Mrs. Korsten and Mrs. Chase sold portions of the farm in lots, and that no transfer of any of the lots sued for has been passed; but the defendant does not otherwise admit the allegations in the said paragraph, and puts plaintiff to the proof thereof.

3. The defendant further does not admit (if Hutchons did purport to purchase the lots) that Hutchons or anyone on his behalf undertook to pay, or did duly pay, any consideration for the said lots, and the defendant puts plaintiff to the proof in respect thereof.

4. The defendant says that neither Hutchons nor anyone else on his behalf ever occupied any of these lots, but says that Mrs. Korsten and defendant's other predecessors in title, and defendant himself, always as registered owners, retained possession of the lots till defendant sold lots 24, 25, and 65 to Mrs. Kerkhoff.

5. The defendant sold the said lots for £550 (the full market value), in good faith and without knowledge that the plaintiff (who had never made any claim before), alleged any claim to the lots by reason of the sale said to have been effected in 1853.

6. The defendant is, and always has been, ready and willing, on reasonable proof being adduced by plaintiff that Hutchons bought and paid for, and is still entitled to claim the said lots, to pay over to plaintiff the proceeds of the lots sold as aforesaid.

7. The defendant, prior to summons, with a view to paying over such proceeds, asked plaintiff to furnish such reasonable proof, but plaintiff failed, neglected, and refused to do so.

8. The defendant contends that by reason of the fact that Hutchons and the plaintiff have delayed since 1853 in taking occupation or transfer, and in taking any steps in a competent court to obtain transfer, the defendant is justified, after this great lapse of time, in requiring reasonable proof of the plaintiff's right to claim as he now does, and in putting plaintiff to the proof of the allegations hereinbefore referred to, in order to protect himself against legal proceedings, especially at the instance of others who might be better entitled to claim than plaintiff.

9. The defendant says further that he is, and always has been, ready and willing to pass transfer of the lots still registered in his name to plaintiff, on being furnished with reasonable proof as aforesaid.

10. Subject to the above, defendant admits paragraph 8 of the declaration.

11. Should this Honourable Court find that the plaintiff duly bought and paid for lot 18, the defendant contends that he should not be ordered to pass transfer save in respect of the lots still registered in his name, and that he should not, in lieu of passing transfer of the lots sold by him, be ordered to pay to plaintiff more than the amount of the proceeds realised by the sale of the lots aforesaid.

Wherefore, subject to the above, the defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs, and that in any case, whatever order the Court may make, the defendant should, by reason of the premises, be held harmless and indemnified in respect of costs.

Plaintiff's replication was as follows: For a replication to the defendant's exceptions the plaintiff says that the same are not well founded in law, and prays that the same may be overruled with costs. And for an exception to the plea in abatement and to the plea of the defendant, the plaintiff says that the said pleas are inconsistent, contradictory, and embarrassing, inasmuch as the first plea alleges that the plaintiff has no claim, and in the second plea the defendant tenders to pass transfer to plaintiff and to pay a certain sum in lieu of damages on proof of certain facts therein referred to. Wherefore, the plaintiff prays that the said pleas or one of them may be expunged, with costs.

And for a replication to the plea in abatement, in case the foregoing should be overruled, but not otherwise, the plaintiff says: He admits that defendant has sold and transferred lots 24, 25, and 65 to Mrs. Kerkhoff, but save as above he denies all the allegations of fact, and conclusions of law in the said plea, and joins issue thereupon and again prays for judgment, with costs of suit. And for a replication to the defendant's plea should the foregoing exception be overruled, but not otherwise, the plaintiff says: He admits that neither he nor the said Hutchons had possession of the said lots, and that the defendant and his predecessors in title had possession thereof, but he says that such possession on the part of defendant was wrongful and unlawful; he admits that the defendant sold and transferred lots 24, 25, and 65 to Mrs. Kerkhoff; he denies that the price mentioned by the defendant as having been obtained by him was the full market value of the property; save as above, and save in so far as the said plea admits any of the allegations in the declaration he denies all and singular the allegations of fact, and conclusions of law in the said plea contained and joins issue thereupon and again prays for judgment, with costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for the executor. Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent.

Mr. Schreiner, in argument, said that the contract of purchase was alleged to have been entered into in the year 1855. Fifty years had passed, and thirty years were sufficient to kill an action if it be a personal one. The authorities were clear on that point. Whether the original purchaser had knowledge of these contracts or not, the principle remained that if a person did not pursue his claim for thirty years he was barred. Here nothing was done to preserve the title or to interrupt the currency of the prescription of the personal action. Counsel referred to Van der Linden (Henry's edition, p. 274) Cod. (7-39-3) and Gronewegen in loc. Bykershoek Quaest. jur. Priv. (lib. 2, Cap. 15). See also Voet (44-3-8) and our Act 7 of 1865, Sec. 106. These authorities show that 30 years' lapse would kill an obligation of a personal character.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing the purchase price had been paid at the time, what do you say would be the position?]

Then it would still be the same; the lapse of time would extinguish the claim. Counsel submitted that there was a strong legal presumption that there had not been payment, because the purchaser would, in the event that he had paid, have sought possession of the property.

Mr. Searle argued that this was an effective claim for rectification of transfer. The defendant only bought any interest the estate of Carpenter might have in the untransferred property. He submitted that it was clear that there was intended to be a transfer, and that the Court would treat the question of rectification as a matter of equity. He cited the case of Simon (Buchanan, 1879, p. 10), and contended that the whole of the facts ought to be put before the Court in order to determine whether in equity the plaintiff was not entitled to transfer.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am of opinion that the exception that the plaintiff's claim has been barred by prescription is a good one. The purchase upon which the executor of the purchaser now relies took place as far back as 1855. No transfer was effected in favour of the purchaser, and he did not obtain occupation of the lots of land. It does not even appear that he ever paid the purchase price. In 1885, the executor of the former owner sold by public auction the landed property in the estate, including "the interest in whatever claim the estate may have in the untransferred lots of land." The defendant purchased the land including the lots, and received transfer thereof. The executor of the original purchaser now claims transfer of the lots from the defendant, and the objection has been raised by exception that the claim has been barred by prescription. In my opinion, the claim falls within the ordinary rules relating to prescription. Even if the 106th section of Act 7 of 1865 does not apply, the period of one-third of a century having elapsed since the cause of action accrued, the claim is barred by prescription, and the exception must be allowed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte THE EXECUTOR { 1904.
OF THE ESTATE OF SAMOA. } Feb. 26th.

Mr. Alexander moved to have an interdict discharged. The interdict was granted pending an action to be brought by one Bydien, but the latter did not appear at the trial, and judgment was given for absolution from the instance. The Court did not, however, specifically direct that the interdict should be discharged.

The interdict was discharged, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte ALLY.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the issue of a certified copy of certain mortgage bonds. Counsel stated that the matter had previously been before the Court, and was ordered to stand over for a report from the Registrar. The Registrar now reported, recommending that a rule nisi should be issued.

A rule was granted as recommended by the Registrar, to be published once in a Cape Town newspaper.

Ex parte MALAN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan, for the applicants, said that the application was one for an order authorising the registration of certain property. The matter was before the Court some time ago, and was then ordered to stand over pending further information as to whether the sale was a good one and well advertised. He now produced affidavits showing that the sale had been well advertised, and that the amount realised was very satisfactory.

Application granted.

Ex parte WEYERS.

Bequest—Mutual will—Portions payable to daughters.

A husband and wife, by mutual will, bequeathed to their sons certain land, on condition that they should one year after the death of the survivor pay certain portions to their sisters, and that the testators should retain their full rights over the said land during their lives. The testatrix died, and the survivor relinquished his rights under the will. The respondents obtained transfer and claimed the right to alienate the land without first paying or securing the portions of their sisters.

Held, that the sisters were entitled to an interdict, restraining such alienation.

This was an application made by three sisters, daughters of certain testators, against four brothers, of whom, however, one did not oppose, for an interdict restraining them from mortgaging or alienating certain farms without securing to them (applicants) the amounts which respondents had to pay to them after the death of the surviving testator, who had renounced his life interest and given the sons transfer of the property. Respondents denied that they had any intention of mortgaging or alienating the property, and claimed that they were not required to make payment of the bequests to the applicants until a year after the death of the surviving testator.

The will bequeathed certain farms to the respondents on condition that the four should pay out to two of the applicants a sum of £150 each, and to the other a sum of £200, which moneys must be paid a year after the death of the survivor, testators reserving to themselves their full rights on and over the properties during their lifetime.

Applicants now asked that the respondents be ordered to pay them the sums stated in the will, or to secure payment to them, and that they be interdicted from selling, mortgaging or encumbering the property until petitioners were satisfactorily secured by them.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the applicants; Mr. Cloos for three of the respondents.

After hearing counsel,

De Villiers, C.J.: The bequest to the respondents was a conditional one, the condition being that the sons, that is, the respondents, shall pay to two of their sisters, the present applicants, the sum of £150 each and to another sister the sum of £200 one year after the death of the survivor, together with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent.; and that they (the testator and testatrix) shall retain their full rights on and over the said property during their lives. Now, in my opinion it is clear the intention of the testators was that there should be no transfer to the sons until the money was paid to the daughters. It is true the will says that the money shall only be paid after death of the survivor, but it does not say that transfer shall take place in the meantime, and, in strictness, the transfer ought not to have taken place until one year after the death of the survivor unless the sons were willing to pay their sisters the money. It was assumed by the testators that there was to be no transfer until after the death of both, because the testators were to retain their full right on and over the property which they could not retain if there was transfer during the lifetime of the survivor. Now, it appears that the survivor has relinquished his rights under the will. Of course he was at liberty to do so, but he could not, by doing so, deprive the daughters of the portion which had been secured to them. They remain entitled to the rights they had, viz., that there shall be no transfer to the sons until the money had been paid out to them. The applicants are now entitled to an order restraining the respondents from making any alienation or encumbrance of the land until each respondent has paid the amount owing by him or has found security to the satisfaction of the Resident Magistrate of Aberdeen.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SHUTTE V. HEDLEY BROS. { 1904.
 { Feb. 26th.

Building contract.

This was an action brought by Walter Percy Shutte, law agent, of Prieska, against Hedley Bros., store-keepers, also of Prieska, to recover damages in the sum of £500 for alleged breach of contract in reference to the sale of certain land.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff purchased the erf numbered 120 at Prieska from the defendants in February, 1901, for the sum of £575, which was duly paid. At the time of the said sale, the defendants represented to the plaintiff that they had entered into an agreement with the Colonial Government whereby the Government would lease for the purposes of a Post Office a certain building to be erected by the defendants upon the said erf at a yearly rental of £25 for a period of three years from April, 1901. It was a condition of the said sale, and part of the consideration of the said purchase price, that the defendant should erect upon the said erf the building to be so leased, and it was specially warranted that the said building should satisfy the requirements of the postal authorities, and be passed by them when completed. It was a further condition of the said agreement that there should be payable by the defendants to the plaintiff a further sum of £3 a year for three years. The defendants did not erect and complete the said building until April 30, 1903, and the said building, when completed, did not satisfy the requirements of the postal authorities, who had refused to pass the said building. The defendants had not assigned to plaintiff any right, title, or interest in the Colonial Government. The defendants had wrongfully and unlawfully failed to carry out the said oblige-tions. The profit of the said agreement had been lost to the plaintiff, the said building was practically valueless, and the said erf was much less valuable, and, otherwise, the plaintiff had sustained damages in the sum of £500, for which he prayed judgment with costs.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal allegations, and craved leave to refer to the written contract of the 8th February, 1901. They denied that the plaintiff was the registered owner of the said erf, and said the firm of Shutte Bros. were the owners. They admitted having entered into a contract with the Colonial Government for the erection of a building on the said erf for Post Office purposes, and said they informed the plaintiff of the conditions of the agreement. They admitted that the building was not completed until April, 1903, but said that that was due to causes wholly beyond their control, arising from the war, and the impossibility of obtaining material and labour. They denied that the building did not satisfy the requirements of the Post Office, or was unsuitable for that purpose, or that the postal authorities refused to pass it. The plaintiff objected to certain windows and a door which opened on to the adjoining Government erf, over which he claimed a right of way. The said building was erected to a plan with which the plaintiff was acquainted. They denied that the building was useless or valueless to the plaintiff, or that the erf was of less value to the plaintiff. They denied that the plaintiff had sustained any damage, and prayed that the claim should be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that he objected to the windows and door, inasmuch as their position was wholly unsuitable, and would render the said windows and door useless in the event of a building being erected on the adjoining Government erf. Except as above, he denied the allegations of the plaintiff as to fact.

The rejoinder of the defendants was general.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Upington) for the plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the defendant.

Mr. Gardiner, with the consent of the other side, made certain modifications in the declaration with regard to the ownership of the land, and the tense of one of the paragraphs.

Walter Percy Shutte (he plaintiff), said that when the declaration was drawn, he did not know that the transfer had been passed to his brother and himself. On the 8th February, 1901, he entered into certain conditions of sale. No mention was made therein as to the erection of any building. On the 9th February he received a letter from the defendants, in which they said, "We beg to confirm the sale of the said erf under the following conditions: The price paid, viz., £575, is for the erf as it now is, but we take the responsibility of erecting and handing over to you a new building to be used by the Government as a post office, the said building to be completed in due course, and passed by the postal authorities as per our agreement with them. In addition to the rent from the Government, £25 a year, we guarantee you an additional £3 a year for three years." Witness did not see the agreement with the Post Office. Defendants told him that the building would be completed about April, 1901. He had never seen any plan of the building. Defendants gave him no particulars whatever as to the building; he trusted to their treating him properly, and he was wishful to have this assured income of £25 a year from the property. There was a cottage at one corner of the erf. He saw the building erected from the foundation to the roof. He did not know where the pegs of his erf were, and how close the building was in proximity to the Government erf. The building operations were commenced in February, 1901, and were then stopped. He complained about the delay to the defendants, but did not write until April, 1902. The defendants wrote stating that owing to the military having commandeered wagons they could not go on—but they had reason to believe the Government would renew the agreement. Witness's firm wrote asking to be allowed to see the agreement. No reply was received. In June they again wrote to the defendants urging steps to be taken to complete the building. The defendants replied that they were unable to secure transport. Further correspondence ensued. The defendants, he believed, were military contractors and had under their charge hundreds of wagons. In August, 1902, witness's brother succeeded in getting furniture up. He should think the defendants would have been able to obtain the necessary materials to complete the buildings. The defendants resumed work on the building in February, 1903. He thought that work could have been resumed a month or two after the cessation of hostilities. He inspected the building at its completion, and he discovered about December, 1902, that it was built within four inches of the boundary of the Government erf No. 121. The step of the building was actually built on the Government erf. A man could not enter the door without trespassing on the Government erf. This door was to the postmaster's intended sleeping room. There would not be room to put up scaffolding to build on the Government land.

By the Court: If the door had been blocked up and placed on the other side of the building all difficulties would have been removed.

[Hopley, J.: Is it because that was not done that you are in the Supreme Court to-day?]

Witness did not reply. Continuing his evidence, witness said he saw John Hedley with regard to the matter between December and April, 1903. Witness's attorneys wrote to the defendants. In April the Post Office authorities were erecting fixtures in the new building. In April Mr. Campbell, who was an official of the Post Office, was in town, and he informed witness that they could not take the office. He afterwards saw another official of the department. Witness objected to the position of the door and windows, and asked that they should be removed to where he directed. That was not done. He had not been paid £3 a year mentioned in the defendant's letter. One of the walls of the building was tumbling, because the down pipe was only continued half way down the building, and the rain had splashed against the wall and washed out the lime.

[Hopley, J.: I thought the complaint at Prieska was that you had not had rain for three years?]

We have had seven inches now.

[Hopley, J.: Oh, this has happened since the rain has come?]

That is so. Continuing, witness said that it would cost £5 to remove the door to the other side of the building. It would cost a similar amount to remove the windows to the other side.

Hopley, J., said it would be impossible to put further windows on the other side of the building, the rooms were so small.

Witness said he had had an offer of £3 10s. a month for the building soon after hostilities had ceased.

By the Court: He could not get an offer like that to-day. When he had the offer the building was incomplete. Other buildings had since been erected.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The erf occupied a central position in the village. He had not seen a letter by the defendants in which they undertook to complete the building within three months, "provided we are not prevented through the intervention of the military or other unforeseen circumstances." Witness knew nothing about that condition. He was clerk of the Municipality. He knew there had been a certain amount of feeling in the village in regard to the lease of the premises by the Government as a Post-office. Mr. Hedley was chairman of the Municipality. A resolution was not taken by the Municipality in regard to the contract. He had not seen a letter sent by Mr. Hedley, chairman of the Municipality, to the Postmaster-General, stating that at a meeting of the Council it was resolved that they should write a letter pointing out the unfairness of giving Hedley Bros. the contract for the new Post-office. Such a letter did not appear in the Council's letter-book. The Municipality passed a resolution censuring Mr. Hedley as chairman of the Municipality for writing to the Postmaster-General on private matters. He admitted that there appeared an entry in the minutes in regard to a private letter between Mr. Hedley and the Postmaster-General; he did not, however, remember the letter. The building had not been commenced when he entered into the agreement with the defendants; there was not a stone in the ground. Mr. John Hedley had not previously shown him the plan now produced. He left everything to Mr. Hedley at that time. He did not trouble as to pegs and so forth. The conversation with Mr. Campbell took place in April, 1903. On that occasion witness asked the Post-office to take over the building, and he requested Hedley to alter the windows. He suggested to Mr. Hedley to overcome all obstacles that he should buy a strip of land from Government. Mr. Campbell could not give him a definite answer at that time. Witness stipulated that he should have access over the Government land or the removal of the door. Mr. Hedley offered there and then, if Government would occupy the place, to alter the windows and door; but witness said he must have £50 compensation from Hedley for delay in the completion of building. Mr. Hedley, Mr. Murray, and witness's brother were all present at the interview. Witness did not ask for a servitude from the Government. Mr. Campbell at first gave him a negative answer; then he said he was a subordinate, and would have to consult his superiors at De Aar, and promised to let witness know. Witness received no answer. He admitted having said, after the Government refused to take the building, that he did not care whether the Government took the building or not, as he could get £3 or £3 10s. a month for it. Property had appreciated in value in Prieska since the war. The erf occupied a position in the very centre of the village.

Witness estimated the value of the erf and the buildings erected on it at £2,000. He had expended about £1,500 on it, in addition to the store, dwelling-house, and stable, and had had the ground fenced. This property was let at £10 a month.

Re-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The Council were indignant because Mr. Hedley used the Council's name in writing to the Postmaster-General for private ends.

By the Court: The public were agitating to have new offices built. Mr. Hedley and himself, as chairman and clerk, pointed out to the Government that the office would be inadequate. The Council objected that he used the Council's name for his own private matters without their consent.

Without prejudice, he must admit that it was a very nice little Post Office, as far as the inside was concerned.

The evidence of one Robert Copelin, taken on commission, was read in reference to a plan put in.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Robert George Hedley, of the firm of Hedley Bros., storekeepers, Prieska, said witness and plaintiff wrote a joint letter to the Government complaining of the inadequacy of the Post-office. In consequence of those representations, witness was approached by the Government with regard to the erection of a building. In January, 1901, an agreement was entered into, the Government accepting witness's offer. Witness's firm commenced building operations at once. When the sale to Shutte took place, the building had been erected to a height of 4 or 5 feet. There were pegs in the ground showing the boundaries of the different erven. Plaintiff went along with witness to the erf, and saw the boundaries of the erf. Witness also showed plaintiff the plan which had been submitted to the Government. Witness showed it to him before the sale took place. The only alteration between the plan and the building erected was that a door was placed between the two rooms. Plaintiff was given every opportunity to see the letters which passed between Government and witness as to the Post-office. They gave no special warranty or guarantee to Mr. Shutte outside the letter. They made every effort to have the building completed, but it was impossible to complete it before it was actually finished. At the beginning of 1902 he came down to Newlands. His brother, John Hedley, afterwards had charge of the business at Prieska. They had great delay in connection with getting timber up. The delay was caused by the difficulty in getting trucks and delays on the railway, and the transport from De Aar was still in the hands of the military. Materials were commandeered by the military at De Aar, and had to be ordered three times over. They undertook to have the building completed provided they were not stopped by military intervention or other unforeseen circumstances. Except wood and iron goods that had to be got from outside, they carried the building up as far as they could.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: They had charge of the transport under control of the military officer. They were not provided by the military. Later on, wagons had to be conveyed. The conveyance commenced about the end of 1901. He could not remember whether martial law was withdrawn about the end of July. They continued after hostilities ceased to be military contractors. Even then they could not put through their own goods without authority from the military. He did not consider that the building was in a very awkward position. The door at the side was only to be used by the Government for Post Office purposes. There was access to the building from three sides. Windows could be put at the front instead of at the side. The building was put close to the Government erf in order to save land. If he had been putting up the building for himself, he should have put it in the same place. They were prepared to pay the plaintiff £3 a year; he admitted they were liable, but he supposed it had been overlooked.

Re-examined: He put in this extra £3 a year in order to make up what Mr. Shutte considered would be a reasonable return for his outlay. Mr. Shutte did not consider £25 a year would be sufficient. He had never had a demand for this £3 a year.

John Hedley, a partner in the defendant firm, and brother of the last witness, said he went up to Prieska in July, 1902, his brother having left about the beginning of that year. When witness arrived he found that the brickwork was about completed. He made efforts to get the material through. The first material arrived about the middle of August, 1902, and consisted of wood and iron. Shortly afterwards, he put on a man to proceed with the erection. The rest of the material was received in December. The Government installed their wires about the end of March, 1903. Mr. Campbell, the Government inspector, approved the building in April; the Postal authorities were anxious to get possession. At the interview when the Bros. Shutte were present, Mr. W. P. Shutte pointed out that he wanted a right of way or must have the door and windows removed. Witness said he would remove the door and windows to any position the plaintiff desired. Shutte made no answer. On a later date plaintiff made a claim for £50 compensation, because he had not been given possession sooner. There was no reason why the Government should not have taken over the building except for plaintiff's demand for a right of way.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Martial law was withdrawn about August, 1902. No restrictions had been removed before then as regarded transport. Their contract with the military ceased at the end of hostilities. Their wagons were engaged to carry the materials for this building from De Aar. They had great difficulty in 1902 or 1903 in obtaining labour. There was plenty of labour at the beginning of 1901, when the building was commenced. The last lot of materials came to hand in December, 1902, and the building was not completed until April 30, 1903, but they were then unable to get forward rapidly with the work, owing to the scarcity of labour.

William Thomas A. Todd, a partner in the firm of J. B. McIvor, forwarding agents, De Aar, gave evidence as to the difficulty of getting goods through to Prieska during the war, and the restrictions imposed by the military. Certain building materials consigned to the defendants were commandeered by the military in 1901. There was one consignment that was lost by the railway. Some material was detained at De Aar, and could not be sent through. Eventually it was lost, probably stolen. Witness ordered a third lot from Port Elizabeth. They were doing their utmost to get materials through to Prieska. Hedley Bros. were constantly "worrying" them about it. Immediately after the war was over, practically all the transports were food stuffs, Prieska being almost without. There was a huge block of material at De Aar from soon after the war broke out. The block had only recently been cleared. Their store was choked with goods, and they had to keep a lot of goods in the open. Part of the timber intended for Hedley Bros. was probably stolen by passing troops.

Arthur Campbell, of the Postal Department, said that he inspected the building, and found that it was eminently suitable for the purposes of a post-office. At an interview that they had, Sidney Shutte (who was the spokesman) said that they must have a servitude before they could accept the building. It was a very suitable place; it was a lovely building. The furniture was second to none. In fact, he had never seen a nicer post-office in the whole of his peregrinations.

By the Court: As far as he knew, had it not been for the question raised by Shutte Bros. the Government would have taken over this building.

James M. Forbes, an officer of the Postal Department, said he authorised Mr. Young, as representing the Post-office, to accept Mr. Hedley's offer in regard to the office at Prieska. Witness also gave evidence as to the difficulties of transport.

By the Court: The plaintiff himself was the sole obstacle to the Government taking over the building.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: They did not raise any objection as to the building being on the boundary of the Government erf.

Counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: It seems to me that in this litigation what ought to be small issues had been magnified into large ones, and that the expenditure of very little money, and the exercise of a certain amount of common sense and forbearance at one period must have saved the parties being involved in this expensive law suit. On the evidence.

I am of opinion, after careful consideration, that the foundations and portions of the walls of the building had been built when the defendants entered into the contract with the plaintiff. At the circumstances point in favour of this view, and I think that Mr. Shutte was wrong when he said that he did not see the building before he bought the erf. His recollection did not seem clear on several points, and I think that he was too much of a man of business to enter into a contract without knowing something definite as to its terms. If, however, I am wrong as to the plaintiff having seen the building actually laid down before he bought, and if the building was started after he had bought, plaintiff could have no grievance as to the position in which it was placed. The conditions of February 8, 1901, stipulated that from the date of sale and purchase the building shall be and remain solely at the plaintiff's risk, loss, and profit, so that the ground was then his piece of ground; it was at his risk, loss, and profit, and it was his business to see that nothing was going to be put on that ground which might possibly deteriorate or affect its value. Furthermore, I am not by any manner of means satisfied that any complaint could be made, because the building was put right upon the boundary. I am not certain that in some aspects it was not an advantage, and did not add to the value of erf 120 because the owner of the adjoining property, in order to obtain light and air, would have to build further back on his own land. At all events, there is no thing in law to prevent a man from building up to the extreme limits of his ground, and that was done in this case. The defendants in their letter to the plaintiff following the sale said that the building was to be erected as per the agreement with the postal authorities. It seems to me that a man in the position of the plaintiff, upon receiving that letter, must have been placed upon inquiry, and it seems inconceivable that he did not fully enter into and find out every bit of the agreement that there was between Hedley Bros., and the authorities. I personally believe that the plaintiff was not so much asleep in his own interests as not to say, "Let me know exactly what this agreement is." I think Mr. Hedley's memory in this matter must be trusted more than Mr. Shutte's. With regard to the alleged delay in the completion of the building, I see it was said, and said quite rightly, that when there was a state of war intervening people's contracts must be construed by the state of affairs that was going around them, or what they had a right to expect, and if there had been no provision in this contract, and defendants had simply undertaken, without any conditions, to complete the building within three months, it is possible that they might have been held to their contract hard and fast on the ground that they had no business to enter into such an indiscreet contract. But having regard to these very circumstances, they were prudent enough to introduce the clause protecting themselves against "the intervention of the military or other unforeseen circumstances." I think the plaintiff knew of the existence of that condition. Then I have to decide as to whether that building was such a building as was stipulated for in the contract. So far as I can see the only real grievance the plaintiff has against this building is that it was built right along his boundary line, and that one of the doors was so placed that in certain eventualities he might be blocked from coming out of that door or afterwards be held liable for trespass on the adjoining ground. It seems to me all that was removable for a small outlay. The Government were perfectly satisfied with the building, and they were only stopped from becoming tenants by the plaintiff himself, who raised the question of a servitude being given him over the adjoining erf. The next point was whether the building having been built as stipulated, there was any unreasonable delay which was not due to "military intervention or other unforeseen circumstances" of a reasonable nature such as the Court might take notice of. I think no such delay has been proved. It is common knowledge, and it has been shown in this case, that there was great difficulty in transport, and that the plaintiff was unable for a considerable time to get the material required for the building from the coast. The whole of the allegations in the declaration upon which the plaintiff based his claim seem to me to have been disproved and, therefore, the plaintiff's case wholly breaks down. Judgment will therefore be given for the defendants, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLAY.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1904.
{ Feb. 29th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Shepherd Braithwaite Kitchin as an advocate.

Application granted and oath to be taken in the High Court of Grigualand.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Frederick Charles Alexander Hamilton Garner as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MOLLER V. LLOYD AND POWER.

Mr. Benjamin asked for this matter to be allowed to stand over till the end of the roll in view of the prospect of a settlement.

Ordered to stand over.

At a later stage,

Mr. Benjamin said that no settlement had been arrived at, and he was informed that Mr. Rowson had been instructed for the defendant Lloyd. He now moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant Lloyd's estate to be made final. As to Power, he asked that so far as he was concerned the matter should stand over.

Mr. Rowson (for the defendant Lloyd) said that Captain Power had not been served with notice of this application. Captain Power was quite willing to meet the obligations of the partnership. He contended that only one partner in the joint venture having been summoned, the whole proceedings were null and void.

Mr. Benjamin said that judgment had been obtained against the defendants for £250, balance of purchase price of certain property. A writ of execution was granted, and goods to the value of £20 were attached, and no other goods had either been pointed out or afterwards found.

Mr. Rowson read the affidavit of the defendant Lloyd, who denied the validity of the petitioner's claim. Lloyd said that they were willing to grant a bond on the property. Power had gone up-country, and he was perfectly ignorant of the proceedings now being taken. Deponent thought it was the duty of the petitioner to have sold the 8 plots of ground and given credit to the defendants for the balance of the purchase price.

Mr. Benjamin read the affidavit of Mr. Peters, attorney to the plaintiff, which stated that certain papers had been sent with a view of a mortgage being prepared but had not been returned. Deponent added that he had written to the defendants at their address, London Chambers, Church-street, Cape Town, advising them of what was being done. He had been unable to ascertain the whereabouts of Power. Lloyd had failed to make an offer. Deponent was quite willing to entertain any reasonable offer.

Mr. Rowson, replying to the Court, said that Power was now at Boshof, Orange River Colony. He submitted that the proceedings were vicious ab initio.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 12th March to enable the defendant Power to be communicated with.

Postea (March 12th). On the application of Mr. Benjamin, the provisional order of sequestration was discharged.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. KULMAN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £40 on a promissory note, together with interest and costs.

Order granted.

HILL AND CO. AND R. WILSON, SON AND CO. V. MCGREGOR.

Mr. Struben moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for the defendant) put in the latter's affidavit, which stated that he started business in January, 1902, on a small scale in the district of Worcester, and that he afterwards moved to the Malmesbury district. He was a minor when he commenced business, and only attained his majority on the 20th December last. As regarded the debts owing to the first-named plaintiff he admitted that the goods referred to were supplied to him, but they were all supplied during his minority. He did not, however, wish to avail himself of that. He did not wish to have his estate sequestrated, and if given another six months he would be assisted by his relatives and others with £35, and he would pay the balance in monthly instalments. As to the second-named plaintiffs he only owed them £47, having ceded certain interests. He was not insolvent. Counsel said that the petition made no mention of the cession by the debtor to the second-named plaintiffs, and the application ought to stand or fall by what was done by the co-petitioners.

The Chief Justice, in giving judgment, said: The affidavit made by the defendant does not seem to me to be sufficient to disprove the statement made by the petitioners to the effect that the defendant is insolvent. The Court will have to make this sequestration final.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a Magistrate's Court judgment for £123 18s., and £4 5s. 3d. costs, and for an order declaring certain immovable property specified in the summons executable. There had been a return of nulla bona in the Magistrate's Court.
Order granted.

LOTZ V. VOS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £67 6s. 8d. on certain conditions of sale.

Defendant appeared, and admitted the debt, but stated that he was not in a position at present to pay the money. He was willing to pay £8 a month.

De Villiers, C.J., said the defendant should make this offer to the plaintiff.

Provisional sentence granted.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £93 19s., work done, money advanced and expended on behalf of the defendant, together with interest and costs.

Order granted.

BENNETT V. CAPE ESTATE SYNDICATE,
LTD.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan said that this matter should have been set down on the provisional roll. The summons was returnable for that day, but through some mistake, had evidently not been set down. He asked for the indulgence of the Court that it should be now heard. He moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, together with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SHEPPARD AND CO. V. } 1904.
STEER. } Feb. 29th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), moved on behalf of the plaintiffs for a day to be fixed for the hearing of this action. Counsel said that the plaintiffs had been subjected to immense inconvenience by the delays of the defendant, and it was important to the plaintiffs that the action should, if possible, be heard this term. Plaintiffs sought to recover certain transfer deeds, diagrams, vendu rolls, and also asked for debate of account.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is Steer an attorney of this court?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If these allegations are correct, defendant is incurring a very great responsibility in retaining these documents.]

Mr. Schreiner: That is so, and we contend that the matter should be brought to trial as soon as possible. Mr. Steer's position is: "I have given all accounts; I have always been ready to give accounts, and I have handed over all documents." On the 8th February he gives us another document, in addition to those he had handed in. Sheppard carries on an agency, and he is constantly being pressed by people who want their documents.

De Villiers C.J., said that there appeared to be no available date on which the trial could be set down for trial this term.

Mr. Schreiner said that he believed the action which was now set down for the 9th March was not likely to come to trial, and he was willing to take the risk of having the present action set down for that date.

De Villiers, C.J.: Under the special circumstances, the Court will take the action on the 9th March.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made final, publication having been given as directed.

Rule made final.

FEDERAL SUPPLY CO. V. BUFFALO SUPPLY CO.

Award of arbitrators — Stay of execution.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved to have a certain award made a rule of Court, under the Arbitrations Act of 1898.

Mr. Burton, who appeared for the respondent, stated that he did not oppose the award, but he appeared to ask that, under certain special circumstances, execution of the award might be stayed for some little time. Counsel proceeded to read an affidavit made by the liquidators of the Buffalo Co., in which the deponents stated that when the applicant company took over the Buffalo Co.'s business, certain differences arose as to the terms of the sale of the business, and it was agreed to submit the differences to arbitration. By the first paragraph of their award, the arbitrators declared that the Buffalo Co. was entitled to receive from the Federal Co. 35,000 fully-paid-up shares, of the value of £1, in the Federal Co., the said shares to be delivered to the liquidators of the Buffalo Co. on payment of the cash found by the arbitrators to be due by the Buffalo Co. to the Federal Co., amounting to the sum of £21,763 odd. The deponents further stated that the respondent company was not now in possession of sufficient available funds to enable them to make payment of the cash in return for the shares. Their (the Buffalo Co.'s) only outstanding assets were the 35,000 shares already mentioned and 15,000 shares in the Federal Co., which were at present in London. They also claimed that certain sums were due to them by Mr. A. Bergl. They were willing to have the award made a rule of Court, but asked that execution should be stayed for six months, by which time they hoped to be in a position to implement the award by paying over to the applicant company the sum found to be due to them in exchange for the shares. The forced realisation of the shares in the present weak state of the market would be detrimental to them.

Sir H. Juta read replying affidavits made by two members of the Board of the Federal Company, in which they stated that owing to the misrepresentation of the respondent company great delay had been caused in the settlement of affairs as between the two companies, and that the sum of £10,000 was included in the award to the Federal Company for damages by reason of such misrepresentation. The delay which had already occurred in the payment by the respondent company of the sum due to the applicant company had retarded the development of applicants' business, and the applicants would be caused great inconvenience should payment be longer deferred. Judgment had been obtained by the firm of Tetley and Fleming against respondents for the sum of £20,013, which judgment, applicants believed, had not been satisfied, and the deponents feared that if a stay of execution were granted, they would be greatly prejudiced. Counsel also read an affidavit made by Mr. A. Bergl, in which he stated that instead of, as alleged, the respondent company having a claim against him, the company was indebted to him in the sum of £6,000.

Mr. Burton was then heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: The respondents do not deny that the applicants are entitled to have this award made a rule of Court, but they ask the Court to attach to this order a condition that there shall be a stay of execution for six months. The Court may have the power, under certain special circumstances, to stay execution, but no such special circumstances are shown to exist in the present case. All the respondents can say is that it might drive them into insolvency in case they paid now, but that is a defence which is continually set up by defendants when sued for amounts owing by them. This amount is owing, and if the arbitrators had intended that there should have been a postponement of payment they would have said so; but as they did not say so, I think it reasonable to conclude that they awarded that the money should be paid at once. The award must be made a rule of Court, with costs of opposition.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte LEWIS. } 1904.
 } Feb. 29th.

Mr. Russell moved for a rule nisi for the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond to be made absolute.

Hopley, J., asked why the publication in the "Cape Times," which was the only other publication ordered in addition to the "Gazette," did not take place until the day before the rule was returnable?

Mr. Russell: I believe there was some misunderstanding between the "Cape Times" and the attorneys. I understand it was not the fault of the attorneys.

Replying to the Court, Mr. Russell said that the mortgage was dated 1856, that it was believed to have been paid off, and that the amount was only £80.

The rule was ordered to be published again forthwith in the "Cape Times," and the return day was extended to the 12th March.

Postea (March 16th).

The rule was made absolute.

Ex parte VAN DER HEEVER.

This was a motion for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond on property in the district of Phillip's Town.

The petition set forth that the petitioner (Anna Christina van der Heever) was the wife of the late Stephanus A. van der Heever, to whom she had been married in community of property. After the death of petitioner's husband her father gave to her minor daughter a present of £1,200 which petitioner invested in a first mortgage on the farm Cijpherput, in the district of Phillip's Town. This sum was afterwards repaid to petitioner by one D. B. Joubert a purchaser of the farm from the mortgagor. £400 of this money have been invested on first mortgage on the farm Ruitgrevlei in the Colesberg district, and the successor in title to the mortgagor of Cijpherput has agreed to take over the balance of £800 on a first mortgage of the said farm. Petitioner prayed for an order directing the Registrar of Deeds to cancel the said mortgage bond for £1,200 so as to enable the farm Cijpherput to be transferred to the said Joubert, and the Bond of £800 to be passed by him.

The Master raised no objection.

On the motion of Mr. P. S. T. Jones the Court granted an order as prayed.

Ex parte MCALLISTER.

This was a petition of one John McAllister, of Johannesburg, for cancellation of his appointment as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Elizabeth M. C. McAllister (his late wife) on the ground that he anticipated considerable difficulty in administering the estate on account of (1) the hostile position taken up by the relatives of his late wife; (2) his absence from the colony. One child (a minor) was the sole heir.

On the Master's recommendation the Court granted an order as prayed on the motion of Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers.

CAVANAGH V. HANSEN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order placing respondent under curatorship. The defendant was detained at Valkenberg, under a judge's order, and no steps had been taken to have him declared insane. The petitioners wished to sequestrate the estate. The summons had not been served on the defendant. The petitioners now desired a curator to be appointed to represent the defendant in the application for the sequestration of the defendant's estate. It was proposed that Mr. P. S. T. Jones should be appointed curator ad litem, and that on the 15th April the application should be further heard.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MURPHY AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the appointment of a trustee in the insolvent estate of the late Charles Goode, jun. The first-named petitioner was the executor dative in the estate of the late Charles Goode, jun., formerly of Cape Town, and the second-named petitioner, Charles Henry Holyoake Goode, was the only child of the late Chas. Goode, jun. Charles Goode, jun., died in 1872. His estate was sequestrated in 1869, and insolvent was never rehabilitated. Charles Goode, sen. (father of the late insolvent), died in England in 1862, leaving a reversionary interest to his son. The mother of Charles Goode, jun., died in 1895. The interest in the estate of the late Charles Goode, sen., was vested in William Britten (trustee of the insolvent), but it had at no time been sold or realised or brought to account by Britten. Messrs. E. C. and E. E. Browning, of Greenwich, England, had in their hands £1,700, an asset of the said insolvent estate, now unrealised owing to the death of the said Britten. Petitioners were unacquainted with the whereabouts of any of the creditors. Petitioners prayed for an order for the appointment of a trustee or curator, in the insolvent estate of the late Charles Goode, jun., and they submitted the name of Thomas Masterton, accountant, Cape Town. An affidavit was put in showing that the notice of petitioners had been called to the matter by particulars of a fund which had appeared in the "Cape Times."

A rule nisi was granted, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on the 28th April why a trustee should not be appointed to finally administer the estate of the late Charles Goode, jun., and why costs should not be paid out of the estate, rule to be published once in the "Gazette," the "Cape Times," and "South African News," and to be served personally upon the representatives of the estate of Charles Goode, sen.

GREEN AND CO. V. KRETSCHMAR.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sue by edictal citation. It was stated in the petition that the respondent was resident in Johannesburg, and that he had contracted a debt with petitioners in the Colony.

The application was granted, citation to be served personally, and to be returnable on the first day of next term.

DARTER BROS. V. KRETSCHMAR.

Mr. Gardiner made a like application in this case.

Order granted in similar terms.

Ex parte DU TOIT AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property. Du Toit was one of the executors in a certain estate, and he applied for leave to have transferred to him certain property in the estate of which he was executor. The property, according to the terms of the will, was submitted to competition at auction amongst the heirs, and all the heirs, or their representatives, were present at the sale. There was considerable competition, and the property was sold to Du Toit as the highest bidder. Du Toit, as well as being executor, was one of the heirs.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BEKKER AND OTHERS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property. The petitioner, Otto Bekker, stated that under a codicil of the will of his parents, he was appointed sole heir of the estate. The original of the codicil could not now be found, but a copy thereof was found in the office of the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town. The Magistrate, however, had not affixed his signature to the codicil. Under the original will, Otto Bekker and his brothers and sisters were appointed heirs. These persons now consented to the order being granted, with the exception of one Herman Bekker, who was believed to have gone to America, and whose whereabouts could not now be ascertained.

Hopley, J., said the proceedings should be brought to the notice of Herman Bekker.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on Herman Bekker, and all persons interested, to show cause on the 14th May why an order should not be granted in the terms prayed, the rule to be published in the "Cape Mercury" and the "East London Dispatch."

Ex parte LE ROES.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain bond. The petitioner, a farmer, of the Prince Albert district, stated that a bond had been granted in favour of a minor, but the principle and interest had since been paid. The usual verifying affidavits were annexed. An application had been made to the Court previously by the father, the guardian of the minor, who then made allegations exactly to the same effect as the petitioner now made. The Court then held that the transaction was not made in the interests of the minor. Counsel referred to Moodie's Executors v. Moodie's Heirs. (9 Juta, 230.)

His Lordship ordered that the matter should stand over, pending a report from the Registrar of Deeds. The Registrar would have both sets of proceedings—the last and the present—before him, and would probably be able to make a report on which the Court could act.

CATHCART V. WAY.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an interdict restraining the defendant from removing certain goods and chattels from Melbourne Chambers, corner of Long and Shortmarket streets, Cape Town, pending payment of certain rent and plate glass insurance premium. Petitioner stated that she let the property to the defendant at a rental of £51 10s. per month for three years from the 1st November, 1903. Defendant had paid the rent for November, December, and January, but, as regarded February, he had only paid £20 on account, and he neglected to pay the balance of £31 10s. and also a sum of £2 10s. 9d., owing to the petitioner for plate glass insurance. Petitioner had heard that the said Way was making inquiries with a view of securing other premises and contemplated breaking his lease and removing his goods. Defendant had not been served with notice of this application, and counsel now applied for a rule nisi.

A rule nisi was granted, to operate as an interim interdict, and to be returnable on the 12th March.

Ex parte PERCIVAL JOHN GRIFFITHS, THOMAS WEST EDKINS, AND ZACHARY STANLEY BAYLY.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on all persons in the electoral division for the representation of which petitioners were candidates at the recent Legislative Council election to show cause why petitioners should not be authorised to pay certain amounts which had been omitted from the return of expenses made to the Returning Officer. There was no opposition, and it had been ascertained that the return of expenses, as it was now wished to conclude them, would not exceed the amount allowed by Act of Parliament.

The rule was made absolute.

Ex parte PRINGLE.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the registration of the grosse of a certain anti-nuptial contract. Counsel stated that the facts were similar to those in the case of Stephens, recently heard by the Court, and he did not know that it was really necessary to come to Court for the order. However, the Registrar had stated that an order of Court was necessary, and the applicant had, therefore, been obliged to come to Court.

Hopley, J., said that the application seemed perfectly bona fide. It would be desirable if some general rule were laid down for the guidance of the Registrar in such cases. However, he did not feel called upon to do so himself. An order would be granted for the registration of the grosse, saving the rights of creditors prior to registration.

Ex parte FIRTH.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order directing a meeting to be called of the creditors of Macfadyen and Thom, lately trading at Observatory-road, for Friday next, the 4th March, for the purpose of electing trustees. It was now suggested that Messrs. G. W. Steytler and T. H.

Hasell should be appointed joint trustees. A disagreement had previously arisen as to the choice of a trustee, and the present suggestion met with the approval of all the creditors.

Order granted as prayed.

HIDDINGH V. ESTATE HERTZOG.

Mr. Schreiner (with him Mr. Upington) moved for an order setting down the case for trial during next term, and also granting a commission to take the evidence of Thomas Henry Gurrin, F.R.M.S., handwriting expert, of London, England. It appeared that the plaintiff, after having the case set down, gave notice that he did not intend to proceed with the action; that the Court subsequently directed the defendants, on applying for judgment, to set down the case; and the plaintiff now intended to proceed with the action. Counsel read a letter from Mr. Peters, attorney to the plaintiff, stating that he understood that Mr. Hiddingh had abandoned his action, and he thought the case had been withdrawn. Counsel said that they were informed by Mr. Roos, of the Board of Executors, that Hiddingh had declared his intention of proceeding. The action was still pending, and had not, as a matter of fact, been withdrawn. The petitioners, who were the executors of the estate, desired the assistance of the Court to bring this matter to a decisive issue. After the original notice of the intention to withdraw was given the plaintiff was furnished with a bill of costs, which he had paid. No appearance was now entered for the plaintiff.

Hopley, J., said that it would be unfortunate if the petitioners went to all this expense if it were not the intention of the plaintiff to proceed with the action. He thought the petitioners should try to ascertain definitely what the intentions of the plaintiff were. The matter would, therefore, stand over until the 12th March.

Ex parte LUMSDEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for an interdict restraining the Municipality of East London from selling certain ground, which petitioners alleged was a street or roadway, and to the use of which they claimed to be entitled. The Municipality proposed to sell the ground on the 5th March. It was stated on affidavit that the ground in question had been used as a street, and that its sale would involve a danger to health, inasmuch as it would interfere with the sanitary conveniences, and would involve pecuniary loss to the petitioners, who were owners of property adjoining. The ground was described on the diagrams attached to petitioners' transfers as a street.

A rule nisi was granted, to operate as an interim interdict, calling on the Municipality to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining them from selling the land in question, and why they should not be ordered to pay the costs of the application, the rule being made returnable on the 15th April.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte HUNTER. { 1901.
Mar. 1st.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order extending the time within which a certain account should be filed with the Master of the Supreme Court in the insolvent estate of Joseph Frank, of which the petitioner was the sole trustee. Delays had taken place in consequence of proceedings commenced in the Magistrate's Court against the insolvent for culpable insolvency. Several further claims had been filed, and it was proposed to call a further meeting of creditors on the 23rd March at Port Elizabeth. Petitioner asked for an extension until the 10th April.

Order granted as prayed.

ROBERTSON V. ROBERTSON.

Divorce—Domicile.

A petition for leave to sue for divorce by edictal citation must state that the petitioner is domiciled in this colony. A mere allegation of residence is not sufficient.

Mr. Close moved, on behalf of John Alexander Robertson, for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights. Petitioner was now resident at Cape Town, and was employed at the Docks. Respondent lived at Durban, Natal, whither she had gone after leaving the petitioner in Johannesburg. The marriage took place in Durban in July, 1899.

Hopley, J., said that the petition ought to state whether the petitioner was domiciled in this colony. The Court did not desire to interfere in matters outside its jurisdiction.

The matter was allowed to stand over pending information as to domicile.

ESTATE DE WET V. MARAIS.

Mr. Benjamin applied for this matter to stand over until the 12th March to enable the respondent to file affidavits.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for the applicants) said they had no objection to Mr. Benjamin's application, but in the meantime they would like an undertaking not to remove the weir, in regard to which the plaintiffs desired to interdict the respondent. The respondent, added counsel, was removing the weir.

Mr. Benjamin said that their allegation was that they had not interfered with the weir, but he was instructed to consent to an undertaking, subject to the matter being left in statu quo by both parties.

Ordered to stand over till the 12th March.

LAW SOCIETY V. GREENING.

Mr. Uppington said that it had been impossible to serve the respondent with notice of the Law Society's application to have his name removed from the roll of attorneys. He believed Greening was still in town, but service had not been effected, and he should like the matter to stand over until the 12th March.

Ordered to stand over accordingly.

SUBURBAN MUNICIPAL { 1904.
WATERWORKS V. COCHRANE { Mar. 1st.
AND CHERKY.

Arbitration—Act 6 of 1882.

The respondents had contracted to perform certain work for the applicants subject to the condition, inter alia, that should they fail to make such progress with the work as the town engineer deemed reasonable, the applicants should have the right to eject them and take possession of the works. The applicants did so eject them and the respondents having insisted on referring the question as to whether they had made reasonable progress to an arbitrator selected by themselves, the Court granted an order, restraining them from proceeding with the arbitration.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondents to show cause why they should not be restrained from proceeding with a certain arbitration, why such an order should not be granted as to the Court should seem meet, and why they (respondents) should not pay costs of this application.

The affidavit of the chairman of the Waterworks Board (Mr. Louw), stated that the respondents were the contractors for the construction of a certain reservoir and other works for the applicants on Table Mountain at Newlands. The contractors did not make satisfactory progress with the work, and the applicants stepped in in May, 1902, and took over the work, and had since continued to do the work departmentally. They took this course under clause 2 of the contract. Eighteen months later, viz., in December last year, they received notice from the respondents that they had appointed Mr. G. W. Steytler as their arbitrator "for the purpose of deciding certain disputes and differences which have arisen in relation to or out of the said contract." To this the Board replied that they refused to go to arbitration, holding that their powers under the 2nd clause were clearly defined, and that this was not one of the questions to be referred to arbitration. Consequently they held the matter should not be taken to arbitration under the Land Clauses and Arbitration Act. Subsequently the Board intimated that they were willing to consent to the matter being referred to arbitration on condition that Mr. John Parker should act as their arbitrator and Mr. Steytler should act on behalf of the respondents and that the two arbitrators appointed an umpire. This proposal was rejected by the respondents, who said that they proposed to proceed with the arbitration with Mr. Steytler as sole arbitrator.

The affidavit of Mr. W. G. Fairbridge, attorney, stated that the contention of the respondents was that the applicants wrongfully ejected them from the works and dispossessed them from the property they had therein. Respondents contended that they had reasonable and sufficient cause for not having accomplished more work than they actually did. They contended, however, that it was for the arbitrator to decide whether they had such reason for delay or not. The contract was entered into in September, 1901. The work was to be completed by the 31st March, 1902. Respondents carried on the work until on or about the 5th June, 1902, when they were ejected by the applicants, who entered into possession. From that time to the present date applicants had carried on the work, which was still incomplete. The works now being carried on differed in many respects from the works contracted for. Respondents contended that they were entitled to treat the contract as cancelled by their ejection.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for applicants. Mr. Searle, K.C., for respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the 11th clause gave a certain special function to the engineer, because the right of ejection of the contractors was to be subject to his opinion that the progress of the work was not proportionate to the total time fixed for the execution of the contract. He submitted that the contractor put himself in regard to that matter entirely in the hands of the engineers, whose opinion on the point was what the contractors agreed to be bound by, always assuming, of course, that there was good faith. Counsel contended that there was nothing in the other clauses, 17 for instance, to show that the power of immediate ejection was a matter for arbitration. It vested entirely in the engineers.

Mr. Searle said his learned friend seemed to be inclined to depend entirely on one clause, the 11th, instead of taking the whole contract. The respondents were being kept out of their money. The Waterworks Board had their retention money, and they did not seem to have any desire to pay it over to the respondents. The applicants had been a far longer time doing the work than the contract provided. They themselves had been a period of twenty months carrying on the contract. As a matter of fact, the contract only allowed the respondents fifteen months in which to complete the work. Rightly or wrongly, the applicants had put an end to the contract. The clauses 17 and 18 set out most distinctly that all matters of dispute should be referred in the first instance to the opinion of the engineers, and, in case their opinion was unsatisfactory, to arbitration. Counsel cited the case of Bull v. Colonial Government (6 Juta, 283).

Hopley, J., said it was just a question whether it would not be best for counsel to inform Mr. Schreiner that they would be willing to go to arbitration under the terms suggested by the Board.

Mr. Searle said he could not consent to any such course.

[Hopley, J.: Then, suppose I decided against you?]

Well, I suppose we should have to go to action.

Hopley, J.: It is quite possible that in spite of the contention of the applicants that this is not a case for arbitration under the contract between the parties, it would be within the rights of the respondents to come under the sub-section 4, Sec. 3, of the Land Clauses Act, and that, Mr. Steytler having been appointed by them, he should now act as the arbitrator of both parties. The applicants, I may remark, have disputed all through that the circumstances have arisen, and the question now is whether the circumstances have arisen for arbitration, or whether the respondents should be restrained from going on with this arbitration. It is common cause that the agreement between the parties must decide this question, and there appear to be three clauses which deal specifically with the subject which are set out in the petition of the applicants. It appears that the respondents had made a contract with the Suburban Municipal Waterworks to carry out a large water scheme, and the contract contained, first of all, this clause (No. 2): "If at any time during the continuance of the contract the contractor shall, without reasonable or sufficient cause, fail to make such progress with the work as shall, in the opinion of the engineers, be proportionate to the time fixed for the execution of the contract, the engineers shall, after having given the contractor 48 hours' notice in writing, have the power to eject him and his employees from the works, and to take possession of the work and plant, and provide material and the necessary labour, at the cost and charges of the contractor, and to pay such sum or sums or charges as they think just or fair, and to deduct the amount from any moneys that may be due and payable to the contractor, and should the total of such charges exceed in amount the contract sum the balance may be recovered by any officer duly authorised by the said committee of management to receive the sum on the completion of the same, or the engineer shall have the power to relet the contract."

It seems to me that in this particular clause of the contract, the contractors put themselves entirely, as also the authorities for whom they were constructing the works, into the hands, and at the discretion of the engineer. It seems to me, that if the engineer comes to the conclusion that the work is not going on in a proportionate manner according to the time fixed for the execution of the contract, the only thing that could possibly arise as being a matter of dispute would be whether there was reasonable or sufficient cause for the delay in the progress of the works. Now in May, 1902, the engineers came to the conclusion that the work was not going on in a proportionate manner to the time fixed, and they gave forty-eight hours' notice in writing to the contractors. As far as I can see from the affidavits, there was no dispute at that time, viz., May, 1902, as to whether or not they had a right to put an end to the contract. It is perfectly true on the affidavits they excused themselves on the ground that war had been going on, that martial law prevailed, and the plague, and that they had therefore been unable to obtain sufficient labour. But there seems to have been no dispute at that particular time; the respondents made no protest; they did not come to the Supreme Court, and they did not offer to refer the matter to arbitration. I suppose they entered into this contract at the time when war was going on, and so they must have had their eyes open to the existing circumstances. They quietly went out of the works, and allowed things to go on for about eighteen months, when of a sudden they proceed to say: "We now raise a dispute for turning us off the works." Is that a position that they can maintain? The 17th and 18th clauses deal with the right of going to arbitration, but I see nothing in this case that gives rise to the working of these clauses. I do not think there was a matter of dispute. I do not think anything was in the first instance referred to the engineers which would give a right to the respondents to go to arbitration simply because they considered his decision unsatisfactory. It is clear from what Mr. Searle says that the contractors' object is to get hold of whatever retention money is due to them. As to retention money, it seems to me that under the 11th clause that will have to wait until the completion of the contract. I think it a pity, under the circumstances, that they did not accept the applicant's suggestion—a very reasonable suggestion, and appoint their own arbitrators and an umpire. They chose, however, to stand upon what they considered to be their strict legal powers, and in that I think they were wrong. The present application must be granted, with costs.

MACAULAY V. JUMBO GOLD } 1904.
MINING CO. AND B.S.A. CO. } Mar. 1st.

Mining Ordinances of Rhodesia—
Special registration—Indefeasible title.

It is a good defence to an action for ejectment from mining claims in Rhodesia alleged to have been acquired by the plaintiff before the passing of the Rhodesian Ordinance 1 of 1895, that a certificate of special registration had thereafter been bona fide granted to the defendant in terms of the 70th and 71st sections of that Ordinance after full compliance on his part with the provisions of such Ordinance.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the senior judge of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia (Mr. Justice Vincent) upon certain exceptions taken in the first place by the plaintiff to a special plea, and the appellant to the remainder of the plea. The plaintiff's declaration set forth that:

1. The plaintiff is a stockbroker and company manager, residing at Bulawayo, and the first defendant company is a duly incorporated company under the English Companies Act, with limited liability, having an office and carrying on business in Southern Rhodesia; the second defendant is a company incorporated by Royal Charter for the purpose inter alia of administering the government of the said territory.

2. On or about the 27th day of February, 1889, and at Kimberley, in the Cape Colony, a written agreement was entered into between Cecil John Rhodes, in his capacity as the representative of the Matabeleland Syndicate, which syndicate then possessed all mineral rights over the territory known as Mashonaland and Matabeleland, and one Thomas Maddocks, of Kimberley, whereby it was provided that the said Thomas Maddocks should with certain companions of his proceed to Matabeleland to search, dig, and prospect for precious stones and minerals, upon certain terms and conditions. Copy of the said agreement is hereto annexed marked "A."

3. One of the said terms and conditions was as follows: That the said Thomas Maddocks should, upon finding gold or other precious minerals or stones, be entitled to mark off sixty claims, of 50 yards each in length and in breadth, equal to all dips, angles, and variations of the gold or other reef discovered by the said Thomas Maddocks and his said companions, and that the said Thomas Maddocks should be entitled to two-tenths undivided interest or share therein, and his companions to one-tenth undivided interest or share therein, or in all, to one-half undivided share therein, and the said Matabeleland Syndicate to the remaining one-half undivided interest therein.

4. Thereafter the said Thomas Maddocks, together with his said companions, proceeded to carry out the terms of the said agreement, and to prospect for precious stones and minerals in Matabeleland, and in the course of such prospecting they were successful in discovering certain gold-bearing property.

5. On or about the 3rd of July, 1890, it was further agreed between the said Cecil John Rhodes, then acting for and on behalf of the second defendant company, which had succeeded to the rights and obligations of the Matabeleland Syndicate that in consideration of the said Thomas Maddocks having been the first prospector in the territory of the second defendant company and having experienced great risk and trouble in his said prospecting operations, the terms of the said agreement of the 27th February, 1889, should be extended for a period of 18 months dating from the expiration of the said first agreement, to wit, the 1st of March, 1890, during which period the said Thomas Maddocks was to proceed to Mashonaland, or other spot within the area under the control of the second defendant company and locate a further 100 claims, which were to be five blocks of twenty each on separate reefs, and that such claims were to be held in undivided shares with the second defendant company. The terms of the said extended agreement are set forth in a letter written by the said Cecil John Rhodes, and dated the 3rd day of July, 1890, copy of which is hereto annexed marked "B."

6. The said Thomas Maddocks thereupon proceeded to carry out the provisions of the said extended agreement, and in the course of his said operations he discovered a certain gold-bearing property known as the "Jumbo reef," and the said Thomas Maddocks, in terms of the said extended agreement marked "B," and in the exercise of his rights thereunder, duly marked off certain 20 claims upon the said reef, whereupon he became entitled to and there vested in him his said undivided interest or share in the said claims, and the second defendant company became entitled to its said undivided share in the same.

7. The said claims were duly registered in the name of the said Thomas Maddocks on the 27th day of October, 1890, and he took possession thereof and worked and developed the same and continued in full lawful possession of the claims in trust for himself and his said joint holders up to the time of his death.

8. The said Thomas Maddocks died in or about the month of March, 1896, being murdered in the course of the native rebellion of that time, and the plaintiff has bona fide and duly acquired from the executor of the said Thomas Maddocks's estate, for valuable consideration, all the right, title, and interest of the said Thomas Maddocks in and to the said claims.

9. On or about the 1st of September, 1899, the second defendant company wrongfully and unlawfully deprived the executor of the said estate of the possession of the said claims and purported to forfeit the same on the ground of non-compliance with the provisions of the Ordinance No. 1 of 1895, entitled "The Mines and Minerals Ordinance," more particularly of the provisions contained in section 22 thereof as to the execution in each succeeding year of at least 60 feet of development work.

10. Subsequently the said claims were wrongfully and unlawfully thrown open to location by the second defendant company, and on or about the 20th of September, 1899, they were pegged off by one C. E. Wells, by whom they were transferred to the Mayo Development Company, and on or about the 10th April, 1903, were transferred by them to the first defendant company, which is still in possession of them.

11. That the plaintiff has sustained damage to the extent of £250,000 (two hundred and fifty thousand pounds) by the aforesaid wrongful and unlawful action of the second defendant company.

12. The plaintiff says that even if the amount of development work as required by section 22 of the said Ordinance has not been performed on the said claims, yet they were not liable to forfeiture in so much as the provisions in question of the said Ordinance were not, and are not, applicable to the said claims, and that the second defendant company had no right or power in law to forfeit the same as it purported to do.

13. He says further that the Mines and Minerals Existing Rights Ordinance, 1895, is ultra vires of the Royal Charter.

14. Alternatively and not otherwise plaintiff claims from the second defendant company an account of all money and shares received by or allotted to them in connection with the said claims and payment of whatever amount may be found due to the plaintiff.

15. All things have happened, all times elapsed, and all conditions been fulfilled entitling the plaintiff to bring this action.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) As against both defendant companies a declaration that the alleged forfeiture and the subsequent throwing open to location and location of the said claims were null and void and of no legal effect, and that the plaintiff is the lawful holder of the said claims subject only to the terms and conditions set forth in the agreements marked "A" and "B" and generally a declaration of his rights in the premises; (b) as against the first defendant company an order compelling it to deliver and restore to the plaintiff the possession of the said claims; (c) as against the second defendant company payment of the sum of £250,000 (two hundred and fifty thousand pounds) damages as afore said or in lieu thereof an account and payment thereunder as in the 14th paragraph hereof set out; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

To the declaration the first-named defendants pleaded: For a special plea to the plaintiff's claim the first named defendants say the mining location which is the subject of this action is held by them under a certificate of special registration lawfully and properly granted in terms and after full compliance with the provisions of the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895, and more especially the provisions laid down by section 70 of the said Ordinance, and that they cannot now be disturbed in their possession thereof nor in the exercise of any right appertaining thereto, and that they alone are the owners of any right appertaining to such location subject to the terms of the said Ordinance. And for a general plea, in case the above should be overruled, but not otherwise, the first-named defendants say:

1. They admit paragraph 1 of the declaration, but deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 thereof.

2. As to paragraph 6 they admit that one Thomas Maddocks marked off certain claims upon a reef known as the "Jumbo" reef, but deny that he did so under or in terms of the alleged agreement marked "B" and annexed to the declaration. They deny all the other allegations in the said paragraph contained.

3. They deny the allegations contained in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the declaration.

4. As to paragraph 9 of the declaration, they admit that the claims therein referred to were forfeited, but say that the said claims were liable to forfeiture, and were lawfully forfeited on the ground that the pegs and beacons were not duly maintained in terms of the mining regulations as well as for the reason set out in the declaration. They crave leave to refer especially to the mining regulations published and dated the 28th April, 1893, and the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895. Due notice was given to the said Thomas Maddocks on the 25th September, 1895, and received by him that his pegs and beacons must be put in order and maintained.

5. They say further that prior to such forfeiture the said Thomas Maddocks had abandoned every claim he may have had to any mining right in Mashonaland, and any right he may have been possessed of or had in the said "Jumbo" reef had lapsed and become void.

6. As to paragraph 10 of the declaration they admit that the ground forfeited was thrown open to relocation, but deny that the ground pegged by the said C. E. Wells is the same as the ground originally pegged by the said Thomas Maddocks. They admit that the claims pegged by the said C. E. Wells are now held by them.

7. They deny each and every allegation in paragraphs 11, 12, 13, and 15 of the declaration.

Wherefore the first-named defendants pray judgment and costs.

The second-named defendants pleaded: For a special plea to the plaintiff's claim, the second-named defendants say that the mining location from which the plaintiff is now seeking to oust the first-named defendants is held by such defendants under a certificate of special registration granted bona fide in terms and after full compliance with the conditions of the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895, and more especially the conditions laid down by section 70 of that Ordinance and that they cannot now be disturbed in their possession thereof nor in the exercise of any right appertaining to such location, and that they alone are the owners of any right appertaining to such location subject to the terms of the said Ordinance.

The second-named defendants also filed a general plea in case the above should be overruled, but not otherwise, in which they denied paragraphs 1 to 5 inclusive of the declaration, they admitted that Maddocks pegged off certain claims, then known as the "Jumbo reef," and alleged the abandonment by Maddocks of his claims, and said that any right he may have had had become null prior to the forfeiture.

Plaintiff excepted to plea of first-named defendants as follows: Before pleading to the first-named defendants' plea plaintiff excepts to the special plea therein contained on the grounds that the said special plea affords no defence to the plaintiff's action against the first-named defendants as contained in the declaration and is otherwise vague, embarrassing, insufficient, and bad in law. And as to the general plea of the said defendants plaintiff excepts to so much of paragraph 4 thereof as refers to an alleged forfeiture of the said claims on the ground that the pegs and beacons were not duly maintained in terms of the mining regulations, inasmuch as the same is vague, embarrassing, insufficient, and bad in law, and affords no defence to the plaintiff's action against the said defendants as contained in the declaration.

Plaintiff also filed a replication as follows: For a replication to the first-named defendants' pleas in case the above exceptions should be overruled, but not otherwise, plaintiff says that none of the mining laws and regulations of the British South Africa Company are applicable to the said claims. In answer to paragraph 4, plaintiff says, even if the said pegs and beacons were not maintained as alleged, which he denies, the mining regulations therein referred to do not apply to the said claims; and, further, if even they should be held to apply, contravention of the said regulations as to maintaining pegs and beacons did not give the second-named defendants any right of forfeiture of the said claims, and, further, that the said claims were not forfeited on such account. Save as aforesaid, and save for admissions contained in the said plea, plaintiff denies all allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein, and again prays judgment in terms of the declaration.

The defendants excepted to the replication on the ground that it was inconsistent with the declaration, and raised a new cause of action.

The Judge's reasons for judgment were as follows. His Lordship found that: (1) The exception to the replication must be dismissed, in so far as the allegation as to the effect of the certificate of special registration is concerned. (3) So much of paragraph 4 of the general plea as relies on forfeiture, by reason of non-compliance with the regulations of April, 1893, is bad, in view of the admission of the date of forfeiture and of the allegation that notice to keep the pegs in order was given at a date subsequent to the coming into force of Ordinance 4 of 1895.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for the Appellants. Mr. Searle (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the first Respondents. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.) for the second Respondents.

Mr. Burton: The whole matter before the Court is the exception to the special plea and the plaintiff's point is that the special plea set up by the defendants affords no good defence in law. Special registration is provided for by Ord. 1 of 1895, Sec. 70 and 71. Prior to this Ordinance there were certain mining rules. This Ordinance applied only to rights acquired after it was passed. Ord. 4 of 1895, Sec 3 has a retrospective effect and brings all mining rights under Ord. 1. The facts set out in the declaration must be assumed to be correct as they are not denied in the plea. In 1879, before the Chartered Company existed, the Matabeleland Syndicate granted certain 20 claims to Maddocks and these were selected on the Jumbo reef. They had a title which was indefeasible as far as the B.S.A. Co. was concerned. The B.S.A. Co. were part owners of these claims and it must not be supposed that by subsequent legislation they meant to deprive themselves of their own property. There seems to have been some doubt as to the validity of Ord. 1 of 1890, and to do away with this doubt the Ordinance of 1895 was passed. The mining regulations contained provisions quite different from the conditions agreed upon between Rhodes and Maddocks and his companions. Under the former no-body could be a claim holder unless he held a licence, and even then he could only take 20 claims. Maddocks and his companions were allowed to take 60, then 100, and then another 100.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the definition of a claim-holder?]

[Sir H. Juta: It is given in p. 6 of the Ordinance of 1895.]

That does not dispose of the difficulty, because this was not a mining location. See the definition of a mining location in Sec. 4 of the Ordinance. There such terms as "Claim," "Block," etc., are introduced for the first time. Hence Maddocks and his companions were not claim holders in the ordinary sense, but grantees under a special grant, and hence subsequent legislation could not affect their position.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You say that these claims are not part of a mining location?]

Yes.

[Buchanan, J.: If you are registered owners why is it not a mining location?]

Because the property does not fall within the terms of the Ordinance. It was a mistake to have granted special registration for this property, but the fact that it was wrongly granted cannot make these claims a mining location. The Ordinance (p. 7) makes certain provisions as to the acquiring and holding of mining rights, and here we find conditions and restrictions which were never imposed on Maddocks. Ordinance No. 1 clearly speaks of only future mining rights, and hence Ord. 4 was passed, and it was on that that the Judge in the Court below chiefly relied. Its terms certainly are very wide but the question is, did it touch the case of concessionaries? I submit it did not and that the Ordinance was intended to recognise in law this species of rights—special concessions like this—which had not been obtained under the provisions of the ordinary law, and which fell outside the ordinary law. Maddocks and his companions had an indefeasible right as owners as against the Chartered Company.

Mr. Searle: It cannot be held that Ordinance 1 of 1897 was intended to create new legislation in regard to special mining rights. All that it meant was this: that if there were any special mining grants between 1895 and 1897 they were to be dealt with under the provisions of this Ordinance. I submit that these rights were not affected by the Ordinance of 1897, but were covered by Ordinance 4 of 1895. It was provided that certain acts or omissions should constitute an abandonment, and we say that there has been such abandonment. The Jumbo Company had a title, which could only be defeated by proof that there had been fraud or mistake, and there is no allegation of fraud or mistake in the pleadings.

Mr. Schreiner: The judgment of the learned judge left matters perfectly open for decision upon the grounds of the merits, and I must say it seems to me that a lot of the time of the Court has been wasted, and a lot of costs unnecessarily incurred by reason of the present proceedings. The matter must go back to the Court below to determine whether there is a good claim for damages or not.

Mr. Burton in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plea to which the defendants have taken exception is as follows: "For a special plea to the plaintiff's claim, the second-named defendants say that the mining location from which the plaintiff is now seeking to oust the first-named defendants is held by such defendants under a certificate of special registration granted bona fide in terms, and after full compliance with the conditions of the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895, and more especially the conditions laid down by section 70 of that Ordinance, and that they cannot now be disturbed in their possession thereof nor in the exercise of any right appertaining to such location, and that they alone are the owners of any right appertaining to such location subject to the terms of the said Ordinance." To this plea the plaintiff excepted as being bad in law, and the sole question which arises, in my opinion, is whether the claims of the plaintiff are embraced in the terms of Ordinance 1 of 1895. But for the Ordinance 4 of 1895, I should have had grave doubts as to whether these claims were intended to be embraced, but the Ordinance 4 of 1895 makes the matter perfectly clear. The third section says: "Every mining right whatsoever within the limits of this Ordinance before the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895, came into force, shall be deemed to have been acquired under the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895, and accordingly shall be held under and subject to the provisions of that Ordinance, but so that in every case in which any time is prescribed by the Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1895, within which any money is to be paid or any act or thing done, such time shall not begin to run until the expiration of three calendar months after this Ordinance takes effect." Then the only subsequent Ordinance to which reference has been made on behalf of the appellants is Ordinance Number 1 of 1897, the third section of which provides that extra prospecting licences and special mining grants issued or granted prior to such Ordinance are to be deemed to be as valid and effectual as if issued or granted under these provisions, with a proviso that in respect of any case pending or proceedings commenced before its operation the same was to be judged and determined as if the Ordinance had not been passed. Reading this third section with the first section of this Ordinance, I am of opinion that this Ordinance was not intended to provide for licences and special mining grants which had already been dealt with by previous legislation. It was, therefore, not intended to include claims like that of the plaintiff, which had already been provided for by Ordinance 4 of 1895, and which should be held to be excluded from the operation of the Ordinance of 1897. Well, if this view be correct, the whole case for the appellants seems to me to fall to the ground. It is part of the plea that the 70th section of that Ordinance 1 of 1895 has been fully complied with, and that a certificate of special registration has been granted to the first defendants. That certificate, according to the 71st section, confers upon its holder indefeasible title to any location or site in respect of which such special registration was granted, excepting in certain cases, which exceptions, admittedly, do not apply here. The first defendants, therefore, under the 71st section have an indefeasible title, and the plea, therefore, appears to me to be a perfectly good plea. For these simple reasons I am of opinion that the appeal from the judgment of the learned judge below should be dismissed, with costs.

Buchanan and Hopley, J.J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

RAFFAELE AND BELLANTONE v. BINDEMANN. { 1904.
Mar. 2nd.

Law agent—Excessive charges.

This was an action brought by Raffaele and Bellantone, hairdressers, Cape Town, against C. L. Bindemann, law agent, Cape Town, to recover a balance of £25 5s. Plaintiffs deposited a sum of £50 with the defendant in connection with a certain bail bond which the plaintiff signed. The defendant rendered certain services in the defence of Raffaele, and he claimed the sum of £53 odd for those services, about £3 6s. more than the money deposited with him by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs said that the sum of £24 15s. was a sufficient sum to be paid for the defendant's services, and they claimed the balance, viz., £25 5s. The defendant's account was made up as follows: Defence of Raffaele in the R.M.'s Court, £10 10s.; signing bail bond, £5 5s.; consultations re bond, £1 1s.; employing barrister, his fee, consultations with him and witnesses, £21; attendance at the Supreme Court and instructing barrister, £10 10s.; Deputy-Sheriff, service of subpoenas, £1 5s.; copying records of proceedings in R.M.'s Court, £2 10s.; drawing five subpoenas and copies, £1 5s. That showed a balance due to the defendant of £3 6s., but in the account annexed to the plea the balance was shown to be £2 5s. Defendant's plea admitted the deposit of £50, but defendant claimed in reconvention £53 6s. The plaintiffs said that £24 15s. was a reasonable sum, and they tendered accordingly. Counsel submitted that the onus of proof was upon the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff. Defendant in person.

The defendant submitted that his charges were quite reasonable.

De Villiers, C.J.: said that the onus lay upon defendant to prove that his charges were fair and reasonable.

Christian Lambert Bindemann, the defendant, then gave evidence. He explained how his account was made up. There was an item of 10 guineas for attendance in the Magistrate's Court. He had to appear three days in the Walestreet Court for one of the plaintiffs. He charged five guineas for bail bond. He had only received £30 from the plaintiffs towards the bail bond, and he had to stand responsible for the balance of £20 for six weeks. Then he had charges for instructing counsel. He paid Mr. Advocate Wilkinson a fee of 10 guineas. The rest was for the calls of different witnesses upon him. He charged ten guineas for attendance on three occasions at the Supreme Court. He paid the Deputy-Sheriff £1 5s. Then he paid £2 10s. for the copying of the records. He did not receive any receipt from the assistant clerk, who copied the records. The plaintiff Raffaele was charged along with another man. The latter was sentenced to two years' imprisonment; Raffaele was acquitted. The other plaintiff Bellantone was a partner of Raffaele. His charges, he submitted, were fair and reasonable. These people came and worried him morning and afternoon. From November to the end of the trial these parties were calling at his office and taking up his time or his clerk's time. He submitted that there was no tariff. He had not entered into any agreement. He had just arrived from Robertson that morning, where he had received a fee of 25 guineas for his defence.

Cross-examined: He was a law agent, practising in the Magistrate's Court, Cape Town. He was not an attorney. He received no instructions. He had a brief for Mr. Arthur Brittain, a law agent, in these terms: "Will you appear?" Evidence was taken in the Magistrate's Court on two occasions; witness had to appear three times. He knew that the fee for attendance in the Magistrate's Court was 10s. 6d. in civil cases. He never undertook civil defence under two guineas a day. There was no tariff for criminal cases. He would not go and work in the Magistrate's Court for a whole day for 10s. 6d. He would not go into court unless he had the money down beforehand. He was entitled to charge what he wished in a criminal case. He did not approach Bellantone and offer to provide bail. He told Bellantone he must raise the bail.

Bellantone only raised £30, and witness accepted a promissory note for £20, and gave his undertaking for the balance of the bail. He charged £5 5s. because, in case Raffaele had disappeared, witness would have been liable for the £20.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: I see you make a charge for attending in the Supreme Court? What is your locus standi in the Supreme Court? You are not an attorney. What is your locus standi?

Witness: Same as you are, I suppose; I am a man and you are a man. I am a law agent, and am entitled to make my charge the same as you are.

Replying to the Chief Justice, witness said that Raffaele and the other man who was also in the dock with him were charged with housebreaking.

George Godwin, a clerk in the defendant's employ, said that in November last the plaintiffs frequently called at defendant's office, and took up a good deal of his time. They called about five days out of the six in the week.

Cross-examined: He made notes from time to time when the plaintiffs alled, but he had kept no diary. He did not know whether the plaintiffs asked him for their £50. They asked for a settlement.

Mr. Benjamin then called evidence.

Adamo Raffaele, an Italian (one of the plaintiffs), said he was arrested in September and charged with shopbreaking. He was committed for trial. The defendant then came, and spoke to him. Witness did not understand him. He told defendant that the value of the cigars in question had been over-estimated. Bindemann only once led evidence before the Magistrate. Witness went twice to the defendant's office before the trial. After the trial he went every day to get a settlement.

Cross-examined: He told his partner to arrange about bail. He did not know how often his partner called on the defendant.

Phillipo Bellantone (the other plaintiff) said he went to Mr. Brittain when his partner was arrested. He paid Mr. Brittain three guineas. He went a few times to Mr. Bindemann's office to ask him when the case was coming on. When the case was over, he went frequently to ask for the money.

Cross-examined: He asked for the balance of the £50. He did not ask for any specific statement. He received an account from defendant. This showed that plaintiffs owed defendant £3 6s. 6d. over and above the amount of the bond.

Defendant said that as regarded the balance due to him, he forgot about the guinea he had been paid by Mr. Brittain.

Arthur Brittain, law agent, St. George's-street, said he received a brief from his brother. He was proceeding to the Court when he was taken ill, and he handed the brief to Bindemann, and asked him whether he would see the accused, and then communicate with Mr. James Brittain, who would arrange about the fees.

By the Court: The usual charge in the Magistrate's Court was two or three guineas for each attendance. They often had to attend the Court from 10 a.m. till 4 p.m.

Re-examined: He told his clients before he went into court what his charge would be for each day's attendance.

Alfred G. H. Osborne, a clerk in the employ of Mr. James Brittain, said he paid the defendant a guinea for conducting the case on his first day's appearance in court. That referred to the occasion when the case was first called on, and the evidence taken.

This concluded the evidence.

The defendant then addressed the Court.

Bellantone (recalled by the Court) said that he did not employ Bindemann after he had appeared for the first time.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant admits that he has received £50 from the plaintiffs, first of all £30, which was given him in cash, and then the promissory note for £20, signed by Bellantone, was also given. The defendant now charges £5 5s. for signing a bail bond, he having, at the time, received £30, and the promissory note for £20. In my opinion, this charge of £5 5s. is really extortionate. He has induced these people to get the bail bond, and then, having induced them to enter into the bail, he gets £50 in order in that manner to have a hold upon them, and to be able to charge any fees which he considers right. We have nothing now to do with the defendant's practice in other cases. The question I have to decide is whether the charges he has made in this particular case are fair and reasonable. I have looked into the proceedings before the Magistrate. There seems to have been no complication whatever; it is the simplest possible case that could come before any Court, and not requiring for its conduct any great skill or any great trouble. The only trouble that the defendant himself avers is that these people came to his office with witnesses, continually troubling him and bothering him. But he had the remedy in his hands; he could have told them not to trouble him, because there was nothing to be gained by obtaining any information from them. He could simply have told them: "You need not come again, because, if you do come, I shall make these high charges against you." If it had appeared to me that the defendant had beforehand warned the plaintiffs as to what his charges would be, then the plaintiffs would have had some notice, and they could not escape payment of these charges. The matter was an exceedingly simple one, and it appears to me that the plaintiffs, in tendering to the defendant the sum of £24 15s., tendered what is amply sufficient for the work that he has done, including the amount which was paid by the defendant to counsel. The plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to succeed in recovering back the sum of £50, less the sum of £24 15s., and judgment is therefore given for the plaintiffs for £25 5s., with costs.

LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK V. RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order declaring (a) the applicants, as the holders of £90,000 debenture bonds in the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., and entitled to payment thereof out of the moneys received by the respondent Hills from the respondent, the Cape Government on the Grand Junction Railways contract, in preference to the unsecured creditors of the respondent Hills and others, forming the Grand Junction Railways; (b) that, in the alternative, the applicant bank is entitled to payment out of the said moneys of their claims, amounting to £77,497 12s.; (c) that the respondents, the receivers of the partnership, be interdicted from drawing the sum of £79,656, and for other relief.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for one of the respondents; (Mr. E. R. Syfret, official liquidator of the Grand Junction Railways), and Mr. Uppington appeared for the receivers of the partnership, the Grand Junction Railways.

Mr. Searle said that he merely appeared in regard to the point raised by prayer (a) of the petition, in which it was asked that the official liquidator should proceed to establish the claims of the debenture holders. He held that, as there were trustees of the debenture holders, they should be instructed to proceed with the claims, otherwise he submitted to the judgment of the Court. They had already notified to the receivers of the partnership that there was such a claim in existence, and their opinion that the trustees of the debenture holders were the proper parties to pursue the claim.

Mr. Uppington said that he appeared for the receivers in the partnership, who were appointed by an order of this Court, by consent of the principal creditors of the partnership. They merely suggested that if the Court thought fit to order this money to be paid over to the receivers of the partnership, they would be quite ready not to distribute it in any way.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who are the receivers?]

Messrs. E. R. Syfret and J. E. P. Close.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Couldn't they deposit it with the African Banking Corporation?]

Mr. Uppington: I understand that has already been arranged, subject to the approval of your lordship.

De Villiers, C.J.: As to the first prayer of the petition, an action must be brought. The Court will make the following order: "By consent of all parties, it is ordered that all moneys received by Hills from the Colonial Government be paid to Messrs. E. R. Syfret and J. E. P. Close, as receivers of the partnership, Grand Junction Railways, the said money to be deposited with the African Banking Corporation or such other bank, and at such rate of interest as the Registrar of the Supreme Court shall approve, and to remain on deposit until the further order of Court; in the meantime an action to be brought by the proper party to decide upon the claims of the debenture holders to a preference in respect of the moneys he has paid over to the receivers, the question of costs to be reserved." His Lordship added that it was not for him to say who were the proper parties to bring the action. If the bank brought the action, the other side might take exception that they were the wrong parties, and that the trustees of the debenture holders were the proper parties to bring the action.

This was an action to recover possession of a certain shop.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiffs were general dealers, residing at Salt River, and the defendant a general dealer, residing at Cape Town. Plaintiffs alleged that in 1903 they were the owners of a business at Salt River, and in August they entered into a partnership with one Achmodien, in respect of a shop in Rochester-road, Salt River. On the 7th December, defendant wrongfully took possession of this shop. Plaintiffs prayed for an order for restoration of the shop, and £60 damages for loss of profit, or, in the alternative, for £200, being the value of the stock and goodwill.

In his plea the defendant admitted having taken possession of the shop, but stated that he paid £98 to the man Achmodien for the stock and goodwill. He denied that plaintiffs had any interest therein, and stated that the licence was in the name of Achmodien, who also paid the rent. Defendant made a claim in reconvention for £100 for loss sustained by reason of the plaintiffs having obtained an interdict restraining him from carrying on the business.

In their replication and plea in reconvention, the plaintiffs said that the shop was the property of the partnership, and that the partners agreed that none of them should do anything on account of the partnership without the consent of the others, and that no one of them should dispose of the stock or goodwill.

Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers for plaintiffs. Mr. McGregor for defendant.

Shiek Hamet Jaffe, one of the plaintiffs, deposed that in April, 1903, he entered into a partnership with Achmodien in regard to a shop in Chatham-road, the licence for which was taken out in witness's name. In August they took Dalvi into partnership, the latter having advanced £25. The partnership was made in respect of the business at 75, Rochester-road, for which they paid £96 or £98. They took stock on the 24th August, the defendant being then present. Witness told Ahmed that they were taking stock, because Dalvi was coming into partnership. They paid £50 in cash for the shop, and gave promissory notes for the balance. The three partners signed the promissory notes. Later, Dalvi was taken into partnership in the Chatham-road business, the stock being taken for this purpose on the 14th September. Defendant was also there on that occasion, assisting them to take stock, and witness told him they were going to take Dalvi into this business as a partner. The agreement was read out in his presence. Subsequently the Chatham-road business was removed to 21, Rochester-road. Dalvi was in charge of the shop at 75, Rochester-road, and witness and Achmodien looked after the other. Witness produced receipts from wholesale dealers for goods supplied to the shop. These were addressed to witness at 75, Rochester-road. In November, Ahmed and Achmodien came to 21, Rochester-road, and offered witness and Dalvi £150 to go out of the other shop, but they refused the offer. On December 7 witness was informed that Ahmed had taken possession of the shop, and he thereupon went to his attorneys, who took action, and obtained an interdict against Ahmed. Witness calculated his loss at £60, and the value of the stock and goodwill at £200.

By Mr. McGregor: When they paid for the house it was Achmodien who signed, the seller stating that the document only required the signature of one partner. Dalvi was never paid by Achmodien for working at 75, Rochester-road. On the partners raising money on loan, Achmodien sent the greater part of the money to India. It was understood this was to buy goods. The licence for 75 was in Achmodien's name, and was stuck up in the shop. Achmodien arranged with the landlord of the place.

Ebrahim Dalvi gave corroborative evidence.

In cross-examination, he denied having spoken of Achmodien as his boss, or that the merchants regarded Achmodien as the owner of 75.

Ebrahim Norodeen, general dealer, Woodstock, said he was the owner of 75, Rochester-road, Salt River. Last year Achmodien came to witness and asked him if he would sell the shop. Witness agreed to sell the goodwill for £23, and asked Achmodien what his position was. Achmodien replied that he had two partners. Witness sold the stock and goodwill of the shop for £95. Witness asked Achmodien why he did not get his partners to sign the promissory notes. Achmodien replied that it was all right, and that they were not going to humbug him (witness). Witness was satisfied to receive the notes with Achmodien's signature. When the promissory notes were given, Achmodien mentioned the plaintiffs by name as his partners. The day before the shop was shut up in December witness went there, and saw the stock, which he valued at £150.

Ali Mohamet, assistant to the last witness, gave similar evidence.

Shiek Ahmed, the defendant, said he had been in this country for six years, and had two shops at Woodstock. Witness and Achmodien served together on a ship in their youth. Achmodien told him he had bought the shop at 75, Rochester-road, Salt River, from Ebrahim Norodeen, in August. Witness went to the shop, and saw Achmodien, who told him his servant had gone from the shop. On the 4th December Achmodien told witness he wanted to sell the shop. Witness agreed to buy the shop. They took stock, which amounted to £98, including £22 for goodwill. Witness, accompanied by Achmodien, went to the landlord to see if the shop belonged to Achmodien, and if witness could get the lease. Witness paid £50 in cash, and gave promissory notes for the balance, obtaining a receipt from Achmodien. The receipt embodied an agreement of sale, and witness and Achmodien made their marks on the document (produced). Achmodien took down his licence from the wall, and witness fixed his up in its place. When witness entered the shop, Dalvi gave Achmodien 12s. (the day's takings), and left the shop, after demanding his wages. Achmodien gave witness the 12s., as witness was entitled to the day's takings. Witness spent the whole day on September 14 at a house at Maitland, and did not go to Chatham-road at all that day. He bought the shop as being Achmodien's shop.

Cross-examined: They sold goods for a week, and then they had to close the shop. The sales were not large.

They only sold £9 worth of goods. He had not brought the book to Court. He did not know whether Achmodien owed a good deal of money.

Mr. De Villiers: You do not know that he owes £500?

Witness said he did not know.

[Hopley, J.: What are you fighting for if that is the case?]

Mr. McGregor said that if plaintiff got the shop he would only succeed to a bankrupt stock.

Further cross-examined: Witness had two shops. He knew that the Court ordered him to give up the shop or provide security. He was unable to raise the security.

Henry George Wilmot, house and land agent, Cape Town, said he had to do with the letting of 75, Rochester-road. He had given receipts to Achmodien for payment of the rent. He looked to Achmodien alone for payment of the rent. Subsequently the defendant came with a Mr. Holland, and a six months' lease was entered into in December.

Saladin Alie, general dealer, Rochester-road, Salt River, said he helped to take the stock at the defendant's shop. The value was £90 8s. 4d. Ahmed said he had bought the shop, and he asked witness to take the stock. The shop belonged to Achmodien before it came into Ahmed's hands.

After further evidence had been led, Hopley, J., after commenting strongly on the contradictory nature of the verbal and documentary evidence that came before him in cases where Indians were concerned, gave judgment for the plaintiffs in terms of the order prayed for in their declaration, namely, that possession be restored to them, with £30 damages and costs.

contract, and it was thought that it would be best, in the first instance, that it should be put before a referee.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said he appeared with Mr. Gardiner, for the defendant. If they could agree upon a referee he should be prepared to accept a reference.

Mr. Benjamin mentioned the names of several builders from whom choice of referee might be made.

Mr. Searle urged that an architect should be appointed as referee. Mr. John Parker, he might say, had already acted in similar cases.

Mr. Benjamin urged that this was a matter with which a builder would be more competent to deal. The question was one of estimating the cost of building and certain additional work. He thought, perhaps, it might meet the views of both parties if the Court appointed both a builder and an architect.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That would make it very expensive, because they would also have to appoint an umpire.]

Mr. Benjamin: This was work done solely upon the tender of the contractor, and without the intervention of any architect. The amount in dispute is about £400, but the whole account is something like £2,000.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think it would be more satisfactory to refer all questions in dispute to a single arbitrator. The Court will, therefore, refer all matters in dispute to an arbitrator, and appoint Mr. John Parker, and if he is unable to act, the Court will appoint Mr. George Smart as arbitrator, costs to be costs in the cause.

Party wall—"Common wall"— Servitude—Destruction or rebuilding of common wall—Agreement—Interdict.

The rights to a common wall partake of the nature of a servitude, but the wall itself is also regarded in many important respects as common property.

The neighbouring proprietors are not co-owners, in the proper sense of the term, of the wall, because the land on which the wall stands is not their common property, but they have the rights of co-owners to this extent that each is entitled to the maintenance of the wall on his neighbour's property as

TRIAL CAUSES.

HOESEN V. DAY. { 1901.
Mar. 3rd.

Mr. Benjamin called his lordship's attention to this case, which was set down for hearing to-morrow (Friday). The matter, he said, related to a building well as of the part standing on his own property.

The applicant and respondent, being co-owners of a certain building, agreed to subdivide the same and to erect a party wall on and along the boundary line, such party wall to take the place of a partition wall then existing and separating the portions allotted to each. It was also agreed that the party wall should be constructed in manner directed by arbitrators. Their award was given, but the party wall was not constructed. A fire occurred, in consequence of which the partition wall had to be demolished.

Held, that one of the parties to the agreement was not entitled to an interdict restraining the other from building a party wall in the manner directed by the award.

This was an application brought by Ludwig Wiener, merchant, Cape Town, against Adrian van der Byl, also of Cape Town, for an interdict restraining the respondent from building or trespassing on the property of the applicant in St. George's-street, between Riebeck-street and Dock Road.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that respondent and himself carried on business for many years in partnership in Cape Town as general merchants. In 1895 the partnership was dissolved, and a deed was executed whereby it was provided, inter alia, that the landed property standing at the corner of Dock-road and St. George's-street should be divided, and that a party wall should be erected conjointly by the respondent and applicant. Certain questions were referred to arbitrators, and it was agreed that the manner in which the said wall should be erected should be determined by two arbitrators and an umpire. The award was made on the 9th January, 1896, and appended to it was a specification of the work to be done in the erection of a wall, which was to completely separate the two properties. The party wall was not erected. In September, 1903, the buildings were completely gutted by fire. Thereafter the respondent decided to erect the wall, and he stated that he would hold the applicant responsible for one half the cost.

The respondent's affidavit stated that a thin party wall, originally existed for about three-fourths of the distance along the dividing line drawn by the arbitrators. After the award had been made, a party wall which complied with the specification laid down in the award was built between the two properties for the remaining quarter of the dividing line, and it was agreed between the parties that the wall should not be carried out through the roof, and that the award should remain in abeyance until a new roof was built. In September, 1903, a fire broke out on the applicant's premises, which spread to respondent's premises. The party wall and portion of deponent's premises were so damaged that it became necessary to pull down the wall. Subsequently negotiations took place in regard to the reconstruction of the wall. The applicant desired to have the party wall built of sufficient strength to enable him to put two or three stories on in future, should he wish to do so. To this deponent would not agree, but subsequently he withdrew the refusal, and he proposed that the wall should be built by the applicant of extra strength on both sides, to enable him (respondent) to build other stories on it, should he decide to do so at some future date, when he would pay to the applicant the extra cost of such portion as he should use. Applicant's attorneys said that he could not consent to this, and as a matter of fact he had definitely decided to sell the land. He was advised that it would materially affect the value of the said property for sale purposes if he granted the party wall. He said further, that as the premises were destroyed by fire, the agreement of 1895 had become of no effect. The affidavit of Vincent van der Byl, who held the respondent's power of attorney during his absence in Europe when the fire broke out stated that the applicant agreed to accept from the insurance company, after the fire, one half the cost of reinstating the wall, which amount was allowed. He was informed that the applicant was also paid one half by the insurance company.

The replying affidavit of the applicant stated that it was agreed between respondent and himself that the party wall should not be carried through until a new roof was necessary. He paid one half of the cost of erecting portion of the said party wall. He had no knowledge of the allegations as to the insurance.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for applicant.—Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for respondent.

Mr. Searle said that the point was whether under the circumstances this agreement for erecting a party wall could be held to be in force now that both the buildings had been destroyed, and whether there could be anything in the nature of a servitude. It was clear from the transfer deeds, which were passed many years ago, that there was no servitude on the buildings, and the question then arose whether an agreement, that certainly could not possibly be carried out now in regard to the greater part of it, could be held still to exist as some kind of servitude over these premises. If Mr. Baker's award and the specification that he referred to were looked into, it would be seen that the only object of that award was to separate entirely two existing buildings. Now the premises had been destroyed, and Mr. Baker's specification could not possibly be carried out. Was it to be said that Mr. Weiner, who had actually sold his property was to allow another wall to be built, portion of which was to stand upon his own ground. Mr. Van der Byl took up the position that he himself could alone rebuild the wall, and that the applicant could be held responsible for half the cost.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it the party wall that you object to, or is it the cost?]

Mr. Searle said he believed the main objection was to paying half the cost, though they had objected both on the ground of cost and trespass. The buildings had, by act of God, been entirely separated. Could it still be held that the agreement was in force, and that the applicant was to have a large party wall on his ground, and to pay part of the expense. He submitted that authority would have to be cited for such a course.

Mr. Schreiner said that it must be borne in mind that this was an application for an interdict. If the agreement were held to be still in force, then the case for an interdict must fail entirely. The applicant had got half the cost of reinstating the wall from the Insurance Company.

Mr. Searle: That is denied in paragraph 4 of the applicant's affidavit.

Mr. Schreiner: It is not actually denied by the applicant.

Mr. Searle: I may say we were very largely uninsured to the extent of £4,000, so that the question could not possibly arise in regard to us.

Mr. Schreiner said that Mr. Vincent van der Byl, in his affidavit, made this statement: "I was informed by Mr. Mouat, who adjusted the applicant's claim as well, that he also received from the insurance company one-half of the cost of reinstating the said party wall." The applicant says he has no knowledge of these allegations.

Mr. Searle: What I deny is that we got the money.

Mr. Schreiner: That is not so stated in paragraph 4. Counsel went on to contend that the whole of the point that now arose was not as to cost of the building (which was in no way brought into prominence until it was now raised by his friend, Mr. Searle, but whether the respondent could build on that part of the ground. That was the only point that was now before the Court, because the respondent was sought to be interdicted from "trespassing on the property of the applicant situate in St. George's-street." His friend, he submitted, had failed to show why they should not continue to use in the future as they had in the past ground which was definitely agreed upon between the parties for purposes of a party wall. It was contended by the applicant that because there came a fire, the respondent's rights at common law were burnt up. The whole point at present was, was the respondent to be interdicted from building? As to the question of cost, the respondent made the very reasonable proposal that the applicant should pay the extra cost of making the wall broader in the first instance, and that if respondent afterwards wanted to go higher than his present idea of three storeys, then he would refund half the cost of building the stronger wall. Counsel submitted that there had been no renunciation of the award by the respondent. He thought his learned friend would search in vain for authority to show that respondent had lost his rights under the award in consequence of the fire.

Mr. Searle, in reply, repeated that the destruction of the property put an end to the obligations of the award. The award really could not now be carried out in its terms. He added that the award had never been registered. He quoted Voet (8, 2, 16), Grotius 2, 34, 5, Van Leeuwen (vol. 1, p. 301), and Van der Linden, Book 1, cap. 11, sec. 4.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 7th).

Do Villiers, C.J.: The facts of this case are really not in dispute, and the only question to be decided is whether the respondent is legally entitled to build a wall as a party wall in terms of an agreement entered into between him and the applicant on the 31st of December, 1895. By that agreement the parties, having agreed to dissolve partnership and divide the assets of their business, further agreed to subdivide the buildings now in question, and to erect a party wall on and along the boundary line, such party wall to take the place of a partition wall then existing, and separating the portions allotted to each. It was also agreed that the manner in which the party wall was to be erected should be submitted to the determination of two valuers, assisted by an architect. Their award was to the effect that a party wall was to be constructed in accordance with the specifications prepared by the architect, and was to completely separate the two properties and the roofs covering them. The party wall was not, however, erected for its whole length, but only for about one-fourth of its length, and the thin partition wall which stood on the boundary for the remaining three-fourths of the length was allowed to remain as before. In September, 1903, a fire occurred on the premises, with the result that the walls of the applicant's portion had to be demolished, as well as the partition walls in question. The respondent now proposes to rebuild the partition wall, but to make it of the thickness approved of by the architect, namely, 18 inches. The applicant, however, objects to any portion of this wall encroaching on his property, and, while admitting that the respondent could, before the fire, have carried out the award, he contends that the practical destruction of the wall puts an end to any rights which the respondent might have had under the agreement. The respondent, on the other hand, maintains that the agreement is still in force, and that, in erecting the wall, he is entitled to encroach to the extent of 9 inches, that is to say, one-half of the thickness of the new party wall, upon the applicant's share of the property. It is clear from the terms of the agreement that the respondent would have been entitled at any time before the fire occurred to carry out the terms of the award in regard to the building of the party wall. That being so, I fail to see upon what principle it could be maintained that the demolition of the partition wall by reason of the fire puts an end to the right of either party to build the wall in the manner previously agreed upon. It is true that some of the details of the architect's specifications will have to be omitted, but in their essential features these specifications are quite capable of being carried out, notwithstanding the alterations of structure caused by the fire. It is said that the right to the maintenance of a party wall is in the nature of a servitude, and that, as the agreement has not been registered against the title-deeds, neither party can claim the benefit of the servitude. It is quite true that the right partakes of the nature of a servitude, and is so treated by the writers on our law; but the non-registration of the right cannot affect the decision of the present case, which has arisen between the parties themselves to the agreement. The authorities are clear that, although the destruction of the servient tenement as a general rule puts an end to a servitude, the destruction of a party wall standing on the servient tenement does not involve the destruction of the rights of the owner of the dominant tenement in respect of that wall, whenever it might be rebuilt. (Voet 8, 6, 4.) The owner of the servient tenement cannot be compelled to rebuild it, but if he should rebuild it, he must rebuild it in such a way as to enable the owner of the dominant tenement to enjoy his rights as they existed before the destruction. The circumstance that the owner of the servient tenement cannot be compelled to rebuild the wall is no reason for holding that the owner of the dominant tenement cannot rebuild it himself. I have already observed that the rights to a party wall partake of the nature of a servitude, but the wall itself is also regarded, in many important respects, as common property. The neighbouring proprietors are not co-owners, in the true sense of the term, of the wall, because the land on which the wall stands is not their common property, but they have the rights of co-owners to this extent, that each is entitled to the maintenance of the wall encroaching on his neighbour's property, as well as of the part standing on his own property. Such a wall is consequently termed in our law a "common wall." According to Ulpian (Dig., 10, 3, 12) the persons entitled to a common wall have the same rights in regard to the demolition or rebuilding of such a wall as co-owners of a house held in common have in respect of such house. Upon this passage Voet (8, 2, 16) remarks that the neighbours entitled to a common wall may not demolish or rebuild it except in case of urgent necessity, but he adds that according to the customary law of Holland, one of the neighbours may break down a wooden fence which is common to both without the consent of the other, and substitute for it, at his own expense, a brick wall, which, when constructed, would become common between them. It would follow, a fortiori, that if a common wall is destroyed by a fire, either of the neighbours may rebuild such wall, more especially if, as in the present case, there was an agreement in existence before, and at the time of the fire, that either of them should be entitled to remove a then existing partition and substitute for it a proper wall. In the present case the respondent claims the right not only to construct the wall in the manner authorised by the award, but also to recover half the cost from the applicant. It is not necessary for the Court, however, at this stage to decide as to the latter part of the claim. The question to be now determined is whether the applicant is entitled to restrain the respondent from building the wall, according to the architect's specifications, and for the reasons already stated, I am of opinion that the applicant must fail. The application must, therefore, be refused, with costs—with leave to the applicant to bring an action for a perpetual interdict, or for damages, and to recover back the costs paid on this motion. It is to be hoped, however, that instead of entering on further litigation the parties may still settle their dispute. The applicant at first offered to allow the building to proceed if the party wall were made somewhat thicker than the one authorised by the award, but that offer was refused by the respondent. He afterwards notified his acceptance of the offer, but the applicant then unfortunately refused to adhere to his offer. That offer appears to me to contain a fair basis for an amicable settlement of the dispute, but if such settlement is not arrived at, the respondent cannot, upon the facts now before me, be legally restrained from building the party wall as directed by the award.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order authorising the executors testamentary in the estate of the late Jane Featherstone, of Stutterheim, to sell certain property. The second-named petitioner, Wm. George Featherstone (husband of the deceased), desired to take transfer of a piece of land in the division of Komgha, at the Divisional Council's valuation of £80. The children, all majors, consented. The husband had executed a deed of renunciation.

Order granted as prayed.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising petitioner, executor in the estate of his late wife, to acquire certain property. The parties, who were married in community, executed a joint will, but at the death of the testator the petitioner executed a deed of renunciation of benefits under the joint will. There was one minor child of the marriage. It was felt that the present was an unfavourable time in which to offer the immovable property for sale, and he was willing to take over his wife's share in the estate for £2,585.

Order granted, subject to the Master's approval.

STRANGMAN V. SOMERSET STRAND
MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an award of arbitrators to be made rule of Court, and for costs of application.

Mr. Van Zyl (for the respondents) consented.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte REES AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the survey of a certain roadway in the Municipality of Cambridge (East London), and transfer of certain portions to be deducted. Counsel said he had previously mentioned the matter, but His Lordship Sir John Buchanan said that the application was premature. The Municipality had consented to take over the roadway, provided it were of uniform width throughout.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was not enough information before the Court at present. They knew nothing about the people below in this road who might be entitled to the use of it.

Mr. Gardiner: We are still leaving the road, and I submit that we are leaving what would be a reasonable width. We only wish to narrow the road, not to do away with it. I would suggest that a rule should be granted.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I cannot understand what the object is of having this little strip of roadway narrowed.]

The Municipality want a road of uniform width. We want the Municipality to take over the whole length of road, narrow and broad.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was not sufficient information before the Court to justify the granting of the application, and no order, therefore, would be made.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

WILEY AND CO. V. ISAACS	} 1901.
AND CO.

Party wall—Subsidence of building—Negligence—Damages.

This was an action to recover the sum of £5,509 damages for alleged improper and negligent construction of a building.

The declaration set out that in August, 1902, the defendants, for the purpose of erecting a certain wall, which it was agreed between the parties should be a party wall, made certain excavations to a considerable depth partly from the defendants' side and partly in and upon a narrow lane between the plaintiffs' property and the defendants' property. It was alleged that the excavations were so negligently, improperly, and insufficiently shored and supported, and were otherwise so negligently carried out that the lateral support to which the plaintiffs were entitled was withdrawn, and the land subsided, and shifted from the foundations of the wall of the store. The wall cracked and subsided, and the building was rendered highly dangerous, and the plaintiffs' store became uninhabitable, and wholly useless to the plaintiffs, and had to be demolished. The defendants also broke, or caused to be broken, a certain drain pipe under the said land used to carry off storm-water. In consequence thereof large quantities of water were discharged from the said pipe into the excavations, contributing to the subsidence, and cracking the walls aforesaid. In consequence of that the plaintiffs had to pull down their store, and were deprived of the use and occupation and benefit of it. Large quantities of stock in the store were damaged and destroyed, and plaintiffs were put to great inconvenience and expense in removing the stock to other premises. They alleged that by reason of the foregoing they had sustained damages in the sum of £5,509.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal allegations, and said that in January, 1902, the defendants entered into a contract with the contractors, Messrs. Small and Morgan, to rebuild premises adjoining the plaintiffs' premises, that before rebuilding or excavating the defendants consulted the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs' architect as to the method of erection, and they agreed that the wall was to be a common or party wall, and was to be built in a certain manner which required excavations being made under the boundary wall, and which was approved by the plaintiff. They denied that there was any legal negligence, and said that the work was carried out as agreed upon. The plaintiffs' wall was in an extremely rotten and unsafe condition, and there was an old drain pipe which was running along the wall in a dilapidated condition, and it leaked and otherwise caused the wall to subside. The work was done by independent contractors. The defendants said that if there were any liability at all, then that liability rested upon the contractors. They denied damage, and that they had received particulars of the alleged damage.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for respondents.

Mr. Searle said the defendants did not intend to place any reliance upon the plea of independent contractor, and it seemed that an agreement had been entered into between defendants and the contractors.

Sir H. Juta then made formal application for inspection of certain documents.

Mr. Searle submitted that the plaintiffs had no right to inspect correspondence between third persons. The plaintiffs asked to inspect correspondence that had taken place between the architects of the defendants, Messrs. Baker and Masey, and the builders of the defendants.

Sir H. Juta contended that in accordance with what was done in the case of Van der Horst v. Colonial Government (13 C.T.R. 1038) the plaintiffs were entitled to inspection.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The only question is as to whether notice has been given].

Sir H. Juta said that proper notice had been given.

De Villiers, C.J., said it surely could not be argued that these documents were privileged.

Mr. Searle said they did not take up the position that the documents were privileged. The respondent only received notice of the application on Saturday.

An order for inspection was granted.

Evidence was then called for the plaintiffs.

David Arnett, clerk of works employed by Mr. Parker (architect), said he had had considerable experience of the taking out of basements. He was clerk of works at the building of the Tivoli. The property was part of the site of the Old Masonic Hotel. He saw what was going on near to Isaac's property. He saw a number of pits being made about 6 feet square and 15 feet deep. The pits were partly on the lane and partly where the old wall would be. He had never seen excavations made in that fashion before. The usual thing was to take out about 6 or 8 feet, and make that up before opening another section. He saw the ground taken out as well before the pits were filled up. He thought when he observed this method that he was going to learn something.

A trench 52 feet long was formed. He did not attach any importance to the drain pipe. The soil was black and loamy. There was nearly 8 feet of water in the trench. He saw Wiley's wall begin to crack; his recollection was that it would be two or three weeks before the wall collapsed. The excavations were continued after the crack had appeared. The wall was well shored right along, and further shoring was put up. Both the cross wall and the internal walls were cracked. The roof was also broken. The collapse was caused by the foundations giving way in consequence of the soft soil percolating through the sheeting into the trench. The soil was very much in the nature of morass. It was really mud that percolated into the trench. In his opinion each pit should have been filled up with concrete; instead of which a concrete bottom was laid, and a granite pier was built on top of that. Each pit should have been filled up as it had been excavated.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Four pits had been opened when the wall fell. Practically speaking, the wall never fell; but it was in such a dangerous condition that it had to be taken down. Originally the pits had to take iron stanchions, and were to have a flooring of concrete. He thought ten days would be sufficiently long for a hole to stand open after it had been floored with concrete. A good deal would depend on what was to be put above. The defendants' building was about five stories high, and was on the American principle—steel framework. The depth of the trench before the job was done was not less than 11 feet. He saw a crack in the wall two or three weeks before he made the plan on the 18th September. The wall was very old, and it might be that there were a few cracks in it. The taking down of the Masonic Hotel would not affect the wall at all, because there was a wall between.

Edmund James Sherwood, architect and quantity surveyor, said he assisted in making up a tender for Isaacs's building. In making the tender special attention was paid to the risk in connection with Wiley's wall. The architects drew attention to it, and an allowance for the risk was made in the tenders. He saw the work from time to time as it progressed. He could not give any particulars as to the depth of the trench and pits. The soil was similar to what they had to contend with at the new City Hall. The shoring at the time was sufficient. He was called in about two days after the collapse had taken place. The wall had sunk vertically about 15 inches; the foundations had been drawn away by the pumping. Two floors of Wiley's building collapsed towards the new building. The roof also went. He attributed the mischief to the breaking of the drain pipe. As to the method of doing the work, he agreed with the evidence of Mr. Arnett entirely. He thought that the method employed in this case was extremely risky. He thought if the pipe had been connected and the drain water had been carried away as it should have been, the damage would have been considerably minimised at any rate. After the subsidence had taken place, no amount of shoring would have saved the building. He had prepared an estimate for reinstating the building in its former position. The amount was £2,963.

By the Court: The suggested new wall would carry a larger superstructure than the old wall would have borne. The old wall would, however, have been sufficient for plaintiffs' purposes. He did not think the building would be more valuable to the plaintiffs after the new wall was put up.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not attribute the collapse entirely to the drain pipe. If he had said so, then he should modify the statement, because he thought the excavation of the trench had a good deal to do with the collapse; in fact, he should say that the excavation was the more important cause. The drain pipe was not full of cracks and leakages prior to the fracture caused by the contractors. The old wall was such as would be allowed by the Town Council to-day. The anchor in the wall would probably have been put in originally. Anchors were put in walls at the present day upon their completion. He maintained that the old wall was not cracked until it had been disturbed by defendants' contractors. Upon the new wall, for which he had estimated, it was possible to put an extra two stories. It would be necessary to provide a new foundation under the wall. The old foundations had gone for a good distance.

Alexander Forsyth, architect, Cape Town, said he found the wall in such a state that it was impossible to repair it. He thought it was dangerous for Wiley to remain in the premises, and he advised his removal. His opinion as to the cause of the collapse was the depth of the trench being lower than the bottom of Wiley's wall, and the fact of the trench being opened over such a length at one time. No amount of shoring would have prevented the vertical collapse of the wall.

Walter S. Law, architect, Cape Town, said that he prepared plans for the construction of the party wall. On the 21st August he inspected Wiley's wall, and found a big crack in it. He observed that the foundations had begun to subside for a length of four or five feet at the centre of the wall. The earth under the drain pipe had given way, and the two ends had broken. He drew the attention of a man in the contractors' employ to the pipe. He found preparations for six shafts. Four were in various stages of excavation. He found in one of the pits water to a depth of about 8 feet 6 inches. He thought the method of working showed a lack of experience. An attempt was made to shore up the wall, but it was all hopeless. The ground in that locality was very treacherous. He had prepared an estimate for the work necessary to be done in consequence of the damage, the amount being £4,300. The estimate took into account other portions that would have to be reinstated in addition to those included in Mr. Sherwood's estimate.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not think more than one hole should have been opened at a time. Each hole should have been filled in before another was opened. He measured the depth of one of the holes in process of excavation.

It went 13 feet down. He admitted that the wall was a very old one, but it was like a good many other old Dutch walls. He was astonished at the solidity they showed after so much wear and tear. These old Dutch walls were all right if left alone, but they had an objection to being pulled about. His estimate of the cost was very approximate.

Mr. Gardiner read the evidence of Wm. Henry Dunning, taken on commission. Deponent said he was an architect's assistant, in the employ of Mr. Parker. In September, 1902, with Mr. Forsyth, he proceeded to Wiley's store, and among other dilapidations, found a big crack in the wall, under the words, "Settlement under this window." At the end furthest from Darling-street concrete was being put in. The trench was covered with water. He did not think the drain pipe was intact. The length of the excavation was about 52 feet, and in four places the trench was wider than in others. His firm would not have opened the trench all at one time, that being a very unusual course. The proper course was to excavate in sections, and if that had been done, there would have been no danger.

George Herbert Dunn, partner in the firm of George Findlay and Co., said he examined certain stock for Mr. Wiley. He made his report in conjunction with Mr. Smithers. There was a large crack in the wall, and water had come through it, damaging the stock. The damage was estimated at £750.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had no figures to show how the damage was arrived at. The stock consisted of general ironmongery, including tools, bedsteads, etc. He could give no exact details whatever. Some of the articles were entirely useless, and others were deteriorated very much by rust, due to rain and dust. Many of the packages bore traces of damp, and the greater part of the steel goods were damaged by rust.

John Robert Wiley, the plaintiff, said that when the contractors commenced their excavations, his wall was not shored up. On the 21st August no saw several cracks in the wall. He spoke to the contractors' foreman, and sent for his architect, Mr. Law. The foreman put paper over the cracks, but the cracks got larger. Mr. Morgan (of Messrs. Small and Morgan) ultimately came and instructed his men to shore up the building. The most serious crack was about three-quarters the whole way of the wall in front of the trench. He saw Mr. Isaacs, and spoke to him about the damage done by the contractors. Mr. Isaacs said: "I am thoroughly disgusted with Small and Morgan; they call them first-class builders, but I am thoroughly disgusted with them, and so are Baker and Masey." The cracks continued to become worse, until the wall collapsed. With regard to the earthenware pipe this pipe carried off the rain water from three sides of the building, and the water from the w.c. He spoke to the contractors about this pipe, and asked them to be careful. A plank was put under the pipe by the contractors, but he found that the pipe was damaged, and it remained leaking for some months. Witness did everything he could to stop the damage caused by the contractors. He ultimately received a little help from the contractors, who patched the roof, but this only served for two days. Whenever witness spoke to Isaacs, the latter refused to do anything, saying that it would prejudice his case with his builders. The day after the inspection of the stock by the assessors, he removed his stock to his store in Buitenkant-street. As to the claim for damages, there was an item of £1,550 for loss of rent for nine months. He calculated that it would take nine months to remove the stock back again, and have the building put in order again. He did not include anything for loss of business in his claim. His business had been ruined through having to remove from Darling-street, where he occupied an old and well-established stand. He had no intention at that time of rebuilding or moving his business. They had ruined his building, and they had ruined his business. His business was nil at present.

Sir H. Juta: We don't know what your business was before. Can you give his lordship any idea what your loss has been?

Witness: I should think that it will take £10,000 to cover me against actual loss. Continuing, witness said that the damage assessed by Messrs. Smithers and Dunn was £750. He claimed £157 10s. for removal of stock to Buitenkant-street, and also a similar amount, estimated cost of taking the goods back again. He claimed £130 14s. 3d. on account of expense incurred in taking down fixtures and re-fixing. The estimate of Mr. Sherwood for rebuilding was also included in his claim for damages. Since that estimate was prepared he had taken more of the building down, in fact practically the whole building had been taken down.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had not any immediate intention of rebuilding at the time the mischief occurred. It was true that certain arrangements were entered into between his architects and Mr. Isaacs's architects as to digging out basements, but this was only in case at some future time he should desire to enlarge his premises. He repeated that Mr. Isaacs did not assist him. It was true that he received a letter containing an offer, but he declined the proposal because he would not have a patched job made of it. They were willing to take a lump sum. He first removed some goods from the south-east side of the building in response to a request from the Town Council. He did not give Mr. Isaacs notice of the assessment of the damage because he thought it was quite useless. The claim sent to Mr. Isaacs amounted to £2,900 in full settlement. He denied that he had told Mr. Morgan and his foreman that he had had to repair the wall every year. He had not had the wall repaired frequently. Every few years he had the old Dutch roof and the wall cemented for the winter. He reckoned the value of his premises in Darling-street at £150 a month. The item for removing stock was an estimate. He had previously had this store in Buitenkant-street, and had not had a tenant there, so that he did not lose any rent through taking his goods there. He did not consider that the drain pipe was very old—it was put down in 1874. The drain pipe was not patched with glass and tin.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: The claim that he sent to Mr. Isaacs, in response to the offer which he made, was for £2,900, but further damage ensued subsequently, and witness withdrew his proposal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who paid for pulling down the building?]

Witness: I pulled it down.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How is it that you don't charge for that?]

I never thought about it, my lord.

Mr. Gardiner read the correspondence which had passed between the parties.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

James Morgan, of the firm of Small and Morgan, contractors, said he had been in business for 27 years, and had built several large buildings in the Colony, as well as elsewhere. He built the Post-office in Cape Town, the Rondebosch Town Hall, the Port Elizabeth Custom House, and other large buildings. He was contractor for Isaacs's buildings, and for the Tivoli superstructure. He noticed, soon after they began work, that there were cracks in the wall in May because it appeared to be unsafe. They first took down Isaacs's building, and commenced to excavate at the back. Then they took down, by consent, an extension of this wall just behind. He first noticed that this wall was weak after taking down the extension. The extension helped to support the wall in question. A bulge showed about 8 or 10 ft. from the end; this would be about June. They put up props. Mr. Wiley was mistaken when he said no shoring was put up before August. The props were put in long before the excavation was begun. His foreman, Stradling, came from Simon's Town in July, and the shoring had taken place before then. The excavations were commenced about the beginning of August. They had to make eight pits, about 15 feet deep. The brickwork between the pits did not go down so far within three or four feet. The pits were to carry iron stanchions. It was not true that they opened a big trench along the whole length of the wall. There might have been 30 ft. of trench opened at one time. The stanchions were put in first, and the trench was dug between. He had to fill up the whole with granite, with two or three feet of concrete at the bottom. Before filling up the pit it was necessary that the concrete should be allowed to settle. About the middle of August he noticed the wall crumbling towards Darling-street. At that time three or four holes were open. The cause of the collapse in the wall was the rotten state of the wall. The season was extremely wet, and he thought that the fact of the masonic building being down would precipitate the decay. The water in the passage soaked up the wall, and witness discovered when the trench was opened up that the drain pipe was leaking in several places.

By the Court: The pipe was repaired from time to time.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that judging from the condition that he found the pipe in, water must have been escaping for a considerable time, and in his opinion the wall in any case would not have lasted more than a year or two. In September there was a further subsidence of the wall, which injured the roof. When the wall was taken down at the end of November, it was in a hopeless condition; but in September it could have been renewed for £500 or £600.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: At the present time Messrs. Isaacs held him responsible, but he repudiated liability. On the 25th March, and again in May, Messrs. Baker and Masey complained of delay on the part of witness, in connection with the work. His intention in May was to open up the trench in sections. It would be very improper to open up the whole trench. Mr. Masey urged him to proceed with the work, and he said that he would not on his own responsibility excavate the whole of the trench, on account of the danger. The wishes of the architects were to excavate at once. He never knew any man open up all the excavations at the same time. The adjoining property was so bad that he wrote to the architects, telling them that he would not consider himself responsible for any mishap, and he wrote that because he thought there was every danger of the wall coming down. Towards the end of May he anticipated danger, and on the 4th June he wrote suggesting the substitution of brickwork in order to minimise the danger; but the architects were unable to see their way to adopt the suggestion. Witness was finding fault with the architects, and they in turn found fault with him. The wall did not come down on account of inadequate shoring. When the first crack appeared in the wall, he still went on with the excavations, and the wall continued to get worse. He did not attach any importance to the pipe, which was exposed during August. It was patched up several times.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not think that one of the lengths being opened to its full length endangered Wiley's wall.

Paul William Stradling, stated that he acted as foreman at the excavations from the middle of July. The wall had bulged at the top, and the bricks were crushing at the bottom so that shores had to be put up. Mr. Wiley admitted to him that he had from time to time to patch the wall, and witness found the roof cracked from end to end along the roof before the excavations along the wall commenced. In the beginning of August he started the excavations with one of the six feet square holes. About eighteen feet from where he was excavating the bricks were crushing out on firm ground. He attributed that to the weight of the building, and the removal of the end wall. At no time was there 52 feet of continuous trench open. Between the holes the trench was shaped out to the depth of eighteen inches or two feet. Towards the end of August, the wall got worse, and more struts were used. The excavating work, in his opinion, had nothing to do with the crushing out of the wall, which, he believed, would have only stood for about twelve months more when it was exposed to the wind and weather. The first time he saw the old pipe it had been broken for cleaning purposes, and the leakage would "melt" the bricks away. If he had not stopped the pipe he would have had all the sewage coming into the works. The material in the wall would not be permitted to be used now.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: No rain came in as far as he knew. A wall beginning to fall over had a tendency to crush out the foundations, and that was the result of removing the small wall. There never was a continuous trench of 52 feet. He absolutely contradicted the witnesses who said there was an open trench of 52 feet, and Mr. Morgan, who said that two lengths were opened to their full depth.

John Hankinson, manager for Small and Morgan, said that he supervised the work. About the end of July he found that the roof was cracked like a spider's web, many of the cracks having been patched up. There had been shoring up before August, when the excavations of the holes was commenced. In his opinion the sinking of the pits might have had a slight effect on the wall, but the wall, to his mind, would have had a very short life. There was a great deal of rain in July and August, and the bricks were of a class that would easily absorb water and decay. The condition of the old pipe might have had a slight effect on the foundations.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do I understand you to say that if no excavations had been made the wall would have come down?]

Yes.

Mr. Searle: Would the exposure shorten the life of the wall?

Witness: Considerably.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: In September two-thirds of the trench was not open, the utmost length being 26 feet. The statements by Messrs. Arnett, Dunning, and Forsyth were imaginary, as when they reached 11 feet of depth the next length would only be four or five feet deep. The bulging out of the wall would cause a leverage on the foundations, and crush them out.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did the architects ever find fault with you for having too large an extent of excavation?]

No.

Geo. Ransen, architect, said that he visited the work principally with regard to the shoring. He examined Wiley's wall, and found a fracture towards the other end of Darling-street. The wall was composed of soft brick and clay. From the fracture that he saw he concluded that the wall had been exposed to wet. The wall would not stand any great weight, but while the masonic wall was in existence Wiley's wall received a certain amount of protection. About the first week in August four holes had been sunk, and the bulging was between two of them. He attributed the bulging of the wall to the saturated bricks. There was no alteration in the foundation when he was there. Leakage from the pipe would affect the foundation. The wall had been patched up on several occasions. He did not think the wall would have lasted any length of time.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness was called in to see if he could suggest any further shoring. The bottom of the wall was saturated with water, two of the holes being about fifteen feet deep, and the other two about eight.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The holes would have to be open for about three weeks, while the concrete was settling.

Francis Edward Masey, member of the firm of Baker and Masey, architects, for Messrs. Isaacs, stated that the rear of the work where there was another building, and where excavations had also to be made, was commenced first. When Small and Morgan wrote on the 14th May, witness did not take it that they meant the portion of the wall that came down. There was no work at the time that could have endangered the wall. That wall, to his mind, could not last any time. The wall had been built for a dwelling-house, and had been used for a warehouse, and was gradually giving way. Too heavy a load had been put on it. About June, some time before any excavation was commenced, Mr. Wiley gave his consent to part of the wall coming down. It was necessary in the construction of the foundation to have the stanchions put in at the same time, and consequently the holes had to be opened at the same time. No trench of the length and depth stated by Messrs. Arnold, Dunning, and Forsyth ever existed. The wall looked dangerous, and he immediately wrote to the contractors to shore it up. When the agreement was come to on the 21st August, with Law, the holes were filled up as soon as the concrete had settled. In September there was another subsidence of the wall, and in his opinion a good job could have been made of the wall; but in October it had gone too far. About £400 would have renewed the wall in September. The wall, in any case, ought to have been condemned by the Town Council, and had it been a front street, it would have been shaken down by the traffic. Irrespective of the protection from the Masonic wall, it would not have lasted very long.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: When Small and Morgan wrote to him in May, they referred to the wall generally. It was not the case that he wanted Mr. Morgan to go on with the whole of the excavation. On the 21st August there were four holes made, and at that time he was aware of the nature of the foundation of Wiley's premises; but the whole site was full of water, as a result of terrible rains. He did not notice the coming out of the foundation into the trench. When he wrote to Small and Morgan to excavate the whole, he did not mean a continuous excavation. He thought the contractors were not as expeditious as they might have been. There were three continuous excavations of fifteen feet long, ranging from fifteen to seven feet deep. The plan put in by the other side was a plan of something that never existed. He would not say it was a forgery. He attributed the collapse of the wall to bad weather, the fact that it was an old wall, and the building operations having disturbed it. The reason, he believed, the wall was not rebuilt, was that the attorneys could not agree to the amount of damages.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The negotiations fell through on account of the large amount of compensation demanded by Wiley. To the best of his belief, the depth of the trench stated by witness for the plaintiff was incorrect.

James Preston, clerk of works, in the employ of Messrs. Baker and Masey (architects), on the work in question, said he started there one June 1, 1902. No thing had been done at that time in connection with the party wall. He had been made acquainted with the nature of ground in 1901, when he went for the purpose of making the original drawings of the old building. He continued as clerk of the works until the work was finished. On July 22, 1902, the wall was shored the full length, but, prior to that date, some shoring had been put up at the back of the passage beyond the end, to support a lean-to. Before they opened trenches, it was evident that the wall was in an unsafe condition. On the 25th August three pits had been made, but, practically no excavation had taken place in the passage. The concrete foundations were laid in the pits on the following dates: No. 1, October 22; No. 2, August 16, No. 3, August 25; No. 4, August 5; No. 5, September 4. The granite piers had been built on the following dates: No. 1, October 23; No. 2, September 8; No. 3, about September 8; No. 4, about September 20; No. 5, September 26 (completed). Brickwork to the depth of 11 ft. was erected in the trenches. Witness gave other data with regard to the progress of the excavations and erection of foundations for stanchions. He examined Wiley's wall during January and February, 1901, and found that its life was gone; it was practically decaying. He attributed that to old age and poorness of material. The wall could not have lasted long. The passage was practically level with the street, and the water had sunk down into the earth. An area of about 2,000 feet was discharging rain water on to the passage. He had made calculations from the rainfall in 1902.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You say, then, that the material was of such a character and the wall was so old that it would have collapsed in any case?]

Yes; within a short time the building would have collapsed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You think that Isaac's building operations had nothing to do with the collapse of the wall?]

Well, there may have been some fault due to the excavations, naturally assisting in the subsidence of Wiley's building. I think a little more precaution might have been taken.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said he could see that the water had soaked into the ground and affected the brick work. The ground of the passage was about 6 to 9 inches above the top of the stonework foundations. The wall had a damp course. The roof of Wiley's building was also in a decaying condition. There were a number of old cracks in the wall before the excavations had been commenced. The cracks had all been patched up.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The water from the passage would have to rise over the footpath to reach the street. He did not see any grating there, he did not say there was no grating. He had complained about the dilatoriness of the contractors in regard to shoring. The Town Council also made similar complaints. He was of opinion that the contractors had not sufficiently shored the wall. After the crack had appeared, the whole wall was shored. He thought a little bit more precaution could have been taken by the contractors. He thought they made a mistake in opening up the trench between pit 2 and 3, and pit 3 and 4. He told Mr. Stradling at the time that it was a risky thing to do. Mr. Stradling said he would only go down to the old stone foundation, but, after remaining there a few days, he went on again. Stradling said that Mr. Morgan had told him to push on with the work.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Sir H. Juta, on the question of damages, said that the declaration was dated as far back as July, 1903, and the hearing of the case had been delayed on account of the absence from the Colony of Mr. Morgan. The damage as claimed really did not represent what Mr. Wylie had lost, but urged that as long as they kept within the amount they would be entitled to damages of varying amounts. They had the estimate of Mr. Sherwood as to the cost of reinstating the building.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would the plaintiff be satisfied if the walls were reinstated in the same condition as before?]

Sir H. Juta: Yes, if you can get someone to do it. They cannot build the same as they used to do for some reason or other; at any rate, we don't get the same building. I have known one of these old Dutch walls condemned 30 years ago, and it is still standing.

De Villiers, C.J., said he had been past Isaacs' premises. He found that the defendants had put up a skyscraper. Was it to be expected that the plaintiff would not ultimately have erected a high building on his adjacent site.

Sir H. Juta said that he did not know what the plaintiffs' intentions were in regard to the building, but the fact remained that he had been deprived of his premises. The estimate of Mr. Sherwood of £2,900 did not actually cover the full extent of building that would have to be reinstated. Then the plaintiffs had lost the use of these premises for nine months, and it was not attempted to be gainsaid that the rental value was £150 a month. There was also the removal of stock to Buitenkant-street, and the prospective removal back to Darling-street.

Mr. Searle addressed the Court on the question of whether the defendants were liable. He submitted that this was not a case where the doctrine of lateral support could be applied. Part of this work was actually for the benefit of the plaintiffs. The excavations were continued further down in order to meet plaintiffs' wishes. The defendants did not give a guarantee against damage being done. There was no proof of negligence on the part of the contractors. He maintained that the trench was not open to such an extent as to have materially effected this wall. The mischief it was evident was accountable to exposure of the wall to wind and weather and the discharge of rain water into the passage and its consequent absorption in the ground. The deepest part of the excavation was made for Mr. Wile's own benefit. The mere fact that the contractors might have taken further precautions was not sufficient to charge the defendants with liability. Therefore the plaintiffs were in the same boat with the defendants, and they must have shared the risk. Counsel reviewed the evidence, and submitted that it had not been conclusively shown in what specific respect the contractors had negligently performed the work. Coming to the question of damages, in case the Court should hold that there had been negligence, counsel submitted that the other side had adopted a novel principle in arriving at their assessment. Mr. Wile had never made a claim for loss of business. How he could now bring in the fact that he had lost, as he alleged, £10,000 by this damage to his premises counsel could not understand. No figures had been produced to show what the extent of business was that Mr. Wile was doing in that tumble-down old place in Darling-street. His learned friend (Sir H. Juta), he contended, had no right to say that if the plaintiffs were not entitled to the amount of £2,960 for reinstating the building they were entitled to a large sum for vague loss of business. Counsel read correspondence in support of his contention that the defendants had offered to assist the plaintiffs to repair the damage, and had been refused. The whole thing could have been settled, but the plaintiffs said they must erect the wall again and pay £2,000 for damage to stock. Mr. Masey estimated that £300 or £400 would be sufficient for reinstating the wall and repairing the roof and so forth. He (Mr. Searle) thought that that sum would be quite enough to allow the plaintiffs. As to the alleged damage to stock, he submitted that the estimate of £750 was of the most random description. There was no proof of that item, and it should be wiped out altogether. The expense of taking down the fixtures seemed to be a legitimate claim. With regard to the claim for rent, it had not been shown that the plaintiffs had lost any rent by having to remove to Buitenkant-street. If they had any loss at all it would be by the diminution of business through being in Buitenkant-street. Plaintiffs had taken their goods to premises which had not been bearing rent and upon which they had no rent to pay. Counsel also urged that the item of £157 for removal of stock back to Darling-street should not be allowed.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, said his learned friend had no right to say that the plaintiffs refused the defendants' offer. The plaintiffs made no refusal. Mr. Wile was not going to re-build when this mishap occurred. If he had wanted to rebuild there was nothing to prevent him rebuilding at that time. He submitted that the items, as long as they were not absolutely new, were quite right and proper, and as long as the other side were not taken by surprise. The thing had altered somewhat after the summons was issued, and plaintiffs' business had suffered far more than at first it was thought it would. Counsel contended that £150 a month was a reasonable estimate of the rental of premises in such a position.

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with the counsel for the defendants that the wall now in question was in a very precarious condition at an early stage of the building operations. The first danger, the first real danger, began when part of this wall was broken down at the back, because, being a very old wall, it required all the support that it could possibly have, and losing part of that support from the wall, that was the first contribution towards its ultimate fall. The next step in the building operations which conduced to the final collapse was, in my opinion, the digging of the pits. They were dug at a considerable depth below the foundation of the old wall, and they must have conduced towards the many additional cracks which appeared in this old wall. But the final cause of this collapse was, in my opinion, the making of these trenches in the manner in which they were constructed. But it is admitted that the wall was in a very precarious condition, and that they knew it. Well, the fact of their knowledge of the dangerous condition of the wall imposed upon them the duty of using every precaution to prevent the final collapse of the wall. In my opinion, if the trenches had been properly constructed, the wall might still have been shored up, and saved from collapse, and might perhaps have been restored to the condition in which it had been before. But, these trenches being at a greater depth than the bottom of the foundation, the natural result was that the soil, which, in that neighbourhood, seems to be of a treacherous character, oozed away from underneath the foundations, and escaped into the trenches. If the trenches had been made in smaller sections, and filled up as the sections were completed, the oozing would have been less, and the wall would probably have been saved, and therefore, in my opinion, it is the want of due precaution on the part of the defendants in preventing this oozing of the soil contributed to the fall of the wall. There was, in my opinion, a want of due precaution, and, therefore, negligence on the part of the defendants in the construction, which renders them liable for the damage done to the plaintiffs. The more difficult question seems to me the question as to the measure of damages to be applied. I cannot lose sight of the fact that the building was a very old building, not built for business purpose at all, but built for a dwelling-house; that it was in a precarious condition; at all events, the wall was, before these works began; and the plaintiffs will ultimately derive great benefit from the party wall constructed by the defendants, and in the ordinary course of events it is extremely probable that the plaintiffs would not have long retained their building in the condition in which it was. The fact that they made this stipulation that the wall should be a party wall, and that the basement should be of sufficient depth to be able to be utilised by them, shows what was passing in their minds, that they had already desired to take advantage of the building of this wall for the purpose of placing a building of greater height, if not of the same size as the buildings of the defendants, on the same site as their (the plaintiffs'), building stood on before. This site is certainly one of the best in Cape Town, and one can hardly believe that it would have been possible for the plaintiffs to have long continued to occupy the premises in the condition in which they were. The walls, I do not think, would have lasted very long. It is difficult to say when they would have come down, but I am satisfied from the evidence and from the photographs which have been put in that the condition of the wall was very precarious. It appears to me that the witnesses for the defendants have given their evidence very fairly, and especially Mr. Preston, in regard to what he said as to the condition of the premises. They certainly seem to have been in a very dilapidated condition, but then he (Mr. Preston) admitted that the works constructed by the defendants did contribute to the collapse. He candidly acknowledged that, and, having admitted that, I am prepared to attach considerable weight to the rest of his evidence, in which he states what the condition of the plaintiffs' own premises was, and I am satisfied that the condition was such that they would not for any length of time have continued to occupy their premises in the condition in which they were. Well, in that view of the case, it is impossible for the Court to give the heavy damages which have been asked for. I think the Court should confine itself to actual losses; of course there must be a liberal estimate, but beyond that I am not inclined to go. I think that the plaintiffs will never re-build the wall; the buildings are such that it is extremely unlikely that they would have occupied them in any case in their former condition, and they will derive great benefit from the party wall which has been constructed. But there should be a liberal estimate of actual losses. Well, we have the evidence of two gentlemen who examined the stock, and Mr. Dunn said that he and his colleague put the loss at £750.

No doubt his evidence is open to the observation that he did not give particulars. At the same time, he is an experienced man, and he could, by two hours of inspection of the premises and of the articles which he found to be injured arrive at a pretty fair estimate of what the damages were. He estimated them at £750. Then there is also the cost of removing the goods to Buitenkant-street and the cost of removing them back again to Darling-street. I think those items should be allowed, and also the item of £130 for taking down fixtures and refitting. That would make a sum of £1,195. As to the other claims, for the reasons I have stated I am not prepared to allow them. I do not think it would be right, just, or equitable to allow any further damage. As to the rent, well, there was no rent to be paid by the plaintiffs for the store in Buitenkant-street, and if the plaintiffs had rebuilt their store they would have been in the same position, because they would have had to remove to other premises and to have either hired premises elsewhere or go to the Buitenkant-street premises. I am not inclined, therefore, to say that £1,300 should be allowed for rent. The sum of £1,200, in my opinion, would be a fair estimate of the real damage done to the plaintiffs, and for that amount the Court will give judgment (£1,200) and costs.

CRANFORD V. CRANFORD. { 1904.
Mar. 7th.

Mr. Buchanan (for the plaintiff, Mrs. Cranford) applied for leave to sue her husband in forma pauperis for judicial separation. Counsel said that the parties were married at Simon's Town in 1894, and there were three children of the marriage. They were married in community of property, and lived happily together until 1898. Since then the defendant had cruelly ill-treated the applicant, and since 1903 had not contributed anything towards her support. The husband was a clerk in the Harbour Board, and earned £4 10s. per week.

The applicant, in reply to his lordship, said that her husband had struck her on several occasions. He earned £4 10s. a week, but he had given her nothing since September, and had stopped her getting goods on credit.

Subject to counsel producing a certificate of probatis causa, a rule nisi was granted, calling upon the applicant to show cause why he should not be sued in forma pauperis, the rule to be returnable on the 12th March.

REX V. JAFFA. { 1904.

Natives—Private location - Lease
—Act 30 of 1899.

The accused had housed a considerable number of natives on his property. He was not their employer and had not taken out a licence under Act 30 of 1899 for a private location. Several groups of these natives hired, on lease, certain specified rooms, at a monthly rental of £11 5s., for each group. The Magistrate held that these leases were not bona fide, and convicted the accused.

Held on appeal, that as the accused (now appellant) had kept within the letter of the law, the conviction must be quashed.

This was an appeal against a decision of the A.R.M. of Port Elizabeth, by which the appellant was fined in £25 for not taking out a licence for a private location as required by Act 80, of 1889.

From the record it appeared that the appellant was the owner of certain lands in the district of Port Elizabeth. He was charged with contravening section 3 of Act 30 of 1899, in that, between June, 1903, and November, 1903, he wrongfully and unlawfully failed to take out a licence as by law required. Evidence was given for the Crown to the effect that no licence had been issued to the accused, and that 120 male adult natives were living on his property. They did not work on the farm, but had employment in different stores throughout the town. The native evidence called showed that a lease existed between nine of them, and the appellant, by which they agreed to pay a total amount of £11 5s. per month rental, and should eight of them leave the remaining one to make good all the rental to the lessor. The Magistrate held that the lease was not bona fide as required by the Act, and found the accused guilty. The original lease was not produced, and the Magistrate was of opinion that the document would not be a bona fide lease, but that it was drawn up to evade the law, and would not exempt the accused from taking out a licence. Mr. Schriener, K.C. (for the appellant), contended that the idea of the law seemed to be that where there was danger from a congregation of natives it was necessary to take out a licence. The Court would have to determine whether or not there was a bona fide written lease. It was perfectly clear that the owner, in drawing up the lease, had the 10th section of the Act in view. The rental was in accordance with what was required by the 10th section, and as long as there was genuine payment of the amount of money stipulated for, that made the lease bona fide.

Mr. Howel Jones (for the Crown), pointed out that the 5th section limited the occupation to 40 male adults in a private location. The onus of proving that he was exempted from taking out a licence lay upon the appellant. There was no lease put in, and if the appellant relied on the 10th section the onus was on him to produce it. Section 2 laid it down that if any two or more native adults joined in any written bona fide lease they should not be subjected to the provisions of the Act in respect of the payment of licence fees, and hut tax, but it did not exempt the owner from taking out a licence, because the inspector must satisfy himself as to the number of persons on the lease, and the 3rd section distinctly laid down that a licence must be taken out. There was no evidence before the Court to establish a bona fide written lease.

Curr. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 9th).

Hopley, J.: This is an appeal from a conviction of the appellant by the Acting Assistant R.M. of Port Elizabeth on the 6th of January last, for contravening section 3, of the Native Locations

Amendment Act, No 30 of 1899. The evidence in the case has not been very well taken, and it would have been well if the production of the original lease or leases had been insisted on; but there seems to be no reason to doubt the accuracy of the facts as found by the Magistrate. The appellant, it appears, is the owner of lot 26 in the village of Korsten, near Port Elizabeth, beyond the Municipal boundaries of that town, and not subject to the jurisdiction of any municipality or Village Board of Management. Upon the said lot he has erected sufficient dwellings to house, and he does so accommodate, about one hundred and twenty native males (and presumably the families of such of them as have any). These natives seem to be labourers working in the town of Port Elizabeth, where they earn substantial and regular wages. They go to their work in the morning, and at night return to their suburban dwellings at Korsten. The appellant has taken out no licence for a private location, contending that upon a proper interpretation of the terms of the Act, and especially of Section 10 thereof he is exempted from so doing. The modus operandi of the appellant seems to have been to divide his tenants into groups of nine, and to enter into a lease with each group, in which he lets, and the nine "jointly hire" certain specified rooms, part of his buildings, for one year, at a monthly rental of £11 5s. The lessor is responsible for rates and taxes, and the lessees may not sublet or assign without his written leave. There is a clause authorising the lessor to cancel the lease forthwith on non-payment of rent, and to eject the lessees; and also a provision whereby the lease shall, ipso facto, cease, and the tenants be obliged to quit the premises, in case it should be judicially decided that the lease is an infringement or contravention of the Location Act No. 30 of 1899, or any other Act of Parliament. It will thus be seen that each group of nine is responsible to the lessor for £135 per annum, and in practice it amounts to each individual member of the group paying his share, viz., 25s. a month, to one of their number, who then hands the whole £11 5s. over every month to the lessor. The leases are in writing, and each individual tenant has, as I gather from the evidence, a copy handed to him, and one of such copies was produced, and forms part of the record. It is clear that the terms of Act 30, 1899, have been carefully studied, and that the appellant has made his calculations so as to endeavour to secure for himself exemption from licence fees and hut tax under section 10 of the Act. Section 2 thereof defines a private location to be any number of dwellings or huts on private property, occupied by one or more native male adults, such occupants not being in the employ of the owner or occupier of the land. It is, therefore, clear that, unless there is something in the Act to modify this provision, the appellant has set up a private location at Korsten, and rendered himself liable to the penalties for not taking out a licence as prescribed by the Act. Section 10, however, provides that "Any two or more native male adults joined in any bona fide written lease, and paying in cash a rental amounting to £48, or upwards, in the case of two such lessees, and no less than an additional £12 each for any greater number of lessees. . . . shall not be subject to the provisions of this Act in respect of the payment of licence-fees and hut-tax." On the basis fixed by this section it seems clear that 9 native males joined in a bona fide written lease, and paying in cash £132 per annum as rental, would be exempt from payment of licence fees under the Act. On the basis fixed by the appellant his nine tenants, under each of his leases, pay him £135 per annum as rental. There has, therefore, been an apparent compliance with the demands of the law to procure the exemption which the appellant claims; but the Magistrate has found that the leases are not bona fide, "as they were drawn up probably with a view to evading the provisions of the law," and on that ground he found the accused guilty. It must, however, be borne in mind, that the restrictions imposed by the Act upon the use of his land by an owner, are in themselves infringements on and limitations of the liberty of such owner to do what he likes with his property, provided he does nothing harmful to the community, or immoral: and it seems to me that if the Legislature has left the Law in such a state that a landlord by following with care the requirements of a particular section of the restrictive law can gain exemption from of its restrictions, he is entitled to do so. That seems to be what that present applicant has done. Moreover, I am not sure that the Legislature did not contemplate the possibility of what has occurred in this case, and purposely keep open a way by which a number of industrious natives willing to pay substantial rents should not be debarred from becoming tenants to a landlord without his having to licence himself as the keeper of a private location. That seems to be the plain meaning of the 10th section, and if the course adopted by the owner of the land in this case is objectionable, it is a matter for the Legislature to remedy. I think that the appeal should be allowed.

REX V. TOOCH.

Liquor licence — Evidence of "Trap" — Irregular procedure.

T. had been convicted of selling liquor after hours on the evidence of a native "trap" and two policemen. There were certain discrepancies in their evidence, which was contradicted by that of disinterested witnesses. The Magistrate refused to compel the trap to answer an important question.

Held, that the proceedings must be quashed.

This was an appeal against a decision of the R.M. for the district of Oudtshoorn, in which the appellant was fined £7 10s. for contravening sub-section 7, of section 73, of Act 28, of 1883, in that he wrongfully and unlawfully kept his premises open for the sale of liquor during the time that he was not so authorised by his licence.

This case was set down as an appeal, but was really in the nature of a review on account of gross irregularity in the conduct of the case in the Court below, because the R.M. did not compel a witness to answer an important question, and that the judgment was wholly against the weight of evidence. The evidence for the prosecution showed that two policemen called at the house of one McKenzie on the 13th November last. McKenzie offered them a drink, and when he found he had none in the house, he suggested that the troopers should accompany him to the accused's hotel. The constables saw some one with a light go into the bar about 10.25 p.m., and shortly afterwards McKenzie returned with three bottles of liquor. McKenzie gave the time of his return as 10.15 p.m. The bar should close at 9 p.m. The note handed to him, which was sent by a boy that morning, to supply him with three bottles of liquor, was written by him, but he refused to answer a question on cross-examination as to how he disposed of the brandy. He denied that the liquor was given in pursuance of that note, and that Vanenberg was in the bar at 8.20 p.m., when he got the liquor. The Head Constable put in the hours of the licence, which were: 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., from 1st April to the 30th September, 1903, and from 1st October, 1903, to the 31st March, 1904, 7 a.m. to 9 p.m., with an extension to midnight for bona fide travellers, and Sunday privileges. For the defence the post-cart driver Vanenberg, a man named Griffiths, a passenger by the cart, Miss

Adams, and other witnesses, fixed the time of McKenzie's appearance in the bar at between 8.20 and 8.30 p.m. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the appellant), contended that the whole proceedings should be set aside on the ground of gross irregularity in conducting the case. Here was a man who upon his own showing, or, at any rate, upon the showing of the two police-constables, was prepared to trap Toooh, and his denial of it was at once discreditable. Surely it was necessary to test whether the statement on oath was true as to whether he had that morning sent for two bottles of brandy, and one bottle of whisky? If that evidence broke down, there was absolutely nothing on which to convict. There was nothing to discredit Vanenberg's evidence that within a short time of his arrival he was in the bar with McKenzie. If Vanenberg's statement was true, then the whole of the prosecution failed, and his evidence was substantiated by another disinterested witness, Miss Adams. McKenzie might have hung about for a long time, and the police might have assumed that the liquor was purchased when they met him. The verdict was entirely against the weight of evidence. Counsel quoted the case of Rex v. Dam (3 Juta 63), on a technical point, the conviction in which was quashed on appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Nightingale (for the Crown), contended that even had McKenzie answered the question it would have been impossible for the defence to bring rebutting evidence on that point. The elementary facts in the case were that the Magistrate believed the evidence of the two policemen, that when they walked two and a half miles from McKenzie's house to the hotel it was 10.20 p.m., and he submitted that any irregularity that might be held to have occurred in the proceedings could not in the least affect the case. The notes were brought forward by the defence, but did not affect the elementary basis of the case. The second note from McKenzie that was produced Jackson discovered in the lining of his coat the night before the trial, and he did not seem to have told anyone anything about it, and it was difficult to believe that there was not collusion between the witnesses for the defence. If the Court should allow the appeal, it amounted to something like deliberate perjury on the part of the two policemen.

Hopley, J., said that if the Magistrate had had such experience as he had had with trap witnesses, who were sometimes backed up by the evidence of zealous policemen, and had become impregnated with the necessity of safeguarding against injustice, he would probably have come to a different conclusion. At the same time, no one as yet had been able to see any other way of doing justice in such trades as the diamond and liquor trades. Had the case come up before him in review he would probably have asked the Attorney-General's representative to argue before him in court, because of the suspicious circumstances. He did not believe the evidence of the policemen that they did not go down to the hotel with the intention of trapping, and there was the significant fact that they trudged three miles and did not go into the hotel, but walked about outside, which was consistent with the idea that they had gone down from McKenzie's place to trap Toooh, and if that was so they had not been perfectly open in their evidence before the Magistrate. He thought in all these matters there should be the supervision of the higher authorities, as a common policeman should not have such power in his hands as to go and trap without instructions. The whole point in the case, as far as one of the lines of the defence went, was whether or no the liquor, which undoubtedly was obtained on that night, was or was not sold to McKenzie, who was a trap, during a time when the hotel-keeper was not authorised by his licence to sell. On that point there was a great conflict of evidence. On the one hand there were the two policemen without any authority to trap this man, stating that it was after ten o'clock, and undoubtedly they might have been led into making that statement by the fact that the liquor came into their hands after ten o'clock, and the man may have lied to them, and said he just bought it, but, on the other hand, it might be their zeal for promotion that led them into making the statement. There was a conflict of evidence between McKenzie and themselves as to some 15 or 20 minutes, and again their watches may have been wrong. On the other hand, not only interested, but disinterested witnesses state that the bar was closed at the proper time, and that McKenzie was there between 8 and 9 o'clock, and that the liquor was obtained by him at that time. McKenzie admitted having given the note to the boy, and having followed him up to the hotel, and then he refused in cross-examination to answer what he had done with the bottle of brandy. The Magistrate committed an irregularity in not allowing the question to be pressed, and forcing the witness to answer. The second note from McKenzie to the barman when he suggested a bogus defence, showed him to be a man whose word was unreliable, and his evidence as a trap would be most unsafe to act upon, and for these reasons alone it would be quite sufficient to say that the case was not one in which any judge would say that substantial justice had been done. On the technical objection raised as in the case of Rex v. Dam, he thought the case would have broken down, but on the absolutely untrustworthy nature of the evidence and the unsatisfactory way in which the case was conducted, the conviction would be quashed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).

APPEALS.

REX V. BENNING. { 1904.
{ Mar. 10th.

Cape Town Municipality — Licence.

Under the Cape Town Municipal Act the Town Council is empowered to impose a licence duty for any vehicle drawn by any horse or plying for hire or profit.

Held, that a cart and horses used by a building contractor for the purposes of his business are liable to the duty.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting Resident Magistrate, Cape Town, in a case in which the appellant was summoned for and found guilty of contravening section 504 of the Cape Town Municipal Regulations, in that, he being the proprietor of a conveyance, kept and used it within the city of Cape Town, wrongfully and unlawfully, without a licence, as required by the said regulation.

The part of Sec. 504 of the Municipal Regulations framed under Act 26 of 1883, essential to this case, reads as follows:—

"The proprietor of every conveyance drawn by any horse or animal power kept or used within the City of Cape Town for the purpose of, or in connection with any hotel or business of any description, other than conveyances plying for hire on public waggon stands shall annually apply for and obtain from the Corporation a licence etc. . . ."

The evidence in the Court below showed that on October 28th, a cart, admittedly the property of the appellant, with no name or number thereon, laden with sand, was driven along the public street within the Municipal limits. That this sand was to be used in connection with certain buildings which the appellant had contracted to construct, and that the sand cart had frequently been used for similar purposes. The cart was used solely in connection with the appellant's business, and did not ply for hire. The appellant was convicted, and sentenced to pay a fine of £1. Against this conviction he now appealed.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for the appellant), after reading the Municipal Regulations, said the questions were: had the Corporation any power to tax any vehicle or cart when it was not plying for hire or profit, or could they tax any private vehicle or cart? Counsel contended that the Legislature never intended to give the Corporation power to tax private vehicles which were not "plying for hire or profit," and he submitted that the words "hire or profit" governed the words "kept or used." The evidence in the case showed that on the day in question sand was being conveyed to the defendant's private stable for his own private use.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the Town Council) said that the regulations gave power to regulate and supervise the licensing of wagons, carts, and other conveyances; but carriages used solely for private persons would not be in the same category as carts and wagons. The Regulation 390, which provided that the name of the owner should be painted on the cart, showed that it was not wholly a question of revenue, as the name of the owner on the cart facilitated the identification of these conveyances, and the Council should be encouraged in endeavouring to guard against fraud, by putting a reasonable duty on such vehicles.

Sir H. Juta said that these regulations applied to carts which plied for hire. But there were other carts which did not ply for hire. There were no regulations which applied to these carts, unless it were Regulation No. 504.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was not this cart used for profit?]

No it is not used for profit, any more than a private individual having a cart for private purposes keeps it for profit. A man who drives down from the top of the Gardens to Adderley-street to business saves a tram fare, but he does not use his cart for profit.

De Villiers, C.J., said the point was, whether this cart was kept for hire or profit? If a shopkeeper had a cart which he used for conveying his goods to his customers, was he not keeping that cart for profit?

Sir H. Juta: One can hardly say he keeps it for profit; he keeps it really as a means of inducing customers to come. Of course, in a round-about way, everything in that way would be for profit, but he does not keep it for purposes of profit, because the cart may be a loss. I take it that "kept for hire or profit" means a direct monetary profit. I agree that carts used in parcels delivery may be used for profit, though they may not be hired.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is of importance in ascertaining the intention of the Legislature first of all to consider the grammatical meaning of the words actually used. The words of the section are: "For regulating, supervising, and licensing wagons, carts, and other conveyances or vehicles, drawn by any horse, mule, donkey, or ox kept or used within the Municipality, or plying for hire or profit" for which a licence must be paid. The grammatical meaning is that the two portions are separate and distinct. The words "kept or used within the Municipality" are distinct from the words "or plying for hire or profit." It seems to me that the two phrases were intended to be kept quite distinct, and that being so, I think that the Municipality clearly had the power to make the regulation in question. But I am inclined to go further, and hold that, if Sir Henry Juta's construction is correct, and the clause were read, "kept or used within the Municipality for profit," a person who keeps carts for the purposes of his trade as a contractor is using those carts for profit. It is admitted here by Williams that he has been carrying bricks for other people. The cart is used for conveying building material in connection with the defendant's business, which is that of contractor. If, he then, keeps that cart for a profit, I am inclined to think that the case would fall within the section. But it is not necessary to decide that point, because, as I said before, the grammatical construction, in my opinion, is such that the words "for hire or profit" should be confined to the word "plying," and not extended to the words "kept or used within the Municipality." For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

Mr. Schreiner applied for costs.

Sir H. Juta: There are special circumstances in this case to show that the appellant should pay the costs.

Mr. Schreiner: It is important that the Council should not be lightly put to expense such as they have incurred in this case.

De Villiers, C.J.: It does not appear to me that the appeal is in any way frivolous. I think there is a good deal to be said from the point of view of the appellant, and that it is a matter of some public importance. It is to the interests of the Council that this question should be decided. I am not inclined to give costs in this case.

REX V. EASTON.

This was an appeal from a conviction of the Resident Magistrate of Victoria West, who had found the appellant guilty of a contravention of the Police Offences Act, part 1, section 5, par. 5, and imposed a fine.

The accused was charged with letting off fireworks in a public place—to wit, the Public Library at Victoria West—without leave of the public authorities. The appeal was brought on the grounds that there was no clear evidence against the appellant, assuming that the fireworks were let off, and that the leave of the authority had not been obtained, that reasonable doubt existed as to whether the appellant really was the party who let off the fireworks, and of which doubt he should have had the benefit, and also as to whether fireworks actually were let off.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he had read the evidence. The question seemed to him to be one entirely of credibility. The policeman was positive that he saw the accused, and he says that when he spoke to the accused, the latter said, "I'll chuck crackers if I like."

Mr. Searle, K.C., for the appellant. Mr. H. Jones for the Crown.

Mr. Searle said it was a curious thing that only one civilian should have been called for the prosecution, and that the police should all have been strangers to the district. This offence was alleged to have been committed at an entertainment at Victoria West on Christmas Eve and no doubt the elite of Victoria West would be there. There were other cases dependent on this case, and it was agreed that these should stand over until this appeal had been decided. Some people were charged, it seemed, with throwing crackers, and others were charged with resisting the police. Apparently there was considerable feeling in regard to the matter in Victoria West. Counsel urged that it should be borne in mind that it was a dark night when this offence was alleged to have been committed, and that the evidence for the Crown consisted of the testimony of the police, who were in plain clothes, and were strangers to the district, and of a civilian who said he did not see the accused there at all.

Without calling on Mr. Howel Jones,

De Villiers, C.J., said that the question was one of credibility. The police identified the lad as one of those who threw the crackers. It was not possible for the Court to reverse the decision of the Magistrate on a question purely of credibility. A certain number of witnesses were called on one side, and a certain number were called on the other, and there was ample evidence to show who it was that threw the crackers, and the police swore it was the accused. There was no appeal in this case upon the question of law; it was simply a question of fact, and the appeal must be dismissed.

REX V. PAUL.

Act 35 of 1893—Constructive possession—Evidence.

This was an appeal from a conviction of the Resident Magistrate of Molteno. The appellant had been charged with an offence under the Stock and Produce Thefts Act (No. 35 of 1893), and had been found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months with hard labour. The facts sufficiently appear from the judgment and from the arguments of Counsel. Mr. Benjamin appeared for the appellant; Mr. H. Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin said that the accused was charged under Act 35 of 1893. That Act was an extremely stringent one. The only provision in the Act, he would submit, under which the accused really could be charged, was the 28th section. This section required anyone who was or had been in unlawful possession of any stock or produce to give a satisfactory account for such possession, or be deemed guilty of the crime of theft. Counsel submitted there was really no evidence to show that this man had ever been in possession of the stock or produce. A certain portion of a carcass was found, but there was nothing to connect the accused with the theft of the stock. The only evidence against him was that he was seen by a special constable, and detective to go to a certain hole, where there was a portion of a carcass.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They found the stolen property in a hole, and the police went and hid themselves. Shortly afterwards the accused went straight there from his hut, and went into the hole, and when he sees the police coming he gets out of the hole and runs away].

Mr. Benjamin said it was admitted that this was an old slaughter ground. Leading up to the hole were a number of rivines, and the accused said he had gone there to search for his stock.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think they made a great mistake in going at once. They should have waited to see whether the accused took any of the meat. The only point against him is that he seems to have gone away rather hastily from the hole].

Mr. Benjamin submitted that there was nothing more than suspicion against the accused.

Mr. Jones contended that there was sufficient evidence for a jury to have drawn the inference of theft, and that the Magistrate was right in drawing that inference.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that the great mistake seemed to have been on the part of the police in rushing to the hole when the accused went there.

Mr. Jones said that apparently it was not a case of this man going to the hole out of curiosity. He seemed to have gone there of set purpose. Again, the accused actually denied afterwards that he had been in the hole. The stock had been stolen only a few days before.

Mr. Benjamin, having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: The conviction has already been confirmed by a Judge in Chambers, but if it were clearly a case in which the conviction ought to be quashed the previous confirmation would not stand in the way of the present appeal. But, upon the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the Magistrate's judgment should not be disturbed. The evidence shows that the hole in which the stolen property was found was not far from the prisoner's hut. When the police had found the stolen property in the hut, they went to a neighbouring spot, hid themselves there, and watched, on the assumption that the person who went to the hole to fetch the meat would be the one concerned in the theft. And sure enough, they did see the prisoner go direct to the hole, and not only did he go to the hole, but he went into the hole, and when he saw Soamo coming he got out of the hole and ran away. Well, that is very strong evidence that the prisoner went there, knowing that the meat was there, and having placed it there himself, or knowing who had placed it there, with the object of taking the meat. The evidence therefore, of possession, I think, under all the circumstances, is sufficient. The prisoner's own conduct seems to be the worst feature in the case—his running away and his afterwards denying that he had been in the hole, and had run away. Upon that point, the witnesses are all clear, and the Magistrate believed these witnesses, that they saw the prisoner going into the hole, and running away from the hole. He gives the explanation that he went to look for cattle. It seems an extraordinary thing that he should go and look for cattle in a place where it is very difficult even for a man to get in, that a man should expect to find cattle in that hole. The whole of the circumstances of the case seem to show that the prisoner was concerned in the theft, and that the Magistrate was right in finding him guilty, and for these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

SPECIAL CASE.

DE SMIDT V. ESTATE } 1904.
MARTING. } Mar. 10th.

Will—Construction.

The words in a will: "Should any of my children die" refer to the death of such children after the making of the will and not merely to death after the death of the testatrix.

This matter came before the Court for judgment upon a contention by the plaintiff that she was entitled to certain benefits under the will of her late grandmother, Johanna Hendrika Marting (born Bruyne).

The special case was stated in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is Johanna Hendrika de Smidt (born Berghuys), of Cape Town, who is married out of community of property to Jacob Walter Charles de Smidt, by whom she is assisted as far as need be in this action.

2. The defendants are Edward Alfred Thomas, and George William Steytler, in his capacity as secretary to the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company of Cape Town, and they are sued in their capacity as the duly appointed executors testamentary of the will in the estate of the late Johanna Hendrika Marting (born Bruyns), hereinafter called the testatrix.

3. On or about the 2nd day of September, 1886, the testatrix executed the will aforesaid, copy whereof is hereunto annexed, and the parties pray that the said will may be considered as inserted herein.

4. The testatrix died on the 8th day of August, 1903.

5. The testatrix had, as lawful issue born in wedlock, six children, of whom (a) four were alive at the time of her death, namely: (1) Wilhelmina Marting, (2) Johanna Hendrika, married to P. J. P. Vos, (3) Henrietta Johanna Maryna, married to E. A. Thomas, (4) Mary Ann Isabel, married to C. H. Osborne; (b) two were dead at the time of her death, namely: (5) Caspar Hendrik, who died in 1886, before the execution of the will, leaving a son, Frederick William Caspar Marting him surviving, (6) Jacoba Cornelia, who died in July, 1902.

6. The plaintiff is the lawful issue and only surviving child of Jacoba Cornelia, the last-mentioned child of the testatrix, and was born in 1879.

7. The plaintiff lived with and was on very affectionate terms with the testatrix, who was godmother of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff contends that, according to the true construction, meaning, and intent of the will aforesaid, she is entitled to the benefits therein provided for the surviving lawful issue of any child of the testatrix who dies leaving lawful issue; and that she is now entitled to that share of the interest or usufruct of the estate of the testatrix, which her mother, Jacoba Cornelia, would have been entitled to had she been alive at the time of the death of the testatrix, and that upon attaining the age of twenty-six years she, the plaintiff, is and will be entitled to have paid out to her the part or share of the capital sum of the estate upon which she herein claims to be at present entitled to the interest or usufruct as aforesaid.

The defendants contend that they are not justified in paying to the plaintiff, without an order of this Honourable Court, such share of the interest as the plaintiff claims, or any other benefits under the will; but the defendants submit to the judgment of this Honourable Court.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment upon the above contention, or that this Honourable Court may declare the rights, if any, of the plaintiff under the will aforesaid; and they pray that the costs of this action may be directed to come out of the estate of the said testatrix.

Mr. Close, for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin for defendants.

Mr. Close said that the contention of the plaintiff was based upon two words in the will—first of all, the word "surviving," as obviously being intended to apply in regard to the state of facts as existing at the time when the testatrix made the will; and secondly, the word "predeceased," as applied to Caspar Hendrik. He submitted that the intention of the testatrix was clear. Right away through she spoke of how the property must be divided fairly and equally, share and share alike, between the whole of her children. It was clear that the testatrix had no intention to exclude the plaintiff from a share in the estate.

Mr. Benjamin said he was prepared, on behalf of the executors, to submit to the judgment of the Court in this matter. The executors did not think it safe for them to adopt this construction of the will without having the question first determined by the Court. It seemed very clear from the terms of the will that the construction contended for by the plaintiff was the correct one.

De Villiers, C.J.: The will has not been very artistically drawn, but upon the whole the intention of the testatrix seems to me to be reasonably clear. She intended to provide for her children but I think that she also intended to provide for her grandchildren, in case any of her children should die during her lifetime. She has not expressed her meaning very clearly, but I think she endeavoured to give expression to her meaning in the following words: "Should any of my children die, and leave any lawful issue, their share of the usufruct or interest of my estate shall then devolve to and upon their surviving children, born in lawful wedlock, and shall continue to be paid," and so on. Well, those words, "Should any of my children die," seem to me to refer to any children who might die after the date of the will. It should not be necessarily confined, having regard to all the provisions of this will, to children who die after the death of the testatrix. Bearing in mind especially that in cases of doubt there is every presumption in favour of the testatrix intending to provide not only for the children, but for those who were still more in need of provision, viz., the young children of her children. I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court must be in terms of the plaintiff's contention. The costs will come out of the estate.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

KILGOUR V. SONNENBERG. { 1904.
 { Mar. 10th.
Engineer—Plans—Fees.

This was an action brought by George Kilgour, civil engineer, Cape Town, against Charles Sonnenberg, also of Cape Town, to recover the sum of £100 damages for breach of contract.

The declaration set out that in June, 1903, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement whereby the plaintiff agreed to prepare and supply proper plans for the sub-division of the estate Schoone Kloof, on the Lion's Rump, Cape Town, and such plans as would meet the lawful requirements of the Cape Town Council. The defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff £105 for such plans. Plaintiff did prepare and supply proper plans, such as would meet with the requirements of the Council. He received from the defendant the sum of £5, and defendant undertook to pay the balance of £100. In the alternative, the plaintiff said that the plans had not been submitted to the Town Council, and if they did not meet the requirements of the Council, he was, and always had been, ready and willing to amend them to satisfy such requirements. The defendant refused to submit the plans to the Town Council. By reason of the said breach of contract, the plaintiff said he had sustained damages in the sum of £100, and he prayed for judgment for £100, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

The defendant, in his plea, said that before the agreement was entered into between the parties, certain plans for the sub-division of the land in question had been prepared for the former owner, Mr. McGregor. These plans were submitted by Mr. McGregor to the Town Council, and were rejected as unsuitable and impracticable. The agreement between plaintiff and defendant was that the plaintiff should frame suitable and practicable plans, which would meet the requirements of the Town Council. The plans framed by plaintiff were practically the same as those prepared for the said McGregor. The sum of £5 was deposited by defendant with plaintiff, conditionally on plaintiff carrying out his part of the said agreement. Plaintiff had failed to fulfil his part of the said agreement. Save as above, defendant denied plaintiff's allegations. Defendant prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs. In reconvention, defendant repeated the above allegations, and prayed that the said deposit of £5 should be paid back to him.

Mr. Gardiner, for plaintiff; Mr. M. De Villiers, for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner, in opening the case, said that Messrs. Sonnenberg and Smith were the owners of this land, Schoone Kloof. At the end of 1901 Mr. Roberts, Government surveyor, prepared plans for Mr. McGregor, who was then owner of the estate. These plans were submitted to the Town Council, and rejected by them. The plans were resubmitted, and again rejected. Mr. McGregor then dropped the matter, and submitted the business to certain surveyors, Messrs. Philips and Anne. They took these plans, and made certain alterations to meet the objections of the Town Council. Messrs. Philips and Anne submitted the plans to the Town Council, but they were again rejected, and no reasons were given. The last rejection of the plans was in November, 1903. Mr. Sonnenberg, after acquiring the estate, employed Mr. Kilgour to frame plans for the sub-dividing of the estate, and promised him 100 guineas. Mr. Kilgour discovered that there were in existence these plans, which had already been submitted and altered by Messrs. Philips and Anne. Mr. Kilgour went to them, and came to a certain arrangement with them. He took these plans; he discovered that it was necessary for these plans to be passed that an agreement should be come to with the military authorities, who, it appeared, were the owners of the Military-road, which was the approach to this property, and that arrangement was afterwards come to. Mr. Kilgour also made inquiries from the Town Council, and discovered what the objections were. The plans had to be submitted, not by the surveyors, but by the owner. Kilgour put the matter in order, and he said that the plans were now ready to be submitted to the Town Council. Mr. Sonnenberg, however, refused to sign the conditions and to submit these plans. Evidence was then called for the plaintiff.

Thomas Nisbett Roberts, Government land surveyor, said that in December, 1901, he received instructions to make plans for the sub-division of the Schoone Kloof estate. He prepared plans, and in December submitted them to the Town Council. The plans were rejected, and afterwards abandoned. The arrangement was that he should receive a lump sum if the plans were got through. He consequently received no payment. The plans were afterwards handed over to Phillips, Aune and Co., by witness. They were not now in the same state as when he handed them over. Sewers were now included in plan No. 1; the passage had been widened. In plan No. 2, retaining walls had been added. Plan No. 3 he believed was entirely new. Plan No. 4 now showed sewer connections. Plan No. 5 he believed was entirely new. The plans, he thought, were such as should meet with the approval of the Town Council; considering the nature of the ground, he did not see how they could be varied. The road had to be zig-zagged, on account of the mountainous character of the ground, so as to get the grade within the limit of 1 in 10.

Cross-examined: The alterations would now meet the requirements of the Council, but his plans were all right but for a trivial improvement.

Wm. Phillips, Government land surveyor, said that he assisted Mr. Roberts in preparing the plans. In February, 1902, Mr. Roberts got disgusted with the plans, and handed them over to witness. He discovered the objections which the Town Council had made, and they were altered twice, and finally rejected without any reason. Mr. Sonnenberg saw the plans in February, 1903, but made no comment at all. In June, 1903, witness, Mr. Kilgour, and Mr. Starkey, jointly corresponded with the Town Council. Finally, the City Engineer requested a duplicate set of plans, which had been forwarded. All the suggestions made by Mr. Roberts to meet the objections of the Town Council had been put on the plan by witness, and his partner, and he thought the plans were the best possible under the conditions.

Cross-examined: Nothing had been done to obviate the objections in the Town Council's letter of August. The plans were perfectly feasible, and it was merely a question of cost to carry them out. The gentleman that called to see the plans he took to Mr. Sonnenberg.

The plaintiff, George Kilgour, M.I.C.E., stated that about June, 1903, he saw Mr. Sonnenberg, who asked him to undertake to provide him with plans to pass the Town Council, and then mentioned the fee of 100 guineas. The defendant said that he had bought the estate from McGregor, but he said nothing about plans being in existence. The plans seemed to him to be as good as they possibly could be. The defendant said, when he saw the plans, "That's exactly what I want." Witness understood that the defendant would sell out as soon as the plans were passed by the Town Council. When witness drew his attention to the necessity of having an agreement with the military, the defendant said that he need not trouble about that, as the Town Council had bought the Military-road. This witness found out to be untrue; in fact, the Town Council officials laughed at him when he mentioned it. Witness arranged with the military authorities, and the defendant paid the first year's rent. He considered the plans suitable and practicable.

Cross-examined: The defendant was to pay 100 guineas when witness drew up plans which would be in accordance with the Town Council's regulations. Before witness saw Phillips, Sonnenberg said that the plans shown him were exactly what he wanted. Since the original plans were submitted, large alterations were made. On August 22 he saw Sonnenberg and Smith, and gave them a copy of the conditions. Witness told them it was no longer an engineering matter. He promised to give a rough estimate of making the roads, but the defendant went away to Kimberley, and on his return Smith and Sonnenberg kept fooling him about. Witness put it down at a rough guess of £100 a site. Unless the defendant put the plans to the test by complying with the conditions laid down, by the Town Council, he could not keep witness out of his money.

Wm. Jeffreys, Assistant City Engineer, said that before submitting plans through the City Engineer to the Public Works Committee, it was his duty to see that they conformed with the regulations of the Council. Provided the conditions enumerated in the Council's letter were carried out, the plans as plans would be submitted to the Council. Before they could be sent to the committee, it was necessary to have the signature of the owner. He did not think a better plan dealing with the particular estate could be made.

Cross-examined: He could not say whether the Council would pass the plan or not.

Robert Bromley, District Inspector of Public Works, stated that the plans, according to the regulations of the Town Council, could not be improved on. He was really surprised at the clever way they had been drawn up.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

The defendant, Charles Sonnenberg, said that he purchased the estate as a joint transaction with Smith in May last. Witness told the plaintiff that he had purchased the property, and said that he would like some portion of the property laid out as a township. The plaintiff was aware that the plans by McGregor, the former owner, had been rejected, and witness asked Kilgour to draw up plans that would pass the Town Council. He told Kilgour to draw up a plan, which was practicable, at less expense than McGregor's. The plaintiff was to give plans different from those of McGregor. He totally denied ever saying to Kilgour that he was not concerned in the cost, and that he intended to sell out. Kilgour showed him McGregor's plans, but he refused to leave them with witness.

Cross-examined: Even if the Town Council passed the plans, he would not have them, as they were too expensive. The first time he saw the original plan he did not know it was McGregor's plan. He did not consult any engineers or surveyors to see whether the work could be done more cheaply.

Re-examined: Had he approved of the plan he would naturally have applied again.

By the Court: He did not send the plans in, because he thought they were impracticable; even if they were passed, he would not be prepared to go on with them on account of the expense.

[Hopley, J.: You seem to be frightened of the cost even if the plans were passed.]

Geo. David Smith said he was defendant's partner in the estate. He saw Mr. Kilgour at their (defendants') office. Mr. Kilgour produced a plan, and witness asked him to leave it, but Kilgour said he could not leave it, as he had borrowed it. Some time afterwards, witness heard Mr. Sonnenberg tell the plaintiff that he wanted a plan that would be feasible, not too expensive, and one that would be approved by the Town Council. On one occasion witness asked Kilgour what he thought would be the probable cost of making the roads. Witness never approved of Kilgour's plans. Kilgour produced a Town Council form for the making of roads. On one side was a diagram showing proposed roads. Witness declined to sign the application. It occurred to him at the time that the roads would mean a very great outlay.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said he thought that Mr. Sonnenberg was mistaken when he said that he told Mr. Kilgour that the plans were to be different to those of McGregor. He might have thought that he had told Mr. Kilgour something of this kind, but it was probable that he was quite mistaken. Now, this was a very difficult piece of ground, and it had to be laid out so that every lot would be reasonably served with a street or a road, and at the same time have sufficient frontage to the various roads as to serve the requirements of the Town Council for sanitary and other purposes. It was, of course, a very intricate problem, and he (the learned judge) did not think that the figure named for the work that the plaintiff would have to do was more than a professional man would earn at work of this sort. Mr. Kilgour got into communication with Mr. Starkey, and then the plans which had previously been prepared by McGregor were brought under his notice. Kilgour's conduct in going and seeing whether he could not utilise McGregor's plans was quite bona fide so long as—as he believed was the case—there was no stipulation between the parties that the plaintiff should not frame plans similar to those of McGregor. It was clear that even then Kilgour had a good deal of work to do in the matter, in seeing the Town Council, and arranging the agreement with the military authorities and other things. Then came the further questions as to whether these plans were feasible, and as inexpensive as possible, and also as to whether they would satisfy the requirements of the Town Council. With regard to the question of feasibility, all the professional witnesses were on one side—the side of the plaintiff. They all thought it was the only feasible way of dealing with a particularly difficult piece of ground. It was clear that it would be impossible upon such ground as this to make a cheap job. It seemed to him, therefore, that the plaintiff had framed a feasible plan, and one that was as inexpensive as possible. The only other question was as to whether the plan was satisfactory to the Town Council. The defendant promised to give the plaintiff every facility to earn this money if he would do his portion of the work. The defendant, however, had not sent his plans in to the Council for approval. It seemed to him that the defendant had found that it would not be a good speculation to convert this land into building lots, and that that was the reason why he had not gone on with the work. Judgment would be given for the plaintiff for £100, as prayed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

APPEALS.

GRUNBERG V. SCHIEFEL- { 1904.
BEIN. { Mar. 11th.

Master and servant—Wrongful dismissal—Magistrate's finding on facts.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. The appellant, Gruneberg, the proprietor of Kamp's Cafe, was the defendant in an action brought by the respondent, an employee at the Adderley-street Cafe, to recover £10 for wrongful dismissal, and £1 12s. wages for twelve days. The plaintiff alleged that on the 13th September, 1903, defendant did wrongfully and unlawfully, and without reasonable and just cause, dismiss the plaintiff from his (defendant's) service. Defendant tendered £1 12s. for wages.

From the notes of evidence, it appeared that the plaintiff had been employed as kitchenman or waiter at Kamp's Cafe at a wage of £4 a month, with board and lodging. He was dismissed at the Plein-street Cafe by Schiller, the manager, who at first declined to explain why, but, later on, informed him that it was because he had made a row. For the defence, evidence was led to show that the plaintiff came to the cafe under the influence of drink, and that he kicked up a row and screamed, with the result that customers went away disgusted. The manager said he dismissed the plaintiff because he made a row.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he did not believe that the plaintiff was drunk, and there was no clear evidence what the row was about, and supposing plaintiff did make a row, was the manager justified in dismissing him? He did not think there was sufficient justification. The Magistrate gave judgment for £9 12s., with costs—the tender of £1 12s. for wages and £8 damages. The Magistrate added: "I may state that I have had some experience of Mr. Schiller in this Court before, and I don't consider him a reliable man."

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for the appellant. Respondent in default.

Mr. Schreiner said that the latter remark, he thought, was prejudicial, and should not have been made. It was difficult to find on what theory the Magistrate had based his judgment.

The case of Haupt v. Debell Bros. (5 H.C. 185) was quoted by the Magistrate, but he (counsel) did not see how that case supported the Magistrate's view. Counsel went on to urge that it was a tacit condition of employment that the plaintiff should not be noisy. Counsel submitted that no action lay against the appellant for wrongful dismissal, and that a real hardship had been done to an employer who had acted quite rightly.

De Villiers, C.J.: If in this case I had to decide the question without the assistance of Magistrate's reasons I confess that I should have been inclined to hold that the evidence is sufficient to show that the dismissal was a rightful one, that the plaintiff was drunk, and that in a drunken state he made a row, which justified the defendant in dismissing him. But the Magistrate, after hearing the evidence, expresses a clear opinion that the man was not drunk, and this, after all, seems to me to be the gravamen of the offence for which the man was dismissed. Well, then, there remains the row. The Magistrate observes that there is nothing to show what the row was about. He does not find that there was a row. The tendency of his remarks seems to be to show that in his opinion there really was no row. What seems to have been passing through the Magistrate's mind was this: that the man might make a row without actually exposing himself to dismissal. The row might be a rightful one; there may be circumstances under which a man is justified in making a row. Well, it is a serious thing for a man to be dismissed from service, and it requires something tangible to justify the Court in holding that the dismissal was a rightful one. It is a slur upon a man to have been dismissed and for the Court to hold that it was a rightful dismissal. Therefore clear evidence is required. That is the view of the Magistrate. He wanted clear proof that there was such misconduct on the part of the plaintiff as justified the defendant in dismissing him. Well, the Magistrate was not satisfied that there was such clear proof of misconduct. After all, the burden of proving the misconduct lay upon the defendant. He had to satisfy the Court of the misconduct, and, as he failed in his proof, I am of opinion that the Magistrate's judgment should not be disturbed.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Friedlander and Du Toit; Respondent in default.]

GACULA V. DICKERSON.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Tabankulu, Native Territories, in an interpleader action. The appellant was the plaintiff in the Court below in an interpleader action in respect of certain oxen and a wagon, the Magistrate gave judgment in favour of the respondent.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the interpleader case rose out of an action between Dickerson and one Henry Konyana, in which the former claimed £78 10s. with interest, in respect of two promissory notes of the amounts of £64 and £14 10s. respectively. The defendant failed to meet the promissory notes. Judgment was given by default for the amount claimed. That was on the 6th August. The messenger of the Court took an indemnity from the plaintiff, holding him harmless in case of execution. A writ of execution was issued, and the property now in dispute was attached. Then the property was claimed by the present appellant, Nomenti, widow of Gacula: and under the circumstances the messenger caused a writ to be issued in an interpleader, setting forth that one red ox and two white oxen and one wagon taken under a writ of execution were claimed by the plaintiff, Nomenti, and that the matter would be determined on the 24th August. The Magistrate then declared the cattle and wagon executable.

The Magistrate in his reasons for judgment, said that the complainant came to Court to show her right to certain cattle and a wagon, seized by the messenger, under writ of attachment. The Court did not consider that the evidence she brought forward was of a very credible nature, women, according to native custom, having nothing to do with business matters, which were for men only, and the only man brought forward being her son-in-law, whose statement that Nomenti bought the oxen, he thought was very doubtful. The admitted facts were that Henry Konyana pledged the oxen, that he lived with Nomenti, and that he used the wagon as his own. All the evidence satisfied him that the property was Konyana's own. The judgment was cattle and wagon declared executable, with costs.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the appellant. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the respondent.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that the reasons given by the Magistrate for his judgment were wholly wrong. He contended that it was clear that these oxen claimed by the complainant were not left for security. The cattle were all the time in Nomenti's possession at her kraal, they were not in Konyana's kraal. The creditors had gone on the assumption that it was Konyana's kraal. All the evidence showed that the property was that of the present claimant. It only appeared that Konyana was using the wagon. Dickerson's man admitted that he simply went on the word of Konyana himself. Dickerson should either have made more inquiries before he gave credit for the grain supplied on Konyana's word, or he should have taken the property, in which case the claimant would have been put on inquiry. The defendant Dickerson did not even call Henry Konyana to give evidence.

Mr. De Villiers said that the sudden disappearance of Konyana had no doubt made the Magistrate very suspicious. Then his sister, with whom he had lived, came forward and claimed the cattle. This would be a very convenient arrangement for the debtor. The Magistrate found that the burden of proof of ownership was on the claimant. Konyana was the only man living in the kraal, and cattle belonging to him would, therefore, be at this kraal. That would make collusion between claimant and Konyana very easy. These white cattle seemed to have been twice pledged by Konyana.

[De Villiers, C. J.: How many cattle has the Magistrate declared executable?]

Mr. De Villiers said he believed two were declared executable. Mr. Dickerson only appeared to have claimed two. The Magistrate found that he could not believe the woman's evidence, because, according to native customs, a woman could not own cattle.

Mr. Buchanan, in replying, submitted that it was perfectly clear that three cattle had been declared executable.

De Villiers, C.J., said it did not appear to him that the summons had been amended, and was limited to two cattle.

Mr. De Villiers said it seemed to have been agreed that there were only two cattle really in dispute, and he gathered that the judgment only applied to two.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would communicate with the Magistrate in the Court below, in order to ascertain whether the summons was finally amended, and whether two or three oxen were declared executable.

CAIRNCROSS V. NORTJE. { 1904.
Mar. 11th.
.. 22nd.

Fixtures—Sale and purchase —
Damages—Quantum minoris— Acceptance—Waiver.

The plaintiff bought a farm from the defendant at a public auction. At the time of the sale there was a kraal on the farm, which admittedly was included in the sale. Inside the kraal was a shed, the roof of which, consisting of corrugated iron sheets, screwed on to rafters, rested in front on poles fixed in the ground, and at the back on the stone wall of the kraal. The shed had been erected by a lessee, who was still in occupation of the farm at the time of the sale, and who removed the shed after the sale, but before transfer. The plaintiff objected to the removal, but he paid the price and accepted transfer on the defendant's promise to put the matter right.

Held, in an action for damages for non-delivery of the sheds, that the action was not one of quanti minoris, and that consequently it was not prescribed in six months.

Held further, that the shed was a fixture forming part of the farm which the defendant, as vendor, was bound to deliver with the farm, and that failing such delivery, the plaintiff was entitled to damages.

Held further, that the acceptance of transfer under the above circumstances did not amount to a waiver of the defendant's right to damages.

The case of Irvine v. Berg (Buch. 1879, p. 183) distinguished.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of the district of Uniondale. The appellant was sued in the Court below by the respondent for damages for breach of contract.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the plaintiff was Henry Frederick Nortje, farmer, district of Uniondale, and the defendant was William Cairncross, a law and general agent, residing at Uniondale. The plaintiff said that in October, 1900, he bought certain properties advertised for sale at public auction by the defendant, the purchase price being £1,440, on the distinct understanding that the properties were sold as they were. The plaintiff said that between the date of sale and January, 1901, certain sheds or kraals erected on the said properties were removed by the former lessee, Thomas Cairncross. Defendant, by this wrongful and unlawful act, had committed a breach of contract by not having delivered the properties to the plaintiff in the same condition and state as they were in at the date of sale, viz., the 6th October, 1900, and he claimed damages in the sum of £20, which sum the defendant refused to pay. The case was heard in November, 1903, and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

At the first hearing, on the 26th November, certain exceptions were taken to the summons. The defendant excepted, in the first place, on the ground that the summons was vague, unsatisfactory, and bad in law. This exception was overruled. The defendant further excepted on the ground of such a long time having elapsed that he could not now produce witnesses vital to his defence. The Court postponed the case until the 30th November for consideration of the exception, and at the adjourned hearing the exception was overruled. The evidence of the plaintiff was to the effect that he bought the farm as it was. The conditions were of the ordinary kind. There was nothing said about the rights of the lessee. Plaintiff found that between the time of becoming purchaser and taking possession on the 6th January, 1901, 98 iron sheetings, 32 wooden poles, and 20 rafters, part and parcel of the said sheds or kraals, had been removed by Thomas Cairncross without the consent and permission of the plaintiff.

The Magistrate's reasons for his judgment were as follows:—

1.—In this case plaintiff (H. F. Nortje) sues defendant (W. Cairncross) for damages to the amount of £20, by reason of failure on the part of the defendant to deliver to plaintiff in the condition which which it was in on the day of sale, 6th October, 1900, a certain farm called "Rietfontein."

2.—Before pleading, written exceptions were put in by defendant's agent (a) that plaintiff basing his claim on certain advertisement and conditions of sale had omitted to serve on defendant a copy of either of the said documents; and (b) that in the event of exception (a) being overruled (and not otherwise) the defendant excepts on the point of prescription.

3.—The exceptions were overruled on the following grounds:

(a.) The summons is one for damages, and the advertisement and conditions of sale are not such documents as contemplated in Act 20 of 1856. Schedule B., Rule 10. They are mere evidence, and the fact that copies of them were not served on defendant did not prejudice him in any way. Shear v. Westminster (9 C.T.R., 1900).

(b.) Plaintiff was perfectly justified in bringing his action within the time he did, as he is not prevented by prescription from doing so.

4.—It was agreed that plaintiff should take possession of the property on January 1st, 1901; but he states in his evidence that he did so on the 6th idem.

5.—Between the dates of the sale and occupation it is alleged that one Tom Cairncross, said to be a lessee of the farm removed certain corrugated iron, spars, poles and lathes, which were affixed to and formed part of a kraal. For these goods damages are claimed.

6.—In evidence, the description of the kraal given is, that its walls were built of stone, that it had two galvanized iron sheds, that sheets of iron laced together rested on the walls of the kraal, and that the poles to which the iron was screwed down at the corners, and at the top and bottom ends were planted in the ground. The Court, therefore considered that the roofs (or sheds, as styled by defendant), were firmly affixed to the stone kraal, and might safely be taken as part and parcel of the kraal, and as a fixture on the farm.

7.—It is contended by defendant that the then lessee of the farm "Rietfontein"—his son Tom Cairncross—had during his tenancy constructed the said sheds, the roofs of the kraal, and that he had a right to remove them at the expiration of his lease. But the court considered that this being so the fact should have been announced at the time of sale, and made known to intending purchasers, and that plaintiff was justified in thinking that he bought with the kraal the sheds which were after date of sale removed by the lessee.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for appellant) said that the plaintiff was really complaining of the action of the tenant, Thomas Cairncross, who had removed the sheetings, etc., and who had actually put them up originally, according to the evidence. That surely showed no cause of action against the defendant. On the merits of the case, it would be found that this property was sold, not including these things that Thomas Cairncross had taken away. The summons (counsel contended) was vague. He also urged that this was either an actio quanti minoris or an actio redhibitoria. If it was an actio redhibitoria it should have been instituted within six months, and if quanti minoris within a year. He relied on the case of Irvine v. Bergh (Buchanan, 1879, p. 183) and Voet (21, 1, 6). On the question of what was removable by a lessee, counsel quoted the case of De Beers Mines v. London and South African Exploration Company (10 Juta, 359). On the question of fixtures passing, he quoted Burgess on Colonial Law. Voet (41, 1, 24), Instit. (2, 1, 29), Dig. (41, 1, 7, 10, and Groen. in loco).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 22nd).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal by the defendant against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Uniondale in an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's failure to deliver a certain farm with the fixtures thereon as they existed at the date of the purchase by the plaintiff from the defendant. The sale took place in October, 1900, and, under the conditions of sale, the price was to be paid in instalments, the first of which was payable on the 1st of January, 1901. At the time of the sale there were some sheds, forming part of kraals, on the farm. These sheds consisted of poles fixed in the ground inside the kraal, with roofs of galvanized iron sheets, screwed on to rafters, which rested at one end on the poles, to which they had been screwed, and at the other end on the stone walls of the kraals. The farm had been let to a lessee, whose lease was to expire on the 1st of January, 1901. It would appear that the sheds had been constructed by the lessee, and that, as between him and the defendant, as lessor, he had the right to remove them before the expiration of the tenancy. The lessee did, in fact, remove the materials of which the sheds were constructed between the date of the sale and the 1st of January, 1901. The plaintiff objected to the removal, but he paid the price, and took possession of the farm on the 6th of January, 1901. He did not, however, acquiesce in the removal of the sheds, but, on the contrary, according to his evidence, he protested to the defendant, who promised that he would make it right. The plaintiff adds that he did not deduct the value of the sheds from the purchase price, as he was promised that the matter would be settled. In November, 1903, he brought his action, and the objection was taken in the Court below that the action, being in the nature of the action quanti minoris had been prescribed. The objection was properly overruled by the Magistrate. There was no question as to defect in the property delivered, nor could such a question have been raised, seeing that the defect, if there were any, did not exist at the date of the sale. As pointed out by Voet (21, 1, 8), the vice or defect, by reason of which relief is sought by this action, must have existed at the time of the sale, for if it arose afterwards the ordinary rule would apply that the risk belongs to the purchaser. In the present case there was no question of a vice or a defect in the property sold, but the question was whether the defendant had delivered the property actually bought by the plaintiff. The sheds certainly formed part of the farm at the time of the sale. It is admitted that the kraals were included in the sale as being part of the immovable property sold to the plaintiff. But the sheds standing inside the kraals were firmly attached to the walls of the kraals at the one end, and to poles fixed in the ground at the other end, and may therefore be fairly considered as having been part and parcel of the kraals (see Voet, 41, 1, 24). There was nothing to indicate to any intending purchaser who inspected the farm before the sale that the structure was not intended for permanent use. As between the defendant and the lessor, the latter may have had the right, upon the principles laid down in De Beers Company v. Exploration Company (10 Juta, 359), to disannex the materials of the sheds before the expiration of his term, but the existence of that right does not prove that the sheds did not form part of the farm. In the very same case it was decided that on the expiration of the lease the owner of the land becomes the owner of all materials then remaining annexed, thus showing that it is only by reason of the relationship of lessor and lessee that the latter has the right during the subsistence of the lease to remove the materials. No such relationship exists between the purchaser of the land and the lessee. It is true that the former is bound to abide by the lease, but he retains the right to recover from the vendor any damages he may have sustained through being kept out of possession of the land by reason of the existence of a lease of which he has no knowledge before he bought. In the same way, if the vendor conceals from him that erections which seemingly form part of that land may be removed by a lessee, the purchaser is clearly entitled to damages if the structure is removed before he obtains possession of the land. The defendant, as vendor, was bound to deliver possession of the sheds with the farm (Voet, 18, 1, 4), unless there was an agreement to the contrary. The plaintiff, if sued for the price, might, by claim in reconvention, have obtained damages for the non-delivery of the sheds. He paid the price, and accepted transfer, but he did so on the defendant's promise to put the matter right, and he cannot be held to have waived his right to damages. The case differs materially from that of Irvine v. Berg (Buch, 1879, p. 183), which was relied on by the defendant's counsel. The question there was whether the purchaser of mealies, after accepting them and dealing with them as his own, could claim damages for breach of warranty of quality. It was held that the purchaser had, under the circumstances, waived his right to claim damages by the actio empti, and that he could not claim by the actio quanti minoris, because the mealies, having been resold at a profit, could not have been worth less than the price. The judgment on this point was rather briefly reported, but its effect was as just stated. In the present case, as the sheds formed part of the land sold, it was the duty of the vendor, either to sell the land subject to the lessee's claim, or to arrange with the lessee that the sheds should be allowed to remain. But the defendant having given no notice to the plaintiff of the lessee's right cannot now escape liability to pay the damages sustained by the plaintiff. The appeal against the judgment awarding £10 as damages must be dismissed with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr Justice HOPLEY.]

BOUCHAILL AND JOHNS V. { 1904.
DRAKE { Mar. 11th.

This was an action to recover £24 12s. 3d. and £1 1s. for work done, and £50 damages for breach of contract.

The declaration set out that the plaintiffs were contractors, and they agreed with the defendant to erect certain ironwork on a building in Parliament-street. Defendant agreed to supply the ironwork, and pay the plaintiffs £1 12s. 6d. per ton for the erection. Plaintiffs had erected a certain portion of the ironwork, and about 31st July, 1903, the defendant refused to allow the plaintiffs to complete the work, and refused to supply the iron.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted the employment of the plaintiffs for the erection of certain ironwork. Plaintiffs had failed to perform the work with diligence, or in a skilful and workmanlike manner, to the satisfaction of the architect. The said employment was terminated by mutual agreement, and the defendant denied that the plaintiffs had sustained any damages.

Mr. Gardiner for plaintiffs; Mr. Benjamin for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner said that the defendants were prepared to pay the amounts claimed for work done, and the only thing that would come before his lordship would be the question of damages.

After certain evidence had been led for the plaintiffs, the case was withdrawn by consent.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1904.
{ Mar. 12th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Stephanus Gabriel Malherbe as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, under Act 30 of 1892, for the admission of Wm. Charles Leonard Hedding as an attorney the applicant being at present an attorney of the Transvaal.

Mr. Gardiner, on behalf of the Law Society, said they took an objection under sub-section (2) that there was no statement that the applicant had served articles for a period of three years immediately preceding the date of his enrolment as an attorney.

Mr. Buchanan said that the applicant had been admitted in the Supreme Court of the Transvaal in 1902. He also read an affidavit by Mr. Bensill, Chief Magistrate of Johannesburg, to the effect that the applicant had served the full term of three years under articles with him as an attorney and notary. Counsel added that there might possibly have been a lapse between the serving of articles and the admission of applicant in consequence of the outbreak of the war.

Mr. Gardiner said that the Law Society did not oppose, but they pointed out this irregularity.

Hopley, J., said that it certainly seemed that the Court should have more definite information.

Mr. Buchanan said he thought the Law Society ought to give some notification beforehand when they intended to oppose applications of this kind.

Hopley, J., said he was of opinion that some notification should be given by the Law Society. The matter would stand over until the 15th April for further information.

Postea, April 21st, the application was granted.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LEVIN AND C. V. SCHIM- { 1904.
PERS. { Mar. 12th.

Mr. Russell moved for a writ of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £56 19s. 6d., and costs, £8 18s. 1d.

Mr. Van Zyl read an affidavit by the respondent, Frederick Schimpers, of Graaff-Reinet, who said that he had made a payment of £15. The balance owing was £50 17s. 7d. The debtor made an offer to pay £2 10s. a month until the debt was discharged.

Mr. Russell read a replying affidavit by the plaintiff, who stated that he should not have supplied the goods had he not supposed that the defendant was J. F. Schimpers. The order was written on a printed form of J. F. Schimpers, and it appears that the defendant was J. F. Schimpers's son.

[Hopley, J.: It rather appears as if there had been some underhand work.]

Mr. Van Zyl said they had had no time to prepare and file an answering affidavit. He applied for a postponement.

Hopley, J., said he proposed to grant a writ, to be suspended on payment of £5 a month.

Mr. Van Zyl said that he did not think the defendant would be able to pay £5 a month. He had a letter in his possession, which gave some important information as to the debtor's position, but, of course, he could not put that in, and he would have to obtain an affidavit.

Mr. Russell said they consented to the letter being put in.

Mr. Van Zyl read a letter, written by Mr. Nezer, auctioneer, Graaff-Reinet, who stated that the defendant possessed practically nothing, and had a wife and four children. The offer of £2 10s. per month which the debtor had made would have to be raised by his friends.

A writ of civil imprisonment was granted, to be suspended on payment of £3 a month, first payment to be made on the 1st April, leave being given to plaintiff to apply again.

PEDERSEN V. KENNEDY.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £350. The matter, he said, had been before the Court before: the defendant then stating that he gave a second note, and that this had not been returned to him. Counsel put in an affidavit showing that the second note had been returned to the defendant.

The defendant appeared and denied that the note had ever been returned to him.

Mr. Russell then read the affidavit of Carl Robert Temple, of Observatory-road, one of the endorsers of the promissory note for £350, which set out that the second note was handed back to the defendant in his place of business, and he was told that it was no good without Hopper's signature.

The defendant said that the affidavit was absolutely false. The note was never handed back to him. It was not due until the 27th inst., and by that time he would probably be able to meet his liabilities.

Hopley, J., said that, in all probability, the defendant was more likely to be wronged than otherwise at the present stage. Provisional sentence would be granted, but it would be suspended as a matter of indulgence until the 27th inst.

GARLICK V. VINK AND CO.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

GARLICK AND OTHERS V. KULMAN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Final order granted.

SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES V. SCHIPPERS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence under a lease, and for judgment under Rule 329d, for £165 4s. 8d.

Order granted.

BISSET V. PHILLIPS AND ROUTLEDGE

Mr. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £161 16s. 9d., with interest and costs, and for property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

SOUTH AFRICAN PRODUCE, WINE AND BRANDY CO. V. NORMAN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £190 10s. 1d. and costs.

Order granted.

BEYER V. VAN DER LITH.

This was an application for a writ of civil imprisonment. Defendant appeared, but the plaintiff was not represented.

Hopley, J., said he could not order the defendant to be kept indefinitely in custody for the benefit of the plaintiff, who did not choose to appear.

Defendant said he owed the money.

Hopley, J., said that he did not see how he could enter judgment without an application by plaintiff. The writ would be discharged.

INSOLVENT ESTATE LITTON V. BOAS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for the plaintiff) said that this matter was standing over for the replying affidavit of the plaintiff. He moved for provisional sentence on a certain I.O.U. dated the 3rd July, 1901, given to one Litton, who was now insolvent, and whose trustee brought the present application.

Mr. Benjamin read the answering affidavit of the defendant, which set out that in July, 1901, he gave Thomas Albert Lyttle an I.O.U. for £35, and in satisfaction thereof he gave Lyttle goods to the value of £35. After repeated applications, Lyttle said that the document had been destroyed, and in receipt for the goods he signed a paper which cancelled the I.O.U.

Mr. Buchanan read the affidavit of Thomas Albert Lyttle, which set out that the sum of £35 had been lent twice, and that the first I.O.U. was still due. A further affidavit was put in from David Lyttle corroborating the existence of two I.O.U.'s for the sum of £35.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the matter should be decided in the principal case.

Hopley, J., said he thought provisional sentence should be granted. He could not see the object of the insolvent perjurying himself by stating that the note was still outstanding, and he was further backed up by another deponent. Provisional sentence would be granted with costs.

DURANT AND CO. V. POOLE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on certain four bills of exchange of the following amounts, viz., £81 15s. 3d., £28 6s., £14 12s. 9d., and £20 4s. 3d., with interest from due dates.

Order granted.

TOWNSEND V. STEPHAN.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £110, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. MILBORROW.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for provisional sentence of £480 upon a certain agreement of lease.

[Hopley, J.: Is the rent of a diamond mine?]

Mr. Jones: That is so.

Order granted.

LAWRENCE AND CO. AND OTHERS V. SWATT AND RODMAN.

Dr. Greer moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Final order granted.

MAXWELL AND EARP AND OTHERS V. BLUMBERG.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. MATZ AND LEVY.

Mr. Pyemont moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

Mr. Pyemont also applied, on behalf of the South African Milling Co. and B. Lawrence and Co., creditors in the said estate, for the appointment of Mr. Thomas Herbert Hazell as provisional trustee, with power to sell the store. The debtors carried on business at Plumstead.

Order granted as prayed.

JOSEPH V. LE ROUX.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £350, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

WAKELING AND CUNNINGHAM V. SALONIKA.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence upon certain conditions of sale for £154 13s., with interest and costs, the amount having become due by reason of non-payment of instalments.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. { 1904.
JACOBS AND CO. { Mar. 12th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £22 11s. 9d., balance due to the plaintiffs by the defendant for work done, money advanced, and interest.

Order granted.

WILSON V. PHIPP.

Mr. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £99 1s., balance of account, together with interest a tempore mora, and costs.

Order granted.

CROYDON BRICK CO. V. HAYWARD.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £24, goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore mora, and costs.

Order granted.

LEWIN AND HOTZ V. LUNTZ AND NURIK.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the defendants to apply to have judgment signed against the plaintiffs for not filing his declaration against them in the next term after the summons. Plaintiff was barred on the 7th March. The declaration should have been filed in the February term.

Judgment was given, with costs, and costs of the present application.

LIEBENBERG V. LIEBENBERG.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, in terms of the plaintiff's declaration, the defendant having been barred from pleading. The plaintiff had been subjected to cruelty by the defendant, and a deed of separation was formerly entered into. Plaintiff now prayed for a decree of judicial separation, and division of the joint estate. The defendant had signed a consent paper.

Hopley, J., said this seemed to him to be a novel method of obtaining a judicial separation.

Mr. Russell said that a similar case came before the Chief Justice on the 15th December last, when in Burslem v. Burslem a decree was granted under Rule 329e. (13 C.T.R. 1200).

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

SPILHAUS AND CO. V. VICKAR BROS. AND ARONOVITZ.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £145 13s. 10d., goods sold and delivered, interest, and costs.

Order granted.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. FRIEDMAN.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £18 8s. 9d., for water supply and balance of rates, and costs, less costs already paid.

Order granted as prayed.

HENDRICKS V. WOOD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £2,100, being balance of purchase price of certain lots of land, together with interest and costs of suit, the plaintiff tendering transfer.

Order granted in terms of prayers 2, 3, and 4.

GENERAL MOTION.

WATSON AND CO. V. WIENER AND CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, as a matter of urgency, for the arrest of certain goods as security for rent. The plaintiffs let to the respondents certain premises in Loop-street, Cape Town, and a sum of £9 15s. was now owing for rent. Goods and effects had been removed from the premises, and were now lying at the Cape Town Railway Station for consignment to Pretoria and Johannesburg. Applicants asked for an order for the arrest of the goods, pending an action.

A rule nisi was granted, to operate as a temporary interdict, and to be returnable on the 15th April.

RAFFAELE AND BELLANTONE V. BINDEMANN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £25 5s., together with taxed costs. Counsel put in certified copy of judgment and the return of nulla bona. The matter arose out of an action tried by His Lordship for the recovery of £25 5s., balance of a certain deposit made with the defendant by way of security in connection with the prosecution of one of the plaintiffs (14 C.T.R. 176).

Defendant offered to pay £3 a month. He said he made the offer to the plaintiffs' attorney before the summons was issued.

Mr. Benjamin said that when the action was before the Court, defendant represented that he was earning large sums of money.

Defendant said that he only occasionally had large cases. Business was very bad in their line.

A decree was granted, to be suspended on payment of £3 a month until the debt and costs had been discharged, the first instalment to be paid on the 1st April.

ESTATE SLINTER V. PIENNAAR.

Mr. Gardiner said the original intention had been to move for a decree of perpetual silence. Defendant had written stating that he had a claim against the estate, and the trustees considered that he ought to have sent in the nature of his claim months ago. Defendant had now, however, taken out a summons in response to this application, and plaintiffs simply claimed costs in the present suit. The plaintiff had been compelled to take action on account of the great delay in the statement of defendants' claim, and it would be hard upon them if they had to pay the costs in the present suit.

De Villiers, C.J.: It would be rather hard also upon defendant if he had a good case to pay the present costs.

The question of costs will, therefore, stand over till the defendant's action shall be heard.

Water—Weir—Reference to District Water Court.

This was a motion to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the defendants from interfering with a weir which plaintiffs had constructed in the Breede River, in the Robertson district, under arrangements with their predecessors in title. The petition set forth that respondent, in cleaning out a furrow in the river bed which they stated belonged to them, broke into petitioners' weir, and thereby prevented the water getting into their furrow. Respondents denied that they interfered with petitioner's property at all, and stated that they had a perfect right to the furrow in the river bed. Their weir was lower down the river than petitioners.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the applicants, and Mr. Benjamin for the respondents.

Mr. Jones argued that this was a case of spoliation, and that the respondent should be ordered to restore the weir to its previous condition. Mr. Benjamin was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment, said he thought that an action should be brought by the applicant. He could not assume that the respondent had been acting wrongly—it was possible he might have been—but he could not assume that he had on the conflicting testimony before him. The weir might have been put there by the applicants, but it did not appear that it was on their own land; there was no evidence that it was upon their own land. The mere fact that it was placed there did not settle the question of spoliation. It was really a question between the riparian proprietors as to whether one had taken more than a reasonable share. If he were to give any expression of opinion now, he might prejudice the matter. There would be no order, the applicants to proceed by action, and the costs of the present application to be costs in the cause.

Mr. Benjamin said he thought this was a matter that the Court might appropriately have referred to the water court which had been established in the district.

Mr. Jones said he thought their attitude was that they did not want to waste costs, and he felt almost certain that his clients would be prepared to come to any arrangement before bringing the matter into Court again.

Mr. Benjamin said that, if the parties consented, the matter could be referred to the Water Court, under the 16th section of the Act 40 of 1899.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you both agree that the matter should be referred to the Water Court?]

Mr. Jones said that that was so.

De Villiers, C.J.: There will be no order, then, except that the dispute be referred to the Water Court in terms of the Act 40 of 1899, the question of costs of this application to be also referred to the Water Court.

Licensing Court—Withdrawal of application for renewal of licence.

The holder of a licence lodged an application for its renewal with the Magistrate in manner provided by the 42nd section of Act 28 of 1883. An application was made for the sequestration of his estate, and within an hour before the order of sequestration was made he withdrew his application for renewal. A curator bonis was appointed to his estate, who at the sitting of the Licensing Court on the following day applied for the renewal of the licence. The presiding Magistrate ruled, that as the holder of the licence had withdrawn the application, his curator bonis had no locus standi.

Held, that as the holder had withdrawn his application, with the view of defeating the rights of his creditors, his curator bonis should be allowed to revive the application, and that for that purpose the Licensing Court should be authorized to hold a fresh meeting.

This was a motion on the petition of one Gother Mann, curator bonis in the estate of George Alfred Moss, of the Cafe Royal, Cape Town, for a review of the proceedings of a certain Licensing Court. The matter arose out of a ruling by the Acting Resident Magistrate of the Cape, who was president of the Licensing Court. The point was this: An application having been made by one George Alfred Moss, who was the lessee of the Cafe Royal and holder of the licence, for the renewal of the licence, he afterwards got into great difficulties, which eventually came to an acute stage, until an application was at length made for the sequestration of his estate. On the very day when the application for provisional sequestration was made, and about an hour before the application came before a judge sitting in Chambers, the insolvent wrote to the Magistrate saying that he withdrew "is application for the renewal of the licence. Then, on the following day, when the curator bonis appeared before the Licensing Court, to apply for the renewal of the licence, the President ruled that there was nothing before the Court and that the application of the curator bonis for renewal could not be considered. The petitioner claimed that that was not regular, and that the President was in error.

The petition of Gother Mann, the curator bonis, stated that the application for the provisional order for sequestration of Moss' estate was made at 4 p.m. on the 1st March, upon the petition of Messrs. Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co., who were the lessees of the hotel, under the owner, Mr. M. L. Wessels. In order to keep the licence in full force and effect, it was necessary that an application should be made at the Licensing Court on the 2nd of March. Moss, instead of making this application, deliberately and vexatiously, an hour before the provisional order was granted, gave notice to the Resident Magistrate, Cape Town, for the withdrawal of the application for renewal of the licence. The Magistrate in consequence, removed his name from the list of applicants for renewal of licences. Petitioner added that the claims against the estate amounted to about £7,000. The value of the licence was £5,000 and upwards. The other assets were scarcely worth £500. It was desirable that the licence should be renewed for the benefit of the creditors and others interested in the estate. The present licence was current until the 31st March.

The affidavit of Mr. Rossouw, A.R.A., briefly stated that he placed himself in the hands of the Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose Moss discovered that the petition was being sent in?]

Mr. Schreiner (for the applicant):

This motion is made as a matter of urgency; and the point of urgency is that we ask that the Licensing Court should be authorised to hold an extraordinary meeting on the 31st instant, to consider the application of the curator bonis in Moss' insolvent estate for a licence for the "Cafe Royal." At the time Moss withdrew his application for a renewal of licence he must have known that he was on the verge of sequestration, and he withdrew the application simply because he wished to throw away the licence. Section 62 of Act 28, of 1883, clearly provides for the trustee of an insolvent estate carrying on the business. Moss must have known that his estate was insolvent, and that by throwing away this licence he was throwing away the only asset of anything like considerable value in the estate. As to the authority of the Court, see Runchman v. Kimberley Licensing Court (4 H.C., 42). In this case the Magistrate overlooked the fact that he had no power to strike off the list of applicants an applicant who withdraws. The Magistrate, as Chairman of the Licensing Board, can only report to the Board the names of the applicants. The Act nowhere gives him authority to sanction the withdrawal of the name of any person who has once made application.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think that you need argue that point.]

Then I can only submit that we are entitled to the order applied for.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that Moss had received some information that an application was about to be made to a judge in Chambers for sequestration of his estate, and having got that information, he proceeded to withdraw the application he had previously made for renewal of his licence. This withdrawal took place within an hour before the judge actually made the order for the provisional sequestration of the estate. It is clear, therefore, that under such circumstances the curator bonis, who has been appointed to represent the estate, would have the power to take up the application for renewal of the licence. Moss ceased to have any interest in the estate; it is his creditors whose interest came in; and it is clear that it was for the purpose of defeating the rights of the creditors that he withdrew his application. The Court could not for a moment allow any debtor to defeat his creditors' rights by a trick of this kind. Upon the appointment of the applicant as curator bonis he obtained a locus standi to represent the estate for the purpose of obtaining a renewal of the licence, and the fact that the application had been withdrawn by the debtor, immediately before the application of the sequestration of his estate was actually made, would not deprive the petitioner of his rights as representing the estate. The only difficulty that I see in the case is in regard to the power of this Court to order a meeting of the Licensing Board to consider this application afresh. The Governor may, under the 26th section of the Act, order a Licensing Court to take steps for rectifying an error or omission, but the Act is silent as to the power of the Court to order a fresh meeting where a decision infringing on the legal rights of an individual has been arrived at. The question has, however, been decided by this Court in the affirmative, in the cases quoted. I took no part in the decision of those cases, but I do not question its correctness. The decision was arrived at after considerable argument and I consider that the Court would now be justified in ordering that a further meeting of the Licensing Board be called for the purpose of considering the application made by petitioner on behalf of the creditors. An order will be made in the following terms:—

The Court orders that the Magistrate be authorised and directed to convene a meeting of the Licensing Board within ten days, for the purpose of considering an application for the renewal of the licence made by the petitioner as curator bonis of the estate of insolvent, or by any trustee who may be appointed to represent the estate.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BENNETT V. CAPE ESTATE & 1904.
SYNDICATE LIMITED. { Mar. 11th.

Judgment—Company—Voluntary winding up—Stay of execution.

The plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendant Company on a mortgage bond, but failed to inform the Court of the fact that the Company was being wound up voluntarily. Thereafter the defendant Company applied for a stay of execution.

Held, that a stay of execution should be granted, but on condition that the plaintiff's claim should be satisfied within a fixed period.

This was a motion on behalf of the defendant syndicate, for stay of execution of an order for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £1,000, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

The affidavit of the liquidators of the syndicate stated that on the 31st July, 1903, at a meeting of the shareholders, it was resolved that the syndicate should be voluntarily wound up, which resolution was confirmed at an extraordinary general meeting on the 18th August. Lot one of the landed property had been sold for £300, the proceeds having been devoted to payment of bank overdraft, and sundry expenses. None of the other properties had been sold, but the liquidators were negotiating for a large portion therein to be sold at a price which would more than cover the plaintiff's claim. There were other liabilities against the syndicate of £1,350, £205, and £100, or thereabouts. The deponents added that the value of the assets was in excess of the liabilities. Stay of execution was sought on the ground of the voluntary winding up of the syndicate.

An affidavit by a clerk in the employ of Messrs Findlay and Tait stated that the respondents were in court when the application for provisional sentence was heard. From correspondence which took place between the attorneys of the parties, it appeared that no interest whatever had been paid to the plaintiff, and plaintiff also stated that no steps had been taken to realise the estate.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Counsel for the respondent: Are you prepared to undertake that the distribution of the assets shall take place at once or within a very brief time?]

I don't know as to what terms I could give; my attorneys are not in court. I would point out that we say we think we shall be able to realise the property better if it is not necessary to cut it up for the purposes of this execution.

An answering affidavit by Mr. Riches, one of the liquidators of the syndicate, stated that he was in court on the day when the application for provisional sentence was to have been made, but it came on during his absence, and he had consequently no opportunity of explaining to the Court that the syndicate was in liquidation.

Mr. Buchanan (for applicants). In a matter like this of voluntary liquidation the creditors are entirely in the hands of the liquidators. Sections 207 and 141 of the Companies' Act (25 of 1892), both apply to a compulsory winding up. Under sec. 186 the liquidators may apply to the Court to determine any question arising out of the winding up, but here they have not done so. This case is quite different in principle to the case of Hazell Liquidator, Bromley and Co. v. Shenker (14 C.T.R.) where his lordship in his judgment laid stress on the fact that the liquidator had to rank and pay the claims in the legal order of preference, and that if an unsecured creditor were paid out of the regular order he would obtain a pignus praetorium over the other creditors. The present plaintiffs only come to take execution of property, which is secured to them, and upon which they are preferent to everybody else. The Court has granted an order declaring the property executable, and I submit that the applicants cannot now be allowed to stay execution. The respondents cannot by their execution interfere with the legal order of preference. The liquidators are not really waiting till they can find a purchaser, they can get a purchaser to-morrow, but they want to wait till they can get a better price. The matter has been hanging over since August. I hope that if a restraint of execution be granted, the applicant will be put on a short term, and the respondent will not be required to pay costs.

Mr. Gardiner (for respondents), said he thought they might assume that the liquidators would do their duty and realise the estate as quickly as possible. If the liquidators did not do their duty the applicants had the right to apply to the Court for the syndicate to be compulsory wound up. The property market was not at present in a good state, and it might hitherto have been difficult for the applicants to obtain a satisfactory price for their property. He contended that the wrong procedure had been adopted by the respondents in proceeding for provisional sentence.

Mr. Buchanan, in reply, said that attachments, executions, distress, etc., were not void in voluntary windings-up, though, according to section 207, such proceedings were void in the event of compulsory windings-up. It had been held that there was no section expressly dealing with voluntary liquidations either in the Colonial Act or in the English Act.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard on the question of costs of the present application,

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears from the correspondence that the respondent was aware, at the time when he obtained judgment against the syndicate, that the syndicate was in course of being wound up. If the Court had been informed of that fact, I am satisfied that the Court would have stayed its hand and not have declared the property executable there and then. It is far better that where winding-up is once commenced, the whole of the assets should be realised by the liquidator. It is more economical, and in every way more satisfactory, that this should be done than that there should be separate executions against the estate, and therefore I consider that it was the duty of the plaintiff in that case to have informed the Court of a fact which was within his knowledge, that the estate was being voluntarily wound up. The syndicate now applies to the Court for an order that execution be stayed, and, in my opinion, this order should be granted upon the principles laid down in the previous case of Shenker. I think, however, that there should be a condition attached that the claim of the respondent's should be satisfied in its legal order of preference within six weeks from this date, because I consider that the fact that there is a voluntary winding up does not justify the liquidators in keeping the plaintiff, who may be in need of money, from having satisfaction of his claim. As for the costs, I am of opinion that the respondent should pay costs of this action.

Mr. Buchanan suggested that the costs should be limited to costs of opposition.

De Villiers, C.J., assented. The condition will be: "That the claim of the respondent shall be satisfied, so far as the legal order of preference will permit, within six weeks from this date." I may state that I have fixed the period of six weeks, because I am informed by the Acting Sheriff that that would be about the period in which, in the ordinary course of execution, the money would be paid.

CO. V. MOSS. { Mar. 16th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of Gother Mann, curator bonis in the estate of George Alfred Moss, of the Cafe Royal, to be provisional trustee, with power to carry on the business.

Order granted appointing Mr. Mann provisional trustee, with power to carry on the business.

ANNEAR V. ANNEAR.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers, for the plaintiff, applied for leave for substituted service of citation. Leave to sue by edictal citation was granted in August last, and every effort had been made to find the defendant without success. It was believed, however, that he was in Johannesburg.

The order was granted as prayed, two publications to appear in the "Star," Johannesburg, to be returnable on the last day of next term.

HARRISON V. HARRISON.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the respondent to show cause why an order of personal attachment should not be issued, through his failure to comply with an order of Court. Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander was for the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin read the affidavit of the petitioner, Helen Harrison, wife of the respondent, which set out that on the 3rd December, 1903, the respondent was ordered to pay her £30 in order to proceed with an action, and £30 a month towards the maintenance of herself and children. The respondent had paid the initial £30 and the first monthly instalment, but he had neglected to pay on the 15th January and the 15th February. Acting on the suggestion of the Court, the petitioner had endeavoured to effect an amicable settlement, but, owing to the evasion of the respondent, she had been unsuccessful. She was wholly destitute of ready money.

Mr. Alexander read the affidavit of the respondent, which set out that the sum of £30 had been paid to the respondent on the 12th December, 1903, but she had taken no steps in the action. He had done his utmost to effect a settlement, but without success. Everything had been arranged at the office of the attorney of the petitioner, but because he had not got £15 ready money, the negotiations were broken off. The petitioner had unlimited credit, and respondent only had an income at present of £34. Counsel had a mass of correspondence, the effect of which would show that the respondent had been anxious to effect a settlement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can't these people settle their squabbles without wasting money in this way. It is simply a question of money now. Couldn't they agree to a voluntary separation, and have a receiver appointed to divide the estate?]

Mr. Benjamin said he thought that would meet the justice of the case. The petitioner had absolutely no means.

Mr. Alexander said that the correspondence would show that considerable efforts had been made by the respondent to effect a compromise. He thought if His Lordship would allow the matter to stand over, a settlement might be arrived at.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The matter has been constantly postponed, and we are getting no further?]

Mr. Benjamin said that the whole matter had been thrashed out before, when the defendant was ordered to pay the money in question.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for committal for contempt of Court. There can be no contempt of Court unless there is wilful disobedience of the order. The respondent was ordered to pay £30 a month. This he paid for one or two months. Afterwards he says he is unable to continue payment. He alleges he is wholly unable, and if this is true there can be no contempt of Court. There is this to be said in his favour, that the Court has interdicted him from dealing with his property, and that interdict was granted on the application of the petitioner herself, so that she is to some extent responsible for the man having no means whatever with which to pay this £30. I think both parties are somewhat unreasonable. It would be very easy for them to come to terms, if they would only exercise a little reason in the matter, but they seem to be in a temper—in a state of conjugal disunion. I think the Court should not now grant an order for contempt of Court in the absence of any proof that there is a wilful disobedience of the order of Court. The application is refused. The question of costs will stand over. At the trial of the case, and when the merits have been heard, the Court will be in a better position to judge as to who should pay the costs.

Ex parte SMITH.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an interdict restraining Messrs. Howard, Farrar, Robinson, and Co., of East London, from selling certain ploughs, manufactured by the Cockshut Co., of Canada, which were fitted with a patent to prevent friction, the property of the applicant.

An order was granted, calling on Messrs. Howard, Farrar, Robinson and Co., of East London, to show cause on the 1st June why an interdict should not be granted as prayed, the rule to be served personally and by registered letter on the Cockshut Company in Canada, the first respondents to keep account of all ploughs that might be sold by them.

HIDDINGH V. ESTATE HERTZOG.

This was an application on behalf of the defendants who are executors dative in the estate Hertzog, for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of Thomas Henry Gurran, handwriting expert, London, and for the transmission to him of a document purporting to be the last will and testament of the late Mr. Hertzog. A certain document, purporting to be the will of Mr. Hertzog, was filed in the Master's Office; this alleged will did not dispose of the whole estate, and the defendants from the first refused to recognise it. The plaintiff commenced an action, but subsequently abandoned any claim that he had under the will, and paid the costs. He was then asked if he consented to judgment being signed in favour of the defendants, but he did not reply. The matter was again mentioned to the Court a little time ago, and was then ordered to stand over in order to ascertain whether the plaintiff would consent to judgment for the defendants. No reply had been received to a further letter, but the plaintiff's attorney, Mr. T. P. Peters, informed the defendant's attorneys that plaintiff would not consent to a judgment being signed in favour of the defendants, and that he would leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Court. The defendants desired to obtain finality in this case, and, unless the plaintiff consented to their signing judgment, it would be necessary for the defendants to have the case set down, and to expend a good deal of money in preparing for the trial. Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved, and asked that the plaintiff should be ordered to pay the costs of the present applicant.

De Villiers, C.J., in granting an order as prayed, and directed that the alleged will should be transmitted by registered letter, said: In making this order I would suggest to the plaintiff whether it is not advisable for him, if he does not intend to proceed with the action or withdraw, to consent to judgment, so that all this unnecessary expense may be saved.

Thereafter the applicant tendered the amount of the debt to respondent, who refused to hand back the lease, claiming the right to retain it as security for a promissory note made by the applicant which was not yet due.

Held, that whatever rights the respondent might have had if the applicant had himself ceded the lease to the respondent, he had not, as cessionary, any greater rights in respect of the lease than L. had, and that, therefore, he was bound to hand the lease back to the applicant upon tender by the applicant of the debt due by him to L.

This was an application to have made absolute a rule nisi, operating as an interim interdict, restraining the respondent, Gideon Stephanus Cloete, attorney, Lady Grey, from parting with a certain sheep lease.

The petition of the applicant (verified by the usual affidavit), stated that he was a farmer resident in the district of Aliwal North, and that the respondent was an attorney resident near applicant. In or about October 1903 petitioner ceded a certain sheep lease entered into between petitioner and one Herman H. Zinn, of Lady Grey, in respect of 440 sheep, as collateral security for £16 10s., to A. W. Lilford, trading at Lady Grey as Lilford and Co. The lease took effect on March 5, 1902, and expires on March 4, 1904, and stipulates for a yearly rental of £33, payable half-yearly, either to petitioner in person, or at the office of respondent, who at the time the said lease was entered into acted likewise as applicant's attorney.

Applicant claimed payment of 12s. 6d. each for 340 of the sheep leased, and the return of the sheep. On February 5th, 1904, petitioner instructed his attorney, Arthur E. Dell, to tender the aforesaid sum of £16 10s., to A. W. Lilford, and to demand return of the said sheep lease with the cession duly cancelled. On being informed by John H. Diepnaar (Dell's clerk) of the alleged transfer of the cession from the said A. W. Lilford to the respondent, petitioners made a similar tender and demand from the respondent. Petitioners verily believed that the respondent intended to reap and collect all the benefits accruing to the said lease, and to apply such benefits towards liquidating certain promissory notes, amounting to about £240. These promissory notes had not as yet fallen due. The petitioner had given the respondent collateral security for the aforesaid amount by ceding to him two policies on petitioner's life for £500. Respondent has never acquired any title from the petitioner to the said sheep lease nor was it ever intended that he should do so. The only purpose for which the cession was made was as collateral security, as aforesaid. The other party to the sheep lease (Herman H. Zinn), who has but recently returned from Johannesburg, has disposed of almost all his property at Lady Grey, including his farm, and the sheep leased under the aforesaid lease. Owing to respondent's illegal refusal to hand over the said lease on tender of £16 10s., petitioner will, in all probability, suffer irreparable loss. Wherefore the petitioner prayed for:

1. A rule nisi calling upon Gideon S. Cloete, or any other person who, since the commencement of this action, may have become possessed of the said lease, to show cause why it should not be ordered that the said sheep lease be handed over to the petitioner on payment of £16 10s.

2. That this rule may operate as a temporary interdict restraining the respondent, or any subsequent possessor, from disposing of, or alienating the said lease, until the rule nisi be confirmed or otherwise disposed of; and, that it may operate as a temporary interdict restraining the aforesaid H. H. Zinn from disposing of any sums due by virtue of the aforesaid lease until the rule nisi be made absolute or discharged.

The affidavit of Gideon S. Cloete (the respondent) stated that in March, 1902, the petitioner let his sheep to one Hermanus H. Zinn, making all amounts due under the lease payable at deponent's office. Deponent agreed to advance money to petitioner on the security of the sheep lease. Deponent advanced money and retained possession of the lease till the beginning of February, 1904. At petitioner's urgent request, deponent in April, 1902, drew up a deed of cession of the lease to petitioner's wife, after informing petitioner that such cessions between husband and wife were null and void. During September, 1903, Messrs. Lilford and Co., of Lady Grey, sued petitioner for £52 10s, which, with costs and interest, amounted to £60. Petitioner paid cash £25, gave a promissory note at six months for £18 10s., and ceded the lease to Lilford and Co. for the balance of £16 10s. This cession was made on September 29th, 1903, simply by erasing Mrs. Van der Heever's name and substituting Lilford and Co.'s, but the original date was by inadvertence left unaltered. The cession was fined by the Magistrate when presented to him for a cancellation of the stamps. On January 26th, 1904, petitioner's promissory note to deponent for £231, fell due, and at petitioner's request deponent agreed to renew, provided the said lease was ceded to deponent as security. The arrangement was that deponent was to retain £175 on March 5th, 1904, when Zinn settled up with him, and pay out the balance to petitioner to settle with other creditors. Deponent, thereupon, had the lease ceded to him by Lilford and Co., and paid amounts due to them. Both the cession to Lilford and Co. and that by them to deponent was valid and bona fide.

There were various other supporting affidavits.

Mr. McGregor (who appeared for the respondent) said his submission was that this was a case where the petitioner for some time obtained loans of money and subsequently he endeavoured to extricate himself from any security which he had given to the respondent in the matter. Apparently the advances had been made from March, 1902, and Mr. Cloete's contention was that there was a certain lease entered into between the petitioner and one Zinn. The rents under that lease were payable in Cloete's office, and Mr. Cloete arranged with Mr. Van der Heever that as the petitioner would want loans of money, the lease was to be security protecting the respondent against loss in respect of such loans as he would make.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the cession of the lease to Cloete seemed to have been made on the 26th January.

Mr. McGregor said that was a cession by Lilford to Cloete, and Van der Heever was not a party to it. The figure seemed to have been disturbed it was true, but he submitted that to all appearances it was consistent with his submission as to the concession of the lease as security to Cloete. Counsel went on to say that the affidavits of the petitioner consisted mainly of a general allegation that the debts of about £200 arose out of the swelling of a small debt by interest in the course of two years. The Court would find on the facts that Van der Heever agreed to give cession of the lease as security.

Mr. Buchanan, replying to his lordship, said that there was an insurance policy for £500 ceded to Cloete as security for the promissory notes. That was clearly stated in the affidavits.

Mr. McGregor said that the respondent's explanation was that two policies of £500 each were handed to him so that he should pay the premiums.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that that seemed to be a most improbable explanation.

Mr. McGregor went on to say that the statements of Van der Heever were unsupported by anybody else, and his memory was not very clear. He submitted that £230 or £240 was owing now, and that the respondent was entitled to have the money paid. Counsel referred to Trantman v. Imperial Fire Insurance Co. (12 Juta, 38) and Voet (20-6-15).

Mr. Buchanan said that the petitioner admitted that he owed £201 18s. 6d., which was the last of a series of promissory notes that successively arose out of an account for £50. The difference between the respective amounts was really the interest on a continual series of renewals in the course of about a year. Petitioner's financial status had not changed during the past two years. At no time was any mention made of ceding the lease in question. On the 26th January, 1904, petitioner was not in possession of the lease in question, and thus it would have been an absurdity for him to re-cede as alleged by the respondent. Counsel also read affidavits to show that negotiations took place for the cession of the insurance policy, and that the cession was carried out. It seemed to him on reading through the affidavits that the case of the respondent was without foundation. It was not clear upon what basis the respondent rested his claim, and he must say, after hearing his learned friend, that the matter was not any clearer to him.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the date on the lease seemed to have been altered to the 26th January, and must originally have been either the 24th, 4th, or 14th.

Mr. McGregor, in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: On the 5th March, 1902, the applicant executed a lease for certain sheep in favour of one Zinn. In the following month, that is on the 8th April, the applicant ceded his rights under the lease to his wife, in the following terms: "I, the undersigned Jan Daniel van der Heever, the within lessor, hereby cede, assign, and transfer and set over all my right, title, and interest in and to the within sheep lease to my wife, Maria Johanna Elizabeth van der Heever." This is signed by the applicant. Subsequently, there was a judgment obtained by Lilford and Co. against Van der Heever, and in settlement of the amount the applicant made a payment and entered into a separate arrangement for the rest of the judgment. Then, on the suggestion of the respondent himself, who had been acting throughout for applicant, the name of his wife was struck out and the name of Messrs. Lilford and Co.

substituted as the cessionaries of the lease, and the following words were added: "As collateral security for the amounts due by him to them." Now, it is admitted that £16 10s was the total amount then due. Then, apparently on the 26th January, 1904, but certainly at some other date, because it is an alteration—the 6 was not the figure—but some time, apparently in January, there is the cession by Lilford and Co. to the respondent in the following terms: "We, the undersigned Lilford and Co., do hereby cede, assign, transfer, and set over all our right, title, interest in and to the within lease to Gideon Stephanus Cloete, for value received, and without recurrence on ourselves." Upon these documents it is perfectly clear that the respondent had no greater rights than Lilford and Co. had upon the lease. It is only their right and title that they could cede, and the ordinary rule that a cessionary has no greater rights than the cedent himself must apply. Upon tender of the amount of £16 10s., he was bound to hand over the lease to Van der Heever, the applicant, but in answer to the applicant's claim, the respondent makes the following allegations: He says originally, when the lease was entered into, it was arranged that this lease was to be a security to him for debts owing to him. He makes the further statement—and a somewhat extraordinary statement—that it was proposed by Van der Heever to make a cession of this lease to his own wife. Respondent said: "It cannot be done, it is illegal; it would be utterly null and void," but ultimately he yielded, and apparently gave up all his rights which he said he had under this document as security. By allowing the cession to be made to Mrs. Van der Heever, he tacitly gives away any rights which he may have held in this as security for himself. Afterwards, when Lilford and Co. wanted to make the fresh arrangement, the rights of Mrs. Van der Heever were completely ignored. She is the cessionary; it does not appear that she was a party to the fresh arrangement. Her name was struck out and the name of Messrs. Lilford and Co. inserted. The respondent goes on to say that on the 26th January this year there was some arrangement between the parties by which the respondent's rights were to revive, and that cession of the lease was to be made in his favour. But then what is the cession? The only cession made is by Lilford and Co., and they could not cede to him greater rights than they themselves possessed. I am satisfied if the parties honestly intended there should be a cession of all the rights of Van der Heever in respect of this lease, and more rights than Lilford and Co. possess, the parties would have made an endorsement to that effect on this document. There is considerable conflict of evidence as to what took place on the 26th January, 1904, and in this conflict of evidence I prefer to abide by the written documents before the Court, and upon these documents there is not a tittle of evidence to show any intention on the part of the applicant to grant his lease as security to the respondent for any debts that may be owing to the respondent. It would appear that at that time the respondent had security for the promissory note which was owing to him. The security consisted of two life policies, one of the applicant himself and one of the applicant's wife, in favour of the respondent. Unfortunately, these policies have not been produced. I suppose they are in possession of the respondent. He does not affix these policies to his affidavit so that the Court might see the nature of the cession of these policies to him. His statement is that the policies were ceded to him to enable him to pay the premiums—a somewhat extraordinary statement—for surely he could pay the premiums without a cession of the policies being made to him. There is proof of only one payment being made, if indeed, there was a premium paid by him. It is suggested that it was on some other policy, but supposing it was, there is only one payment of £9. Seeing these life policies are not produced I am inclined to believe the statement that the respondent had held these policies as security for the promissory note. I prefer to be guided by the documents before the Court, and upon these documents there is not a tittle of proof that there was any intention on the part of the applicant to cede the lease to the respondent. Mr. McGregor has quoted authorities to show that the pledgee is entitled to retain the article pledged in security, not only for the debts for which the pledge was given, but in security for other debts. It is not necessary to discuss that question, because the present is a case arising between the pledgee and a person who is not a party to the giving of the pledge. There is nothing to show that the respondent ever consented to the cession of the lease by Lilford and Co. to the application in security for their debt. When the applicant, as the original cedent, tendered the amount owing to the respondent by Lilford and Co. the respondent was bound to hand over the lease to the applicant. The promissory note was not yet due, and even if it had been due the lease could not have been legally retained as security for a debt with which it had no connection. For these reasons I am of opinion that the rule must be made absolute, with costs.

Mr. McGregor having addressed the Court further on the question of costs, De Villiers, C.J.: The rule will be made absolute with costs, except the costs of Diapraem's affidavit.

SCHWARTZ V. FICK AND { 1904.
WIFE. (Mar. 17th.

This was an application for an order authorising applicant to sell, surrender, or otherwise dispose of a certain policy of insurance on the life of the first-named respondent, Johannes Hendrick Fick, in favour of his wife, Maria S Fick, and ceded to the applicant by way of collateral security for a debt. The matter had previously been before the Court, but had been ordered to stand over to enable the first-named respondent, who is a leper confined on Robben Island, to file an affidavit. (14. C.T.R. 153).

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the applicant; Mrs. Fick was present for the respondents.

The affidavit of Johannes H. Fick stated that he had formerly been in business at Wellington, and that he had a property transaction with the applicant, that he was subsequently taken sick, and was sent to Robben Island. He acknowledged owing a certain amount, but said that he made arrangements with his attorney for meeting the applicant's claim, and he submitted that he was not responsible for this debt.

The applicant, in a replying affidavit, stated that the correct amount of the deficiency was £270 11s. 2d., and not £102 6s. 10d., as stated by the respondent, and there was also a further sum due of £61 16s. 8d. for insurance premiums paid by deponent. He had never been offered the full amount, or any part thereof. He was prepared to re-cede the policy on payment of £270 11s. 2d., plus £61 16s. 8d.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the affidavit of the respondent disclosed no defence.

The second-named respondent, Mrs Fick, said that she did not know what she was really signing when the document of cession was put before her. Mr. Pentz (the Magistrate) told her to sign it. She did not understand English.

De Villiers, C.J., said that this was an asset of Mrs. Fick's, and he did not see how the applicant could take execution on the policy without first obtaining judgment against her. The plaintiff might ultimately succeed, but, at present, the application would be refused.

De Villiers, C.J., advised the old lady, the second-named respondent, that in case the applicant brought another action, she should take legal advice, in order to have her position placed before the Court.

LAW SOCIETY V. GREFFNING.

Attorney—Culpable insolvency—Suspension.

An attorney who had been convicted of culpable insolvency and sentenced to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour, was suspended from practice sine die: but with leave to apply for restoration after one year.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondent, Robert Greening, to show cause why his name should not be removed from the roll of attorneys of this Court.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for the Incorporated Law Society; the respondent appeared in person.

The affidavit of the secretary of the Law Society stated that the ground of the application was that the respondent had been charged before the R.M. of Cape Town, on the 21st January last, with the crime of culpable insolvency, and found guilty and sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour.

An affidavit by the respondent set forth that he admitted the conviction, and that he craved leave to refer to the points of his evidence before the Magistrate. He urged that the defence that he then raised did not warrant his removal from the roll of attorneys of this Court. He pleaded for the clemency of the Court, and promised that he would endeavour to justify such clemency as his lordship saw fit to extend to him. He intended to pay his creditors in full at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Benjamin (for the Law Society): The respondent was tried by the A.R.M., of Cape Town for culpable insolvency. He was convicted and sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. The respondent was convicted on three counts: (1) That he had absented himself from the third meeting of his creditors; (2) That he had failed to keep proper books; (3) That he had failed to account satisfactorily for his insolvency when called upon by his trustee to do so. The conviction on the third account was quashed on appeal, as respondent had been indicted under section 71 of the Insolvency Ordinance, instead of under section 10 of Act 38 of 1884. The appeal was disallowed on the other two counts.

The respondent (in person) denied that his absence from the third meeting of his creditors was intentional, and stated that a statement of his accounts could be made up. Respondent argued that the alleged misconduct was not professional, and was proceeding to argue on the merits of his case when he was stopped by the Court. In conclusion he threw himself on the mercy of the Court. [De Villiers, C.J.: There is something, Mr. Benjamin, in what he says as to his misconduct not having been professional.]

No doubt, but the Law Society feel bound to bring the matter to the notice of the Court. I would suggest that your Lordship should follow the customary practice in such cases.

De Villiers, C.J. (to defendant): I am bound to remind you that you have had several warnings from the Court in regard to other cases for sailing very close to the wind, but that won't affect my judgment.

Mr. Benjamin: I will leave the matter in your lordship's hands to fix the period of suspension.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will order the respondent to be suspended from practice until a further order of the Court, with liberty to apply again in twelve months, after due notice to the Law Society, which may possibly obtain further information in the meantime. Meanwhile the respondent to hand over his certificate to the Registrar.

Ex parte MBULWANA.

Mr. Pyemont moved to make absolute the rule nisi granted on the 13th January calling upon all persons to show cause why the transfer of certain land should not be passed.

Rule made absolute.

LE ROUX V. THEUNISSEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted on February 29th, restraining the respondent from transferring certain property pending an action. The rule had been duly served, and there was no opposition.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte LORD AND ANOTHER.

This matter came before the Court on October 29th, 1903, when the Court granted leave to the petitioners in their capacity of executors in the estate of the late Thomas Benning, to raise £4,500 on mortgage for the purpose of rebuilding a hotel in Kingwilliamstown, which forms one of the chief assets in the estate. As it was found that, owing to the increased price of labour and of materials, this sum was insufficient for the purpose, the executors now applied for leave to raise a further sum of £2,000 on a second mortgage bond on the hotel, ground and premises.

The Master recommended that the application be granted.

On the motion of Mr. W. P. Buchanan, leave was granted as prayed.

Ex parte DYER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the passing of a certain transfer. Petitioner was executor in the estate of the late Thomas Dyer, of King William's Town. The deceased was a director in the firm of Dyer and Dyer, Ltd., for whom he had bought a certain property, which was by mistake transferred personally to the deceased instead of the firm.

His Lordship said that an order like that could not be made without the Government being represented.

Ex parte THE PORT ELIZABETH QUOIT CLUB.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to make absolute the rule nisi granted on the 14th January calling on all persons to show cause why the petitioners should not be authorised to sell a certain piece of ground and divide the proceeds among the members of the club.

Rule made absolute.

ROBERTSON V. ROBERTSON.

Mr. Close, for the petitioner, John Alexander Robertson, moved for leave to sue the respondent, his wife, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, on account of her desertion.

Leave granted, to be returnable on the 14th May, personal service to be effected.

WILCOCKS V. BERNSTEIN.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order to attach certain property of the respondent, and for leave to sue by edictal citation. The respondent was indebted to the applicant in the sum of £34 for professional services.

Order of attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem granted, with leave to sue by edictal citation, personal service to be effected; returnable on the 14th May.

WISE V. WISE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for leave to sue in this matter by edictal citation for divorce.

Leave granted, personal service to be effected, returnable on the 1st June.

FOULDS V. FOULDS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation. The parties were married in England in 1896, and thereafter they became domiciled in this country. Recently the respondent had developed a craving for drink, and had in consequence lost his occupation. He had repeatedly been unfaithful to his wife, and had recently gone to Bloemfontein.

Leave was granted to sue by edictal citation, returnable on the 14th May. This, his Lordship said, would not prejudice any right the defendant had to object to the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground of want of domicile, personal service to be effected, and the intedit and notice of trial to be served with the citation.

SEKELINI V. SEKELINI. { 1904.
 { Mar. 18th.

Native territories—Suits between natives—Succession to intestate estates—Marriage between natives before 1879—Eldest son—Executor dative.

The applicant was the eldest son of a native who married a native woman before 1879 in Tembuland. The father died intestate in 1903, the respondent was appointed executor dative, and he proposed to distribute the estate according to the Colonial law of intestate succession.

Held, that the estate should be administered and distributed according to native law and custom, under which the eldest son was entitled to obtain possession of the whole estate, subject to certain onerous obligations in favour of the widow and other children of the deceased.

Held further, that an executor under Colonial law was not the proper person to administer and distribute the estate, and the appointment of the respondent as executor dative was accordingly set aside.

This was an application on behalf of Johannes Sekelini Hlubi, of Griqualand East, for an order declaring him to have succeeded to the estate of his father, who died intestate. The estate was valued at about £3,500.

The application arose out of proceedings which were before the Court last year, in which his lordship gave judgment on the 7th May. (See 12, C.T.R., 301). At that time the present first-named respondent brought an action, in his capacity of executor dative, against the present applicant for an interdict to restrain him, Johannes Sekelini, from parting with the proceeds of the estate. His lordship at that time said it was to be regretted that the Court could not, on the facts then before it, finally dispose of the matter. The present application was upon notice of motion to Daniel Hulley, in his capacity as executor dative, and Elizabeth Sekelini, the widow, calling upon them to show cause why Johannes Sekelini should not be solely entitled to succeed to the estate of his father, or in the alternative, if the appointment of Daniel Hulley as executor dative was not set aside, why he should not be ordered to administer the estate according to native law.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the applicant, Johannes Sekelini, eldest son of the deceased, William Sekelini; Mr. Buchanan, as curator ad litem, was for the minor children; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent, Daniel Hulley (executor dative), and Elizabeth Sekelini (widow of the deceased).

De Villiers, C.J., said that the first point on which counsel should address the Court was, it seemed to him, the statute law has it stood to-day.

Mr. Schreiner said that the statute law really was Proclamation 112 of 1879, which was made pursuant to the Annexation Act of the territory, No. 39 of 1877. If there had been no marriage in the present case with Christian rites, he would not really need, he submitted, to have argued before the Court for the contention that he had to advance. The only point that brought the matter into doubt was the fact that this marriage was with Christian rites in the time of Adam Kok, in 1873. The clauses of the proclamations showed how the Legislature modified the law of the Colony in relation to marriage questions. Certain regulations under the proclamation were framed. As the matter stood, marriage by Christian rites, he submitted, was not, for the purposes of these regulations (if it took place before the annexation and had not been registered), to be regarded as a marriage that was affected by these regulations. He submitted that the Master of the Supreme Court erred in not receiving and acting on the protest that was made to him, and saying to Mrs. Sekelini, "Produce to me the certificate of your marriage." Then, when she had said that she had no registration of the marriage, the Master would have seen that the regulations did not apply. If the construction that the Master had put on these clauses was a sound one, then that which was apparently left by the Legislature would be wholly swept away. There was no particular virtue in the fact that here was a marriage before a minister of religion in 1873 or 1874 (long before there was any law relative to such marriages), to found jurisdiction in the Master to give an executor dative appointment in such a case more than there would be if that had been a marriage according to Hlubi customs. The case was one of the very first importance. He submitted that the Master had erred. There was a definite modification of the existing law of the Colony in its application to the present matter. The Native Succession Act had never been proclaimed in the territories, although the Act was in force in the Colony. The whole of the present trouble arose out of the Master having appointed an executor dative. Counsel urged that as regarded the native law, the point had been decided in the case of Mahonga (6 Juta, p. 317). Counsel contended that there was no legal virtue in being married before a minister beyond that it changed the state of those concerned from single blessedness to "double harness."

Mr. Buchanan said that this case was of far-reaching consequences, because the whole administration of estates in native territories would depend upon this decision.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, to persons married before 1879].

Mr. Buchanan: Yes, my lord, or after 1879. My point is that the law regulating the succession to property depends upon the law of the place of the man's domicile at the time of his death. That must be looked at irrespective of his domicile of origin, and irrespective of where he was married or when he was married. "Dicey on Conflict of Laws," According to that authority, the law of the place at the time of the man's death must be followed. "Storeg on Conflict of Laws," brought up the views of the Continental jurists, and he submitted that the leading authorities agreed that the law of the domicile at the time of death must decide the succession. That brought him down to the law of East Griqualand in 1898, at the time of the man's death. The only point of difference between the law of the Colony and the law of the territories was to find out how far these proclamations had modified the law of the Colony. There was a doubt in the reading of the words "No Act passed or to be passed by the Parliament of this colony shall extend or be deemed to extend to such territories unless expressed in such words." Did that mean no Act passed that session or to be passed that session or hereafter, or did it mean any Act of the past?

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am inclined to think it means to be passed that session].

Mr. Buchanan said, that being accepted, he submitted that the rules did not modify the common law of the Colony. According to sections 37 and 38, he contended that it was the intention of the Legislature to keep questions of succession out of the Magistrate's Court, and regulate them by the law of the Colony.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I can't imagine that the Legislature would leave it to Magistrates to select which law they were to apply.

Mr. Buchanan said it would have been quite simple to insert a clause in the Act to the effect that all questions of native succession should be decided according to native law, and if one or other of the parties were of European race then succession should be decided by colonial law. Sections 37 and 38 qualified section 25, and showed it was not the intention of the Legislature that succession should be tried according to native custom. The parties were Christians, of the Wesleyan community, specially married in a polygamist country, and counsel submitted that the question of registration had got nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. Gardiner agreed with his learned friend on the point that the law of a man's domicile at his death was the law applying to the succession of his estate. He submitted that section 34 could not apply to the validity of marriages previous to the date of the Proclamation, and that the appointment of the executor who would have to apply Colonial law to Mrs. Sekelini was valid. The Legislature, in framing these proclamations contemplated questions arising previous to the date of the proclamations; otherwise where did the necessity arise for making special provision in section 33 for native marriages before the date of the Proclamation. Though the parties were married in Griqualand East before the annexation, when the laws of the Colony were not in force, the subsequent annexation, he submitted, brought the laws into force with regard to that territory, and he contended that the Colonial law applied, and that community of property must be treated as existing between the spouses. If the law of Adam Kok's time applied, then he submitted that all the evidence went to show that these natives would be treated under Griqua law, and not under native law. The Griquas had a modified form of community, as was proved by the case of Fortuin v. Abrahams. (7 C.T.R. 30). If native laws were to be applied, then the son was not entitled to the powers he sought, because he had not complied with the obligations of native law, in that he would not support his mother since her widowhood, and supply her with with ploughing cattle.

De Villiers, C.J.: The laws of Transkeian territory, so far as they affect natives, are certainly in a most anomalous condition, and I do not think that the legislature of this country could be better employed than in placing those laws upon a sounder and more satisfied footing than they are at present. In every case which has come before the Court relating to natives in those territories it has been a most difficult matter to ascertain what the real rights of the natives are, and the Court has had to find a solution as best it could out of a curious jumble of proclamations of the Governor and Acts of the Colonial Parliament. It would appear in the present case that the applicant, as the eldest son of William Sekelini, who was married about 1873 to a native woman, he being himself a native, a Hlubi, who was married by Christian rites. The applicant seems to have been born before 1879, when the Proclamation which is now in question was passed. Whether that be so or not, it is clear that the marriage of his parents took place long before that Proclamation was passed. He now, as the eldest son of his father, who had only been married once, claims the whole of the estate, and it is perfectly clear from the evidence that if this case is to be decided wholly upon, and according to native law and custom, the applicant would be entitled to obtain the estate. According to Mr. Walter Stanford, than whom there is no better authority as to native law and custom: "In the case of a native dying and leaving a widow or widows, such widow or widows would not, under native custom, inherit any of the deceased's property. A widow would, with her children, come under the guardianship of her eldest son. If such son were of age she would live with him, or at such place as he desired, and during the time that she recognised his authority it would be his place to provide her and her children with necessary maintenance in keeping with her position, land to cultivate, and to lend her cattle with which to plough. She and her children would have to render him, in return, such services as are usually rendered by a wife to her husband, and by children to their father. Failure on the part of the woman or the children to recognise the eldest son's authority would have the effect of depriving her or them of any claim for maintenance or support. But so long as they rendered him such services, and behaved dutifully to him, they are entitled to maintenance out of the estate of the deceased, and if the eldest son neglects to make sufficient provision for them, or otherwise ill-treats them, an independent chief, upon sufficient grounds being shown, might have allowed the mother to establish a separate kraal, with stock taken from the estate, for her maintenance, and under the guardianship of another guardian, usually a son or near relative. The woman would, therefore, only have the use of such stock, the ownership still to be vested in the son." Subject, to these obligations, it seems to me clear, not only from the evidence of Mr. Stanford, but from that of all the other expert witnesses on the subject, that the eldest son would be entitled to have the property left by his father. In many ways it is a very onerous inheritance, one might almost call it a hereditas damnosa, which descends upon the son, seeing that there are so many obligations placed upon him. If this case, therefore, had to be decided according to native law, it seems to me perfectly clear what the decision of the magistrate would be. It would be that the eldest son, that is, the applicant, is entitled to this property, subject to the obligations imposed upon him by native law. If this case had to be decided by a magistrate, independently of the 30th to the 38th sections of the Proclamation of 1879, I am satisfied that it would be his duty to decide this case according to native law and custom. It is practically a suit between natives. It is a question raised by the applicant as to whether he is entitled to this property, subject to the obligations I have mentioned, or whether the respondent, the widow, and her children, are to have the property under Colonial law; and, although the words used in the 23rd section are that the magistrate "may decide the case according to native law;" yet it is practically certain that he would have read the Act as if the words had been "shall be dealt with according to native law." The only question, therefore, to be determined in this case is whether there is anything in the 30th to the 38th sections of the Proclamation which would necessitate a different construction. In my opinion, these sections were not intended to have a retrospective operation at all, and, therefore, a native claiming, by virtue of these sections to obtain other than native rights must show that the marriage by virtue of which he acquired these rights had been celebrated after the passing of the Act of 1879. If this view is correct, there is nothing in the Proclamation to affect the general principle that a case arising between natives should be decided according to native law. It is true that this case does not now originate before the magistrate, but that it really originates in this Court, but I am clearly of opinion that this Court should decide the matter as if the case had come in the first instance before a Magistrate. The Court will, therefore, make an order as prayed, namely that the applicant is entitled to succeed to the estate of his father, but subject to all the obligations of native law and custom. The Court will order that the appointment of the respondent, Daniel Hulley, as executor duo be set aside and that the applicant be declared entitled to succeed to the estate of his father, subject to all the obligations imposed upon him by native law and custom. In regard to the costs of this application, I consider that the costs should be borne by the estate.

Mr. Schreiner: The estate should not be further reduced by having to bear all the costs. If any costs are paid out of the estate, they should be confined to the costs of the curator ad litem.

Mr. Gardiner: The respondent should not be mulcted in costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is a good deal to be said for the view that Mr. Schreiner puts forward, but, on the other hand, it would be difficult to separate executor's costs from the costs of the widow. He seems to have done his duty, and there is no allegation or suggestion of want of good faith on his part in doing the best for the estate; and, as to the curator, he had to be appointed to represent the minors. One regrets that so large a portion of this estate should be exhausted in costs, but it was not avoidable under the circumstances. Upon the whole, I think that the costs should come out of the estate.

Applicant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low; Respondents' Attorneys: Faure and Zietsman.

Ex parte VYNER.

Removal of trial from Circuit Court to Criminal Sessions of Supreme Court — Postponement of trial.

Mr. Wilkinson moved, as a matter of urgency, upon notice of motion calling upon the Attorney-General to show cause why the trial of the applicant, Richard John Vyner, upon fourteen counts and three alternative counts, contained in an indictment served on the 12th March, 1904, which trial was set down for the Circuit Court of Victoria West, to be held on March 23, should not be postponed and set down for the next Criminal Sessions, to be held at Cape Town on May 15 next, or until such date as should enable applicant to bring, or cause to be brought, certain witnesses requisite and necessary for his defence.

In the course of the petition Vyner said that the charges made against him were that while an officer in command of the Remount Depot at Victoria West, in February, 1901, he defrauded His Majesty the King in his Imperial Government by representing he had paid more for horses and mules purchased by him for remounts than he actually had, and that he fraudulently applied the difference, £270, to his own use and benefit.

De Villiers, C.J., informed counsel that the Court could not make an order unless the Attorney-General had had notice of the application.

Mr. Wilkinson: Notice was served last night at five o'clock. Affidavit of service has not been filed, but it will be prepared without delay.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Under what rule of Court do you apply?]

I take it that this Court, as the Supreme Court of the Colony, has power to order postponement from a Circuit Court to the Criminal Sessions.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has power, it is true, to remove cases.]

I take it that the power to remove involves the power to postpone.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Could not your application be made to the Circuit Court of Victoria West?]

No doubt it could be made at the Circuit Court, but very great expense will be incurred in going down there to have the trial removed to Cape Town.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones: I am instructed to appear at Victoria West for the prosecution, and I anticipated that application would be made at Victoria West for postponement; but I was also instructed to oppose. I have not been instructed in this matter as yet. Perhaps your lordship would allow me to communicate with the Attorney-General on the matter?

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think you should.]

The matter was ordered to stand over to enable the Attorney-General to be communicated with, and affidavit of service to be filed.

Postea (March 21st).

Mr. Wilkinson renewed the application. The affidavit of the petitioner stated that it would be necessary for him to bring witnesses from London and Sierra Leone, and that he had not sufficient time to prepare his defence. Until March 17 he did not know whether the Attorney-General would or would not indict him on these charges of misappropriating moneys of the Imperial military authorities in connection with the purchase of horses and mules during the late war. He added that he had not much money, and that in any event this trial meant financial ruin to him, but he was anxious to remain an honourable member of society and to retain his military rank, and he, therefore, desired to have full opportunity of preparing his defence.

Mr. Howel Jones (for the Crown), said that the Attorney-General had not sufficient notice on Friday to be represented at the original application. The position taken up now was that the Attorney-General opposed the postponement of this case to the next Circuit Court at Victoria West, which would be six months hence, but with regard to the removal of the case to the next sessions of the Supreme Court, he would put it to the Court, without strenuously opposing that part of the application, whether there was sufficient on the affidavit of Mr. Vyner to induce his lordship to remove the trial, and whether there was any reason to believe, on the affidavit and some correspondence that he would read, that these witnesses were material to the case, and if they were material, whether there was any guarantee that they would appear. The applicant had had ample time to get these witnesses from England if he had really intended to get them. In the affidavit which he had made some of the statements were hardly correct, and others were manifestly incorrect. With regard to what he had said as to not having any knowledge that this case would come before the next Circuit Court at Victoria West until the 12th March, a letter was written by his attorney on the 23rd February, asking that the trial should be fixed for the next Circuit Court to be held at Victoria West. On the 26th February, the Law Department replied, saying that the trial would be fixed to take place at the Victoria West Circuit Court. The applicant had had ample time to produce his witnesses since then. Then again he said that he wanted to bring as witnesses Major Bakeman and Colonel Birkbeck. He (Mr. Jones) would submit to the Court that their evidence would be entirely immaterial to the issue. Vyner was charged at Bow-street Police Court, and certain evidence was taken on the warrant under the Fugitive Offenders Act. These officers made certain statements, and certainly the affidavit was quite incorrect when it said that Colonel Birkbeck's evidence would show that these receipts which were put in were genuine receipts. The question really was as to the genuineness or otherwise of these receipts; that was the question that the jury would have to decide.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I understand that the Attorney-General does not oppose the removal to the next Criminal Sessions.]

That is so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The materiality of the witnesses need not therefore be considered at the present stage.]

Mr. Wilkinson replying to his lordship, said that he did not know whether the defendant could be ready for the next Criminal Sessions, but he would certainly be ready for the sessions following.

De Villiers, C.J., said that, on condition the applicant entered into a personal recognisance in the sum of £1,000, in addition to the present sureties of £250 each, the Court would remove the trial from the Circuit Court at Victoria West to the July Sessions of the Supreme Court.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Honourable Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BRITISH S. A. ASPHALT CO. } 1904.
V. CAPE TOWN GAS CO. { Mar. 21st.

Interdict — Action — Notice to third persons interested.

On an application by motion to restrain the respondents from supplying goods to N. in breach of an undertaking not to supply such goods to others than the applicants, it appeared that no notice of the application had been given to N., and that the respondents were quite able to pay damages for the alleged breach.

Held, that the applicants should proceed by action, giving notice thereof to N., to enable him, if so advised, to intervene as co-defendant.

This was an application for an interdict, pending an action, restraining the respondent from supplying certain quantities of coal tar to Messrs. Nuttall and Co., and other persons under an agreement entered into with the applicant in August, 1903, for the supply of coal tar.

The affidavit of the secretary of the applicant company stated that in August, 1903, an agreement was entered into by which the Asphalte Company agreed to purchase coal tar from the defendant company, the applicants to take a minimum quantity of 80,000 gallons per annum, with the right to purchase the surplus, after small customers had been supplied, at the rate of 2d. per gallon. In January, 1904, the respondents failed to supply the applicants with the desired quantity, but in February they had supplied Messrs. E. Nuttall and Co., a competing firm, that had succeeded in obtaining a contract against the applicants, with larger quantities of coal tar than was contemplated in the agreement.

Correspondence was put in to show that repeated applications had unsuccessfully been made at Woodstock and Cape Town for coal tar, which the respondents failed to supply.

The answering affidavit of the manager of the gasworks stated that the applicants must be making a mistake, as there was a large quantity of coal tar on hand during the month of January. The schedule put in showed that from Aug. 1903, to February, 1904, the applicants received during the seven months 45,110 gallons out of a total of 110,000 gallons. Messrs. Nuttall and Co. were being supplied with tar at the ordinary price of 4d. per gallon.

The replying affidavit of the secretary of the applicant company, stated that he had personally applied at the gas company's office in December, January, and February last, and was informed that there was no coal tar. Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the applicants) said that it seemed to him from the respondent's affidavit, that they took up a very different view of their obligations under the contract from that of the applicants. The respondents claimed that at any time they could show an average of 6,500 gallons a month, they were entitled to supply anyone in any quantity they liked at 4d. a gallon under the contract which they should supply to the applicants at 2d. a gallon. He contended that the applicants were entitled to get all the surplus coal tar after the small customers had been supplied. It was clear that the respondents were supplying Nuttall and Co. with considerable quantities, while the applicants were not even getting their minimum.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the respondents) said that clause 9 of the contract gave the applicants the first right to purchase from the Gas Company at the price of 2d. per gallon whenever there might be over 80,000 gallons not disposed of in the ordinary course. The whole point was one of largeness of quantity, and it would be proved that as far back as 1897, the Asphalt Company received as large a quantity as Messrs. Nuttall and Co. There was no evidence to show that Messrs. Nuttall and Co. were a competing firm. The case was not one for an interdict. Nuttall and Co. became customers after the contract was entered into, paying 4d. a gallon; and he contended that when the call came into the office the applicants were not entitled to say they would take the whole of the surplus at 2d. a gallon.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court is asked to make an order interdicting the respondents from making further sales to Nuttall and Co., who have received no notice of this application. It is not suggested that the respondents would be unable to pay damages for any breach of contract on their part, and I consider that this is a case in which the applicants should proceed by action instead of motion. There are several questions of fact which could be more conveniently decided on oral evidence. The order therefore which the Court will make is that the applicants proceed by action, and that notice be given to Nuttall and Co. in order that they may intervene if so advised. The notice of motion may stand in lieu of summons with leave to the plaintiffs to insert in their declaration a claim of damages.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Herold and Gie; Respondents' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissonne.]

Ex parte HAZELL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Alexander moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment, in the interest of the creditors, of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Wm. Askew Way. Petitioners were appointed as curators bonis in the estate of Way, and as assignees of the assigned estate of Wm. Preston Buchanan they found the latter was a creditor to the estate of Way. Rent was accruing in the latter estate, and, in order to prevent unnecessary expenditure, it was essential a provisional trustee should be appointed.

Application granted. Thos. Herbert Hazell to be provisional trustee.

CITY TRAMWAYS CO. V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL.

Valuation Court Over valuation —Mistake—Review.

This was an application to amend a certain valuation on the applicants' property in Sir Lowry-road. The affidavit of John Edward Lloyd, manager of the Tramway Co., stated that on the 10th February last, at the Interim Valuation Court, held in Cape Town, £73,000 was placed on the applicants' landed property in Sir Lowry-road. The year previous the valuation was £36,100. It was stated in error at the Court that £37,000 had been spent on improvements, but the actual sum expended was about £17,383.

The minutes of the proceedings of the Valuation Court showed that Mr. Moller valued the property at £80,000, and Mr. R. E. Ball appeared before the Court on behalf of the company, and was understood to say that £37,000 had been spent on improvements. It was reduced to £73,000, and then Mr. Syfret appeared, and an application from him to have the matter reopened was refused. An affidavit from Henry Moller set out that if he had known that £17,000 had been spent on improvements it would not have affected his valuation.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for applicants. Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for respondents.

Sir H. Juta contended that under the section Mr. Moller had made a mistake in revaluing the whole of the ground. What he should have done was to value the improvements, and not the whole of the property.

Mr. Schreiner urged that the Valuation Court's decision in this matter was final, and that there was really nothing before this Court to be reviewed. He admitted that if his learned friend had produced the affidavit that he now produced before the Valuation Court, there might have been great weight in it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But does not it still further prove that there was an over-valuation, which is the question?]

Mr. Schreiner: I submit not. Your lordships do not sit in review of valuations in appeals where there is an over-valuation. If there is an irregularity in the proceedings, such as the Court would deal with in other cases—

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then an interim valuation can only be made of any buildings erected or improved?]

Mr. Schreiner: Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They have valued other buildings than those erected or improved; isn't that a subject of review?]

That would be subject of review if it had been subject of first instance, but it must be subject of first instance before it can be reviewed.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is perfectly clear to me that the valuation was made by mistake. It was represented to the Valuation Court that since the last valuation £37,000 had been expended. The amount expended for three years had been £37,000. The amount expended since the last interim valuation was only £17,383, and if that fact had been brought to the notice of the Court, it would have reduced the amount of the valuation to £53,483, instead of £75,000, and on that ground I think that the reduction ought to be made.

ADMISSION.

{ 1904.
{ Mar. 22nd.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Johannes Wilhelmus Jacobus Wesel Roux as an advocate.

Application granted and oath administered.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

NIEUWOUDT V. REGISTRAR OF DEEDS.

Petition—Transfer—Act 19 of 1891.

A farm was owned by several proprietors in undivided shares, and a partition was effected by which the applicant and two other proprietors obtained a share, divided from the shares of the remaining proprietors, but the share thus obtained by the applicant and two proprietors remained undivided as between them.

Held, that the 12th section of Act 19 of 1891 was not applicable to the applicant's undivided portion.

This was an application on notice of motion to the Registrar of Deeds for an order authorising him in terms of section 12 of Act 19 of 1891, to allow transfer to be passed in favour of the petitioner of the share awarded to him along other owners of land in the division of Van Ryn's Dorp in substitution of the undivided share hitherto held by him, and upon which there was a mortgage of £1,300.

The petition of Gert Albertus P. Nieuwoudt was as follows:—

1. Petitioner is joint owner with Johannes A. J. Kotze and nine others in a certain quit-rent farm called "Melkboom," in the division of Van Ryn's Dorp.

2. Petitioner and the other co-owners of the said farm are now about to partition the same, and petitioner and Gessie M. Nieuwoudt, Albertus P. G. Nieuwoudt, Stephanus F. Nieuwoudt (a minor), and Sarah J. C. L. Nieuwoudt (a minor), will hold in joint ownership a certain defined portion of the said farm "Melkboom," being lot 5 called "Driefontein."

3. At the date of the original agreement of partition and survey, it was arranged and agreed between the co-owners of the farm "Melkboom," that this lot No. 5 aforesaid, should be awarded to the estate of the late Sarah J. Nieuwoudt, who was one of the co-owners.

4. Petitioner and the others referred to in par. 2, are heirs of the late Sarah J. Nieuwoudt, and having obtained transfer after actual survey and execution of the agreement, are compelled to take the share awarded by agreement to the estate of the late Sarah J. Nieuwoudt.

5. Petitioner has mortgaged his undivided share in the said farm as at present held by him to one Petrus B. Van Rhyn, of Van Rhyn's Dorp, for £1,300, and in connection with and under terms of sec. 12 of Act 19 of 1891, has obtained the consent of the mortgagee to a partition transfer of the said farm upon the consent of the mortgagee produced to him.

6. Petitioner is desirous that the Registrar should under terms of the said sec. 12 pass a partition transfer of the said farm endorsing upon his transfer deed the existence of his present bond.

Wherefore the petitioner prays that your Lordships may be pleased to grant an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds under terms of sec. 12 of Act 19 of 1891, to allow transfer to be passed to your petitioner of the share awarded him and the other co-owners of the said lot No. 5, called "Driesfontein," notwithstanding that the bond in favour of the said Petrus B. Van Rhyn remains uncanceled, and authorising the Registrar in terms of sec. 12 of Act 19 of 1891, to endorse on such bond that his one-fifth part of such divided share is in terms of the section substituted for the undivided share previously held by the owner; to make an entry of such substitution in the Debt Registry; and to endorse on the transfer of such divided share that in terms of this said section it is mortgaged by this bond.

The usual verifying affidavit was annexed, and the affidavit of the mortgagee stated that he consented to the granting of the petition.

The Acting Registrar of Deeds, in his report, strongly opposed the granting of the petition, chiefly on the ground that under section 12 of Act 19 of 1891, only, a divided, or defined share can be substituted for the undefined share previously mortgaged. (See Foster's Practice of the Deeds Registry, 2nd edition, p. 18). The Acting Registrar suggested that the simplest course open to the petitioner was to obtain the release of his one-half 4th share, conditional on his passing a bond for such sum as the mortgagee might require on the 5th share in lot 4, allotted to him on partition.

Mr. Benjamin, for applicant. Mr. H. Jones for respondent. Counsel having been heard in argument, De Villiers, C.J.: The applicant does not appear to me to be the owner of a divided share, such as was contemplated by the 12th section of Act 19 of 1891. There has, it is true, been a partition of the land, but the share awarded to the applicant, and two other co-owners, still remains undivided as between them.

The applicant, therefore, does not separately hold a divided share, and it is only to such a separate holding that the section is applicable. The application must, therefore, be refused, but as the practice of the Deeds Office has been somewhat inconsistent, there will be no order as to costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Attorneys for the Registrar of Deeds: Reid and Nephew.]

Ex parte KING BROS.

Mr. McGregor moved as a matter of urgency for an order restraining one Rowan from selling a certain farm at Durbanville, the property of the petitioners. The respondent had a lease of the property for two years, with an option of purchase for £1,750. The time expired on the 31st inst., and the respondent had now advertised the farm for sale, although he had never exercised his option.

An order was granted, calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from selling the property, unless he shall before the lease expires exercise his option mentioned, this rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime.

COHEN V. CARN.

This was a motion by the plaintiff in a certain action to be brought to fix a date for trial by jury, and by the defendant in the action calling on the plaintiff to furnish security for costs and removal of bar.

The application was on notice of motion calling on the plaintiff to show cause why he should not be ordered to furnish security for costs in the suit, and why the bar should not be removed, and an extension of time given to the defendant in which to plead. The action was one for £5,000 damages for defamation of character. In the summons plaintiff stated she was domiciled in Cape Town and Johannesburg, but in the declaration her residence was given at 61, Long-street, Cape Town, where the defendant was unable to find her. Her husband was at present working in Johannesburg.

The affidavit of Clara Cohen, the plaintiff, stated that her husband was only temporarily in the Transvaal, and this was further supported by the affidavit of Morris Cohen and his employer, William Patrick.

A replying affidavit stated that in a recent suit the plaintiff's daughter was described as domiciled in Johannesburg.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, J.C.: held that the plaintiff was not an incola of this country, and ordered that the plaintiff be barred from further proceeding with the suit until she furnishes security for costs to the extent of £100, to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court, the bar against the defendant to be removed, and the extension of time to plead to be given until forty-eight hours after security for costs shall have been given, the plaintiff to pay the costs of the applications.

HILLS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application by the plaintiff and the defendant for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on a judgment of the Supreme Court, with respect to the disposal of certain moneys and securities.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for the plaintiff in the action, and Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), was for the defendants.

Leave was granted to the plaintiff and the defendants to appeal on the usual terms, in the meantime the judgment in favour of the plaintiff to be carried into effect, subject to security being given by him or on his behalf, costs to be costs in the cause.

RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS
V. WALKER.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for leave to sue John Walker, and the firm of John Walker and Sons, London, by edictal citation in respect of a certain partnership in the Grand Junction Railways.

Leave granted, returnable 1st June, personal service to be effected in the case of John Walker, and service at the office of John Walker and Sons, London, the property to be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte EDWARDES. { 1904.
Mar. 23rd.

Attorney and Notary—Appointment of extra Colonial examiners.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to be examined at Bloemfontein, O.R.C., for admission as an attorney and notary of this Court by such persons as the Court may deem fit, the petitioner suggesting Mr. Advocate Blayne, Mr. Attorney Fisher, and Mr. Attorney Van Zyl as examiners. Mr. Gardiner appeared for the Law Society to oppose.

Mr. Gardiner said he understood that the application for the appointment of the petitioner as a notary was to be dropped.

Mr. Benjamin: I have no instructions upon the point.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that there had been no good ground shown for extending to the applicant the privilege of examination outside the Colony. Indeed, in his alternative prayer, the petitioner asked, in case he could not be examined in Bloemfontein, that he should be examined by the examiners appointed in Cape Town for the purpose. As to the examination of a notary outside the Colony, counsel said he was not aware of any case where that privilege had been extended.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the gentlemen all seemed to be practitioners of this Court, and, on the whole, he thought that the application should be acceded to for the appointment of these gentlemen as examiners. Still, he thought that the Law Society was justified in appearing, so that the application should not be granted with costs. There would be no order as to costs.

Ex parte VICE.

This was an application for leave to raise £300 on mortgage on a certain farm of which petitioner has the life usufruct. The money was stated to be required for fencing and for a complete outfit of farming implements, as the applicant, after having let the farm for several years, now proposed to work it herself, with the help of her son.

The Master recommended that the applicant be allowed to raise such sum as may be actually necessary for the above purposes; such sum not to exceed £300.

On the motion of Mr. W. P. Buchanan the Court granted an order in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte STEYTLER AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, on behalf of the executors, for an order confirming the sale to him of certain property in the estate. The price paid was £880, and the Divisional Council's valuation was £665.

Order granted as prayed.

CRAWFORD V. CRAWFORD.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to make absolute the rule nisi allowing petitioner to sue in forma pauperis.

Rule made absolute accordingly, counsel accepting the appointment, and Messrs. Findlay and Tait being appointed attorneys.

Ex parte THE CONSISTORY OF THE UITENHAGE DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why could not this application have been made to a judge in Chambers in the usual way?]

Mr. Gardiner said he was not aware of the reason.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It may be doubtful whether it falls under the denomination of a sale. However, a rule will be granted, to be published once in a Uitenhage newspaper, and once in a Port Elizabeth newspaper, and to be returnable on the 15th April.

VAN DER HEEVER V. VAN DER HEEVER.

This was an application for a contribution towards prosecuting an action for divorce and for alimony. The matter had practically been arranged between the parties, respondent agreeing to pay the sum of £50 towards alimony and the expenses of an action to be brought by the petitioner. Mr. Close moved for an order in these terms, costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

Mr. Benjamin (for the respondent) consented.

Order granted by consent, directing the respondent to pay to the applicant's attorneys the sum of £50 towards expenses of action and for alimony.

Ex parte VAN DER WESTHUYSEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the registration of certain property in the name of petitioner, who was executor in the estate, from whom he had purchased at public auction. The purchase price was £3,005, and the Divisional Council's valuation was £1,400.

Order granted.

Ex parte JAMNECK.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order sanctioning the sale of certain property to petitioner in an estate of which he was executor dativo.

Order granted.

ESTATE RIX V. ESTATE CLEMENTS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the sale of certain property. Petitioner had a mortgage bond on the property of the respondent estate for £450, and there was an allegation that the executor of the property would not take action in the matter. Petitioner obtained judgment, and had the property hypothecated declared executable. The defendant property was put up to public auction by order of the Sheriff, but no bid was received, and a private offer of £460 had now been received, which it was desired to accept; also for the sum of £60, which the executor had paid into the Guardians' Fund, to be paid out again.

After hearing the Master, who did not oppose,

De Villiers, C.J., granted an order authorising the sale of the property privately, and payment of the sum of £60 out of the Guardians' Fund by the Master.

Ex parte ODENDAAL.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the signature of certain documents on behalf of a minor.

Order granted.

Ex parte THE CAPE MARINE SUBURBS,
LTD.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the cancellation of certain sales. The respondents bought at public auction from the applicants two lots of property at Camp's Bay for £715 and £330 respectively, and had failed to comply with the conditions of sale, having made no payment towards the purchase price. The whereabouts of the respondents were unknown. Counsel applied for a rule nisi, calling upon the respondents to show cause why the sales should not be cancelled.

A rule nisi was granted, calling upon the respondents to show cause why the sale should not be cancelled, rule to be published once in each of the three Cape Town daily newspapers, and to be returnable on the 15th April.

Ex parte BOUWER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising petitioner to join in the subdivision of certain property in which minors were interested. Petitioner was married in community, and the property in question was situate in the division of Somerset East.

Order granted, the final sub-division to be subject to the approval of the Master.

Ex parte VENTER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to pass a mortgage bond upon certain property bequeathed to a minor. The minor was entitled to a fourth share in certain property, subject to the payment of his quota of the sum of £1,256, and a sum of £200 beyond the money already standing to his credit would be required to enable him to take up his portion of the property. Petitioner, as guardian, asked leave to raise that sum on mortgage on the property bequeathed.

The Master's report was favourable. Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte WILLIAMS AND WIFE.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of petitioners, for an order authorising the registration of a contract to exclude community of property, giving the same privileges as if the parties had had the same registered prior to marriage. The parties, it appeared, were married in England, but the first-named applicant was domiciled in the colony. Prior to the marriage, arrangements were entered into for an ante-nuptial contract, and a deed of settlement.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LE ROES.

This was an application for an order authorising the cancellation of a mortgage bond on the estate of the petitioner. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the applicant. Petitioner was a farmer residing in the division of Prince Albert. In May, 1900, he instructed one Daniel Jacobus De Wet to raise a loan of £200 on his farm. The said De Wet raised the money in June, and petitioner passed a mortgage bond in favour of De Wet's minor son. In the beginning of 1901 he received notice from De Wet, senior, to pay the £200, together with interest, which was done, and the bond was handed over for cancellation. Since then, another loan of £400 had been raised, but petitioner was unable to pass the bond, the Registrar refusing to do so because the one for £200 was still open. The affidavit of J. M. Theunissen, who acted for the petitioner in the first matter, set out that the money was paid to the father bona fide.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte HILDEBRANDT.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to sue the respondent, Eugene Hildebrandt, husband of the applicant, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing that a decree of divorce, with custody of the minor children. On the 15th April, respondent, who was employed at Wynberg Gaol, received a letter from Germany that his mother was seriously ill. He drew all his money from the bank, obtained six months' leave of absence, and proceeded, via Natal, to Germany. Petitioner had received letters from Natal, but for eleven months she had never heard from him, and she was unable to obtain any information about him. Previous to leaving, respondent had become very intimate with the assistant-matron of the gaol, and he had openly avowed his affection for her. She had surreptitiously left her home for Natal, and petitioner believed that respondent and she were living together.

Leave granted, the citation to be returnable on the 1st June, and to be served personally with the notice of trial.

SEDGWICK V. SEDGWICK.

This was an application for the cancellation of respondent's appointment as trustee under a certain ante-nuptial contract. Mr. Van Zyl appeared for the petitioners. The parties were married without community of property in Cape Town in 1879, and the respondent had been appointed to fulfil a certain trust under the ante-nuptial contract. In December, 1903, the partnership in the firm of Sedgwick and Co. was dissolved, and owing to a certain amount of friction with Charles Frederick Sedgwick, it was desirable that another person should be appointed as trustee. The name of Harry Gibson had been suggested.

Order granted, Mr. Gibson to act as trustee.

COLEMAN AND CO. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an argument on exceptions. The declaration filed by the plaintiffs set forth that on 23rd, 24th, and 25th September they entered into certain contracts with the defendants, whereby the latter undertook to convey certain cases of butter, sausages, fruit, and tinned meat at tariff rates. The plaintiffs duly carried out their part of the contract, but the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully failed to deliver the goods to their consignee at Kimberley. The goods were valued at £264 10s. The exception was taken under Rule 330, that the declaration was embarrassing and bad in law, inasmuch as the several distinct claims had not been specified, nor was the name of the consignee given.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Howel Jones), was for the applicants (defendants), and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondents.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: In the consideration of this exception, the Court will be justified in looking at the pleadings which precede the present declaration. I find there was a declaration in exactly similar terms to the present declaration, with the exception that in the former declaration the dates are fixed at the 23rd January, 1901, and the 28th December, 1902. Then an exception was taken in exactly similar terms to the present. The validity of the exception was recognised, because the declaration was withdrawn, but a fresh declaration was filed in exactly the same terms, except that the dates are altered, the 23rd September, 24th September, and 25th September, 1901, being substituted for 23rd January, 1901, and 22nd December, 1902. That affords some reason for supposing that the plaintiffs themselves do not know what they are suing for. In considering this great discrepancy between the dates, the defendants are justified in pleading this section, and asking for something more specific. I think, therefore, that the exception should be allowed, with costs, with leave granted to the plaintiffs to amend their declaration.

LEVY AND ANOTHER V. } 1904.

Rent—Breach of condition by lessor—Cancellation of lease —Damages—Rent.

In an action for rent the defendant filed a counter claim for damages alleged to have been sustained by him by reason of the plaintiff having let adjoining premises to a fruiterer in breach of a condition of the lease. The counter claim, however, was withdrawn, but the Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff having broken a condition of the lease, was not entitled to rent.

Held, that as the defendant remained in occupation, and did not claim a cancellation of the lease and had withdrawn the counter claim for damages, the Magistrate ought to have given judgment for the amount of the rent.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, by which the plaintiffs' (now appellants') claim for a month's rent was dismissed, with costs.

The defendant was sued by Morris Levy for £10 10s., being the amount of a month's rent for certain premises situated on the Main-road, Wynberg. The defendant put in a counter-claim for £20 damages for breach of contract, by reason of the plaintiffs allowing another fruit shop to be opened in the same block. This claim, however, was withdrawn, and the Magistrate found that there had been a breach of agreement, and gave a verdict for the defendants, with costs.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for the appellant) argued that as the counter claim had been withdrawn the Magistrate could not take that into consideration. The respondent had occupied appellant's premises and was clearly bound to pay rent for them.

Mr. Benjamin (for the respondent) argued that the appellant had broken his contract by letting the neighbouring shop. He had put an end to the contract and therefore could not claim rent under it.

De Villiers, C.J.: This was an action for rent by the lessor in respect of his premises, under written contract of lease, the rent payable being £10 10s. a month. The lessor thus sues the lessee for the month's rent, and there is a claim in reconvention for damages by reason of the lessor having broken a covenant of the lease, which is in the following terms: "The lessor agrees not to let any of the three shops as fruit shops, or general dealers' shops." Unfortunately, the defendant withdrew his counter-claim, and there is nothing left for the Magistrate to act upon. He was bound to give judgment for the amount, the counter-claim being withdrawn. Nothing was said about the abatement of rent on the ground that this fruit shop was carried on in the premises near it. There were only two ways of raising this question. The defendant could have claimed a cancellation of the lease on the ground that the lessor broke a covenant of the lease, or else he could claim damages. He remained in occupation of the premises and adopted the second course, but withdrew the claim. Then there was nothing left for the Magistrate but to give judgment for the plaintiff for the £10 rent. I am afraid I must reverse the judgment, and alter it into one for £10, with leave to the defendant to bring his action for the damages, or for the cancellation of the lease. It is suggested that the Magistrate practically in his judgment gives £10 damages, but I don't think that can be held, because upon the record there is nothing to prevent the defendant from bringing his action at any time. Judgment will be entered for the plaintiff for the sum of £10 10s., it being clearly understood that the defendant is entitled to bring his action against the plaintiff for breach of covenant. The appeal is allowed, judgment for the plaintiff for £10 10s., with costs in this court, and the court below, without prejudicing any right the defendant may have either to have the lease cancelled or to claim damages by reason of the plaintiff having broken one of the conditions of the lease.

SWARTZ V. OELOFSE.

This was an appeal against a decision of the A.R.M. of Sterkstroom, by which the defendant (now the appellant) was ordered to return a certain cow and bull calf, the property of the respondent, or to pay the value thereof, £20.

The evidence for the plaintiff showed that the defendant came to his farm to look for the cow, and said he had lost it twelve months. He said nothing about the bull, and took both away. Defendant's evidence went to prove that he had given the cow to one Tom Baaba, a witness of the plaintiff, who was not produced at the trial, to keep for him for a certain time. The Magistrate in his reasons said the plaintiff's evidence, that he bought the cattle from Baaba, was corroborated by his brother. The defendant did not press Baaba to return the cattle, and the defendant's evidence was contradicted by another witness. He held there was spoliation, and not sufficient evidence to establish the defendant as owner of the cattle.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court must remit the case to the Resident Magistrate's Court to take the evidence of Tom Baaba, either orally, or by means of interrogatories, costs to be costs in the cause.

Partnership—Principal and agent
—Plea in abatement—Liability of partner for goods supplied to firm.

In an action against two members of a firm, the defendant, one of the members, took the objection that he was not liable, as the plaintiff had in the first instance debited the other member alone in their books. It appeared from the evidence that the goods had been ordered on behalf of the firm, that they had been delivered to the firm for the purpose of a contract entered into by the firm, that the firm had received the amount of the contract and that the defendant had himself written to the plaintiff on behalf of the firm, promising to pay the amount claimed.

Held, that the fact of the plaintiff's having in the first instance debited the defendant's partner alone did not prevent them from rectifying the mistake and afterwards suing the defendant also.

Guardian Insurance Company
v. Lovemore's Executors distinguished.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Acting Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape.

In the court below respondents sued Reid and Murray for the sum of £71s. 4d. for goods sold and delivered. The exception was then raised by the defendants that there was no partnership between them in respect of the purpose for which the goods were supplied, the goods being supplied to Reid personally. Evidence was taken in the court below on this exception. Plaintiffs, however, stated that Mr. Murray had never ordered goods personally, but when an account in the name of Reid and Murray was sent to him he did not dispute it, but only observed that he could not attend to the matter then. Plaintiff alleged that the goods were ordered by Reid, who stated that they were to be charged to Reid and Murray.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, stated that exception was taken to the summons on the ground that the estate of the late Andrew Reid was solely responsible for the debt. After hearing the evidence and defendant's own admissions, the Magistrate had no doubt that the contract for the work—for which the goods were supplied—was a partnership transaction, and the goods were supplied for the partnership, and therefore he gave judgment for plaintiffs.

Mr. J. H. De Villiers for appellant;
Mr. Benjamin for respondents.

Mr. De Villiers argued that the contract of sale and purchase was between the respondents and Reid. They debited the goods to Reid, and knew nothing whatever of Murray in the transaction. Counsel referred to the cases of the Guardian Insurance Co. v. Lovemore's Executors (5 Juta 205), and Sellar Bros. v. Clark (10 Juta 168), to show that in such a case only the partners who were known to the vendor to be partners, and who dealt directly with him would be liable for firm debts.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the sole question was whether a partnership existed between Reid and Murray or not. That such a partnership did exist was not seriously denied. Then again these goods had been ordered and used for partnership purposes, and surely the mistake of the respondents in debiting them to one partner would not relieve the other partner from all responsibility. The cases cited for the appellant are by no means similar to this case, and, therefore, are not in point.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 25th.)

De Villiers, C.J.: I have carefully read the evidence, and I see no reason to alter the opinion I formed on the argument. This is an action for goods sold and delivered, brought by the plaintiffs against members of the firm of Reid and Murray, of which firm the defendant Murray is one of the partners. The exception was taken that the defendant was not liable, and evidence was taken by the Court in support of that exception. The evidence clearly showed that a contract was entered into by the firm of Reid and Murray with the Mowbray Municipality for the construction of certain works. The defendant was a member of that firm; Reid gave the order to the plaintiffs for the goods which were ordered for the execution of the contract. The orders, apparently, were given in the name of the firm; the slips which have been produced show that the goods were really ordered for the firm of Reid and Murray, but the plaintiffs in their books debited Reid alone for the amount and not the firm, apparently believing at the time that Reid alone constituted the firm of Reid and Murray. But whatever the reasons of the plaintiffs may have been, it is undoubtedly true that they debited Reid alone with the amount. Subsequently, however, the mistake was discovered, and the account was sent by the plaintiffs to the firm of Reid and Murray. An answer was written on behalf of the firm by the defendant Murray himself. It is headed: "Reid and Murray, contractors, 14, Constitution-street, Cape Town." It proceeds: "Dear Sir,—We shall be able to let you have a cheque at the end of the present month.—Yours truly, Reid and Murray." It is admitted that this was written by the defendant himself, but he said that Reid was ill at the time, and that it was merely in order to keep the plaintiffs quiet; at all events it had the effect of keeping the plaintiffs quiet for some time, because, although this letter was written in July, the action was not brought until some time in November. In support of the exception, reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of the Guardian Insurance Co. v. Lovemore's Executors (5 Juta 205.) In that case there was no evidence that the defendant had been debited by the plaintiffs. It was a case in which credit had been given to another party, not to the defendant, and the Court upon the authority of Pothier and others, held that, "according to the principles of law, a creditor has only an action against him with whom he has contracted, and not against those who have profited by the contract." That view of the law was subsequently confirmed in the case of Sellar Bros. v. Clark, which is reported in 10 Juta, p. 168, where goods having been supplied by the plaintiff to one M. upon his credit alone, and in ignorance of the fact that the defendant was a dormant partner, it was held that the bare fact of such partnership existing in the business did not entitle the plaintiffs to recover the price of the goods from the defendant. In the present case, it is not the bare fact of a partnership that the plaintiffs rely upon; there is the undoubted fact that the order was given to the plaintiffs on behalf of the firm. There are the further facts that the goods were supplied to the firm, that payment was made to the firm, and that when the firm was called upon to pay, the defendant wrote on behalf of the firm acknowledging liability. These are facts which take the case entirely out of the principles laid down in the two cases which have been cited. Although there was a mistake on the part of the plaintiffs in debiting one of the members of the firm alone, they were justified, on subsequently discovering their mistake, in rectifying it, and in suing both the persons on whose behalf the contract was properly made by one of the persons. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, with costs.

BEWBEW V. DENNIS. 1904.
Mar. 24th.

Native law—Custody of illegitimate child.

The plaintiff, a native woman in the Transkeian Territory, had an illegitimate child by the defendant, who was also a native, and she afterwards married another native. Her father gave the custody of the child to the defendant, who paid for its education.

Held on appeal from the Chief Magistrate, that as the case was between natives, native law was applicable, and that the Court below had properly dismissed an action by the plaintiff, claiming the custody of the child.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Chief Magistrate of Tembuland, by which the plaintiff (now appellant) failed to obtain possession of her illegitimate female child, of which the respondent was the father.

The defendant was called upon in the first instance to show cause why he should not deliver the child up to her mother. The child was now twelve years old, and had lived with her mother up to 1902, when the defendant obtained possession of her without consent of the mother.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case it would appear that the child in question was the illegitimate child of an unmarried female, who is undoubtedly a native, and her father was, of course, also a native. She afterwards married, and this illegitimate child was given by the mother's father to the defendant, Dennis, who is the father of the child. The question has arisen as to whether Dennis is also a native, but I gather from the judgment of the Magistrate, who heard the case in the first instance that he considered Dennis was also a native, but by this settlement the real question is one between the father and the daughter, because it was by the father's direction that the child was handed over to Dennis. It is proved according to native law, that it is not the mother of the illegitimate child who would be entitled to the custody of the child, but it is the father of the mother who is entitled to the custody. In itself I do not think that is contrary to morality or public policy. In point of fact, the child was handed over to Dennis. He forthwith proceeded to give the child a proper education, and, according to the Chief Magistrate, this was the object with which the child was handed over by the mother's father to Frank Dennis. This in itself is no improper thing to do, and, unless it is clear that the mother is entitled to the custody of the child, I consider that the Court should not interfere with what was done by the parties. It is quite true that by our law the mother would be the only person entitled to the custody of an illegitimate child, and that the father could have no claim to its custody, but the Magistrate treated the question as entirely between natives and the principal persons concerned in the child and in the decision of this question were undoubtedly natives. This Court should not, therefore, disturb the judgment of the Court below, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Option of purchase — Sale by auction—Interdict.

The respondent held an option to purchase a farm belonging to the applicant at a certain price. Without exercising such option, the respondent advertised the farm for sale by public auction.

Held, that the respondent should be interdicted from proceeding with such sale unless and until he should exercise his option.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi granted against the respondent, restraining him from proceeding with the sale of certain land on which he held an option from the applicants.

The affidavit of the respondent, set out that when he offered the property by public auction, he knew of an intending purchaser. At present he was not in a position to exercise his option, and by the stoppage of the sale, he had suffered damages.

The answering affidavit of the applicants stated that on the morning of the sale there were only three persons present, and none of them were intending purchasers.

Mr. McGregor, for applicants; Mr. Burton, for respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: In giving the respondent an option of purchase I am clearly of opinion that the applicant should never have intended that before that option was exercised the respondent should be allowed to go about hawking this property for sale, or, as he proposed to do, sell the property by public auction. I find an advertisement of a public sale of houses and land at Durbanville on Wednesday, 23rd March, by Messrs. Stamper and Zoutendyk, who are said to have been "favoured with instructions," but the person giving the instructions is not named in the advertisement. It is clear, however, that it is the respondent that gave the instructions. Clearly this advertisement may greatly prejudice the owner of the land. It was not part of his bargain that the property should be hawked about and exposed for public sale. It has been urged that a person may sell property not belonging to him, but it does not follow that he may publicly announce that he will sell such property by auction. The fact that the respondent has the option of purchase does not give him greater rights in this respect. It is quite possible in the present case, that the land may not realise the amount of the option price, in which case the respondent will not exercise his option. In the meantime, however, the applicant might be greatly prejudiced by the respondent's delays with the property. Before announcing the sale the respondent should have exercised his option. The rule calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from proceeding with the auction sale unless he should exercise his option, must be made absolute with costs.

CIVIL APPEALS.

RAPOO V. MAHOMED. { 1904.

Interpleader—Lessor and lessee—
Rent—Hypothec—Delivery.

A lessee of premises, while indebted to the plaintiff as lessor for arrears of rent, entered into an arrangement, by which he sold to the claimant all his goods in the premises, but the sale was on long credit, and the lessee remained in occupation of the premises. The lessor obtained judgment, but upon proceeding to execution, the claimant claimed the goods as his. There was evidence to shew that the sale was a colourable arrangement to defeat the lessor's hypothec.

Held, that the Magistrate erred in giving judgment for the claimant, inasmuch as the plaintiff's hypothec could not be defeated by the arrangement, and that even if the arrangement had been made bona fide, the claimant ought not to have succeeded in the absence of proof of delivery of the goods to him.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Mafeking.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the appellant, Rapoo, obtained judgment in the R.M.'s Court, Mafeking, against one Abrahams for £18 6s. 6d., rent due. A writ of execution was taken out, and under that writ certain property was attached, that property was subsequently claimed by the present respondent in an interpleader action, and the Magistrate found in favour of the respondent Mahomed. Counsel submitted that the goods in question were subject to execution at the suit of the lessor. All the circumstances of the case seemed to point to this, that the transaction between the respondent and Abrahams was not a bona fide transaction, but a transaction for the purpose of defeating appellant's claim, and of depriving the landlord of his hypothec. The demand was sent for the rent on the 31st October, and the alleged sale took place two days afterwards. Mr. Benjamin (for the appellant) contended that even if the transaction were bona fide there was not sufficient delivery to take the property out of the lien of the landlord. He quoted the case of Hulisch v. Hulisch's trustees (2, Sup. Ct. cases, p. 39). He urged that it was significant, that the judgment debtor Abrahams continued to reside on the premises after the alleged sale, and that the purchase price of the goods was to be paid in instalments of £5 a month.

De Villiers, C.J.: While the goods were on the premises in question they were subject to the lessor's hypothec. Notice was given by the landlord to his tenant claiming his rent, and thereafter arrangements were made between the lessee and the claimant, the present respondent, by which all the goods on the premises were transferred to the claimant. It is important in a matter of this kind to notice what the consideration was. The price was £120, to be paid by the purchaser to the seller. It was not, however, an immediate payment, but such payment was to be made in monthly instalments of £5 each, the first of which instalments to be paid on the 31st October, 1903, and continue to be paid at the end of each and every month, until the whole sum of £120 has been paid. For a further contract the purchaser agrees to take over and become responsible for certain debts due to a person in Bechuanaland of £200. The lessee, however, remained in possession of the premises. It seems to have been a kind of understanding between them that the claimant was to take over the sub-lease of the property, but there is evidence which is not contradicted that it was a condition of the lease that the lessee was not to be allowed to sub-let, and it is impossible, therefore, to consider this a bona fide arrangement, that there was to be a sub-lease. I confess I can come to no other conclusion than that this was an arrangement between the lessee and the claimant to deprive the lessor of his hypothecary rights as the landlord. The whole thing seems to me a colourable arrangement. The lessee remained on the premises, and I am by no means satisfied that there was a real agreement that this property was to be sold, but, even if there was, I am by no means satisfied that there was delivery. The tenant really remained in possession, and, as far as one can judge, he continued to exercise control over the property. The whole transaction appears to be a colourable arrangement to deprive the landlord of his rights, and the Magistrate ought, in my opinion, to have found accordingly. The appeal must be allowed, and judgment entered that the property claimed by the claimant is liable to attachment at the suit of the judgment creditor. The appeal is allowed, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Municipal regulations—Kafir beer
—Act 28 of 1896.

The defendant, Municipal inspector, purporting to act under the regulations of the Municipality of A., entered the hut of the plaintiff, a native woman, by force, on the ground that he suspected Kafir beer to be concealed in the hut, but no beer was found. The regulation authorized any person thereto authorized by the Council to enter any hut upon reasonable suspicion of an infringement of any regulation, but there was no regulation relating to Kafir beer. The 8th section of Act 28 of 1898 enacts that any owner of land, upon being satisfied that there is reason to suspect the existence of Kafir beer within any hut, may give written authority to any other person to search such hut, but the defendant had no such written authority from any one.

Held, that the entrance was illegal, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the trespass.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M.'s Court at Aliwal North in an action brought by the appellant to recover damages from the respondent, who is superintendent of the native location at Aliwal North, for alleged forcible entry of her hut or house in the location. The claim was dismissed by the Magistrate. Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the appellant; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent.

Mr. Schreiner (for appellant), said that the appellant sought to recover £20 for damage done by the defendant in breaking into her hut or house, and for excluding her from possession of the hut or house. The actual damage was not considerable, but the case was of very great importance to the plaintiff, and the other inhabitants of the native location at Aliwal North, and the appeal had been brought rather in the way of a test. This man McLeod, who was the Municipal Inspector, it appeared, entered the plaintiff's house without any written authority or any warrant. Section 12 of the Municipal regulations gave certain powers of entry in the event of any infringement of the Municipal regulations in case of reasonable suspicion, but those regulations said nothing as to suspicion of the existence of Kafir beer in the location or a Kafir hut.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was not any Act in force?]

No, not under the regulation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are there no by-laws about Kafir beer?]

Not one. Kafir beer is dealt with under the Act of 1898, known as the Innes Liquor Licensing Act: Coun-disputed items which had been referred to arbitration.

Held, that the Magistrate had properly disallowed the exception, on the ground that the claim was too uncertain to be capable of being set off.

The defendant, moreover, filed a counter-claim for £57, consisting of items clearly owing to him, which had not been included in the reference to arbitration.

Held, that although the amount exceeded the Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction, yet as it did not exceed the amount of the plaintiff's claim, the Magistrate had erred in not allowing the counter-claim.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Stutterheim, in an action brought against the appellant by respondent for payment of £63, with interest, due upon a certain promissory note made on the 27th August, 1903, and due on the 27th November, 1903, which had been presented for payment, and of which the plaintiff was the legal holder. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the appellant; Mr. McGregor was for the respondent.

Mr. Buchanan said that certain exceptions were taken by the defendant at the trial, but the principal point was a ruling by the Magistrate that the defendant was not to cross-examine the plaintiff to show that the latter really owed to the defendant a liquidated amount above the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and, as the result, that the Magistrate could not try the case. The Magistrate practically said that the arbitration was pending, that the award had not been made, and that they should not touch that at all while trying the present case. The Magistrate (counsel contended) should not have tried the case. An arbitration had been sitting, and although the time within which the award should be given had expired, the award had not yet been made known. If the award had been given, then the matter would be settled at once. The whole dispute arose out of certain rights between them as to the Kabousie water right scheme. The parties were brothers. The appellant said he had paid certain sums on behalf of the respondent, and had performed certain work.

Mr. McGregor said he did not know what the appellant's claim really was. On the evidence as it stood, he contended that the Magistrate had acted quite rightly. He put it that the initial error was the defendant's. If the arbitrators should have been more expeditious, he ought not to have used the Magistrate's Court to move them, but he should have moved the Arbitration Court. Other parties were concerned in the arbitration besides the appellant and respondent.

It was quite clear that the debt now sued for was one, the cause of action in respect of which originated after the submission to arbitration, and it is not, therefore, a matter of which the arbitrators could take cognisance if they wished. Counsel also submitted that there was no claim on the part of the defendant before the Magistrate. He contended that the Magistrate was quite justified in holding that the defendant could not bring in any reference to the larger claim that he alleged he had against the plaintiff, and which was the subject of the arbitration. There was, it was important to note, no evidence in support of the defendant's pleas; the accounts were not even sworn to.

Mr. Buchanan said that the question was whether there was a liquidated amount due to the defendant over and above the plaintiff's claim, or at all events, whether the Magistrate was not wrong in overruling the claim in re-convention. The claim in re-convention amounted to £57 6s. 2d., and the claim in convention was £63; so that the claim in re-convention was almost up to the amount of the claim in convention.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But does this claim of £57 6s. 2d. form any part of the arbitration?]

Mr. Buchanan replied that it did not. One could not understand, he observed, how the Magistrate could possibly have disallowed, in face of the evidence given by the defendant, the counter-claim.

Mr. McGregor, in answer to his lordship, said that the plaintiff's position in regard to the counter claim was that the Magistrate found against the counter-claim, and granted absolution from the instance in respect to it.

Mr. Buchanan, in further argument, said that the whole difficulty had arisen because first of all the accounts between the parties had been split up between the arbitration court and the Magistrate's Court, and secondly, the Magistrate would not allow any question relative to the arbitration to be touched at all. He submitted that the parties made the initial mistake, and the Magistrate made the second mistake. The Magistrate, at any rate, ought to have given judgment for the defendant on the counter-claim.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Court below on a promissory note for £63, made by him in favour of the plaintiff. There is no dispute about this amount being owing, the note had been discounted, and the plain-

Principal and agent—Contract on behalf of principal.

The defendant, acting as the agent of a principal, let certain premises to the plaintiff, but the lease could not be carried into effect, and thereupon the plaintiff claimed damages from the agent. The plaintiff was aware at the time he hired the premises that the defendant was acting for another.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed in the action.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court at East London, in an action brought by the respondent, David Pepper, to recover £20 damages for alleged breach of agreement from the appellant, William Fairbairn. Proof of service upon the respondent at his employ in Cape Town was given.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the plaintiff's ground of action was that the defendant, through his agent acting in his behalf, one Deery, let certain premises, 49, Union-street, East London, as a hairdresser's saloon, for six months at £7 per month, possession to be given on the 1st December, 1903. Defendant, in breach of the agreement, refused to give possession on the 1st December or any other date, and plaintiff had been prevented from carrying on his business, being unable to get other premises. Judgment was given by the Magistrate for the plaintiff. Against this judgment the defendant now appealed.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for appellant. Respondent in default.

Counsel said that the appellant Fairbairn was simply the agent of the owner. It was known to the plaintiff when he negotiated with Deery that Deery was only acting as sub-agent, and that Fairbairn himself was merely the agent. Deery at the time was not aware that in another case there was a restrictive clause in favour of another barber (Schultz), which specified that these particular rooms should not be let for a barber's shop. As soon as it came to the notice of Fairbairn, the other lease was pointed out, in which the restrictive clause was contained, and it was impossible therefore to confirm on behalf of the owner the contract which Pepper had provisionally made with Deery. Counsel submitted that the case of Wright v. Williams (8 Jut. p. 166) clearly showed that there was no action against Fairbairn, but that the principal ought to have been sued. Fairbairn, it seemed, was acting for executors in England, and the plaintiff had no doubt been ill-advised in not proceeding against the principal. There had been no refusal of disclosure of the name of the principal.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that the plaintiff knew at the time when the alleged contract was entered into that he was contracting with the agent of the principal; he knew that the defendant was the agent. The contract was made with Deery, who was acting as sub-agent to the defendant to the knowledge of the plaintiff. After the lease had been entered into, it was discovered that there were other occupants of the premises who were carrying on the same business as the plaintiff, and, as the other tenant would object to the plaintiff coming in, the lease could not be carried out. The plaintiff then sought to recover damages from the defendant as agent of the person with whom he contracted. In my opinion, the principle laid down in the case of Wright v. Williams should be applied in the present case. The general rule was laid down that the principal alone, and not the agent, is liable, except in three cases, viz., firstly, where the contract was entered into with the agent of the owner upon the faith of his being the principal (the plaintiff in this case knew that the defendant was not the principal); secondly, where the agent professing to act for his principal had no authority so to act (that exception does not apply); and, thirdly, where the agent expressly bound himself on behalf of his principal (nothing of that kind was done in this case). As none of these exceptions applied, I am of opinion that the Magistrate was not justified in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and judgment entered for the defendant, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

HUMPHREYS V. HUMPHREYS. { 1904.

" 28th.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Set off—Liquidated claim.

The plaintiff sued the defendant on a promissory note for £63, and the defendant excepted to the jurisdiction, on the ground that he had a valid claim for an amount exceeding £63, but his claim consisted of a number of uncertain and disputed items which had been referred to arbitration.

Held, that the Magistrate had properly disallowed the exception, on the ground that the claim was too uncertain to be capable of being set off.

The defendant, moreover, filed a counter-claim for £57, consisting of items clearly owing to him, which had not been included in the reference to arbitration.

Held, that although the amount exceeded the Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction, yet as it did not exceed the amount of the plaintiff's claim, the Magistrate had erred in not allowing the counter-claim.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Stutterheim, in an action brought against the appellant by respondent for payment of £63, with interest, due upon a certain promissory note made on the 27th August, 1903, and due on the 27th November, 1903, which had been presented for payment, and of which the plaintiff was the legal holder. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the appellant; Mr. McGregor was for the respondent.

Mr. Buchanan said that certain exceptions were taken by the defendant at the trial, but the principal point was a ruling by the Magistrate that the defendant was not to cross-examine the plaintiff to show that the latter really owed to the defendant a liquidated amount above the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and, as the result, that the Magistrate could not try the case. The Magistrate practically said that the arbitration was pending, that the award had not been made, and that they should not touch that at all while trying the present case. The Magistrate (counsel contended) should not have tried the case. An arbitration had been sitting, and although the time within which the award should be given had expired, the award had not yet been made known. If the award had been given, then the matter would be settled at once. The whole dispute arose out of certain rights between them as to the Kabousie water right scheme. The parties were brothers. The appellant said he had paid certain sums on behalf of the respondent, and had performed certain work.

Mr. McGregor said he did not know what the appellant's claim really was. On the evidence as it stood, he contended that the Magistrate had acted quite rightly. He put it that the initial error was the defendant's. If the arbitrators should have been more expeditious, he ought not to have used the Magistrate's Court to move them, but he should have moved the Arbitration Court. Other parties were concerned in the arbitration besides the appellant and respondent.

It was quite clear that the debt now sued for was one, the cause of action in respect of which originated after the submission to arbitration, and it is not, therefore, a matter of which the arbitrators could take cognisance if they wished. Counsel also submitted that there was no claim on the part of the defendant before the Magistrate. He contended that the Magistrate was quite justified in holding that the defendant could not bring in any reference to the larger claim that he alleged he had against the plaintiff, and which was the subject of the arbitration. There was, it was important to note, no evidence in support of the defendant's pleas; the accounts were not even sworn to.

Mr. Buchanan said that the question was whether there was a liquidated amount due to the defendant over and above the plaintiff's claim, or at all events, whether the Magistrate was not wrong in overruling the claim in reconvention. The claim in reconvention amounted to £57 6s. 2d., and the claim in convention was £63; so that the claim in reconvention was almost up to the amount of the claim in convention.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But does this claim of £57 6s. 2d. form any part of the arbitration?]

Mr. Buchanan replied that it did not. One could not understand, he observed, how the Magistrate could possibly have disallowed, in face of the evidence given by the defendant, the counter-claim.

Mr. McGregor, in answer to his lordship, said that the plaintiff's position in regard to the counter claim was that the Magistrate found against the counter-claim, and granted absolution from the instance in respect to it.

Mr. Buchanan, in further argument, said that the whole difficulty had arisen because first of all the accounts between the parties had been split up between the arbitration court and the Magistrate's Court, and secondly, the Magistrate would not allow any question relative to the arbitration to be touched at all. He submitted that the parties made the initial mistake, and the Magistrate made the second mistake. The Magistrate, at any rate, ought to have given judgment for the defendant on the counter-claim.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Court below on a promissory note for £63, made by him in favour of the plaintiff. There is no dispute about this amount being owing, the note had been discounted, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover this amount from the defendant. A series of pleas were put in, which really amount to this, that the defendant denies the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, inasmuch as the defendant had counter-claims against the plaintiff in excess of the amount claimed by him. It has been repeatedly decided in this Court that if there are such counter-claims, they are capable of being set off, and would oust the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The difficulty is continually arising, however, as to when a debt can be said to be liquidated, and when it is of such a nature that it cannot be set off. The matter has been so fully discussed that I need not cite all the authorities, but I would simply read what I said in the case of Krug v. Van Vuuren (5 Juta 162) as to what is the best test as to whether a debt is liquidated or not. It was there said: "A debt is liquidated when it is evident that it is due and to what amount, cum certum est an et quantum debeatur. A disputed debt, then, is not liquidated, and cannot be opposed in compensation unless the person who opposed it has proof at hand, and is in a situation to justify his claim promptly, and summarily." So far I have quoted from Pothier, but in the judgment of Krug v. Van Vuuren I added that "until every element of uncertainty has been removed as to the amount opposed in compensation, set off is not allowed." In the present case, it is impossible to say that every element of uncertainty has been removed in regard to the counter-claim of the defendant. It was so uncertain that the parties themselves had to refer it to arbitration, and the whole matter is still under the consideration of arbitrators, and I am by no means certain that the Magistrate was wrong in holding that, so long as that matter was submitted to the arbitrators, he could not enter into any discussion as to any debts included in that claim before arbitrators. But, then, there is a further counter-claim by the defendant. If that counter-claim formed part of the matters submitted to the arbitrators, then it is quite clear that it should be excluded. It appears, however, from the evidence given on behalf of the defendant, that it had no connection whatever with the arbitration, and the plaintiff himself in his evidence admits that these accounts were placed before the arbitrators, and that they refused to consider them. I take it, therefore, that these accounts were not before the arbitrators, and that the defendant, was entitled to set up this counter-claim quite independently of any exceptions which he had raised before. It is treated quite separately from the rest, and if the defendant should succeed in proving this counter-claim of £57 6s. 2d., I am of opinion that the Magistrate ought to allow it. Well, he produced the counter-claim, he produced the vouchers, and it appears to me that the plaintiff's answer to the counter-claim was a very feeble one. He made a general statement of denial, but he did not give such specific denial as to counter-balance the clear evidence given on behalf of the defendant of the existence of this counter-claim. It seems in every respect a valid claim, and the Magistrate erred, in my opinion, in refusing that counter-claim. It is true that it is in excess of the Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction, but where a plaintiff sues on a liquid claim exceeding £20, it has continually been held that the defendant is entitled to make a counter claim not exceeding the amount of the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff's claim in the present case was £63, and the counter claim was £57. I am of opinion therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed so far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned, but that the appeal should be allowed to this extent that instead of absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, viz.: £57 6s. 2d. The effect of that decision in the Court below would have been that there would still have been judgment for a balance in favour of the plaintiff, and, therefore, the order as to costs in the Court below will have to stand, but the respondent will have to pay the costs of the appeal.

GENERAL MOTION.

S.A. BREWERIES V. ESTATE } 1904.
MARTIENSSSEN. } Mar. 28th,

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order to authorise the Registrar of this Court to transmit to the Registrar of the Privy Council a certified copy of the original endorsement made on the 1st November, 1899, by C. W. Corlett, in favour of W. Gourlay and Co., on the lease of the Princess Royal Hotel, entered into on the 8th April, 1899, by the then owner, Ernst Heinrich Martienssen, and the said Corlett, and whereby the rights of the lessee were assigned to the said Gourlay to amend the erroneous copy of the said assignment filed of record as exhibit No. 1 in the suit, S.A. Breweries v. Martienssen (12 C.T.R. 465), so as to conform with the original; and to transmit, correct, a duly certified copy of the Privy Council, in order to be included in the record of the proceedings, concerning which an appeal is now imminent. Counsel explained that there were certain discrepancies between the original endorsement, and the endorsement as printed in the Privy Council record.

He added that notice had been given to the respondents, who, however, did not appear to oppose.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte HADIE.

{ 1904.
{ Mar. 29th.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for an amendment of an order of Court, in the matter of Hadie v. Hadie, appointing Messrs. W. A. Currey and J. E. P. Close as receivers in the joint estate, in the room of Mr. Rous (secretary of the Board of Executors), who declined to act. The plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Steer, agreed to the appointment.

Order granted as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

HIDDINGH V. ESTATE HERTZOG.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), said that he appeared for the defendants, but there was no appearance, he believed, for the plaintiff. When the matter was last before the Court, his lordship made a suggestion that the plaintiff should consent to judgment, and thus save the unnecessary expense of a commission. He had now a consent from the plaintiff to final judgment being entered for the defendants in the action. Notice of the present application for final judgment for the defendants had been given to the plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Peters.

Judgment was ordered to be entered accordingly.

ABEL V. ELLIOT BROS.

Mr. Upington moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of John B. Ries, who was about to leave for England by the mail steamer to-morrow (Wednesday). Mr. M. de Villiers appeared for the plaintiff in the action to oppose.

The affidavit of James B. Ries said that he had been managing the defendant's business in Wynberg, and was so acting when the dispute between defendants and plaintiff arose. Owing to important business he was compelled to leave for England on Wednesday, the 30th inst.

The affidavit of Gideon B. van Zyl, attorney for the defendants, said that Ries was a very material witness for the defence, and that he was not aware until that day (Monday) that Ries was going to England.

The replying affidavit of David Tennant, attorney for the plaintiff, said that on Monday afternoon, the 28th inst., he was served with copy of notice of the proposed application. This was a case in which the plaintiff claimed payment of £715 7s. 6d., being purchase price of certain sheep sold by him to the defendants. In the defendant's plea they raised an allegation that the money was paid to one Storey, who acted for and on behalf of the plaintiff. The issue in this case was whether Storey was or was not the duly-qualified agent. The plaintiff was at present resident at Hopefield, and it was important that he should be present at the Commission. Deponent had no objection to the Commission, provided it sat on a later date, so as to enable the plaintiff to be present. It would be quite possible to have the witness's passage transferred to the next mail steamer or an intermediate boat.

Mr. Upington said that the plaintiff knew what the nature of the witness's evidence would be, because he gave evidence at the Criminal Sessions for the prisoner Storey.

Mr. De Villiers urged that it would be no hardship upon the witness to postpone his departure for a few days.

De Villiers, C.J.: It would be a greater hardship to the defendant if the Court were to refuse to allow this witness to be examined before he leaves than it would be to the plaintiff if he were examined upon imperfect information. After all, if the plaintiff's counsel is unable, owing to the defendants' knowledge of certain facts to cross-examine the witness, that is a matter that may be brought to the notice of the Court when the trial takes place. For the present, I think that the better course will be to make the order as prayed. The costs will be costs in the cause. The Court will appoint Mr. Percy Jones as commissioner, as suggested by Mr. Upington.

RANER V. COLONIAL SECRETARY. 1904.
TARY. { Mar. 30th

Alien—Right of land—Act 47 of 1902—Certificate of Agent-General.

The applicant entered into a contract in England with one S., an alien, under which S. engaged to serve him on arrival in the Colony at an adequate remuneration and for a reasonable period, and a certificate to that effect was given to S. by the Agent-General in terms of the 3rd section of Act 47 of 1902. On his arrival in the Colony, the Government refused to allow him to land, whereupon the applicant moved for an order, compelling the Colonial Secretary to authorize such landing.

Held, that as, independently of the Act, an alien has no legal right enforceable by action to enter British territory, and that as the Act confers no such legal right on aliens, the applicant, as employer of S., was not entitled to the order prayed for.

This was an application by Nathan Raner, of Woodstock, calling upon the Colonial Secretary to show cause why one Von Sever, an immigrant, detained on the S.S. Guelph, should not be allowed to land. The petition stated that Raner was a naturalised British subject, resident at Woodstock, and had been resident in this colony for the past six years. He was an owner of landed property both in Cape Town and Woodstock. On the 9th February, 1904, petitioner entered into a contract of service with one B. M. von Sever, of London. This contract was duly signed by petitioner in Cape Town, and by the said Von Sever at Westminster, before the Assistant Secretary for the Cape Government Agency on the 4th March, 1904. In pursuance of the said contract, Von Sever booked his passage to Cape Town by the steamer Guelph, which arrived here on the 28th inst. Petitioner was informed at his interview with the said Von Sever that, notwithstanding that he had a certificate under section 3 of Act 47 of 1902 from the Agent-General, which he handed up to the authorities here, he had been prohibited from landing in Cape Town by order of the Head Medical Officer. On inquiring for the grounds of such prohibition, he was informed by Mr. Millard, chief clerk in the office, that he was not authorised to state the grounds. Petitioner was informed by the Union-Castle Steamship Co. that the Guelph was returning to England that (Wednesday) afternoon, and that the said company had been ordered to carry Von Sever back to England by the said boat. Petitioner was anxious that Von Sever should be allowed to land in Cape Town, in order that he might carry out the terms of the said contract, especially as petitioner had paid his passage money.

Mr. Van Zyl for Applicant; Mr. Evans for the Colonial Government.

Mr. Evans, replying to his lordship, said they hadn't had time to prepare an affidavit, but the Chief Medical Officer of the Colony (Dr. Gregory) was in court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that perhaps Dr. Gregory would be able to inform them what were the grounds for refusing permission to land.

Mr. Evans said that his submission was that the applicant had no locus standi. The matter was really not before the Court, because the immigrant himself did not make the application. It had been held by the Privy Council that an agent had no locus standi in a matter of this sort. Counsel also quoted the case of Mugrove v. Chun Teong Toy (A.C. 1891, p. 272) and said that it was clear from the judgment of the Privy Council in that matter that a foreign Government had the power to prevent any alien from coming into their territory, just as a private individual had. The Colonial Government were merely exercising the prerogative which was vested in them. He contended that this was really an attempt to get round constitutional law on the part of an employer who a fortiori had no locus standi.

Mr. Van Zyl said that he had not seen the case mentioned by his learned friend, but in the present application, it must be remembered that the person was at the time living in London.

Mr. Evans: He was not naturalised.

Mr. Van Zyl: But in coming here, he was not entering British territory for the first time. Counsel went on to say that he took it that in matters of this kind the conduct of the Colonial Government was entirely regulated by Act 47 of 1902, under which restrictions were imposed against certain persons. This Act enumerated the people whom the Crown had the power to exclude, and Von Sever would not be excluded by its provisions.

Mr. Evans: This is not a question of the Crown; it is a question of prerogative.

Mr. Van Zyl said that, if the Act applied, he took it that all the things required by the Act had been complied with. If this Act had not been passed he could understand that they should fall back on the common law.

De Villiers, C.J.: But in that case there was a Chinese Act, and a Chinaman was excluded, and it was held, quite independently of the Act, that he had no locus standi in any British colony.

Dr. Gregory, in answer to His Lordship, said that Von Sever was a Russian Jew.

Mr. Evans said that Von Sever came out in the early part of the year, but was refused permission to land. He then went back to England, and now apparently this bogus contract had been prepared, and he was again seeking permission to land. The man could only write his name, and even then only in Yiddish.

Dr. Gregory said that Von Sever arrived on the 29th of December, and was refused permission to land.

Mr. Evans said that the applicant, with whom Von Sever had entered into this contract, was Von Sever's uncle.

D. Villiers, C.J.: This is an application made by Raner, of Woodstock, calling upon the Colonial Secretary to show cause why this Court should not grant an order authorising one Von Sever to land from a ship in Cape Town. The ship is about to return to England, and it is necessary that an order on the matter should be made at once. The petitioner does not state in precise terms that Von Sever is an alien, but the case has been argued upon the assumption that he is an alien, and the documents put in support the assumption. The contention of the petitioners Counsel is that inasmuch as Von Sever can produce a certificate signed by the Agent-General in London to the effect that he has been engaged to serve on arrival in this colony an employer therein of repute and at a suitable remuneration, therefore the Government is bound to admit him, and the Court is now bound to grant the order asked for. But the third section of the Act 47 of 1902 which is relied upon only provides that this Act shall not apply to persons of the class described in that section. There is nothing in the Act to show that the ordinary law relating to the admission of aliens is repealed, and that the provisions of this Act take its place. The fact that Von Sever has a certificate might be a reason for his escaping the penalties which are provided by this Act in case he should land in this colony, but it is no reason for applying to him different rules from those which would have been applied if this Act had never been in force.

In the case of Musgrove v. Chun Tcong Toy (A.C. 1891, p. 272), there was an Act under which a Chinese immigrant had no legal right to land in the Colony of Victoria until a sum of £10 had been paid for him. It was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the Collector of Customs was under no legal obligation to accept payment tendered on behalf of any individual immigrant and that, apart from this Act, an alien has not a legal right enforceable by action to enter British territory. "Their Lordships," said the Lord Chancellor, "cannot assent to the proposition that an alien refused permission to enter British territory can, in an action in a British court, compel the decision of such matters as these, involving delicate and difficult constitutional questions affecting the respective rights of the Crown and Parliament, and the relations of this country to her self-governing colonies. When once it is admitted that there is no absolute and unqualified right of action on behalf of an alien refused admission to British territory, their lordships are of opinion that it would be impossible upon the facts which the demurrer admits for an alien to maintain an action." In that case it was the alien himself who brought the action. In the present case it is not even the alien who applies to the Court, but the person who has employed him, and he has no locus standi. Therefore, quite independently of the merits of the case, I am of opinion that this application could not be acceded to. At the same time I am glad to find that there is no intention on the part of the respondent to exclude everyone who is an alien merely on the ground that he is an alien. It would appear that, rightly or wrongly, the respondent considers that he has good grounds for excluding Von Sever. It is said that he is an illiterate. There is no evidence generally, in regard to his qualifications, but certainly as to illiteracy, I find that in the very contract which is before the Court, he has only signed his name in Yiddish. I don't think that it has ever been decided that Yiddish is one of the European languages contemplated by the 22nd section of the Act. The present application must be refused, with costs.

LOBASCHER V. COHEN AND { 1904.
CARN. { Feb. 18th
May 7th.

Partnership — Condition — Account.

The plaintiff signed two promissory notes in favour of L., the consideration alleged being that the plaintiff should become a partner with L. in the purchase and sale of certain Government blankets. The notes were discounted and afterwards paid by L., who handed the notes back to the plaintiff and treated the arrangement as to a partnership as being at an end and sold all his interest in the matter to the defendants. The price of the blankets was paid by the defendants, who employed the plaintiff to supervise the packing and export of the blankets at a salary, which was duly paid. All the expenses of the enterprise were paid by the defendants. There was further evidence that the partnership with L. was to be conditional on the plaintiff's contributing his share of the capital and that the defendants, when they bought the interest of L., were not aware of his previous arrangement with the plaintiff.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim an account of profits from the defendants.

This was an action to recover a certain share of partnership profits; or in the alternative, for a partnership account.

The plaintiff is a Wynberg auctioneer, and the defendants are a city firm of turf commission agents. The suit arose out of the purchase of a large quantity of Army stores, which were sent to England to be sold, and which were there alleged to be infected with enteric germs. The plaintiff claimed to be a partner in the transaction and to be entitled to a third share of the profits, and he sought, by this action, to have it declared that he was entitled to a third, and to have the defendants ordered to furnish him with a partnership account.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, stated that about October, 1902, plaintiff and one Sinclair entered into an undertaking to purchase 20,000 Army blankets and other military stores for £250. The plaintiff provided £25, and, in consideration of this and his services, it was agreed with Sinclair that plaintiff was to receive half of the profits of the sale. About November, 1902, plaintiff and Sinclair purchased 60,000 Army blankets for £960, and plaintiff contributed £418 to the purchase price. It was then agreed that they should take in another party, and that the net profits should be equally divided between the three. Thereupon plaintiff and Sinclair entered into an arrangement with the defendants, and it was agreed that on defendants supplying the balance of the capital they should participate in both the transactions to the extent of one-third share. Plaintiff alleged that he was kept for six months attending to the management and despatch of the stores. The stores were all sent to England, and many were seized there by the medical authorities. In June, 1903, the defendants acquired all the rights of Sinclair, and had refused to recognise plaintiff as a participant in the profits and to render him an account. Plaintiff prayed for an order declaring him to be entitled to one-third share of the profits and for an order compelling defendants to furnish him with an account. He claimed alternatively for judgment for the £483 he had paid in and £800 as remuneration for his services.

The defendants pleaded that they had no knowledge of the transactions between plaintiff and Sinclair. They alleged that about October, 1902, it was agreed between them and Sinclair that if they lent him £250 Sinclair would pay them a third share of the profits. They advanced the money. Subsequently a further agreement was arrived at whereby Sinclair, for consideration, made over to them the whole of his interest in the transaction. They engaged the plaintiff to pack the blankets, and agreed to pay him £100 for his services. The last lot of blankets was shipped by the steamer Goorkha in January, 1903, and, in consequence of enteric germs found in them, the stock was seized by the medical authorities in London, in whose possession it now was. They alleged that there were no profits, and never would be.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers), for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), for the defendants.

Mr. Burton said that the declaration alleged that all the stores were sold in England, but it had now come to the plaintiff's knowledge that a considerable portion of the stores were sold here. He asked, therefore, that the declaration should be amended accordingly.

Sir H. Juta said the defendants knew nothing about any sales here, and were not prepared with evidence on the point.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not see how defendants could be prejudiced by the amendment, and he would allow it. Defendants would, if necessary, be allowed an opportunity of calling evidence on the point.

Sir H. Juta asked for leave to amend the plea, so as to include the statement that none of the stores had been disposed of in the Colony, to the defendants' knowledge.

The amendment was allowed.

Leopold Lobascher, the plaintiff, said that in October, 1902, he had transactions with Sinclair with regard to certain Army stores. Sinclair and witness agreed to put in a tender for stores for £250, the tender being sent in in Sinclair's name. The tender of £250 was accepted, and witness gave Sinclair £40 in cash and a diamond ring of the value of £25. It was arranged that witness should manage the whole affair, and that the profits should be divided equally. Witness engaged a foreman, and supervised the work of receiving the stores and storing them. Sinclair came down occasionally to see the work being done. Subsequently witness heard that another lot was to be sold. He saw Sinclair, and they tendered for 200,000. The military allowed them to take 60,000 military blankets. Witness arranged with Sinclair with regard to these to pay two promissory notes for £209 each. He gave these to Sinclair. These notes had been met through his bank. Sinclair said it would be necessary, on account of the heavy expense, to get more capital, and he said he would see about getting another partner, who would share in the profits to the extent of a third. Sinclair gave witness two documents, stating that he (witness) was entitled to a half-share of the profits. These documents were put in at the Commission. Sinclair subsequently went to Kimberley, having told him before he left that he was to go to defendants for any money he wanted. On Sinclair's return a month later, witness heard of the arrangement to take Cohen and Carn into the venture. Sinclair told Carn that witness should manage the business alike. He also read certain documents to Carn. Witness told Carn he was short of money, and Carn gave him a cheque for £100. It was arranged that witness should manage the business and send the stores to London to Cohen's brother. Witness engaged a number of men to work. He received money from defendants to pay wages. Witness had to employ a man to look after his business in Wynberg. Some of the stores were sold in the Colony, some to Dalgleish, Port Elizabeth, to a man named Collinson, and Douglas and others. The rest of the stores were sent to London. Witness thought 15,000 or 16,000 blankets were sold in the Colony. Carn paid him the £100 in January. Witness was working from October until March, and this sum would be absolutely inadequate as wages for his work. Witness had asked Sinclair and defendants for his share of the profits. After Sinclair left, witness went to the defendants' office, and Cohen said that the £100 was a sufficient remuneration for his services, and that he ought to be satisfied with what he had got. Witness's attorneys sent a letter of demand, replying to which defendants said they were surprised at the demand, as they had never had any dealings with plaintiff. As regarded the payment of the promissory notes, Sinclair himself discharged the notes, as he owed witness money. When witness gave the notes, Sinclair said the money for the stores would be back from England before the notes fell due. Witness insured his interests in the goods while stored here. The date of the policy was the 5th November, 1902. If witness were only engaged to superintend the packing, he considered a fair remuneration would be £100 to £110 a month.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness did not go halves with Sinclair in any betting transactions. Witness had paid £40 into Sinclair's banking account on his behalf as a loan, and had also paid an officer £62, which Sinclair owed. Further, he sold Sinclair a ring worth £25, for which he had not received payment.

How was it you did not ask Sinclair a word about this when Sinclair gave his evidence on commission?—No answer.

You claim to be a partner in this business?—Yes.

Therefore, if the transaction has resulted in a heavy loss, you are quite prepared to pay your part of the loss, and to give back the £100 which you have?—Yes.

You are perfectly well aware that there is a very heavy loss on the transaction?—I am aware that there is a big profit. Mr. Sinclair told me so.

You are aware that these goods were seized in England owing to their containing fever germs?—Yes; but before that, many thousands were sold.

And are you aware that the people to whom they were sold refused to pay for them?—No.

[De Villiers, C. J. (to Sir H. Juta): Are you prepared now to take him in?]

If Mr. Lobascher will show us from his account in the bank that he can pay us a share in the losses, we shall be only too glad to take him in. I am afraid we shall have to bear the loss ourselves.

[De Villiers, C. J.: You mean he won't be able to pay?]

No, he won't, my lord.

In further cross-examination, the witness said the last lot of stores were sent to England on the 30th January. Witness and the men were employed for about four weeks after that putting the place in order. Witness got his own men to do this. Defendants did not pay anything for this.

So that, although you say the arrangement was that Cohen and Carn should pay all these expenses, you generously paid the men out of your own pocket for four weeks' work?—They were my own men.

Lieutenant Fuller deposed that Lobascher and Sinclair came to see him before the latter tendered for the blankets. Lobascher, on one occasion, paid witness a sum of money on Sinclair's behalf. This was in about the beginning or middle of March.

Henry Francis Langenhoven, formerly office boy in the employ of Sinclair, said he copied the notes given by Lobascher to Sinclair, and the documents given by the latter to plaintiff into the letter-book. He remembered seeing Carn, Sinclair, and the plaintiff in the office on one occasion. Sinclair asked witness to get the book into which the documents had been copied, and Sinclair read them over to Carn. He heard Sinclair tell Carn that each one of them should have a third of the profits, that Carn was to pay the expenses, and that plaintiff was to do the work. Witness knew some of these blankets were sold in the Colony.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Sinclair read out to Carn two promissory notes which he had given to Lobascher, and two other notes, the terms of which witness did not remember. He also read another note about a partnership in blankets. Witness had not the faintest idea when this occurred. On all occasions, with this one exception, Carn used to send witness out when he, Sinclair, and Lobascher talked in the office.

Joseph Howell, formerly foreman under plaintiff in dealing with the stores, said he was working on the stores for six or seven months. Plaintiff was in charge of the work in the store. Sinclair and Carn used to come to the store, and witness understood from the conversations that these two and Lobascher were equally interested in the venture.

Jacob Shauban said he let a store in Woodstock to plaintiff on the 10th October, 1902, and he kept it until March. Sinclair paid witness the rent.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Sinclair only paid up to the 10th February.

Claude Norman Morton, clerk in the Bank of Africa, produced certain deposit slips, showing payments made by plaintiff on behalf of Sinclair. There were four in all—one for £40 and the others for £35, £20, and £5.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Sir H. Juta called

James Wallace, clerk in the employ of the Union-Castle Co., who said that certain goods were shipped by Sinclair. There were no shipments after the 31st January. The goods were consigned to Mr. Cohen, of London.

Israel Carn, one of the defendants, deposed that in the beginning of October, Sinclair came to him with a view to his going into a speculation in connection with the purchase of Army blankets. The arrangement was that witness was to take a third of the profits in consideration of his paying £250 for the purchase of the blankets. Sinclair gave witness a promissory note for £256 13s. 4d., on witness giving him a cheque for that amount, which was the price of the blankets. The goods first purchased were put into a store in Woodstock. At this time Mr. Cohen was in England; he had nothing to do with this transaction. Subsequently witness gave Sinclair a cheque for £960, the amount of the purchase price of the second lot. It was agreed that witness should advance the money, and that he should take a third share. It was not until this time that plaintiff came on the scene, being introduced to witness as a man who was used to packing, and who would attend to the packing for a remuneration of £100. Witness agreed to pay this amount on the work being done satisfactorily. In January witness gave Lobascher a cheque for £100, Mr. Sinclair writing out the cheque. Witness made payment to Lobascher from time to time to pay the wages of the men. After the 31st January, witness made no further payments. In November, it was agreed by Sinclair to make over half of the whole profits in consideration of the payment by defendants of £300. Mr. Cohen paid this sum to Sinclair. In April a further transaction took place between witness's firm and Sinclair. They then gave him a further £550, this being made up of a cheque for £250, and the cancelling of a debt for £300, which Sinclair owed the firm. In consideration of this Sinclair made over the whole of the profits to the firm. The witness denied the evidence of plaintiff, and of the office boy. He had never seen the documents showing that Lobascher had a share. Witness did not know of any of the stores being sold in Cape Town; he had received none of the proceeds of such sales if they took place. Before the letter of demand, Lobascher never alleged to witness that he was interested as a partner. Witness was bought out of the business by Mr. Cohen in May last, and had nothing to do with the affair now.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Lobascher did about 2½ months' work.

Elias Cohen said that in 1902 he was in partnership with the last witness in various transactions. He was not here on the occasion of the first purchase, but took part in the second. In November Sinclair, when in Kimberley, was in financial difficulties, and on witness advancing him money he made over a half share on the profits to the firm. Witness did not know Lobascher in the matter excepting that he was engaged to superintend the packing. Witness would not think of advancing £100 on account of prospective profits, though he did not mind standing security. Witness heard nothing about any claim of plaintiff as a partner until the letter of demand was sent. In April there was an announcement that the blankets had been seized in England owing to their being infected. Lobascher did not then come to inquire about the matter. Witness had bought Mr. Carn out of the business. There was a great scare about the blankets, and there was now no market for them. People who bought them refused to pay for them until their claims on the War Office had been settled.

Sir H. Juta: You also put in a big claim on the War Office.

Witness: Yes.

But you are not going to get it.—No.

There are no profits?—No.

And there are not likely to be any?—I don't think so.

In cross-examination by Mr. Burton, the witness said that he claimed on the War Office on the 21st November for 120,000 blankets. He did not know how many blankets went Home; witness believed there were 120,000. They were all blankets in which witness was interested with Sinclair. Witness asked the War Office to take the goods back, to receive from him what he had been paid on account of purchases, and to pay him back the money he had expended together with a little profit to cover expenses. He had received about £350 from the War Office to cover his expenses in connection with the seizure of the blankets. He had been advised that the process of disinfecting the blankets did them no harm. He had received all the blankets back, and the Government had promised him £350 for damage done to the blankets.

Johns, clerk, in the National Bank, gave evidence to show that at the time of the transactions, plaintiff had only a few pounds in the bank.

Mr. Close read the evidence taken on commission for the defence. The evidence of Sinclair was to the effect that he signed the documents given Lobascher a third interest in the profits, but that as he failed to meet the promissory notes given in consideration of this, he told Lobascher that he (Lobascher) would cease to have an interest in the transaction. The payment of £100 was for work done. He made over his share to Cohen and Carn, on the understanding that plaintiff had ceased to have any interest in the affair. In cross-examination Sinclair said that the promissory notes were given by Lobascher in order that the latter should acquire an interest in the transaction. No money was paid by Lobascher to meet these notes. There had been payments made in connection with other matters, of which he could not give details, as they occurred so long ago.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that a day would be subsequently fixed for the hearing of the argument.

Postea (May 7th).

Mr. Burton (for plaintiff): In October, 1902, Sinclair and plaintiff purchased certain army blankets for £250. Thereafter there was another transaction in which a third partner was taken in. Now, the defendant's case is that the plaintiff had no interest in the matter. But it is clear that Sinclair and the plaintiff acted together. Fuller is quite clear that Lobascher was a party to the purchase of the first lot of blankets. In October they bought other 60,000. Cohen and Carn were then taken in to finance the business, as Sinclair and Lobascher did not think that they could carry the matter through. The agreement was that the defendants were to take one-third of the profits, Lobascher one-third, and Sinclair one-third. Sinclair says that he gave the defendants two documents from Lobascher, and he holds that the second of these cancels the first. Lobascher gave these two promissory notes to Sinclair, and Sinclair now says that he paid them.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who is Davidson?]

He discounted the notes for Sinclair. But it is clear that Lobascher paid £157 out of £418.

[Counsel here referred to the evidence of Sinclair to show that the plaintiff gave his services in addition to contributing money.]

I submit that the plaintiff had an interest in this venture, and that he had this interest in November, 1902. Defendants take up the position that the plaintiff was only a packer, engaged at certain wages.

The office boy's evidence is contrary to this contention, and so is Carn's. The £100 paid to the plaintiff on January 15 was simply money paid on account. The evidence of the plaintiff and of the office boy is corroborated by that of Sinclair himself, and directly contradicts Carn's story. He would have us believe that all Lobascher was entitled to was £100 for his services. Clearly the plaintiff's notes had not matured on January 15 when this £100 was paid, and therefore the fact that he had not then met these notes could not have caused him to forfeit his interest in the joint venture. Sinclair's own letter of August 20, 1903, to his wife states that he was suing Cohen and Carn, and that he had paid up for plaintiff in order to preserve plaintiff's interest in the venture. That interest was never forfeited.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Were the defendants aware that the plaintiff was a partner?]

They say they were not, but the evidence as to the interview in November shows that they were fully aware of this.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But what consideration do you say that the plaintiff has given?]

First of all £157 in cash; secondly, his work and labour; thirdly, his promissory notes, though in point of fact they were no part of the consideration, since he had an interest before giving them.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What share do you say that the plaintiff had in the business?]

One-third, and Sinclair and the defendants had the remaining two-thirds. This was a partnership in a particular venture, and no partner could expel another therefrom, save by dissolution of the partnership. See Lindley on Companies.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The partnership may have been conditional on the payment of certain moneys.]

If that was so, it would have to be very clearly proved, and there is no evidence on that point. Part of the consideration was the rendering of services by plaintiff, as Sinclair's evidence shows. He admits that plaintiff had an interest till March 3, but says that this interest was thereafter cancelled. It must, however, be remembered that the plaintiff did work, and gave up his auctioneer's business at Wynberg from October till March 3, and it is not credible that he would have done this for £100.

As to the value of plaintiff's interest. Cohen admits that the War Office has paid £350, and promised other £350; and he has all the blankets, which are none the worse for the disinfecting process. Looking at plaintiff's claim merely as a quantum meruit, £100 would be most inadequate as a price for his interest.

Sir H. Juta (for defendants): The declaration shows that this action is not founded upon partnership. The blankets, full as they are of enteric germs, cannot be put upon the market for many years. Much expense is being incurred in respect of these blankets, and plaintiff took good care to say nothing about a partnership till the score about them was over. There was no partnership; the whole transaction was merely a joint venture.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is not that the same thing?]

No; he claims half-profits in December, but he does not make himself liable for losses. In case of a joint venture, a man is liable only for his share of the capital. Then there is no privity between the plaintiff and defendants. The plaintiff dealt with Sinclair, not with us. Plaintiff's whole story is most improbable. His original declaration said nothing about any blankets having been sold here.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But when he claims one-third of the profits, surely he admits the partnership?]

But he says nothing about losses.

[De Villiers, C.J.: People do not claim losses.]

But the pleader never intended this as an acknowledgment of partnership. He might easily have used the word if he meant it. Plaintiff never regarded himself as a partner, nor did Sinclair consider him one. Sinclair in his letter to his wife speaks of suing Cohen and Carn, after he had handed over everything to them, and he says: "I am going to sue Carn, and if Lobascher does not take care, he will get nothing." The declaration, the conduct of the parties, and all the circumstances show that there never was a partnership. There is certainly no privity of contract as between the plaintiff and ourselves. We have received no consideration from him; and if Sinclair owes him anything, let him sue Sinclair. But the plaintiff does not prove that he paid even to Sinclair the whole sum he was bound to pay.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You admit that he rendered himself liable for the money?]

But he did not pay it; and payment was a condition precedent. It will not do for a man to promise to put £1,000 into a business, and not do so until a large profit has been made, and then to say, "Now I will pay, and want my share of the profits."

[De Villiers, C.J.: How much did the defendants pay?]

Over £1,000 more than the value of the goods bought. The plaintiff cannot succeed even as against Sinclair, and a fortiori not against us; we have received no consideration. Lobascher says he paid certain moneys, but he produces no receipts. As to the £100 transaction, he says he worked for six months. The wages-sheet shows that no wages were paid after January 31st, and the evidence shows that Lobascher was paid in January, although he says that he finished his work in April. If the cheque for £100 had been on account of profits, either that would have been stated in the cheque or the defendants would have taken a receipt.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If Sinclair paid, where was his consideration?]

Mr. Burton: Part of the consideration was the rendering of services.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But surely the money was a very important part of the consideration?]

Sinclair got the money.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes; by discounting the bills and then providing funds to meet them.]

De Villiers, C.J.: This case must be considered first of all as between the plaintiff and Sinclair, and then between the plaintiff and defendants. As between plaintiff and Sinclair there may originally have been an intention to enter into a partnership for the purpose of purchasing the blankets, which were sent to England, and there condemned. As to the payment of the first instalment the evidence is not perfectly clear as to how or when it was made, but Sinclair denied that they were made in respect of the joint venture. When the subsequent purchase was made two promissory notes for £209 each were given by plaintiff to Sinclair, and some documents were given by Sinclair, the first of which was to show that Lobascher was entitled to one-third of the profits, and the second stated that in consideration of two promissory notes, valued for £418, Lobascher was entitled to one-third of the nett profits of the sale of the Government stores bought by Sinclair. I have a very strong impression, that the two documents were really given as security for the two notes. The plaintiff, becoming liable as the maker of the notes, wanted some security, so that in case he were obliged to meet the notes, he could show that he had an interest in the blankets. In point of fact, he never was called on to pay the notes. The whole amount seems to have been paid by Sinclair. Although that took place the notes were allowed to go back into Lobascher's hands. If there was to be a continuing partnership, it seems to me that it would have been proper business on the part of Sinclair to retain the notes, or get fresh notes from Lobascher. But by the dealings between the parties it is clear that there was a complete release by Sinclair of Lobascher of any liability. Well, if there was such a release, it is very difficult to see how any Court could hold that there should be a continuing partnership. The declaration states that the full amount of £483 has been paid by the plaintiff to Sinclair, the evidence shows that this is wholly incorrect, and it has been admitted on behalf of plaintiff that if any money had been paid it was only the sum of £157. Even with regard to that sum the evidence seems to be very unsatisfactory, as to whether any portion of the £157 was intended to be paid in respect of the alleged partnership or not. The plaintiff has been unable to produce any books in support of that. He seems to have kept no books. He is not able to produce any books to show that it was money paid on the alleged partnership. Part of this amount was accounted for by a diamond ring valued at £25. That seems a most peculiar arrangement. The evidence given by the plaintiff is on the whole unsatisfactory, and does not satisfy me that any portion of the £157 has been paid in respect of the partnership. As between the plaintiff and the defendants the evidence of partnership is still more defective. It is true that the defendants paid the plaintiff £100, but that was by way of remuneration for his services in the export of the blankets. Had that amount been paid as share of the profit of the blankets the receipts would have shown that. Cohen and Carn were not such fools that they would not look after themselves and protect themselves if such a partnership existed. I do not think the defendants for a moment thought they were entering into a partnership with Lobascher. Some evidence has been given by a boy as to hearing some discussion about a partnership, but it is very difficult for a boy who hears a chance conversation to rehearse the particular words months after, and I do not place any reliance on that evidence. It appears to me that if there was to be a partnership at all, it was conditional on the plaintiff contributing his share of the capital, his he never did and consequently there will have to be absolution from the instance with costs.

"Cape Times" Law Reports.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN
and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1904.
 { Apr. 15th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of Philip Mason Passawer Percival as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Jacobus Johannes Malherbe as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the admission of John Joseph McGrath as an attorney.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of William Kilfoil as an attorney. Counsel said that applicant had served the further period required by Court.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Magistrate of Incobo.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of William Charles Leonard Hedding as an attorney. Applicant was a Transvaal attorney, and the point was raised at the first application whether there had been any interval between service and admission in the Transvaal. An affidavit had now been sworn.

Mr. Gardiner said he had no instructions to appear at present on behalf of the Law Society.

The case was ordered to stand over till Thursday next, so that due notice may be given to the Law Society.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of John Charles Ries as an attorney-at-law, notary public, and conveyancer.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Johan Neppen as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Dordrecht.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

PRITCHARD V. NEWMAN. } 1904
Apr. 15th.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,500, and also applied for judgment on a promissory note.

Judgment as prayed, the property declared executable, with only one set of costs.

HARRIES AND CO. V. HANIBALL.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Circuit Court at Riversdale.

Order granted.

DIEPNAAM V. NEL.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE TAIT V. HRESEN.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for the sum of £700, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from 26th January, 1903, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

SCHOEMAN V. POTGIETER.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on an agreement of sale for the sum of £300, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from November, 1903.

Order granted, subject to a stamp being affixed to the transfer form if necessary.

ANTESOOSKE AND OTHERS V. STEPHAN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £156 and £7 2s. 3d. taxed costs, less £50 paid on account.

Mr. McGregor said he appeared in a similar application by one Wentzel against Stephan for £47 and costs.

Mr. D. Buchanan said he also appeared in a similar application by one Townsend against Stephan.

Defendant said he acknowledged the debts. He was a broker. He was prepared to pay £15 a month to each applicant. He had landed properties, but all were now under execution. He paid £5,250 for one property and for others he paid £3,150, £475, and £20 respectively. The bonds against the properties were about £8,000. He had no movable property. He had made £600 or £700 a year by brokering, but he had been ill, and had made nothing during the last six months.

Decree granted in each case, to be suspended upon payment of £15 per month to each plaintiff, first payment to be made on the 6th May, and further payments on the 6th of each month until capital and costs be paid.

ESTATE TAIT V. CILLIERS.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £250 and £1,750 (less £250 paid on account), due by reason of non-payment of interest; and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs.

Order granted.

BORMAN V. KETS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a deed of sale for £1,000, entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, representing himself and two others. Plaintiff tendered transfer. There were three defendants, and one was called. Counsel asked for judgment against Kets to be postponed sine die, and for judgment against the other two for their pro rata shares.

Order granted as prayed.

JONES V. HEROLD.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, together with interest and costs, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BUBB V. WEST INDIAN BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £300, with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

NAUDE V. ROBERTS.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, which had become due by reason of non-payment of interest, and for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

SELLAR BROS. V. JACKSON.

Mr. Close moved that the provisional order of sequestration against the defendant be made final.

Order granted.

VAN ZYL AND BUISSINNE V. HARDY.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for the sum of £41 4s. 6d.

Order granted.

WIENAND V. DAVIDS.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of defendant's estate as insolvent. The provisional order was granted on the 2nd April.

Order granted.

STEER V. VIVIERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £25 14s.

Order granted.

HAMILTON V. ALBERT.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a certain cheque made out by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, on which the bank had declined payment.

Order granted.

DE VILLIERS V. HONIKELSKY AND ANOTHER.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate. The order of provisional sequestration was granted on the 17th March.

Order granted, to apply only to the partnership estate.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged.

Provisional order discharged.

ZENDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. WEINTROB.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon unpaid costs amounting to £2 15s. 6d.

Decree granted.

SILBERBAUER, WAHL AND FULLER V. CAPES.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied balance of judgment amounting to £55.

Decree granted.

ESTATE MARKS V. PENKIN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Defendant appeared, but said he had no statement to make.

Order granted.

Mr. Buchanan then moved, on the petition of Mr. E. R. Syfret, in his capacity of trustee in the estate of Marks, for the appointment of a provisional trustee in Penkin's estate, with power to dispose of the perishable goods.

Order granted, Mr. Cilliers, of Somerset West, auctioneer, being appointed provisional trustee.

WEGE V. ALLY.

Mr. Le Roux moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Order granted.

DUMINY V. GAMBA.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, less £340 paid on account, with interest, and for the property remaining under hypothecation to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

WERSELS V. KYLE.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £800, also for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs of suit, the bond having become due and payable by virtue of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

DE BREYN V. LOXTON.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

METROPOLITAN ADVERTISING COMPANY V. TAYLOR.

Mr. Russel moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment for £17 5s. and £4 10s. costs. The defendant had approached the plaintiff and offered to pay the amount in four monthly instalments.

Order granted, but execution to be stayed on condition that the amount be paid in four monthly instalments.

ARDEENE V. BERMAN.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £455, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

ROUF BIR S. V. ZIN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000 and that the property be declared executable.

Order granted.

SYNKER V. ESTATE WESTER-
MAN. { 1901.
{ Apr. 15th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

CAVANAGH V. HANSEN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said he appeared as curator ad litem for the defendant, who was an inmate of the Valkenberg Asylum. There was a dispute in regard to certain property as to whether it belonged to the defendant or his son.

Buchanan, J., said that the defendant's estate would be adjudicated insolvent as prayed. The ownership of the property could be settled in the course of the insolvency.

Mr. Jones said that the defendant was wishful to go to Johannesburg, where he would be cared for by his sister. Counsel thought an expression of opinion from the Court would be of assistance to the medical superintendent.

Buchanan, J.: Defendant appears to be detained in the Asylum on a judge's order until the superintendent discharges him. The question of discharge seems to be left in the hands of the superintendent and the Colonial Secretary. It is far better for him to go to his relative if possible.

FREIDMAN V. BELLMAN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of £550, less £195 paid, and for £7 8s. 2d. costs.

The debtor said that he had paid until recently. The debt was a very old one. Things were bad. The business was carried on by his wife, who was a wholesale jeweller, and for whom he acted as manager. The matter arose out of a business he bought, and which had borne some bad debts. He gave a promissory note, and had paid £150 in interest. The promissory note was now being sued upon. He offered £5 a month.

Hopley, J. (to defendant): What is your estate?

Defendant: I have no estate.

Hopley, J.: Then if they send you to prison you can surrender that estate.

Decree granted, execution to be suspended on payment of £7 10s. per month, first payment to be made on the 15th May, plaintiff to have leave at any time to apply again.

STUTTAFORD AND OTHERS V. HENSON.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

Mr. De Villiers moved for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the interests of the creditors. The name of Mr. Thos. Herbert Hasell was suggested.

Order granted, Mr. T. H. Hasell being appointed provisional trustee.

REVIEW CASE.

REX V. GRIMAN.

1904
1 Apr. 15th.

Act 19 of 1861—Railway bye-laws.

Where a man was convicted of having been found intoxicated on Railway premises, having been previously convicted of drunkenness some six times within the previous year, and had thereupon been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment: the sentence was reduced, on review, to one of 30 days' imprisonment or 40s.

Hopley, J.: A case has come before me for review, in which John Griman was charged before the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town with contravening the 9th section of the Cape Government Railway bye-laws on the 4th inst. The said John Griman was found in a state of intoxication. That was clearly proved, and then some half dozen previous convictions within the previous year were proved against him. The Acting R.M. was under the impression—a wrong impression—that he was being charged with contravening section 9 of the Police Offences Act, and sec. 28 of Act 25 of 1891, and sentenced him to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour. He, however, noticed that the charge had not been under the Police Offences Act, and he called my attention to it. It is clear that the bye-law in question only gives him the right to fine an offender in 40s. or send him to prison for thirty days' with hard labour. If the man had been charged under the Police Offences Act the conviction would have been a proper one; but he was not charged under that Act, and the sentence must be reduced to one of a fine of 40s., or thirty days' imprisonment with hard labour.

REHABILITATIONS.

{ Apr. 15th.

Mr. W. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of Andries Stephanus Viviers. The applicant's estate was compulsorily sequestrated in June, 1899, and the deficiency was £993 15s. 10d. The trustee reported that owing to the deliberate false statements of the applicant, and the state he had kept his books in, it was difficult to know the exact position.

The application was refused, in face of the strong remarks in the trustee's report, the insolvent to apply again in twelve months.

Mr. De Waal moved for the rehabilitation of Hermanus Stephanus Bosman. The estate was surrendered in July, 1896, and there was a deficiency of £718. There was nothing in the trustee's report against the rehabilitation.

Granted.

Application was made for the rehabilitation of George Stephanus de Beer. The estate was voluntarily surrendered in February, 1883.

The matter was ordered to stand over sine die, for the production of a balance sheet.

BUTLER V. BUTLER.

Mr. Gutache moved for leave to sue the defendant by edictal citation for a decree of divorce. The parties were married in London in June, 1886, and after being domiciled in this country, the defendant went to England, and took with her an only daughter, and the applicant had not seen her since 1897. He had reasons to believe that the defendant was at present in Chicago.

Leave granted, personal service to be effected, returnable on 18th July, and notice of trial to be served with the citation.

INSOLVENT ESTATE ELFERT AND CO.
AND OTHERS V. ELFERT.

This was an application for an order declaring the applicants entitled to the possession of certain premises situated near Humansdorp. Mr. Schreuer, K.C., was for the trustee; Mr. Upington appeared for the respondent, and Mr. Searle, K.C., for the other co-respondent, the London Missionary Society.

An order was granted as between the trustee and the insolvent, the trustee being declared entitled to the lease entered into on the 10th February, 1902, as an asset of the insolvent estate, without prejudice to any rights the insolvent may have to crops growing on that land. The charges entailed in recovering this asset to be a first charge on the estate, and the costs of the London Missionary Society to come out of the insolvent estate.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

MOORE V. MOORE. { 1904.
Apr. 18th.

This was an action brought by May Charlotte Moore, of Cape Town, against her husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce.

The declaration stated that the parties were married by ante-nuptial contract, but there had been no issue of the marriage, and that the defendant in June, 1901, wilfully and maliciously deserted plaintiff.

Mr. J. E. De Villiers for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in the office of the Colonial Secretary, produced the register of the marriage on the 20th June, 1899.

The plaintiff, May Charlotte Moore, said that she was a minor at the time of the marriage. She had some money, which she settled in the ante-nuptial contract with the General Estate and Orphan Chamber upon herself and afterwards any children of the marriage. After the marriage defendant left his employ in the Post-office. He was of intemperate habits, and ill-treated witness. In July, 1901, the defendant left for the front, and she lost all trace of his whereabouts for a while. She saw him again in January of last year, but he declined to acknowledge her. Her brother had informed her that the defendant was in Johannesburg. There was no issue of the marriage.

By the Court: The defendant was a draughtsman and surveyor.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th June, failing which the defendant to show cause on the last day of next term why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with forfeiture of the benefits under the ante-nuptial contract, and costs of service to be similar to citation.

Postea (July 14th.)

The rule was made absolute.

ACKERMANN V. ACKERMANN AND ANOTHER.

This was an action brought by B. E. Ackermann, of Stellenbosch, against his wife, for divorce by reason of her adultery with one Walter Loch, for forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage, and custody of the four children of the marriage. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was not represented.

Chas. W. H. Smith, clerk in the Colonial Office, produced the register of the marriage.

B. Edouard Ackermann (the plaintiff) said that there had been nine children of the marriage, of whom four survived, all daughters. During the marriage the defendant had always been opposed to him; she was always accusing him of bad conduct with coloured women. In August last they agreed to separate. His wife kept a boarding-house. He went to live in the Transvaal and elsewhere. He had not lived with his wife since August last. He had been to ask her to come back to him, but she told him he must not put his foot on her stoep. She told him that she would either shoot or poison him if he did, and that if she did not do it herself she would get others to do it.

Johanna Katherina Ackermann, daughter of the plaintiff, said that she remained at the boarding-house with her mother between August and December last. She then left, and went to live with her father. The reason was that she did not think her mother was setting a proper example to her. Her mother frequently visited the room occupied by a boarder named Loch, and witness had seen her there under compromising circumstances.

Another daughter of the plaintiff also gave corroborative evidence as to the relations of the defendant and Loch.

Order granted in terms of declaration.

GLASS V. GLASS.

This was an action brought by Agnes Glass, of Cape Town, against her husband, Herman Glass, of no fixed address, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce.

The plaintiff's declaration said she was married to the defendant in London in 1887. In 1896 they came out here together. They were not happy together in this country. In November, 1903, the defendant wilfully and maliciously deserted her.

Mr. Buchanan for plaintiff; Defendant in default.

Plaintiff stated in evidence that she was keeping a boarding-house at that time. When he left her he said he was going away, and would never come back. She received a letter from him at Aliwal North. The letter was in German, and said that the writer (the defendant) had met with an accident, and was lying in the train with fractured ribs. She afterwards heard from him at Steynsburg and Port Elizabeth. The defendant was travelling with Texas Jack's Circus. The defendant in certain letters alleged that witness was living in bad company. This she denied entirely. They had saved up together and purchased property. He had sold the property, but witness had received no share of the proceeds. There was one child of the marriage, a girl aged 15 years.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th June, failing which a rule granted calling upon the defendant to show cause on the last day of next term why a decree of divorce should not issue, with costs, and with forfeiture by defendant of the benefits of the marriage, and why plaintiff should not have custody of the child, rule to be served personally on the defendant.

Postea (August 25th). The rule was made absolute.

HENDRICKS V. HENDRICKS. { 1904.
Apr. 18th.
22nd.

This was an action brought by John Hendricks, of Wynberg, against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce. Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; Mr. Rainsford was for the defendant.

Mr. Rainsford applied for a postponement on the ground of the absence of material witnesses. The defendant, in reconvention, claimed for divorce on the ground of plaintiff's adultery with one Jacoba Wessels. Plaintiff had been convicted in the Magistrate's Court at Wynberg of abducting the said Jacoba Wessels. The bar was only removed on Friday last, and counsel had been unable to receive full instructions.

Mr. Alexander urged that it would be inadvisable to pile up unnecessary expense. Defendant was suing in forma pauperis.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would hear the plaintiff's witnesses, and any others who might be in Court.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was married to the defendant at Trinity Church, Cape Town, in 1882, in community of property. There had been three children of the marriage. In May, 1903, the defendant maliciously deserted plaintiff, and had not returned to him.

Defendant, in her plea, admitted having left the plaintiff, and said that the reason why she did so was on account of his cruelty and insobriety. She claimed in reconvention a divorce by reason of his adultery with Jacoba Wessels, in July, 1903, and divers other persons.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied the allegations of cruelty, insobriety, and adultery.

John Hendricks, the plaintiff, an employee at the Salt River Works, said they were married in 1882 at Trinity Church, Cape Town. There had been three children. Two of them (girls) were now married. Witness spoke of the differences which occurred between himself and his wife. He denied the charges of insobriety. Witness's attorney had received a letter from the defendant, in which she said that the plaintiff had been a curse to her ever since she had been married to him, that she did not intend to live with him again, and that no law in the world would compel her to do so. He denied the alleged adultery with Jacoba Wessels.

Cross-examined: He was fined £10 in July last year, in the Magistrate's Court at Wynberg, for abducting one Jacoba Wessels. He denied the girl's story that she slept with him on two nights. He had not assaulted his wife. She had not left him because of his cruelty towards her. His wife kept the doings of the children from him, and she could not bear to be spoken to.

Re-examined: With regard to Jacoba Wessels, he took her as a servant without her parents' consent.

Mrs. Byfield, a nurse, repudiated an allegation that the plaintiff had committed intimacy with her while she was living at his house along with her mother.

Mrs. Winkie, mother of the last witness, gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

The defendant, Helen Hendricks, said she left her husband on the 6th May last year, on account of his unkindness and cruelty towards her. He came home in a drunken condition, and assaulted her. She went away to Port Elizabeth by the following mail. She had left plaintiff on previous occasions, on account of his insobriety. She declined to return to him on account of the case in the Magistrate's Court. She had had to complain previously about the relations of her husband and Jacoba Wessels. She denied that there had been any trouble between her husband and herself with regard to one Clarke paying attentions to her daughter Frances.

Cross-examined: She admitted writing a letter to Clarke, in which she asked him to tell some untruths in regard to his courtship with her daughter. She had made up her mind that she would live no longer with the plaintiff after her daughters were married.

By the Court: Witness was at present in service as a housemaid.

Mr. Rainsford said he proposed to call Jacoba Wessels and another witness, but they were not at present in attendance.

The case was postponed until Friday, pending production of further evidence for the defendant.

Postea (April 22nd).

Jacobus Johannes Wessels, clerk in the Resident Magistrate's Court at Wynberg, produced the record of the abduction case of Rex v. John Hendricks, tried in the said Court in July last.

Jacoba Wessels, a single girl, of Good Hope-road, Wynberg, said she knew plaintiff. She remembered one Saturday night in July last. She met the defendant. That night she went to his house and stayed until Monday. She slept with the defendant. Improper relations took place. He did not ask her to be his servant, though he told her that if she was asked she must say she was his servant. Defendant did not let her go on Sunday.

Cross-examined: She had had a quarrel with her mother that night.

George Hunt, police constable, Wynberg, also gave evidence as to arresting the plaintiff on the charge of abduction, and finding the clothing of the girl Jacoba Wessels in his room.

George Vyness deposed that about two months ago he had a conversation with plaintiff at his (witness's) house. Plaintiff, referring to the case, said, "I am in a hole—of a hole with another female." A few days later plaintiff brought up the subject again. He said he had a good mind to sell up and clear out. He also said he had bought a bottle of gin for a married woman, with whom he stated that he had misconducted himself.

Cross-examined: Witness could not remember the exact day on which this conversation took place. The statement was made in front of witness's wife.

Mrs. Clara Vyness stated that witness spoke to her husband in her presence about his being in trouble with a certain woman.

The plaintiff, questioned by his Lordship, stated that he had no property.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought that the plaintiff required a considerable amount of assurance to bring this action. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, he felt certain that the adultery with Jacoba Wessels had been proved. Judgment would be for the defendant (Mrs. Hendricks) on the claim in convention, as well as on the claim in re-convention, plaintiff to pay costs of suit.

PHILPOTT V. PHILPOTT AND ANOTHER.

This was an action brought by Alpheus Charles Philpott, of Observatory-road, against his wife for divorce, on the ground of her adultery with one Holzrichter, against whom damages were claimed in the sum of £1,000.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was married in community to the first-named defendant, who was domiciled in this colony on the 29th August, 1902, in the county of Gloucester, England, that they subsequently came out to this colony, that the first-named defendant left the plaintiff in July, 1903, at the instigation of the second-named defendant, that the defendants had committed adultery at Cape Town, East London, Woodstock, and diverse other places, and that they were now living and cohabiting at 33, Kloof-street, Gardens, Cape Town. Plaintiff claimed as against the first defendant a decree of divorce, forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community, and alternative relief, and as against the second-named defendant, £1,000 damages and costs of suit.

The second-named defendant, in his plea, said that the plaintiff failed to support his wife, and caused her to maintain herself. The plaintiff grossly and brutally ill-treated the first-named defendant, used coarse and violent language towards her, threatened her with a razor, and as a consequence it was dangerous and impossible for her to live with him. In December, 1903, the second-named defendant cohabited with the plaintiff's wife. He tendered £50, together with taxed costs, as and for damages sustained by the plaintiff. In reconvention, he claimed £500 damages from the plaintiff for a scandalous and defamatory libel committed by the plaintiff in saying that he (the second-named defendant) married the first-named defendant at East London. The plaintiff, in replication, said the tender was not sufficient, and denied the allegations in the plea, and having made use of the words set out in the claim in reconvention.

Mr. Buchanan for plaintiff; Defendant in default; Co-defendant in person.

Mr. Buchanan said that a commission was granted to take the evidence of the people in whose hearing the libel was said to have been uttered, but at the last moment the second defendant did not proceed with the commission. He, therefore, supposed that the claim in reconvention would practically fall to the ground.

Alpheus Charles Philpott, the plaintiff, said that he and defendant were married in August, 1902, in the county of Gloucester, England. He came out to the Colony, and went back and married the first defendant. He brought her out with him, and they arrived here in September, 1902. Witness was a fitter and mechanical engineer. They lived at Observatory-road. His wife went out to business in Salt River. He earned between four and five guineas a week. She afterwards went as a barmaid at the Metropole Hotel against his wish. The second defendant (Holzrichter) apparently met her there. He wished to make friends with witness, but witness declined. Witness supported his wife; he denied that he had used violent or threatening language towards her. After his wife had been at the Metropole about a week, he found that the second defendant was waiting for her. His wife subsequently said she was going away. His wife told him that Holzrichter had given her money to go to Johannesburg. She went away to Worcester by the ten o'clock train. Witness went also to Worcester, and prevailed upon her to come back to Cape Town. She afterwards went to the Metropole again, and Holzrichter came into association with her again. He afterwards received a letter from her when she was going away to East London with the second defendant.

His Lordship: What is Holzrichter's occupation?

Witness: As far as I can see, he is a remittance man. I am told he is getting between £50 and £60 a month. Continuing his evidence, witness said that he had been to 33, Kloof-street. He saw the second defendant there. He saw the two defendants come out of the house together on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

Alfred Ernest Rix, of Claremont, formerly of Rochester-road, Observatory, said that Mr. and Mrs. Philpott formerly lodged with him. The plaintiff paid his way along. He did not notice any ill-treatment by the plaintiff of his wife; in fact, plaintiff seemed to be very fond of her.

Maria Valman, servant, employed at 33, Kloof-street, Gardens, said that the second defendant lived with a lady in one room in the house.

The Court directed the witness to go to the Fountain Hotel along with the plaintiff to ascertain whether the plaintiff's wife, who was employed there, was the lady who was staying with the second defendant in Kloof-street.

Holzrichter said that intimacy began a fortnight after the plaintiff's wife returned from East London. He was a single man. He had about £1,800, which he received about eight months ago. He speculated rather heavily, and had lost everything. He did not receive a remittance from Home. He admitted giving the plaintiff's wife a ticket to Johannesburg and £5, so that she should procure a situation in Johannesburg.

Cross-examined: He also gave a ticket for Johannesburg and £5 to another lady, Mrs. Kental. Witness did not go to Johannesburg; he did not intend to do so. He believed the first defendant was a good girl. She complained bitterly to him about her husband's treatment, and implored him to help her.

The witness Valman (re-called) said that Mrs. Philpott was the lady living with the second defendant.

The plaintiff (recalled) said he lived happily with his wife until she made the acquaintance of Holzrichter.

Decree of divorce granted against the first defendant, and judgment given for the plaintiff for £200 and costs against the second defendant (Holzrichter).

COHEN V. RAWBONE. { 1904.
Apr. 18th.

Agency—Broker—Remuneration —Net price.

The plaintiff, a broker, learning that the defendant had a property for sale, inquired for what price he would sell, and was informed that the price was £12,000 net. The plaintiff introduced to the defendant a seller, who had, however, been previously introduced by L., another broker, and the sale was ultimately effected through the agency of L. for £12,000.

Held, that even if the plaintiff could be regarded as the defendant's agent, and as the person, through whose agency the sale was brought about, he could not claim any remuneration, inasmuch as the only authorized price was £12,000 net.

This was an action brought by Abram Cohen, broker, Cape Town, against William Rawbone, gun maker, Cape Town, for £300, brokerage upon the sale of certain property situated in Somerset-road.

The declaration was to the effect that in April, 1902, the defendant placed certain landed property in Somerset-road, Cape Town, in plaintiff's hands for sale for £12,000. Thereafter plaintiff introduced one Kraemar, of the Castle Wine and Brandy Company, to the defendant as a probable purchaser, and in September, 1902, the property was sold to Kraemar for £12,000. Plaintiff claimed 2½ per cent. brokerage on the purchase price, as the sale was effected as a result, and in consequence of his introducing Kraemar to the defendant.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that the plaintiff introduced Kraemar to him, and said that the sale was effected by a broker who had negotiated with Kraemar prior to April, 1902, when the plaintiff alleged he introduced Kraemar to the property. He denied that the sale took place as a result of and in consequence of the plaintiff's introduction.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Alexander) for plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell) for the defendant.

Abram Cohen, broker, Cape Town, said that he went over the property with Mr. Kraemar, who offered £10,500 for it. He saw Kraemar, who afterwards offered £11,000. Witness saw Mr. Rawbone, who said he would not take less than £12,000. He went backward and forward to see if he could do the business between them. Mr. Rawbone, when he disclosed the name of his client, said he did not know those people. The negotiations continued until August, when Mr. Rawbone told him he had sold the property, and he was sorry that he could not pay his brokerage, and that he must fight Kraemar for that. He induced Kraemar to buy the property at £12,000. He was not informed about any other broker being engaged in the matter. Subsequently Rawbone informed him that if there was any trouble about it he would cancel the whole thing. Rawbone also told him that if he went into court he (Rawbone) was not concerned, because he was secured by Kraemar.

By the Court: The reason why the case had not been brought earlier was that they were extremely busy with brokerages during the boom, and then the defendant went away to Europe.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Times had become bad recently, and he was then able to proceed with the action. The property was known as Kimberley Villa. He would be surprised to hear that two other people took Mr. Kraemar over the property before he (witness) appeared on the scene. Kraemar told him that he had never seen the property before. The highest offer witness elicited from Kraemar was £11,000. Rawbone distinctly told him that his price for the property would be £12,000, less 2½ per cent. brokerage. If other people introduced Kraemar to the property before witness did, they would be entitled to the brokerage.

Wm. Rawbone, defendant, stated that prior to 1902 he was the owner of Kimberley Villa. Originally his price was £10,000 net, and several brokers had seen him about the property. In the early part of 1902 he wanted £12,000 net, and Cohen understood that if he got £12,500, he was quite welcome to take the balance. It was after he had seen Lewis that Cohen came to see him. Cohen never made an offer of £11,000. The position he took up was that his terms were net.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He might have shown Cohen over the property in April, but he never knew that he was a broker. Mr. Kraemar would really be responsible for the defence in the case. Cohen was the only man to mention Kraemar's name to him.

This closed the case for the defendant, and Mr. Alexander having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: In order to entitle the plaintiff to the commission claimed, he must prove first that he had been employed by the defendant as his agent to sell the property; secondly, that the sale was effected through his agency; and thirdly, that the sale was effected under such circumstances as entitled him to remuneration for his services. In regard to the first point, it is by no means clear to me that the plaintiff had been employed as the agent of the defendant to sell the property. If a person, knowing that another person has property for sale, goes to him on behalf of an intending purchaser, and asks him whether the property is for sale, and then purchases it, surely he could not obtain a commission for having acted as the agent to the seller? In the present case I am not satisfied that the agent was more than the agent for the purchaser. On the 2nd April he says: "I hear my client, Mr. Kraemar, of the Castle Wine and Brandy Company, for whom I made the offer yesterday." He does not say he is the agent of the defendant, but he speaks of himself as the agent of the purchaser. It is doubtful whether the plaintiff was the agent of the defendant at all, but for the purposes of this case I will assume that the plaintiff, along with other brokers, had received the general authority to sell the property on behalf of the defendant. The second point is, was the sale effected through the agency of the plaintiff? It has been argued that there was an introduction by the plaintiff of Kraemar, and that it was after that the sale took place; but before the plaintiff approached Kraemar another broker had introduced a purchaser, namely Lewis, and ultimately the sale was effected, not through the immediate agency of the plaintiff, but through the agency of Lewis. It is clear from the evidence that if the plaintiff had never appeared upon the scene the sale would have been effected, because Lewis had first introduced the purchaser, and ultimately Lewis did effect the sale. It is impossible, therefore, to say that in consequence of the introduction by the plaintiff the sale took place. But then, there is the third point still, and it is this: Did the sale take place under such circumstances as entitled the plaintiff to his commission? Now, I quite agree with Mr. Alexander that under ordinary circumstances a broker when nothing else is said is entitled to the ordinary and usual commission, which, in cases of this kind, is 2½ per cent. But where the vendor at the time makes it clearly understood that he will only sell if he gets a definite price free from any commission the agent clearly cannot claim a commission. The defendant said he wanted £12,000 nett. The question of remuneration was not expressly mentioned but it was understood that as the defendant required £12,000 nett the plaintiff could only earn a remuneration by selling at a higher price. If he obtained a buyer at all it was for £12,000 and this amount he knew the defendant required in full and therefore even if the plaintiff had succeeded on the two first grounds he would have failed on the third. The judgment of the Court must be for the defendant with costs. [Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buisainé; Defendant's Attorneys: Moore and Son.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

RIVAS V. BLACK. { 1904.
Apr. 18th.

" 20th.

Architect—Levels—Neglige ice.

This was an action brought by Philip Anthony Rivas, of Sea Point, against William Black, architect, Cape Town, to recover £421, for negligence or want of professional skill in connection with certain plans for the erection of an iron railing round the plaintiff's property.

The declaration set out that in the month of November, 1902, plaintiff instructed the defendant to prepare plans for the erection of a wall round his property, Bellevue, Sea Point. The defendant furnished the plans, showing the levels at which the wall was to be erected. Later it was decided to erect an iron fencing instead, and the plans were taken to England by the plaintiff to have the fence constructed. The railing was constructed, and a competent contractor was employed to erect it. It was then discovered that the levels supplied by the defendant were incorrect, and the work was useless, and it was necessary to take down and readjust the fence at a cost of £321. The inconvenience and loss to the plaintiff amounted to £100.

The plea denied that there had been any instructions with regard to a railing or fence. The defendant admitted that he had instructions for a certain brick wall and entrance gates. Defendant took approximate levels for the iron railing, and plaintiff was well aware that they were only approximate. Defendant denied that the fence was constructed according to the plans. The readjustment was caused through the work being performed by an incompetent contractor, and the railings not being constructed with adjustable joints. The defendant tendered to superintend the work by a competent contractor free of charge.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for plaintiff: Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for defendant.

Philip Anthony Rivas, plaintiff, stated that his house Bellevue was between the High Level-road and the Main-road. The house was really between four roads, two of which were not yet made. In November, 1902, he asked the defendant to prepare specifications for a brick wall to go round the property, with the exception of the High Level-road. The defendant called for tenders, which were very high on account of the high price of material. Witness decided not to have the wall, but to have an iron fence, and defendant, in reply, said that the plans for the former would suit when he sent a man out to give the proper levels, so that he could not make a mistake. The fence was constructed in England to suit the hillside. Witness took the plans to England, and had the iron railing constructed and shipped there by one of the best firms for the sum of £400 approximately. Witness came back to South Africa in March, and the railing, with the construction plans, had already arrived. Mr. Wight was employed to erect the fencing. The defendant never told him that the plans were approximate, nor did he say anything about adjustable joints. Witness had no contract with Mr. Wight, who was paid so much a day. The work was commenced from the Bellevue-road, where a concrete foundation was laid with graduated steps for the reception of the iron railings. Witness went to England again, and returned about December, but in the meantime he heard that the work had been stopped. When he came back, about two-thirds of the work had been done, but he found that portions of the fence were buried, and then he heard that the defendant's levels were entirely wrong in comparison with the Municipal levels. For a considerable distance they were out between two and three feet, and in one instance over five feet. The defendant had stated that he had never seen the man who took the levels. He had been put to a great loss by the delay, as he could not proceed with the development of his property.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He could not say whether the pencil marks were on the plans when the defendant handed them to him. The defendant said that the first plans for the wall were approximate levels. He had got an idea of how to take levels, but he did not tell Mr. Black that he could take them himself. The defendant never mentioned anything about municipal levels, or that he would have to get adjustable joints, as the municipal levels had not been taken. Wight was more of a workman than a contractor, and although he was competent to construct a billiard-room, witness would not say that he was able to erect the stone wall. He had found that, although Wight's levels were correct, he encroached on the roadway with the foundation. It would have been absolutely impossible to readjust the whole fence by reboring. Wight did not start the construction from the wrong point.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He had tried to get the iron railing altered, but he found it would cost him such a considerable sum that he decided to abandon it in favour of a brick wall.

Richard Henry Heward, Municipal Engineer at Sea Point, stated that in August, 1903, he visited Bellevue, Sea Point. The work was not properly done, the entrance gate being 2 feet 6 under the ground. There was a difference between the existing levels he had taken and those of the defendant. Within a couple of days of the discovery of the error he had the road surveyed for a municipal level. The defendant would have had no difficulty in November in getting a plan from the Municipality. Mr. Wight was a very conscientious worker, and, as a rule, was very correct. The new wall had been set back. So long as the concrete foundation was underground, there would have been no objection on the part of the Municipality to it encroaching on the roadway.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He had about twenty-eight years' practice as an engineer. He was not a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, but he had served his time as an architect. Witness had taken the levels from the middle of the road, but there would have been very little difference between these and those taken by the defendant along the boundary.

James Just Riven stated that he saw the plans of Messrs. Bayliss and Co. and those of the Municipal Engineer. Witness himself had also made a plan. The defendant's levels did not correspond with the Municipal levels or the existing levels. The average difference between the existing levels and those of the defendant was 2 feet 6 inches. The work done by Wight was, practically speaking, according to the defendant's levels. According to the defendant's plan, the gateway would be 1 foot 10 inches below the surface. It was the duty of the defendant to prepare proper levels before he submitted plans.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Whoever supplied the plans should prepare the levels for the Municipality. Mr. Heward had prepared the levels for his plans, and if the former were wrong, witness's would be also. Mr. Versfeld's plan was incorrect if it showed that Wight had not followed the defendant's levels.

John Wight stated that he constructed the fencing according to the levels of the defendant. It would not have made any difference whether the construction was fitted with adjustable joints or not.

Harry Tidawell, contractor, said that, on account of the extra excavations on the Bellevue-road, he had to add £162 to his contract for the brick wall.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

William Black, the defendant, stated that he found after making comparisons that the levels were approximately correct. They were within .79 of a foot of the levels of the principal witness for the plaintiff. He conscientiously believed none of the pencil marks were on the plan when it left the office. The plaintiff was aware that the levels would have to be adjusted according to the Municipal levels. It was the custom to submit the plans and levels to the Municipality. The plaintiff was told that he should get adjustable joints so that the fence could be raised or lowered. The ground was very rough, and until it was cleared it would be difficult to take accurate levels. Wight started to erect the fence to the level of the gutter instead of the crown of the road, and had he come to witness, the whole thing would have been right. Mr. Heward's plans were incorrectly taken from the middle of the road. Any competent contractor would set out the whole fence before starting with excavations. The cause of the fence coming down was another instance of bad workmanship. If a sample of the concrete were placed in water, it would soon be in mud. The construction should have been covered by £45, as it was done by Wight. To reconstruct the work after Wight's failure would have cost about £60.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He brought Wight to the plaintiff's notice when the billiard-room was being constructed. At the time he was asked to prepare levels for the fence, the plaintiff understood that they were only approximate. It would have been impossible for witness to have obtained the Municipal levels previous to the plaintiff's departure to England. The plan was sufficiently accurate for the purpose. Witness did not mark "for adjustable joints" on the plan. The Court would see in comparing the engineer's plan with his own that the former was taken too low. The sole cause of the fence blowing over was indifferent construction. Mrs. Rivas and Wight told him that the work only cost £71, and the plaintiff came into the office on a game of "bounce," and demanded £170. Unfortunately he could not help thinking that the whole case was a conspiracy to rob him. The plaintiff should have been interdicted by the Municipality from encroaching on their boundary.

Willem Versfeld, Government land surveyor, said that he found a difference of 13 inches in his levels and those of the defendant, but that would make very little difference in the erection of the fence. Wight had not followed Black's levels, and witness had prepared a plan to prove this.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Because Wight had not taken a point in the road, the great difference occurred.

He only took the two boundaries, and did not, on account of the excavations, take the intermediate points.

W. D. Wunder, who took the levels for the defendant, denied having any conversation with Wight, beyond remarking to the latter that it was a "sad job." He started his level from the highest point in the High Level-road, and marked the point "A."

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not specially go to see Wight; he went to see the fence. Witness asked to see the plan, but Wight said he had not got it. He did not say that within the time he could not take accurate levels; he thought approximate levels were sufficient for the purpose. Witness admitted that he told Mr. Wight he was in a bit of a hurry. When he handed the plan to the defendant there were no pencil marks on it.

Ernest Petersen, civil engineer, said his special line was street buildings. He saw Mr. Black's levels, and he thought the plans were sufficient for the manufacturer in England. Assuming that the plans had been misread in England, and that the same mistake had been as that of the contractor, the whole thing could have been made right by altering two panels at the expense of £10. Had he taken the job in hand, he would soon have noticed if there was a mistake in the starting point. When Wight had started digging a trench, he should have noticed at once that he was wrong, and it was his duty to at once seek further advice from the architect.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Even with 13 inches, it would be necessary to have adjustable joints. He saw the fence after it had been erected, and he thought very little judgment had been exercised in its construction, in fact, they were tunnelling instead of erecting fences.

Alexander Armstrong, engineer, stated that he thought Mr. Black's plan was sufficient for manufacturers in England. He agreed with the last witness that even if the plan had been misread in England it could easily have been re-adjusted. If he had the contract he would make sure of the starting point.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had never done any fencing work himself.

Francis Drake, member of the Association of Civil Engineers, said that he found the defendants levels almost correct, and absolutely sufficient for the construction of the fence, and for the erection of it. He was sorry for the man's reputation who put up the fence. The contractor could not possibly have followed the levels. Witness would not have been two hours on the job before he would have found out that the levels were wrong.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had taken levels every twenty feet, but he had not retained any documentary statement of them. The engineers in England would have required to know every particular about the environment irrespective of the plans before they constructed the fencing.

Geo. Pallitt, builder and contractor, said that there was quite sufficient information in the defendant's plan to guide him in the erection of the fence except that he would want to know the boundaries. If he found that he was getting into a trench he would go to the owner or the architect. If he had noticed that the English engineers had made a mistake in the boundary, he could have readjusted it correctly for practically nothing.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: If it was only a question of 13 inches in the 400 feet length it would have been a very easy matter to adjust the fence.

Robert Blackburn, contractor, stated that he would have erected the work done by Wight for £55. Witness offered to take it down and put the whole thing right for £65.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He gave a tender in writing to that effect to Mr. Black.

Postea (April 20th).

Mr. Searle was heard in argument on the facts, and without calling on Mr. Gardiner.

Hopley, J., said that, although his mind had fluctuated a good deal during the course of the case from the view he now took, it would be unnecessary to hear counsel for the defendant. While one could not help feeling for Mr. Rivas for the considerable loss he had suffered, the question the Court had to determine was whether the defendant was the person in law responsible for it. No actual instructions had been given to the defendant to prepare plans for a railing or fence in November, 1902, but thereafter, at the plaintiff's request, the defendant furnished him with levels for an iron fencing to be constructed in England. The defendant said that he warned the plaintiff that the levels were only approximate, and that the iron fencing would have to be constructed with adjustable joints. What actually had to be decided in the case was whether the defendant, having undertaken to furnish the plaintiff with levels, did reasonably carry out that contract and furnish him with proper levels of his ground. The defendant said he would send a competent man to do the work, and nothing had transpired in the case to show that Wunder was an incompetent man, or that he did his work in an incompetent manner. He took levels in the ordinary sort of way, and one professional man after another stated that his levels were not by any means wrong. The plaintiff might have thought that he knew all about the plan, and might have given information to the engineers in England, and if no information was given to them he could not understand how they could have acted upon the assumption that the point "A" was necessarily the correct one. A firm like Baylis would necessarily have asked which was the right point to start from, and someone must have told them to start from "A." Going on the line of the level itself, and scaling it from the point "M," as the bottom boundary, it would be found that the end of the boundary would come not to "A," but very nearly to "B." The whole of these unfortunate damages resulted from the assumption that "A" meant the boundary, and through the defendant not asking for more particulars from the Municipal Engineer or from Mr. Black before the fence was constructed. He was convinced by Mr. Versfeld that the levels were fairly enough given, and that the fence should have been adjusted to the actual ground, or what the actual ground would be when the road was properly made, and all that could have been done at very small expense. The assumption having been made in England, the fence was constructed slightly wrongly; but when the fence came out, it was not a useless fence. If Mr. Rivas had done his duty, he would have sent in a sketch, and the whole thing would have been corrected before anything had been done. The rule 215 of the Municipal Regulations required persons intending to erect or add to or alter their building to give notice in writing, and forward plans showing levels and foundations to the Council. That obligation rested upon Mr. Rivas, as the person going to put up a structure. It was true that such work was ordinarily done by the architect, and if Mr. Rivas on his return had said to Mr. Black that he had got the fence, and asked him to draw up the plans and get the proper leave from the Municipality, Mr. Black would have seen how it stood, and drawn the structure, and got the proper levels. It only meant a change in the cement work, and perhaps the lengthening of some standards, or some bays, and might have been done for a very small additional expense. Even had Mr. Rivas not chosen to go to Mr. Black, but had gone to the engineer of the Municipality, he would have started at the proper levels, and all the excavations and the expense would have been rendered unnecessary. It seemed to him that no damages ought to have been incurred, even if the fence had been slightly wrongly constructed, and the defendant had only his rashness to account for the mistake if he thought he could follow the architect's plans. It was clear from the evidence of practical workers like Messrs. Pallitt and Armstrong, and the Government Land Surveyor, Mr. Versfeld, that the point "A" was not on the plaintiff's ground at all, but on the level behind it. When he heard the evidence of practical men like Pallitt and Armstrong, that they would not have assumed anything of the sort, he could be sorry for Mr. Rivas for jumping to the conclusion which landed him in the present loss. He had only himself to blame for any damages incurred. There would be judgment for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

RETIEF V. RETIEF. { 1904.
Apr. 19th.

This was an action brought by Susanna Elizabeth Retief against her husband, Johannes Carel Jacobus Retief, late of Swellendam, for divorce, on the ground of his adultery with one Elizabeth M. J. Goussard, with whom he had entered into a bigamous marriage. Plaintiff also prayed for forfeiture by the defendant of the benefits of the marriage and custody of the children. Mr. M. Bisset was for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register, produced the register of the marriage.

Susanna Elizabeth Retief (the plaintiff) said that she was married to the defendant in the district of Herbert on the 20th October, 1892. They lived together for some years, and had had three children. In 1900 her husband left her. The second marriage of the defendant with Miss Goussard took place in 1902. Witness was present at the trial of the defendant at Swellendam in July, 1903, on a charge of bigamy, when he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

Order granted in terms of the plaintiff's declaration

COLTON V. VAN ALMELO.

Share broker—Purchase "on call"

—Evidence, oral and written.

This was an action brought by Isaac Edward Colton, mercantile and share broker, Cape Town, against Edward van Almelo, share speculator, residing at Claremont, to recover £112 10s., balance of account upon certain share transactions.

The declaration set out that prior to May, 1902, the plaintiff, at the special instance and request of the defendant, purchased and sold shares for the defendant, expended moneys on his behalf for shares bought, and received moneys on his behalf for shares sold. On the 1st May, 1902, it was agreed between the parties that the balance due to the plaintiff was £267 1s. 6d. The plaintiff said that there was now due and owing, in respect of moneys disbursed for and on account of defendant, together with interest, the sum of £112 10s., which sum the defendant refused to pay. Plaintiff had in his custody 500 Hermann's Patent shares, the property of the defendant, which he held as security for payment of the said sum. The plaintiff tendered delivery of the said shares, and claimed the sum of £112 10s. and costs of suit.

The defendant in his plea denied that he purchased 500 or any other number of Hermann's Patents from the plaintiff; he admitted that he purchased a call upon 500 Hermann's Patents at 1s. upon 6s., but said that the call was never exercised by him. On or about the 11th, November, 1902, the defendant saw the plaintiff, who informed him that the amount due was £67 3s. 6d., and this balance the defendant discharged by giving a cheque for £37 3s. 6d. and a bill for the balance of £30, which bill was duly met. He said he had no interest in any Hermann's Patents shares, which the plaintiff might have in his custody. He prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, said he admitted the payments alleged, and that credit had been given, but he denied that the payments were a final settlement.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. D. Buchanan), for plaintiff; Mr. Burton for defendant.

Mr. Burton said he thought it might shorten the case very much if he explained the defendant's position. The plaintiff in his account charged £150 for Hermann's Patent shares, and £12 for interest on the 31st December. The defendant said that, instead of Hermann's Patents shares having been bought outright, there was a call of 1s. upon 6s. per share, so that the amount would be £25, and the item of interest would go out except as to £5. He did not admit the rest of the account, and he specially denied having purchased Hermann's Patent shares, so that the amount of £150 should be reduced by £125, and the interest of £12 by £7, which would wipe out completely the plaintiff's claim of £112 10s. The defendant did not claim the balance in his favour because he said that in November, 1902, the plaintiff presented an account, and that they then squared off.

Mr. Buchanan said he took it that the issue was narrowed down to whether Hermann's Patent shares were acquired on call or were an out and out purchase.

Isaac Edward Colton (the plaintiff) said that in May, 1902, they had a settlement, and witness was given certain security. Van Almelo was always about the Exchange. He gave witness orders to buy scrip, and left him with general instructions to sell if there was a rise and if he thought fit. Witness never bought without special instructions. He had had no instructions to buy on call, but only out and out purchase. The Hermann's Patents transaction was an out and out purchase of 500 shares at 6s. per share. Witness produced an entry, which he made at the time in his notebook. The transaction was carried through to his cash-book and ledger. The shares had been all the time in the bank. Witness produced a stock-book, showing that on the 18th June, 1902, certain Hermann's Patents were bought, and that 500 were allocated to Monson, and 500 to Van Almelo. Witness also produced his call book. Witness's clerk made the entries in the cash-book and ledger. The clerk had since gone to Johannesburg. Witness's notebook also showed a purchase of Shebas for the defendant.

By the Court: Monson and Van Almelo came to him together, and ordered the Hermann's Patents shares. Monson was now in Johannesburg. Monson also had failed to pay witness.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that on November 11, 1902, he bought up certain amounts, with interest due. He received £37 odd from the defendant. The balance due on that date was £167 3s. 6d. Witness had as security certain title deeds. Van Almelo asked him for them. Witness held the Hermann's Patents shares. He agreed to release the deeds if the Patents shares were reduced from 6s. to 4s.; the shares were then going down. Witness released the title deeds he received from the defendant for £30, and held the shares as security for £100 10s., the defendant stating that he would take up the shares later. The defendant did not take up the shares. Witness now sued for the amount of £100 10s., taking the shares at 4s. each, plus interest to date. He had repeatedly requested the defendant to take up the shares. The first time witness heard about these shares being on option was in defendant's plea.

By the Court: To the best of his belief, the defendant was furnished with a broker's note. He did not receive the duplicate signed by the defendant. If this had been the case the defendant would have had a broker's note. He always looked upon the defendant as a "fairly decent fellow," and he therefore did not insist upon the duplicates being returned.

Cross-examined: He received the order for the shares from the defendant. He did not remember Mr. Black, of "Sport and Play," or Mr. Behr, a broker; he had not met these men. Witness did a little betting on horse races. He was dealing largely in Hermann's Patents at that time; he bought out and out as a rule, though he might occasionally have purchased calls. Sometimes, if they had a call on shares for a client, they bought the shares outright on their own account. He expected that the defendant would have taken up the shares after he had delivered up the title deeds. The defendant desired to raise a loan on the property, and witness expected that after he had raised the loan defendant would have taken up the shares. Witness had lost heavily on the Exchange during the past year. He had lost a little on the racecourse.

Re-examined: Business became very bad about November.

Francis W. C. Chiappini, partner in the firm of Chiappini Bros., share brokers, Cape Town, said that as a rule they did not make out a broker's note. They sent a letter to the defendant at the plaintiff's request, calling on him to take up the shares, but they received no response from Van Almelo.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Edward van Almelo, the defendant, said that he met the plaintiff while he (defendant) was in company with Black and Behr, and asked him what would be the call on Hermann's Patents. Plaintiff said it would be 1s. on 6s. Witness asked him to procure 500 for him. About an hour later plaintiff came back and told him he had secured 500 Hermann's Patents for him on call at 1s. per share. He frequently called on the plaintiff to ask him for the broker's note; plaintiff always put him off by saying he was too busy. Witness did not exercise the call. The shares were going down; he lost his call money. When he got back his papers he sold the property for £250. There was a bond on the property for £300. When he called upon the plaintiff in November, 1902, plaintiff told him that he owed him £67 3s. 6d. He was glad to get out of the plaintiff's hands, because he had always been "doing" him. Plaintiff sold 400 Shebas for him at 30s. when the market price was 33s. the same day. One Schiskin, who was with witness, paid the plaintiff £37 3s. 6d. in cash, and witness gave the defendant a bill for the balance of £30 for the call on Hermann's Patents and interest. He took no notice of the letter from Chiappini's, because he did not owe the money.

Cross-examined: His attorney sent a demand to the plaintiff for £60 for selling 400 Shebas at 30s., which he ought to have sold at 33s. Plaintiff had been humbugging him all along; he was only too pleased to get out of the plaintiff's hands. He did not propose to the plaintiff in November, 1902, to pay him the difference between £67 3s. 6d. and £60, which he said he was entitled to for the Shebas.

Stephen William Black, of Claremont, sporting journalist and broker, said that the defendant ordered 500 shares on call from the plaintiff. Witness told the defendant that he did not think the shares would be any good; and he remembered that he bet the defendant a hat that the shares would not be any good.

Cross-examined: Witness believed the transaction took place on the day of the Royal Hunt Cup of 1902. Van Almelo wanted witness to take half the shares on 1s. at call. Van Almelo said it would not be much, and then, after Van Almelo had seen Colton, he said it would only be £12 10s.

Johannes Behr, property broker, gave corroborative evidence as to the interview between Van Almelo and the plaintiff as to the purchase of the shares on call.

Solomon Schiskin, of the Central Hotel, Hermanuspetrusfontein, said he was formerly a broker in Cape Town, and he went in November, 1902, with Van Almelo to the plaintiff to release his title deeds. The plaintiff said the balance due to him was £67 3s. 6d. Witness gave the plaintiff a cheque for £37 3s. 6d., and defendant gave a bill for the balance of £30 at two months.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J., said: The question in dispute between the parties is whether, on the 18th June, 1902, the defendant instructed the plaintiff to purchase calls on 500 Hermanns at 1s., or to buy the shares themselves at 6s. per share. If the Court looks only at the oral evidence given in the present case, there is no doubt that there are a greater number of witnesses who depose to the instruction being that the plaintiff should purchase calls instead of shares. But it is a transaction which took place two years ago, and it is quite possible that the witnesses made a mistake as to what took place, and under all the circumstances, in the present case, I think it is the better course to abide by the written documents which have been produced. We have first of all the books kept by the plaintiff himself. There is no doubt there was some degree of laxity in the manner in which the plaintiff himself carried on his business. If he had been more careful in the matter, he would have seen to it that all the broker's notes which he sent to the defendant for confirmation were properly signed before he had any further dealings with the defendant. But there seems to have been considerable laxity, because, amongst the documents which the defendant himself has produced, there are certain broker's notes in duplicate still in the possession of the defendant, neither of which he has signed or returned to the plaintiff. It is quite possible, therefore, in regard to the broker's notes of this transaction, there should have been similar laxity, and that the defendant may never have returned the broker's notes which were sent to him. But what is of importance in this case, and what it is impossible now for the Court to overlook, is the fact that on the 12th November, the parties came to a partial settlement. At that time the plaintiff had in his possession certain securities which the defendant wished to realise, and in order to induce the plaintiff to release these securities, a settlement was arrived at. In that settlement there was cash paid to the plaintiff, £37 3s. 6d., and a bill given for £30. According to the plaintiff, the defendant had full opportunity of investigating the accounts, and the defendant does not deny that he had access to the books. He might have examined the books if he chose, and he deliberately, then, paid £37 3s. 6d., and gave a bill for £30. This conduct of the defendant seems to me entirely inconsistent with his present statement that these shares had been purchased on call, and not the shares themselves, because if that were so, the result of this payment of £37 3s. 6d. and the Bill for £30 would really have been that the defendant was over-paying, or paying a larger sum to the plaintiff than was really due. To my mind, the plaintiff's explanation seems to be more reasonable, and that is, that the matter of Hermann's was not brought up, seeing that he kept Hermann's as security; that the defendant knew that Hermann's were being kept as security, and that this cash was not brought up, but that the balance was left simply as against the security on the 500 Hermann's shares. Proceeding. His Lordship said that if there were any doubt upon that matter it was removed by what subsequently took place, and judgment would, therefore, be given for the plaintiff as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

BLOEMBERG V. BLOEMBERG. { 1904.
Apr. 20th.

This was an action brought by Samuel Bloemberg, shoemaker, Uitvlugt Location, Maitland, against Lena Bloemberg, now of Market-street, Johannesburg, for divorce on the ground of her adultery with one Smulovitz, and for forfeiture of the benefits of marriage in community. Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, produced register of the marriage.

Samuel Bloemberg, the plaintiff, said he was a shoemaker, carrying on business at the Kafir location at Maitland. He was married to defendant at Cape Town in September, 1900. They resided first at Hanover-street and afterwards at Wynberg. A child was born. He did not cohabit with his wife after February, 1901. His wife remained at the house in Hanover-street, until November, 1902. Early one morning he saw his wife and Smulovitz together in her bedroom. He and his wife agreed to separate, and the latter went to Johannesburg. Witness did not press for custody of the child.

From evidence taken on commission, it appeared that a private detective in Johannesburg had seen Smulovitz going to a room occupied by the defendant in Market-street.

Decree of divorce granted, with forfeiture of the benefits of community.

BENNER V. BENNER.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who resides in Cape Town, against her husband, Charles Edwin Benner, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce. Mr. Russell appeared for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in the Colonial Office, produced the register of the marriage.

The plaintiff said she was married to the defendant at St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town, in 1884, by ante-nuptial contract, under which her property was secured to her. There had been three children of the marriage—three girls, now aged 17, 16, and 14. After the marriage, witness and her husband did not get on well together, as he was always in financial difficulties. In 1895 he left witness to go up-country to look for work, and he had not returned to her. Defendant was in Cape Town in 1902, and was living at the International Hotel. Defendant then said he was going away again, and that he would send money for the support of the children. During the war, defendant was employed by the military authorities, and they deducted from his pay £2 a month, which was paid to witness towards the support of her family. This went on for about twelve months. Apart from that money, she had received nothing from him.

Decree of restitution granted, the defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th June; failing which, rule to issue, calling on the defendant to show cause on the last day of next term why a decree of divorce should not be granted, plaintiff to be entitled to custody of the children of the marriage, the defendant to be declared to have forfeited the benefits of the marriage, and to pay costs.

Postea (July 14th). The rule was made absolute.

COKER V. COKER.

This was an action brought by Frances Coker, of Rondebosch, against her husband, for divorce on the ground of his adultery with one Annie Lawrence, with whom he was cohabiting. Mr. Williams appeared for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Frances Coker, the plaintiff, stated that she was married in 1898 to Coker. The marriage proved unhappy; her husband beat her, and failed to support her after he had left her in July, 1903. He was at present living with Annie Lawrence, in Vredenberg Lane.

Christina Johnson stated that she lived at Vredenberg Lane. Mr. and Mrs. Coker had formerly been living with her. Coker cohabited with another woman; he acknowledged so much to her.

The Venerable Archdeacon Lightfoot produced the register to prove the marriage.

Order granted in terms of the declaration.

Negligence—Risk—Expert.

While the plaintiff's cow was calving, M. attempted to remove the afterbirth, but failed. The defendant, who did not profess to be a veterinary surgeon, offered to try the removal, and the plaintiff consented and held the cow's head while the defendant operated. The operation proved unsuccessful, and the cow died. There was no expert evidence as to the cause of the cow's death.

Held, on appeal, that the Magistrate had properly given judgment for the defendant.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Stutterheim, the appellant having sued the respondent in the Court below for £20 damages for the loss of a cow.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the defendant was sued in the Court below for the sum of £20 damages for alleged maltreatment of the animal while calving, in consequence of which it died. Provisional judgment was given for the plaintiff, with costs. Subsequently the defendant moved the Court to have the case reopened, and the judgment reversed, on the ground that the defendant intended to defend the case, and the hearing took place during his temporary absence at a late stage of the sitting of the Court, while he had gone in search of his horse. The Magistrate consented to the reopening of the case, and mulcted the defendant in the costs of the first hearing. At the re-hearing of the case, the plea of the general issue was raised, and evidence was given on behalf of and by the defendant. He denied maltreatment, and said that plaintiff was his uncle, and that he did the act out of friendship. He believed the cow would have died in any event. He was not a cow doctor. He had seen cows die from a similar cause before treatment. For the plaintiff, evidence was given to the effect that the defendant had thrust himself forward, and had offered to perform the operation, saying he knew how to do it. The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, with costs, and against this judgment the plaintiff now appealed. The Magistrate's reasons appear from the judgment.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for appellant. Respondent in default.

Mr. Buchanan: The proceedings in the Court below were irregular. The plaintiff was present in Court that morning. The Court adjourned at 1 p.m., and when it re-opened the defendant was absent when the case was called; but Sec. 29 of the Schedule to Act 20 of 1856, gives the Magistrate no power to reopen the case under such circumstances. He can only do so if a person is prevented from attending Court by just and reasonable causes. That was not the case here. The defendant had no witnesses, he had no agent, and went away from Court simply to look after his horse. When in a recent Supreme Court case (not yet reported), a man who had been summoned as a witness failed to appear, and attempted to excuse himself by saying that he could not leave his shop at Sea Point, the Court held that that was no excuse and that he was liable to be committed for contempt of Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That case was not on all fours with this.]

No. for one thing that was a case of a witness, but if cases of this kind were upheld, every case might be re-opened.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, no, people would be deterred by the costs.]

Parties might be willing to face those. In this case the defendant was represented by an agent on the subsequent occasion, and recovered costs for his agent.

Then the Magistrate was wrong on the evidence. The defence seems to be that the plaintiffs gave tacit consent to the operation by holding the cow by the head. The defendant acted contrary to the advice of Sangile, an expert. The question is not whether the defendant was engaged as an expert, but whether he held himself out as an expert.

[De Villeirs, C.J.: He did not say that he was an expert.]

Oh yes; see Sangile's evidence. He told the plaintiff and Sangile that he knew all about the operation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He did not go there as a veterinary surgeon.]

That makes no difference. If a man says he knows "all about" a thing he cannot plead thereafter non-liability for everything save gross negligence. See Seven on Negligence (vol. 2, 1401 to 1403). Here an expert was present and was prepared to perform the operation, but defendant, who held himself out as an expert, undertook to do it, and performed it in a grossly negligent manner. As to defendant having rendered his services gratuitously, see Wilson v. Brett (11 M. and W. 113).

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate, in giving his reasons, stated that he believed the evidence given on behalf of and by the defendant, in preference to that given by the plaintiff, and this Court is not in a position to say that he was wrong—he saw the witnesses, and was able to judge of their credibility. If the defendant's evidence is correct, then the Magistrate was right in his decision. The defendant did not pretend to be a veterinary surgeon; he simply acted as a friend. His Lordship then proceeded to quote from the evidence given in the lower court. Proceeding, he said:—If it be the case that the plaintiff himself held the cow and allowed the defendant to operate, I do not see how the defendant can now be held liable. The plaintiff, knowing that the defendant was not a professional veterinary surgeon took the risk of the consequences. That might result from the defendant's assisting at the delivery of the cow. There appears to be another difficulty in this case: there is an absence of expert evidence as to the cause of death of the cow. It seems possible that this cow may have died from other causes than injury to the womb. The Magistrate laid stress on this point also. Upon the whole, I think that the Court would not be justified in disturbing the decision of the Magistrate. The appeal will be dismissed.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY]

TRIAL CAUSES.

CLARK V. MACNAMARA. { 1901.
Apr. 20th.
" 25th.

Brokerage—Failure of broker to obtain purchaser on terms prescribed by principal — Consensus ad idem.

This was an action brought by Thomas Adam Clark, a licensed broker, of Cape Town, against Michael MacNamara, a landed proprietor, of Woodstock, to recover £312 10s., being the amount of brokerage on the purchase price of certain property sold through the agency of the plaintiff.

The declaration set out that in June, 1902, the defendant employed plaintiff as his broker to negotiate for the sale of his property at Woodstock, and undertook to pay the usual brokerage, 2½ per cent. on the purchase price. On the 13th June, whilst the plaintiff was still so employed, he submitted to the defendant an offer of £12,500 by one Andrew Allan for his property. The document was dated 13th June, 1902, and stipulated that a broker's note was to be passed, and £500 cash was to be paid next day. The defendant accepted the offer, and signed the document. By reason of the said transaction, the plaintiff claimed £312 as due to him for brokerage, with interest.

The plea admitted the formal allegations in the declaration. The land was originally purchased at a sheriff's sale in 1884, but the transfer did not convey the whole of the land. In May, 1902, the defendant obtained an order under the Derelict Lands Act for the transfer of the remaining portion of the land. About June, 1902, the plaintiff approached the defendant, and offered to purchase the said land, and on the 13th June he brought a document to the defendant, and the defendant signed it. It was agreed that the broker's note should be drawn up, and £500 was to be paid on the next day. On the 14th June the plaintiff informed the defendant that the said Allan was not prepared to pay the sum of £500 in cash, but the plaintiff tendered a broker's note stipulating that the money should be paid in ten days. The defendant's son-in-law acted for the plaintiff, and he refused to sell the property. Several days afterwards £500 was tendered, but the defendant refused to accept it, as he was entitled to do.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell) for defendant; Mr. Upington for plaintiff.

Thomas Clark stated that in May, 1902, the defendant met him in St. George's-street, and gave him certain properties to dispose of. The defendant wanted £13,000 for the property, and witness interviewed Mr. Andrew Allan, and on May 28 he wrote to the defendant, stating that Allan would buy the property. In June Allan offered £12,500, and the defendant accepted the offer, which was made through plaintiff. A broker's note was drawn up to protect witness, but there was no mention of ten days in it when it was issued. The defendant's son-in-law Thornton called at the office and asked for a cheque for £500, but the letter stated that he had no authority to sign the document. He saw Mr. McNamara that afternoon, and he said he was too ill to talk business. The defendant called on the following Monday morning and said that his attorney had advised him to leave the matter in abeyance for a few days until the diagrams were in order. Subsequently the defendant said he would have the diagrams ready in fourteen days. Allan was a man of substance, as he had floated the British Asphalte Company at a capital of £45,000. The defendant subsequently left for England, but before leaving referred witness to his solicitor. The solicitor was unsuccessfully pressed from time to time for the diagrams.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: When Thornton came to the office all he wanted was a cheque pure and simple. The defendant did not say that unless he got the cash the whole thing was off, as he would not consent to the clause as to payment in ten days. The £500 was tendered some days after, but witness knew nothing about the tendering. Thornton did not tell him the whole thing was off when he went to see McNamara. As far as he knew, Allan did not tell Thornton that the £500 would be paid in ten days.

Andrew Allan stated that in May the plaintiff came to him with the offer of a property belonging to the defendant. Witness finally agreed to purchase it for £12,500, and the plaintiff was instructed to make that offer. Shortly afterwards the sale note was drawn up, and he looked upon the sale as completed. The defendant did not come to witness's office on the 14th June, but the plaintiff and Thornton did. The latter said that the plaintiff was ill. Witness was prepared to pay the £500 in cash, but not until he saw the diagrams. There was no note containing a clause about payment in ten days tendered to Thornton. He withdrew a case against the defendant for transfer and damages on the advice of an old friend of the defendant. He had repeatedly tried to get the diagrams from the defendant's solicitor, but without avail.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: It would have been a great advantage to his company to have the ground. He withdrew an action against the defendant for £15,000. He did not see the broker's note on the Saturday. He never signed a broker's note, nor was he ever asked to sign one; in fact, he would not accept one unless he was satisfied with the diagram. On the 19th July he called on Mr. Moore, the defendant's solicitor, in reference to the diagrams, and the latter said that the defendant repudiated the whole transaction altogether. Thornton merely said on the 14th June that he had no power to sign anything, but that he would accept a cheque. About the end of 1902 he entered into further negotiations with the defendant through Mr. Searle, who was to go to £14,000 for the property, as witness was anxious to have it before the flotation of his company.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: He recognised the document annexed to the declaration as binding on him as the purchaser.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Michael McNamara stated that he bought part of this property under a sheriff's sale, and he got the remainder under the Derelict Lands Act. The plaintiff asked witness would he give him the sale of the property, and witness agreed, putting the price at £14,000. On the 28th May Clarke wrote, saying that he thought he could get £13,000 for the property. On the 13th June the plaintiff came and offered £12,500, and witness agreed on condition that he would get a cheque next day for £500 and a broker's note. Witness did not go into town next day, but he sent Thornton in. That afternoon he saw Clarke, who said that he had not got the cheque and witness said the deal was off. The plaintiff produced a note for payment in a number of days, but witness would have nothing to do with it. The plaintiff said that £500 was not so easily got and that Allan said that witness could not be hard up. The following Monday, after seeing his attorney, he told Clarke that he was advised not to sell the property until a proper diagram was put in. He returned from England in October, when Mr. Allan and Mr. Searle saw him, and subsequently the latter offered £14,00 on behalf of the former.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The plaintiff suggested that broker's notes should be passed. He sold the ground for £12,500, £500 to be paid in cash on acceptance. If the £500 had been paid there would have been no further trouble. The real difficulty was not that he had not got his diagrams ready. He did not get transfer under the Derelict Lands Act until March, 1903.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He looked on it as a conditional sale, and the only reason he had for terminating the contract was that the £500 was not forthcoming.

Patrick Geo. Thornton, son-in-law of the defendant, stated that he was present on the 13th June when the memorandum was drawn up. The plaintiff said that the cheque would be at Mr. Allan's office next morning. Allan said he could not put his hand on £500 that morning, but that he would be able to do so in ten or fourteen days. The plaintiff asked him if he would accept a broker's note, but witness refused to do so. There was no broker's note produced on that occasion. That afternoon the plaintiff called, and witness informed him that the defendant had instructed him to say that the deal was off.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He had been holding the defendant's power of attorney on the 13th June. He had authority to accept the broker's note. He did not lead Allan and Clarke to believe that he had no authority to accept the broker's note.

Henry O'Connor stated that he remembered Clarke calling at his house to see the defendant. The plaintiff asked defendant to sign a note, and the latter asked for the £500, and Clarke said that it was not easily picked up. Witness understood Clarke to say that the money might be forthcoming in ten or twelve days, and the defendant said if the money could not be produced the deal was off. Previous to that Clarke said that he would not give the cheque to Thornton, but when McNamara asked him if he had the cheque then he replied in the negative.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He remembered the occasion very distinctly; in fact he took a great interest in the proceedings. He did not recollect the defendant making any arrangements about going to town on Monday.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Cur. adv. vult.

Postea (April 25th).

Hopley, J.: The plaintiff, who is a broker, sues the defendant for the sum of £312 10s. as due to him by way of commission on the sale, in June, 1902, of certain landed property—being 2½ per cent. on the sum of £12,500, the amount for which he alleges that he, acting as the plaintiff's agent, sold the said property to one Allen. The defendant denies that he and Allen ever came to terms or that the sale was completed as alleged by the plaintiff. The facts are that the defendant had, in 1884, acquired certain land at Woodstock adjoining the railway and that about May, 1902, he had applied for and obtained an order from this Court for an amended diagram and title under the provisions of the Derelict Lands Act, in order to get transfer of a portion of the land, in his possession but not included in his original transfer. Such amended transfer had not in June, 1902, been issued, and as a matter of fact was not issued until March, 1903. About May, 1902, defendant had instructed the plaintiff to sell the said land, and certain negotiations took place between him and Mr. Allen, who was desirous of acquiring the land for the purposes of his business, the British South African Asphalt Co., which he at that time contemplated turning into a limited liability company, a step which he has since carried out. These negotiations culminated in the submission, on the 13th of June, 1902, of a firm offer by Allen through the plaintiff of £12,500 for the property. The defendant was satisfied with the price offered, but made certain conditions which were embodied in a written memorandum which the plaintiff then drew up, and which was signed by the defendant. The memorandum is as follows:—"June 13, 1902.—Bought on account of Andrew Allen, Esq., or his nominees, certain piece of ground, approximately 480 x 180 x 280, as per diagram and transfer in favour of seller, for the sum of £12,500 (twelve thousand five hundred pounds sterling). Broker's note to be passed on the 14th inst., in terms as follows:—£500 cash on acceptance of B/N, and the balance on transfer.—M. McNamara."—The defendant agreed to attend at the plaintiff's office on the 14th to complete the matter: but on that day, feeling indisposed, he deputed his son-in-law, Thornton, who at the time also held his General Power of Attorney, to represent him in the matter: and accordingly Thornton, Allen, and the plaintiff presented broker's notes in triplicate for acceptance by the parties in the following terms:—"Myburgh's Chambers, St. George's-street, June 14th, 1902.—Bought from M. McNamara, Esq., Woodstock: Sold to Andrew Allen, Esq., or his nominees, Woodstock, certain landed property in Woodstock, abutting on the railway, as per diagram in possession of the seller, approximately measuring 480 x 180 x 280 x 360, for the sum of Twelve thousand five hundred pounds sterling, all these with buildings thereon. The sum of Five hundred pounds sterling to be paid on acceptance of these presents, and the balance on transfer—such transfer to be given and accepted within six months of date hereof. Payment as above, seller to pay brokerage 2½ per cent.—Thos. A. Clarke, Broker."

There is a dispute as to what happened at the interview. The plaintiff alleges that Thornton said he had come only to receive Allen's cheque for £500, and that he had no authority to accept the broker's note—whereas Thornton says that he was fully empowered to represent the defendant, and that he would have accepted the broker's note if the cheque had been forthcoming. Allen does not give any decided evidence on the point, but he admits that he raised a difficulty about giving the cheque forthwith unless the diagrams were first exhibited to him. The plaintiff says that, owing to Thornton's alleged inability to act in the matter of the acceptance, and to suit the convenience of the defendant, it was then agreed that the completion of the transaction, in so far as the formal acceptance of the broker's notes and the payment of the cheque went, should stand over for about ten days, and that he then inserted in the broker's notes, after the words "these presents," the words "or within ten days of date,"—so that the notes now ran (as to that portion thereof) as follows:—"The sum of £500 to be paid on acceptance of these presents or within ten days of date, and the balance on transfer, etc." Thornton on the other hand alleges that Allen said his money was just then otherwise employed, and that he would not be able to find £500 for a week or ten days, and that he thereupon said that he had no power to accept such terms.

On this portion of the case I am disposed to believe that Thornton's version is the correct one. It is highly improbable that he would have been deputed by the defendant to receive a cheque, unempowered to perform the act which was necessarily a condition precedent to such payment. Allen admits that he raised a difficulty about paying £500 without first seeing the diagrams—a demand on his part probably made to gain delay, as he must have known that at the time the amended diagrams and titles had not yet been issued.

Thornton then went to the defendant and reported what had happened; and the defendant, who was not confined to his house, went to visit a neighbour, a Mr. O'Connor. In the afternoon of the same day the plaintiff went to Woodstock, first to defendant's house, where he found only Thornton, who swears that he gave plaintiff a message from defendant that the deal was off. This is, however, denied by the plaintiff. Thornton also told him where defendant was to be found and plaintiff consequently went to O'Connor's house, where in the presence of the latter, he had an interview with the defendant, to whom he presented the broker's note, altered as above set forth, for his acceptance. He states that the defendant was quite satisfied with the new arrangement, and promised to go into Cape Town on Monday, 16th June, to complete the papers. The defendant and O'Connor, however, are positive that no such acquiescence was expressed by defendant, but that, on the contrary, he asked for the cheque for £500 and, upon plaintiff's being unable to satisfy that demand, he declared that as his conditions had not been complied with by Allen, the "deal was off." It is clear that plaintiff left Woodstock with his broker's notes still unaccepted; and on Monday the defendant consulted his attorneys and subsequently went to plaintiff's office, where he communicated to him the substance of their advice, which was that it would be inadvisable to sell the land to anyone until the amended titles had been issued. Nothing further seems to have been then done. Defendant went for some months to England, and on his return, about October of the same year, he was approached by Allen and plaintiff, who said they wanted the ground on behalf of Allen. On defendant's telling them that there had been no sale, plaintiff said that an addition of £500 or £1,000 to the price would be no impediment; and subsequently a Mr. Searle, a friend of Allen's and of the defendant's, tried to negotiate a sale at £14,000—but this also came to nothing, as by that time the property was under offer to another person, provisionally, on the failure of Allen to establish the transactions of the 13th and 14th June, 1902, as a sale—a position which Allen had not at that time abandoned. When the offer through Searle produced nothing, Allen sued the defendant; but he did not go beyond the close of pleadings and never set the case down for trial; and eventually, when the defendant had, in October, 1903, set down the matter to obtain judgment by reason of Allen's failure to proceed, the latter withdrew proceedings and paid the defendant's costs. Thereafter the present plaintiff instituted the present suit about sixteen months after the alleged sale, by virtue of which he claims his commission.

On the whole of the evidence I am of opinion that there never was a consensus ad idem between the parties as to the matter. It seems to me that plaintiff was, on June 13, authorised by Allen to offer £12,500 for the ground: but that not anticipating defendant's demand for £500 cash, to be paid next day, he had not authorised plaintiff to agree to such a condition. Defendant, however, in accepting the offer of £12,500 made it an essential condition that there should be an immediate payment of £500. Plaintiff embodied this condition in the memorandum above set forth, and promised to have the transaction closed next day by the passing of accepted broker's notes setting forth the terms to which he no doubt thought that Allen would readily accede. No point is made by the defendant of the fact that in the broker's notes as drawn up, there was an undertaking on his part to give transfer within six months, a somewhat risky undertaking in the circumstances, and if Allen had been ready to pay the £500 on the 14th June, no doubt the transaction would have been complete. But the evidence is clear that Allen did not and would not pay the £500 on the 14th of June, and as he had never authorised plaintiff to impose that obligation upon him, it seems to me that his refusal to pay—save on compliance by the defendant with a demand, the production of his diagrams, which it was at that time impossible to fulfil—put an end to the transaction. The plaintiff tried to repair the breach by inserting a new condition, which he hoped would suit both parties, but without avail. The result was that there never was a concluded, enforceable contract between Allen and the defendant, and consequently no benefit ever enured to the defendant as a result of the plaintiff's work. There must therefore be judgment for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1904.
 { Apr. 21st.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Wm. Charles Leonard Hedding (a Transvaal attorney), as an attorney of this Court, under Act 30, of 1892.

Mr. Gardiner, representing the Law Society, said that they did not oppose the application.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Registrar of the Witwatersrand High Court at Johannesburg.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Wm. Angus Hofmeyr, as a notary. Applicant was an attorney of this Court, and he had applied to be examined for admission as a notary under Section 5 of the Act of 1858. Applicant had now been examined, and had duly passed.

Buchanan, J., said that the Law Society stated that the applicant had filed affidavits upon them.

Mr. Buchanan contended that another affidavit was not necessary. Notice of the application had been served on the Law Society.

Application granted, and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ARONSTAM V. MAISEL BROS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on certain two dishonoured cheques on the A.B.C. Bank, for £125 each, together with interest from the 1st March, 1904, and costs. There was also a claim for statement of account, and debate of account in certain joint dealings.

Mr. M. de Villiers said he appeared for the defendant to oppose the provisional claim. The defendant had three defences to the claim itself. He objected to the form in which the action was proceeded with, as the citation was uncertain, inconsistent, and irregular. The present objection was to the form in which the action was brought.

Mr. Gardiner said he merely asked at present for provisional sentence.

Mr. De Villiers read the original affidavit of the petitioner, which showed that there had been a complicated series of transactions between the parties. Petitioner believed that there were funds in the bank in the name of Maisel or Maisel Bros. Petitioner desired to institute proceedings against the said Maisel and against the firm of Maisel Bros. by edictal citation for the purpose of recovering £250, which he had deposited, and for damages for breach of contract. He thought he had been doing business with Maisel personally, and not with a limited liability company. An order had been made for attachment of moneys in the bank to the credit of Maisel or Maisel Bros. Mr. De Villiers read the citation, and submitted that it was irregular. The order was that the interdict should be served on the bank restraining them from paying out any moneys belonging to defendants. The petitioner was inconsistent, because he alleged first that the partnership continued to exist, and then that it was at an end. The citation was uncertain, irregular, and inconsistent, and was not in terms of the order made by the Court. He was sure that the intention of the Court was that there should be one action between the parties and not two actions.

Buchanan, J., said that the Court could not take notice of such technical objections. The main object of the citation was to bring the parties into court.

Mr. De Villiers put in the affidavit of Bennie Maisel, which denied that the deponent had ever given himself out as the proprietor of the respondent company. He gave the plaintiff two cheques, and informed him that he would avail himself of the option to pay the £250 plus 8 per cent., and he was perfectly satisfied. Deponent had iron in the partnership to the value of £700 or £800, and the plaintiff sold it for £140. He also disposed of two horses, and a wagon, and wrecked the whole business. He intended instituting an action against the plaintiff, who had written a letter, the original of which could not be produced, cancelling the partnership.

Mr. Gardiner read the replying affidavit of Moses Aranstam, which set out that Maisel had represented to him that he was the proprietor of the company. The statement that Maisel purchased 200 tons of iron was absolutely incorrect; he had no more than 10 tons on hand. He absolutely repudiated the copy of the letter put in by the defendant.

Judgment was given on the two cheques of £125, less £184 4s., received by the plaintiff, with costs, and with leave to either party to go into the principal case.

BOSMAN V. ROYTOWSKI.

Mr. Roux moved for the final sequestration of the defendant's estate.
Order granted.

BERGL V. CONRAD.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Order granted.

CUTLER V. STEPHAN.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £3,000, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from July 1, 1903, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest.
Order granted.

S.A. BREWERIES V. ZIN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £6 19s., for goods sold and delivered, and for provisional sentence for £550 on a mortgage bond, which had become due by non-payment of instalments and interest, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from August 1, 1903, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.
Order granted.

CELLIERS V. D'OLIVEIRA.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from June 9, 1903, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.
Order granted.

BARRON V. HENNESSY.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from July 1, 1903, which had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and that the property hypothecated should be declared executable.
Order granted.

FLETCHER'S RETAIL AND OTHERS V. VAN DYK.

Mr. Upington moved to make final the provisional order of sequestration granted against the defendant's estate on April 7.

Order granted.

ABRAHAMSE BROS. V. KEMPAN AND HOBBERMAN.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment on a promissory note for £302, with interest from April, 1904, and costs.
Order granted.

JUTA AND CO. V. SHAW.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £63 and costs.
Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

DE WAAL AND CO. V. { 1904.
BURGER. { Apr. 21st.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £16 8s. 6d., with interest and costs of suit.
Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. MCLEOD.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for the sum of £82 13s. 9d., being balance of account due for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

MOLLER V. CROWE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £100, the balance of the purchase price of certain landed property situated at Glen Lily, with interest and costs.
Order granted.

KNEE BROS. V. SEBBA BROS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for two claims for interest, and an order of ejectment.

AFRICA V. A.M.E. CHURCH.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £20, money lent, with interest of £3, as agreed upon, and costs.

Order granted.

SEA POINT MUNICIPALITY V. COHEN AND KAPLEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £88 15s., rates assessed for the year 1904, and £1 18s. 3d., balance of account for drainage work done on certain property of the plaintiff, less the sum of £30, paid on account.

Order granted.

TETLEY AND FLEMING V. BUFFALO SUPPLY CO.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved, under Rule 319, for £758 17s. 11d., balance of a judgment, and £427 16s. 4d., interest, and interest on the total amount of £20,852 5s. 2d., from March, 1903.

Judgment as prayed.

VAN ROOYEN V. SACK.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 319, on the plaintiff's declaration, for sums of £128, £17 17s. 6d., and £8 4s. 6d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore moræ, and costs.

Order granted.

JOHNSON V. CUNNINGHAM AND CORTESE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, under Rule 319, for judgment in default of plea for £63, for rent due, and payable in advance, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

Mr. Buchanan mentioned a matter between the parties, which appeared in the motion roll, for an interdict to restrain removal of goods.

Buchanan, J., said that execution could be taken against defendants at once.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SOYERS V. SOYERS. { 1904.
Apr. 21st.

Mr. Struben moved for the rule nisi for leave to sue in forma pauperis for divorce to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Struben accepting reference as counsel and Mr. Cloete as attorney.

MARAIS V. MARAIS.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute. The matter he said arose out of an application by Pieter Johannes Marais for an order restraining the Standard Bank and the Board of Executors from paying to Mrs.

Belfield Marais any moneys other than a reasonable sum for the purposes of the defence of herself and her daughter, pending a further order of Court. A rule had been granted, which had been operating as an interim interdict.

His Lordship said that the applicant did not seem to have much locus standi. He did not allege that her money was his.

Sir H. Juta said that the plaintiff was instituting an action.

[Buchanan, J.: I don't see that that is a sufficient ground. The respondent does not appear herself, but she has sent a letter objecting to the interdict. The interdict is very indefinite in terms—"other than a reasonable sum." The point is, what is a reasonable sum?]

Sir H. Juta said he thought £50 would be a reasonable sum for the defence.

Buchanan, J., said that the Court could not make an order, and the rule nisi would lapse.

BARRY V. BARRY.

Mr. Alexander moved, on behalf of the plaintiff (Mrs. Barry), for leave to sue in forma pauperis for divorce.

The plaintiff, replying to His Lordship, said she had no means.

Rule nisi granted, calling on the defendant to show cause on Thursday next why leave should not be granted as prayed.

Ex parte CAPE MARINE SUBURBS, LTD.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the rule nisi for the cancellation of certain sales of property to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

PERRAM AND BESLEY V. LAREY.

Mr. M. de Villiers said that, after reading the respondent's affidavit, he was afraid that he could not successfully oppose the discharge of the rule which had been granted, restraining the purchaser of certain property from paying certain money to defendant.

Mr. Upington (for the defendant) said that he supposed the rule would be discharged, with costs.

Rule discharged, with costs.

JOHNSON V. CUNNINGHAM AND CORTESE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for a extension of interdict upon certain goods until such time as execution could be carried out.

Rule made absolute with costs, but not to prevent the attachment of the property in execution of judgment already given on illiquid claim for rent.

ST. SAYLOUR'S CHURCH (CLAREMONT)
V. FRIEDMAN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute requiring one Schapiera to pay rent of premises which he had under lease from the respondent Michael Friedman to one Brunt, who was authorised to receive same by the applicants. The applicants had obtained provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,500 against the respondent.

Mr. Bisset said the respondent was the owner of the premises, he had let them to Schapiera, who had not paid his rent for March and April, and he had got a rule nisi restraining Schapiera from removing his goods pending an action for rent.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte CLOETE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the cancellation of certain mortgage bond for £400 upon shares which petitioner (who resided in the Caledon district) had in certain property in the Bredasdorp division. Petitioner found that, although he had paid the capital, the bond had not been cancelled in the Debt Register by Layman, the mortgagor, who left the Colony some years ago to reside in Germany.

Buchanan, J., directed the matter to stand over, pending the report of the Registrar of Deeds.

Ex parte FULLER.

Mr. Howel Jones moved, on behalf of the Secretary of Agriculture, for a rule nisi to be made absolute calling on all concerned to show cause why title of certain lands should not be re-issued to one Decker.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte KLEINHAUS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order confirming the partition of certain property in the division of Riversdale, in which a minor was interested.

The Master reported favourably.
Order granted.

TURNER V. SHEPHERD BROS.

Mr. McGregor moved for an award of arbitrator to be made rule of Court and costs, and for witnesses' expenses of the applicant and his manager.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., said that the respondent objected to the latter part of the application. The expenses amounted to over £50.

Mr. McGregor stated that Mr. Polhemus Lyon sat as arbitrator, in terms of Act 29 of 1898, to settle certain differences between the parties. It was found by the arbitrator that there was an amount due to the applicant of £339. The applicant was Thomas Wm. Turner, confectioner, Durban, Natal, and the respondents were Shepherd Bros., of Stellenbosch. A letter from the arbitrator stated that his award was in favour of the applicant for payment of a bill of exchange for £339 1s. 3d., which had been dishonoured, with interest at 6 per cent. from the date when the said bill was dishonoured, together with costs of reference and award, including arbitrator's fee of 10 guineas.

Mr. Schreiner said that the respondents opposed, on the ground that applicant was not entitled to his witnesses' expenses.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J., directed that the award should be made a rule of Court, with costs, the costs and the reference of award to be taxed by the taxing master, and the respondent to have the costs of opposition to the motion.

In re THE INSOLVENT ESTATE OF THOMAS DICKER.

Mr. M. Bisset, for the petitioning creditors, moved for the appointment of John Olander Walter as trustee.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan, for certain other creditors, read the affidavit of Mr. Mostert, of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, which set out that his firm had received instructions from some of the creditors to oppose the motion, and to ask for the appointment of Frederick William Wilmot, who represented the same number of creditors and more of the insolvent estate as trustee.

Buchanan, J., directed that both parties named be appointed as joint trustees, with power to liquidate the estate, the costs of both petitions to come out of the estate.

BRETT V. THE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL OF VICTORIA WEST.

Mr. Upington moved to fix a day for the trial of the action by jury which had been duly demanded, in accordance with the provisions of Act 23 of 1891, and for the plaintiff's evidence to be taken on commission. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent.

Ordered to be set down for 2nd May, and the evidence of the plaintiff to be taken on commission, Dr. Greer to act as commissioner, costs to be costs in the cause.

NOURSE V. THE "CAPE TIMES" AND OTHERS.

These were applications to fix a day for trial by jury and for the appointment of a commission de bene esse. The action was for libel contained in an article which appeared in the "Owl" and the "Cape Times" as the publisher, was joined in the action. The commission was to take evidence of certain witnesses in Johannesburg.

The affidavit of Mr. McIntyre, the respondent Kingswell's attorney, set out that on the 24th July, 1903, the defendant was served with a summons. On the 29th July the defendant entered an appearance, and on the 13th August he filed his plea. On the 5th September the replication was filed. The second-named defendant, Mr. G. H. Kingswell, had been specially retained as war correspondent for the "Daily Express," London, and a syndicate of American papers, and he was called by his employers to proceed to the scene of hostilities between Russia and Japan. On the 8th January, 1904, the said defendant received cable instructions to proceed to Japan, and notice of his departure had been prominently chronicled in the "Cape Times" and the "South African News." He left on the 14th January by the troopship Assaye. No action was taken by the plaintiff in the matter, and no notice given to the defendant, who, deponent was confident, had been led to believe that the plaintiff had abandoned the action. Deponent's firm was unable to proceed with the defence, as the defendant was a material witness in the case. He had called on the representatives of the said defendant, but was unable to get any assistance in order to work up the defence. The defence would be greatly prejudiced in the action through his absence, and he had told deponent that he would return as soon as his agreement as war correspondent terminated.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Van Zyl, the plaintiff's attorney, set out that the defendant's attorney was well aware of the fact that the case could not be proceeded with sooner, as material witnesses for the plaintiff were in Europe. The defendant had every opportunity of giving his evidence on commission before leaving the Colony.

The replying affidavit of Mr. McIntyre denied that he was aware that very necessary witnesses of the plaintiff were in Europe or that the trial was delayed for that reason.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for the applicant. Sir H. Juta, K.C., for the respondent Kingswell. Mr. P. Jones for the "Cape Times."

Mr. Schreiner said that the pleadings closed as far back as September last, and before Mr. Kingswell left there were ample opportunities to take his evidence. Surely in an action where there were certain allegations in a newspaper it would not be a very difficult thing to prepare the defence? Was the plaintiff to wait until Russia and Japan had settled their difference in the Far East?

[Buchanan, J.: What time would it take to communicate with him in Japan?]

Mr. Kingswell may be sending wireless telegrams for all I know. We have no means of ascertaining when the war will terminate. Continuing, counsel said Mr. Nourse's reputation had been injured in connection with certain statements with regard to racing transactions at Johannesburg and Kenilworth. What had Mr. Kingswell to put forward of his own knowledge in relation to these matters? There was really nothing before the Court to show why the action should be postponed. If Mr. Kingswell was such an important witness, then his evidence should have been taken on commission before he left the Colony.

[Buchanan, J.: What time do you think you would require, Sir Henry?]

Sir H. Juta said he had made inquiries from his attorney, and he was not certain when Mr. Kingswell would be back, but the attorney was under the impression he would return in August. If the plaintiff was in such a hurry to bring the action, he could have had his witnesses examined on commission. Mr. Kingswell was a most important witness, and there were circumstances, especially in regard to what had taken place since this case had been listed, which gave him the idea that the case had been abandoned, and it would be utterly impossible to go to trial without him. What harm would it do the plaintiff to wait a couple of months longer, and in the meantime it might be possible to communicate with Mr. Kingswell, and give the Court more definite information.

Buchanan, J., said it was only reasonable some time should be given to communicate with the defendant, but if he could not appear before the date, he would have to take the consequences. Justice would be met by fixing the day of trial for 17th August next, but the defendant would have to be prepared to go to trial on that date. The application to take the evidence of certain witnesses for the plaintiff in Johannesburg would be granted, and Mr. Percival Smith would act as commissioner. The evidence, however, would not be taken before 10th June.

WALSH AND WALSH V. ERSKINE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for the balance of a certain mortgage bond for £7,000, and for an order attaching the hypothecated property ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Leave granted, the return day fixed for 14th July, personal service to be affected, and an order granted to attach the property.

Ex parte RETIEF.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sell certain property in Graaff-Reinet. The will of petitioner's late husband stipulated that the farm should not be sold, but, at the present time, her income was very uncertain. The Master's report was favourable.

Judgment in terms of the Master's report.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. BISHOP.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order of ejectment against the respondent from the beach at Camp's Bay, where she had had permission to erect tents for the use of tea rooms during the summer months. The condition of the grant was that this permission could be withdrawn on two weeks' notice. The affidavit of the Under Colonial Secretary set out that the respondent had been convicted of selling intoxicating liquor, and she had refused to quit the place.

The respondent appeared in person, and said that her tents had been blown away three times. She admitted the conviction against her, but said that there was nothing else against her since. She had lived there for three years, and as no workhouse existed in Cape Town, she did not know what she should do.

Buchanan, J.: You will have to leave the premises by the end of the month. You can take your order, Mr. Jones.

PARKER V. PARKER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sue the respondent, applicant's husband, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, a division of the joint estate, and custody of the minor children of the marriage. The respondent had not written since July, 1902.

Leave granted, personal service to be effected, failing which, one publication in the "Gazette" and a Bloemfontein paper, returnable 2nd June, and the respondent to be served with the notice of trial along with the citation.

Postea (October 17th). The rule was made absolute.

Ex parte WATCHAM.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order confirming the sale of certain property. The respondent had purchased certain property in East London for his minor daughter for £200, and had sold it for £250 within a few weeks. Counsel asked that an order should be granted authorising the Registrar of Deeds, King William's Town, to pass transfer from the daughter to the purchaser. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted.

MCKENZIE AND CO. V. TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD.

Sir H. Juta moved, in terms of a consent paper, for an order setting aside a certain judgment, and for leave to the applicants to purge their default.

Leave granted, the defendant to pay costs of the application.

Ex parte LE ROUX.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for leave to raise money on mortgage on certain property in Oudtshoorn, and to appoint some person to represent the minor children in the division of the property. The Master's report was favourable, and he suggested Johannes Botha as a fit and proper person to look after the children's interests.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte STREITLER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order confirming the sale of certain property, which the petitioner had bought at an auction of an estate, of which he was an executor.

Order granted.

BOARD OF EXECUTORS AND OTHERS V. HADIEN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising certain of the applicants to sequester the respondent's estate. Mr. Alexander appeared for the receivers.

Buchanan, J., said that the petition was not in order. There was no allegation of any act of insolvency, and there was nothing to show the condition of the estate. If the Board of Executors wished to amend their position they should apply for an extension of the return day.

Ex parte WOLF AND WIFE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on notice of motion for the registration in this colony of a certain ante-nuptial contract registered in Pretoria.

Order granted subject to the rights of any interim creditors.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

STAUDE V. STAUDE. { 1904.
 { Apr. 22nd.

This was an action for the restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, and costs, with forfeiture of the benefits of community, plaintiff to have custody of the child.

The declaration set out that the parties were married on February 24, 1898, within this colony. In February, 1902, the defendant wilfully and maliciously deserted the plaintiff. There was one child (a minor) issue of the marriage.

Mr. Russell appeared for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register, produced the register of the marriage.

The plaintiff, Lydia Staude, said she was married to the defendant at King William's Town on the 24th February, 1898. After their marriage they lived in King William's Town; one child, a girl, was born, now four years of age. Defendant left King William's Town in February, 1902; he said he was going to Queen's Town. He did not ask her to go with him. He had not since communicated with her in any way. After the summons by edictal citation was published, a letter was received from him, dated February, this year, saying that he arrived in Cape Town in December last, after having been employed as cook on the construction works at Ermelo. He said he had been waiting for her letter, but she had never sent him a word. He had had hard times, and had frequently been sick. He was willing to return to her if they prepared a home. He asked her to send him his green coat. He promised to give up drink. Witness added that she knew defendant was in Cape Town. Her attorneys replied to the defendant's letter, but the defendant did not answer this communication.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th June, failing which to show cause on the last day of next term why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, personal service to be effected.

Postea (August 11th). The rule was made absolute.

GROBELAAR, TROMP AND { 1904.
 CO. V. CHRISTIE. { Apr. 22nd.

This was an action brought by Grobelaar, Tromp and Co., of Bloemfontein, against a farmer named Christie, of Beaufort West, for the recovery of the sum of £497 13s., balance of the purchase price of some sheep and goats sold to the defendant in November, 1902, alleged to be due. The defendant pleaded that the debt had been duly discharged.

From plaintiff's declaration it appeared that they had in their employ a man named Grobelaar, who in November, 1902, went to Beaufort West to purchase some sheep on behalf of the plaintiff company. Grobelaar bought from the defendant Christie sheep to the value of £1,597 13s., of which he paid £1,100 in cash, leaving a balance due of £497 13s. Subsequently Grobelaar sold to Christie some other sheep, the subject of the suit, to the value of £600. The position between the parties then was that Grobelaar owed Christie £497 13s. and Christie owed Grobelaar £600. Grobelaar went to the bank and paid in to the credit of Christie the sum of £497 13s., Grobelaar subsequently took from Christie a cheque for £102 7s., giving him a receipt for the full amount of £600. Defendant pleaded that he had paid Christie £497 13s., together with the cheque for £102 7s.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for plaintiffs: Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendant.

Andries Herbert Hatzenberg, clerk in the Standard Bank at Beaufort West, stated that in July, 1902, Mr. Christie had an account in the bank. The credit slip produced was that in connection with the payment which Grobelaar had paid in to Christie's credit Grobelaar drew a cheque for £1,500, of which £497 13s. was transferred to Christie's account.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: To his knowledge Christie paid nothing in on the day in question. Mr. Grobelaar put £497 13s. to Christie's credit. The same day Grobelaar came to the bank subsequently and cashed a cheque for £102 7s., drawn by Mr. Christie. On November 27, Christie deposited £1,000.

Evert Nicholas Grobelaar, aged 21, stated that in November, 1902, he came down from Springfontein, O.R.C., on behalf of the plaintiffs to Beaufort West. On arrival at Beaufort West he drew from the bank £1,300, placed to his credit by his principals. On the 25th he went to Christie's farm. On the following day he bought sheep and goats from Christie to the value of £1,597 13s. After the animals had been counted out, witness went with Christie and a man named Marais into the house. They then proceeded to settle up. As he had not sufficient money to pay the whole sum, he paid Christie £1,100. Christie Marais, and witness then went to Beaufort West, where they arrived about mid-day. Witness had previously bought sheep from a man named Verster to the value of £1,037. As these sheep were not in good condition, witness sold them to Christie for £600; that was at a loss of £437. The position of affairs then was that witness owed Christie £497 13s., and Christie owed him £600. Witness went to Beaufort West and placed £497 13s. to the credit of Christie at the bank, witness having received a further credit of £1,500 from his principals. Subsequently, Christie came to witness and said, "I will pay you £102 7s., the difference between £497 13s. and £600." Witness took Christie's cheque for £102 7s., giving Christie a receipt for £600. Christie told witness to insert on the receipt the words, "and have paid it." It was not until witness returned to his firm that he discovered his mistake. The error was due to the fact that at the time he took the £102 7s. he had forgotten about the £497 13s. which he had placed to Christie's credit. Witness went back to Beaufort West, and after some conversation and interviews, during which Christie said he could not understand it, Christie, having consulted his attorneys, declined to refund the money.

Cross-examined by Mr. MacGregor. On November 24, 1902, he bought 1,150 sheep from Mr. Verster for £1,037. He had the money with him, but intended to use that money—£1,200—in buying sheep from Christie. Witness went then to Christie's farm, Paardekraal, where the transaction of the buying of the sheep and the paying of the £1,100 took place. No receipts were given. When he had paid the £1,100 to Christie, witness had £100 left. On November 27 he asked Mr. Verster to take back his sheep, but he declined. Witness then asked Christie to take them over. After first declining to do so, Christie took the sheep at £600. On Monday, December 1, witness met Christie in the street. Witness denied that Christie told him he was going to the bank. They, Christie and himself, went to the bank, where witness placed the £497 13s. to Christie's credit. The whole transaction was not settled at the bank by Christie giving witness a cheque for £102 7s., because witness's books, etc., were at his rooms. Witness had all his receipts drawn up prior to his receiving any payments. When he left the bank, the only other thing outstanding between Christie and him was the matter of the £600. He knew that the first transaction was closed, but he got confused in the figures.

[Hopley, J. (to Mr. McGregor): Your case must be that Christie paid Grobelaar a cheque for £102 7s. and £497 13s. in cash.]

Mr. McGregor: Yes, my lord.

[Hopley, J.: It seems a peculiar thing thing to do.

Referring to the words "en betaald heb" ("and have paid it"), appearing on the receipt, his Lordship remarked that it appeared like over-precautionousness.

Further cross-examined, witness stated his brother had bought some sheep from him about a month previously, for which on 29th December he received in cash £455 12s. 6d. He gave no receipt, as it was not customary amongst speculators to give receipts. There was no evidence of this transaction, except his own and his brother's word. On the Monday morning he took this money along with some other funds to deposit in the bank. Young Mr. Grobelaar met him, and they went to his (Grobelaar's) room. Grobelaar had some receipts, which he asked witness to sign for previous transactions, and witness then asked plaintiff for a receipt for the £497 13s. he had paid him in cash and the cheque for £102 7s. Plaintiff then drew up a receipt in Dutch for £600. Grobelaar then went to pay some money to Mr. Truter. Witness next saw Grobelaar at his brother's house about a week afterwards. Plaintiff then complained to him that he had not received all the money for the sheep. Witness explained that he had paid him, and suggested they should go to Mr. Theron (a local attorney) that afternoon. Subsequently an appointment for the following morning was arranged. The next day Mr. Theron also explained the matter to plaintiff, who appeared to be satisfied. Mr. Theron had cautioned plaintiff not to spread reports about that he had not been paid, or he might get himself into trouble. Later he received letters from plaintiff, but thought it unnecessary to reply. Plaintiff had told him he wanted cash to make up an amount of £1,500, and that he did not want to deposit it. It was a deep-laid plot to make him pay the money again. He did not keep books. He could not say what business he was doing of what he was worth. He did not consider it was necessary to keep books for his transactions, they were mostly cash, or he got promissory notes. He just made a note in his pocket-book. He could not produce the note-book or say where it was; it might be on the farm. He had sold the sheep to his brother by letter, and had since destroyed the letter.

Mr. Theron stated he was an attorney practising at Beaufort West. Christie had come to him on the 29th December, and handed him a receipt signed by Grobelaar for £600. He saw both Christie and Grobelaar the following morning, and Christie had explained how he had paid £102 7s. by cheque, and £497 13s. in cash. Grobelaar then said he could not remember anything about the cash payment of £497 13s., and practically denied it. Christie had thereupon explained how he had paid the money, mentioning the hour, etc. After Christie's explanation, Grobelaar said, "Ik verstaan noe" (I understand now), and witness quite understood that he was satisfied. He then told Grobelaar that he should not go spreading reports that Mr. Christie had not paid him the money and that if he did he would have to stand the consequences.

Mr. Truter stated he was a local Attorney of Beaufort West, and also Deputy Sheriff. It was not the prevailing custom to give receipts. He had a Good-for to collect from Grobelaar amounting to £1,037, for a Mr. Verstaan. Grobelaar told him he had not got the money, but that he was re-selling some sheep, and as soon as he had sold them would settle. He had no dealings with Grobelaar on the 29th December, but on the following Monday Grobelaar came to witness's office and handed him a canvas bag containing coin. Witness emptied this bag on to his table and counted out £1,037, passing the residue, which consisted of some hundreds of coins, both gold and silver, to Grobelaar. Grobelaar had a leather bag with him also, but all the money paid witness was from the canvas bag. He could not say how much actually remained after he had taken the £1,037, but there were certainly hundreds of coins.

John Christie, brother of defendant, stated he was a farmer, residing at Kalakraal, in the district of Beaufort West, about eight hours journey off. He saw his brother towards the end of November. He had bought some sheep from his brother about a month previous, and in consequence of a letter he received from his brother he went to Beaufort West to pay him. On the 29th he met his brother and paid him £455 12s. 6d. He did not keep any books except an account of what stock he had. He had not brought this book with him. He did not keep a banking account, but knew his brother did. He always kept a certain amount of ready money in the house and paid his brother in cash.

This closed the case for the defence.

The Court did not call on Sir Henry Juta.

Mr. McGregor said that a receipt raised a prima facie presumption that the money had been paid, and the onus of rebutting that view lay on defendant. He considered from the evidence that the two transactions were absolutely separate. How could a man give a receipt in cold blood for £600 when he only received a cheque for £100. This could not have been done in ignorance or forgetfulness. The evidence of Grobelaar on which the case was entirely based, was utterly uncorroborated.

Hopley, J.: This is an action for the balance of the purchase price of certain sheep sold by plaintiff firm to the defendant. The defendant held a receipt for the whole amount, and was therefore in the better and superior position. If I had felt any doubt whatever, I would have called on Sir Henry Juta to argue the question. But I have no doubt whatever. Young Grobelaar was only a mere schoolboy at the time, and had got muddled in the transactions which gave rise to the present action. The defendant's explanation of the passing of £497 13s was wholly incredible. He thought that Grobelaar had taken the cheque for £102 7s. in error. The form of the acknowledgement of the purchase of the sheep by Grobelaar confirm this view, signed as it was by the defendant. Judgment will therefore be for the plaintiff as prayed with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ABEL V. ELLIOTT AND CO. { 1904.
Apr. 22nd.

Principal and agent - Payment to dishonest agent.

Defendant had made a payment by cheque to one S., who had sold certain sheep to him as plaintiff's agent. S. thereupon forged plaintiff's indorsement on the cheque and converted it to his own uses.

Held, that as S. was known to the plaintiff to be a man of doubtful character, and the defendant had acted bona fide, this payment to plaintiff was good.

This was an action brought by Richard Abel, a stock-breeder, of Malmesbury, against Elliott and Co., butchers, Wynberg, to recover £715 7s. 6d., being the purchase price of certain sheep sold to the defendants.

The declaration set out that about 1st September, 1903, plaintiff sold to the defendant, and the defendant purchased from the plaintiff 485 sheep for £715 7s. 6d. The sheep were duly delivered to defendant, but the defendant refused to pay for the same. Plaintiff claimed £715 7s. 6d.

The plea set out that the sale was effected through the agency of one Storey, who was duly authorised by the plaintiff, and the defendants about 7th September, paid to the plaintiff, through his agent, £715 7s. 6d.

Mr. M. De Villiers (with him Mr. Burton), for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Van Zyl), for the defendant.

Mr. M. de Villiers said that he thought the onus probandi rested with the defence.

Mr. Upington accepted that and called the defendant.

George Elliott stated that he carried on business at Wynberg as C. H. Elliott and Brother, as butchers. Prior to the transaction he had never seen the plaintiff. About the 28th August he received a telephone message from Storey, offering 500 sheep, and he stated Abel was in the office. When he said 32s. he was going to shut off the telephone, but witness promised to look at the sheep at 30s. Witness saw the sheep on the 1st September, and the owner of the farm told him he had received telegraphic instructions to show him the sheep, and later that another message had arrived telling him to call at the City Hall Hotel that afternoon. Neither the plaintiff nor Storey was there, but there was a note from the latter regretting that they were unable to keep the appointment, and asking for an interview at 7 o'clock. Witness met Abel and Storey that evening, and after both of them discussed the matter, they said the sheep could be had for 29s. 6d., and it was arranged that Storey was to give delivery of the sheep next day. Rees went to get the sheep and paid Storey £2 for expenses. On the 7th September Storey came along for the cheque, and witness made it out in favour of Abel, and Storey gave him a receipt. Storey had been convicted of forgery and appropriating the proceeds. On the 12th September the plaintiff wired, asking witness to meet him to settle the transaction. On Tuesday 15th, Abel and Storey came to Wynberg and spoke about 2,000 more sheep and some oxen, and asked him if he was prepared to go to Hopefield to see the latter. There was not a word in the shop about the cheque, but outside Abel asked him for the cheque, and Storey said to Abel that he was sending it on. As the plaintiff said nothing, witness took it that everything was in order. On the 17th Abel wired "Cheque for sheep not received stop sharp," and later in the day "Cheque not received to whom issued hold you responsible," and to the latter witness replied, "Cheque handed to Storey September 7th, cleared both banks 8th and 9th." Abel never said that he was the sole owner of the sheep, and from the conduct of Abel and Storey he thought that the latter was authorised to receive the cheque.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: At the Criminal Sessions he stated that he believed that Storey and Abel were partners in the sheep. He did not get Abel's address to send the cheque to him through the post. The cheque was not crossed.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: The usual custom in stock transactions was to hand the cheque over to the man who delivered the sheep.

By Buchanan, J.: Stock was usually a cash transaction, except other arrangements were made.

Mark Storey, at present serving a term of imprisonment on the Breakwater, in connection with a cheque, stated that about August he commenced to have business with Abel. On the 6th of that month witness was told by Abel that they could do good business, as he had 2,000 sheep coming from Namaqualand. The sheep did not arrive as was expected, and witness went to Hopefield and saw Bester, from whom Abel and he purchased a small lot of 505. Abel paid for the sheep, and witness was to have half the profit when they were resold. Verbally, he was authorised to receive payment for the sheep. Previous to the transaction with Elliott he had seen several people with a view of disposing of them. Mr. Potts, of Messrs. Berg's, asked whom he should see about the sheep, and the plaintiff said that he should see witness, and he also told Mr. Taylor to deal with witness. When he spoke on the telephone to Elliott the latter asked whom he was speaking to, and witness replied in Abel's hearing that he (Abel) was a partner. Rees was informed when he took over the sheep that witness would call for the sheep. He saw Abel after he received the cheque, and told him that he collected it. From Saturday to Tuesday Abel and he were together in town, and on Tuesday they saw Elliott about further stock transactions. Rees was in the shop when they discussed further transactions. On the way to the hotel Abel asked Elliott for the cheque, and the latter replied that he gave it to witness, who said that he would send it on.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. de Villiers: He told Abel that he had collected the cheque. They were known as Abel and Storey in a sort of partnership in stock transactions. The sheep belonged to Abel and himself. Abel had not paid him anything like his share in the profits. When witness left after cashing the cheque he did so under an assumed name. He did so because he had booked third class, and did not wish to advertise the fact.

Mr. J. Mostert said he had been partner with Abel some eighteen months. Storey told him on the Parade in the presence of Abel that he had gone into partnership with the plaintiff. When he saw Taylor about the sheep Abel went over and brought Storey, and both of them said they could not do any business until six o'clock that night. In ordinary stock transactions he did not ask for any deed of partnership.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: Abel said he was in with Storey, but that when the 2,000 sheep came down the plaintiff said he would see him about that. He considered Storey one of the straightest young men in Cape Town, until he had a row with him over the partnership with Abel.

Pembroke Potts said that he was a buyer and seller for the firm of Bergl Limited. About the 26th or the 27th August he saw Abel and Storey outside the office, and they offered witness 500 sheep. He could have concluded the bargain with Storey or Abel, the latter having stated that they were acting as partners in the deal.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. de Villiers: From the statement that they were working together he asked them if they were partners.

Edmund Taylor, general broker, stated that about the end of August last year he met the plaintiff and Storey near the National Bank. Abel seemed somewhat reticent about striking a bargain, and drew Storey away, and then said he could not say anything until six o'clock that night. Storey had evidently something to do with the transaction.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. de Villiers: He looked upon Storey as a dealer. He considered that both Abel and Storey were in the deal together. He had never seen a written partnership between stock dealers; what they usually said was "standing in."

The evidence of James Rees, formerly a manager to Elliott and Co., was taken on commission, and he was under the impression that Storey and Abel had equal shares in the matter. Storey took a leading part in the transactions.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Richard Abel, plaintiff, stated that when he met Storey on the 25th August he wanted witness to go surety for the purchase of certain sheep, which he refused to do. There was no such thing as partnership with Storey; in fact, the latter was always trying to get something out of him. Storey was to get half profit when he negotiated a sale in Cape Town. That was said in the presence of Bester and Retief. Witness purchased the sheep from Bester, which Storey was unable to pay for. On the telephone Storey told Elliott that the sheep belonged to witness. Storey was no partner of his. Storey was brought to the office of Mr. Retief in order to get evidence as a precautionary measure. It was true that he believed that Storey was a slippery customer, although he did not put Mr. Elliott on his guard. Most of the stock transactions were cash, where no other agreement was made. Storey had no authority to accept the cheque. All the people that took Storey and witness for partners were friends of the former. If Storey had said he was a partner, witness would have taken no notice of him, except he was serious. The reason he called Storey aside when they met Elliott was to ask him if he would be satisfied with the profit.

John Retief stated that in August plaintiff and Storey had a business transaction over certain sheep. Storey attempted to purchase the sheep, but he could not find the money. Abel subsequently bought the sheep.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Storey was brought to the office to get evidence as a precautionary measure.

Jacobus Bester, speculator, stated that the sheep were first offered to Storey, but Abel came later on and bought them.

Mr. De Villiers argued that defendant's payment to Storey was bad. He who puts it in the power of a forger to commit a forgery should bear any loss which may directly result from that forgery.

Mr. Upington argued that this rule is by no means of universal application. Here plaintiff knew the character of his accredited agent, and it was only fair that he should suffer for this agent's dishonesty.

Buchanan, J.: This is an action brought by the plaintiff, a stock-breeder, living in Malmesbury, for the purchase price of certain sheep sold to the defendant for the sum of £715 7s. 6d. The declaration states that the sheep were duly delivered and the defendant declines to pay for them. The plea admits the sale and admits that the sheep were the property of the plaintiff, but sets up the defence that the defendant has paid for the sheep through the plaintiff's agent, one Storey. It is further urged that the sale was effected through the agency of Storey, and with the authorisation of the plaintiff the sheep were delivered by the said Storey, and that the money was paid to Storey, who was authorised to receive the same. This plea is hardly correct in saying that the purchase-price itself was paid to Storey, as what was given Storey was a cheque in favour of the plaintiff, made out to "A. C. Abel or order." The sole question in this case is one of fact, and that is whether the defendant was justified, under the circumstances of the case, in giving this cheque to Storey or not. The parties—no doubt innocent parties—come to Court, and where there are two innocent parties, the Court has to decide which has to suffer. That one has to suffer who puts it in the power of a forger to commit a forgery. It is true Storey could not have forged the endorsement on the cheque unless the cheque had been handed to him. Take the case of a person who owes money to a merchant, and pays the money by means of a cheque handed to the servant of the merchant who is authorised to receive it. The mere physical handing over of the cheque enables the person to forge the endorsement, but the person would not necessarily be always responsible for it. The question would be was he justified in handing the cheque over to the person who receives it? That is the principle that applies in this case. The question of partnership is out of the case altogether. The pleadings are against it, and the evidence does not support the allegation that there is a partnership, but when we come to consider Storey's authority, we must look carefully into the relations between the parties. It is common cause that Storey, who had been dealing in cattle, had gone to Hopefield and attempted to buy the sheep from Versfeld. He had struck a bargain with Versfeld, but he was unable to pay for the sheep, and after speaking to the plaintiff in the case, the plaintiff advised him to let the bargain go on, and he would buy these sheep and have them taken up to town, and they would share in the proceeds. The sheep were sent to town, and the plaintiff and Storey came into town to attempt to dispose of them. It is clear on the evidence that Storey had as much to do, if not more, in negotiating the sale than the plaintiff himself. Mostert and Potts said that Abel had understood there was a partnership in the deal, and Taylor concluded that he was perfectly justified in dealing with either of them as the principal in the transaction. It was clear from the way in which Abel and Storey conducted the business that Abel would not sell without Storey's advice and consent, and it was only when Storey had given his consent that the transaction went through. Then Elliott goes out and inspects the sheep at Gird's farm, and the transaction is closed. Nothing is said, and Storey is left to deliver the sheep. The sheep are brought up to Salt River and handed over to Elliott's manager, Rees, by Storey. I asked Mr. Elliott in the box what was said about payment, and he said we only fixed the price, that nothing whatever was said, no credit given, or time of payment discussed. It is true that Mr. Abel said that he had asked the cheque for the sheep to be sent to him by post by Mr. Elliott. Mr. Elliott said nothing of the kind was agreed to or suggested or said. I must say that when the evidence of Mr. Abel and Mr. Elliott comes into conflict, I am rather inclined to take Elliott's statement in preference, because Abel's statement on a critical matter was contradicted by the correspondence itself. Let me take one or two instances. When the cheque was handed over to Storey, the plaintiff says some days after that he telegraphed to Elliott that he must send him his cheque. Now, when we look at the telegram put in, it says: "Meet me one train this afternoon; if not, will come and see at once to settle sheep business." When this transaction took place the parties were now entering into further negotiations, as stated by Abel and Storey, that a great many more sheep were to come up—2,000 sheep and some oxen. There is nothing in this telegram to indicate to Elliott that the cheque he had given to Storey had never reached its destination. Then when Abel goes up he takes Storey with him, and when they see Elliott they discuss other transactions, and nothing is said about the cheque being sent. After the discussion Abel says he turned to Elliott and said where was his cheque, and Elliott said he had given it to Storey, whereupon Abel said: "I hope it is all right, but I hold you responsible." In the criminal proceedings Mr. Abel said "I turned to Elliott and said, 'I hope it will be all right; I hold you responsible, as I wired I was coming for the cheque.'" No such wire ever was sent, and it is clear Mr. Abel's evidence is not in accordance with the documents before the Court. It is not necessarily a wilful misstatement of Mr. Abel, and I will acquit him of it, but in cases of this kind people think they have done things they would like to have done or intended to do. Mr. Elliott says that when he was asked for the cheque he said "I have given it to Storey." On this point Storey, who had been called, does not agree entirely with either of the parties, but the case can be decided irrespective of Storey's evidence. I think it is extremely improbable that Elliott would have received such a statement, and said nothing. If such a thing had been said as "I hold you responsible," Elliott would have said "I have given the cheque to Storey, and there he is." If Abel did not wish Storey to receive the cheque he ought to have said to Elliott, "What right have you to give the cheque to Storey; immediately demand the cheque?" but when Elliott said he gave it to Storey he says it is all right. Storey says he intended to send his own cheque, and Abel must have considered that Elliott was perfectly justified in handing the cheque to Storey. I must hold that the defendant has discharged the onus upon him. He has paid for the sheep, and given a cheque for the sheep, which was not negotiable without an endorsement by Abel on the cheque. The endorsement was forged by Storey, whose character was well known to the plaintiff. One must have considerable sympathy for the plaintiff, but he knew the man he was dealing with. There will be judgment for the defendant with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

ALLIE V. HADIE. { 1904.
{ Apr. 15th

Mr. Nightingale said that, on behalf of the plaintiff, he had to apply that the case should be allowed to stand over till next term. A petition for sequestration in this matter was presented on Thursday last, but it was found not to be in form. Petitioners were then given leave to apply again for the sequestration of the estate.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the case would stand over on the understanding that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the day.

SEALE V. TOLL AND COURTIS.

This was an action brought by Henry Francis Seale, jeweller, Cape Town, against William E. Toll and John W. Courtis, trading as Toll and Courtis, in Cape Town, for an order (a) compelling the defendants to take transfer forthwith of certain land upon payment of the balance of purchase price, viz., £19,500, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the 19th December, 1903, and conveyancing and transfer expenses; (b) for payment of £19,500, together with interest, as aforesaid. Mr. Schreiner appeared for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Mr. Schreiner said that he would lead formal evidence, and then apply to their lordships for judgment.

The plaintiff, Henry Francis Seale, of Cape Town, said that in August last year he sold certain land situate at the back portion of the plaintiff's corner building, Adderley-street. The defendants purchased through a broker's note, made by Mr. H. W. Joseph, which was signed by witness and the defendants. Amongst the terms it was provided that transfer was to be taken within six months, rates and taxes to be paid by the seller to the date of the transfer; conveyancing and transfer expenses to be paid by the purchaser, and interest to be paid at the rate of 6 per cent., the purchaser to pay the sum of £1,000 on the 1st September, 1903, and the balance upon transfer being taken. Witness claimed interest from the 19th December last. He put in a letter from the architects certifying that the building had been completed. Transfer was to be taken six months after the broker's note was signed. No further portion of the sum of £19,500 had been paid by the defendants.

De Villiers, C.J., said that it would not be necessary to hear further evidence, and that judgment would be given for the plaintiff as prayed.

HELLIG V. HELLIG.

This was an action brought by Fanny Hellig, at present of Cape Town, against her husband, Frederick Philip Hellig, of the Fraserburg district, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for divorce.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in Russia in September, 1883. There had been no issue of the marriage. The defendant deserted her in Johannesburg in 1897.

The plaintiff, Fanny Hellig, stated that she was married to the defendant in Russia, on the 2nd September, 1883. Witness and her husband came to this colony sixteen years ago, and after remaining in Cape Town six years they went to Calvinia, and subsequently to Johannesburg. About June, 1897, the defendant deserted her and went to Russia. She had written to him several times, but he disregarded all her supplications to return. At present he was in business with his brother at Fraserburg.

A translator was called to swear to a translation of the marriage certificate from the Russian to the English language.

An order was granted for restitution of conjugal rights, the defendant to receive or return to the plaintiff on or before the 15th June, failing which a rule to be taken calling upon the defendant to show cause on the last day of the next term why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs; personal service to be effected.

Postea (July 14th.)

The rule was made absolute.

KNOESEN V. THERON. { 1904.
{ Apr. 25th.

Defamation—Unchastity.

The defendant, knowing that the plaintiff passed as an unmarried woman, stated to several persons, who also believed her to be unmarried, that she had a son by one M., and was married to him.

Held, that the statement, if false, was defamatory.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Kokstad, in which he found for the defendant in an action brought by the appellant, Maria Johanna Knoesen, against the respondent, Barend Jacobus Theron, to recover £500 damages for alleged slander.

This matter had previously been before the Court (see 13 C.T.R., 811) upon an exception taken by the defendant to the summons. The Magistrate upheld the exception taken to the summons, in that the words were not defamatory, and in no way exposed the plaintiff to hatred, ridicule, or contempt. Mr. Justice Maasdorp, upon the appeal against the Magistrate's decision upon the exception coming before him, dismissed the exception, and referred the case back to the Magistrate for trial upon the merits. The present appeal was brought against the Magistrate's judgment at the trial upon the merits. The plaintiff alleged that in July, 1901, the defendant, while riding to the town of Kokstad, said of the plaintiff to one Zietsman that he was told by one Lilford that she was really a married woman, and that he was in the church when she was married to a man named Matthews, and that one Jimmy Knoesen was a son of the marriage, which had been in force for seventeen years. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the only persons to whom it was alleged the defendant had uttered the words were the two Zietsmans. The younger Zietsman said he never understood from Theron that Miss Knoesen was guilty of immorality, and he gathered from Theron that he was acting bona fide in the matter, and the elder Zietsman concluded that Theron had no intention of slandering Miss Knoesen. He had heard such remarks before, and Theron was not the first to say so. In giving judgment for the defendant, the Magistrate said that in his opinion the defendant was acting honestly, and in no way did he intend to maliciously injure the plaintiff.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for appellant; Mr. Upington for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan: It is true that the respondent did not originate this story, but he has nevertheless made himself responsible for it by helping to inculcate it. The Magistrate held that the statement was not malicious, but the cross-examination of Miss Knoesen showed considerable malice.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That was after the words were spoken, so you cannot argue on that.]

It shows nevertheless the defendant's disposition towards her. It is all very well to say that he had no malicious intent, but words may be defamatory ex facie. The statement made to Zietsman was clearly defamatory, and the respondent was simply a tale-bearer, who repeated what he now admits he knew to be false. In his defence he has repeatedly shifted his position. He first denied that he had used the words; then he admitted having used them, but said they did not refer to the plaintiff. A person who makes a defamatory statement must be presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his words.

Mr. Upington said that on the question of the interpretation of the words by the bystanders, the two witnesses that could speak with authority were the two Zietsmans, who were called by the plaintiff herself, and it was perfectly clear from these witnesses that they never for one moment took up the view that the words conveyed an imputation of unchastity, or that they were spoken with malice. The Magistrate's finding on the question of fact was amply justified by the evidence in the case. If the plaintiff failed on that point her whole case fell to the ground, because he submitted that to say that a woman was married was not necessarily defamatory. There must be something in the way it was said, or some other surrounding circumstance to make it defamatory. Apparently it was idle talk, and there was certainly no intention to injure the plaintiff in any way. If a man was to be held liable under such circumstances there would be no end to causes of action that would arise from everyday conversation. If the words in themselves were not defamatory, it rested surely with the plaintiff to prove that there was some special circumstance connected with the case to show that they were. It was a pure question of fact, and counsel submitted on the evidence of the plaintiff and her witnesses that the Magistrate's finding was amply justified.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff is an unmarried woman, and she was known to the defendant at the time the words were uttered, to pass as an unmarried woman. The persons to whom the words were spoken also believed her to be an unmarried woman. In the house in which she was living there was a young man going by the name of Knoesen, and what was said by the defendant was that this Knoesen living in the same house was really her son, and that she had been previously married to one Matthews. Here is a statement in regard to an unmarried woman that the child living in the same house is her son. If the defendant knew that she passed as an unmarried woman, it is clear that the defendant imputed either unchastity or imputed that the plaintiff was sailing under false colours, in that, being a married woman, she passed herself off as an unmarried woman. The statement in regard to an unmarried woman that she has a child, in itself implies unchastity, and the mere fact that it is coupled with the statement that she had been married does not excuse the person who utters these words. The defendant had an opportunity of retracting what he had said. He was asked to apologise for them, but then he said he never used the words. At the trial it was proved he had used the words. If the defendant had apologised and withdrawn the words, nothing more would have been heard of the case. Instead of that, he persisted in going to trial, and at the trial he somewhat aggravated his offence by the cross-examination, suggesting that this woman had been guilty of immorality with an elderly man of the name of De Kock—and witnesses were called to prove that she had been sleeping in the same bedroom with De Kock. The appeal will be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff for £1 damages, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

HATTINGH v. ROBERTSON. { 1904.
Apr. 25th.

Immovable property—Restrictions imposed on purchaser by vendor—Rights of subsequent purchasers.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Assistant Resident Magistrate of Sterkstroom, in the district of Queen's Town, by which the appellant (defendant) was ordered to pay the respondent £1 10s., by reason of certain cattle, the property of the defendant, trespassing on the land of the plaintiff.

To the summons a special plea was filed by the defendant's attorney, to the effect that inasmuch as the property on which the damage was alleged to have occurred was not enclosed or sufficiently fenced, and that in view of a clause in the conditions of sale, which stipulated that the purchaser of the erven should properly fence it, and a counter claim was set up for 16s. 9d., for pound fees and damages, no claim for damages could be established.

The Magistrate, in dismissing the special plea, said the Court would have to decide whether clause 22 of the conditions of sale applied to the property in question, and secondly, if so, was the said property sufficiently fenced. As regards the second question, the magistrate found that the ground was not sufficiently fenced, but on the first question he decided that it was absolutely in conflict with the provisions of another clause in the conditions. The special plea was overruled, and the Court, falling back on the common law, found that the damages as sued for were fully proved.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the appellant); Mr. Burton for the respondent.

Mr. Schreiner: The real meaning of the condition in the conditions of sale is that cattle are not to be impounded should they trespass upon these unfenced lands. If a man wishes to keep cattle off his land he must fence. This condition is obviously for the benefit of the entire community to the welfare of which that of individuals must yield. In connection with this case, and of the right of vendors to sell their land subject to conditions, see Steytlerville D.R. Church v. Bosman (3, C.T.R., 85). See also Trudman's Benefit Society v. Du Preez (5, S.C.R., 269).

Mr. Burton: No conditions of sale entered into between the vendor and the vendee can affect the rights of third persons. Nothing was registered on the title.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think you should argue as if there had been registration.]

That would place me in a very awkward position, as I came prepared merely to argue on the record, and I can find nothing about registration there. Again there is no evidence, as has been said, that these regulations were for the benefit of the community, and not rather for the individual benefit of the purchaser. Can, then, an erf holder claim the benefit of these conditions. All we know about the appellant is that he is the owner of certain cattle which strayed. He had already paid damages for trespass, and after having done that he attempts to set up these conditions of sale. I submit that the appeal should be dismissed.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): If we are to admit that there was registration, I confess I cannot follow the argument of counsel for the respondent. With regard to our claim in reconvention, I do not press that.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is impossible in this case to decide on the questions raised without some further evidence. The Court will therefore remit the case for evidence on the following points: first, whether the plaintiff bought his erf from the original vendor, namely, the committee of the Dutch Reformed Church, or from a subsequent vendor; secondly, whether defendant is an erf-holder, and if so, from whom he bought; and, thirdly, whether the conditions are registered against the plaintiff's title. The parties may save considerable expense by agreeing upon the facts, by signing a note to that effect, in which case the Court will either give judgment or, if necessary, hear further argument. If the parties do not agree on the facts then further evidence will have to be given.

APPOLIS V. CYSTER.

Magistrate's Court — Costs — Defamation.

The plaintiff issued a summons in the Magistrate's Court against the defendant for damages, but omitted the names of the persons in whose presence the alleged defamatory words had been uttered. Before the return day, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant that at the trial he would apply for an amendment of the summons, by inserting the names which he mentioned. The defendant, however, brought no witnesses for the trial, preferring to raise the objection to the form of summons. The Magistrate allowed the plaintiff's application for amendment of the summons, but ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of the day.

Held, that the Magistrate erred in ordering the plaintiff to pay the costs of the day, and the costs were accordingly ordered to be costs in the cause.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, in which he allowed an exception taken to the plaintiff's summons as vague, embarrassing, and bad in law, in an action for slander against the defendant, and ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of the postponement. Mr. Burton was for the appellant, and the respondent was not represented.

It appeared from the record that an action was taken against the respondent for damages for slander, in that, on the 9th November, 1903, and at Wynberg, the defendant unlawfully and maliciously published slanderous statements concerning the plaintiff. The case was down for November 30th, and it was postponed until December 16th. Between the dates mentioned the plaintiff's attorney had been present in court when the Magistrate gave a decision regarding the mentioning of witnesses in whose presence slander was uttered. He wrote on December 8 to the defendant's attorney giving him notice of the names of the persons who heard the slander. When the case came on on December 16 the defendant's attorney excepted to the summons as vague, embarrassing, and bad in law, as it did not mention the names of the persons to whom the alleged slander was uttered.

The summons was amended, and the case postponed until January 14, the plaintiff having to pay the costs of the day. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that when the amendment to the summons was allowed the defendant's agent applied for a postponement, stating that he had not secured his witnesses. The Magistrate held that the summons was bad, and that the defendant had reason to think that the case would be dismissed, and that it would be unnecessary to bring his witnesses, and he ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of the day. Mr. Burton (for the appellant), contended that the Magistrate was clearly wrong in ordering the plaintiff to pay the cost of the postponement. He had looked up all the leading authorities, and could not find any rule that the names of the persons in whose presence a slander was uttered must be set forth in the summons. A slander might be uttered in the presence of a crowd of people, amongst whom the plaintiff might not be ready to select who was to give evidence. Whether it was a common practice or not, there was no law which required in a summons for defamation of character that the names of the witnesses should be set forth. In the present case the attorney on the other side had eight days' notice that the amendment would be applied for.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Had the Magistrate the letter before him when he gave judgment?]

Oh, yes, my lord, it forms part of the judgment, and he refers to it in his reasons.

De Villiers, C.J.: On December 16, 1903, the plaintiff's agent wrote to the defendant's agent giving him notice of the names of the persons in whose presence the slander complained of was uttered, and that at the trial he would accordingly apply for an amendment of the summons. On the 10th December the trial was to take place, but the defendant, instead of bringing his witnesses, chose not to bring his witnesses at all, intending to rely upon his defence that the summons was bad, although the defendant's agent knew that that defect was to be cured at the trial. Clearly, it was the duty of the defendant's agents to be prepared with his witnesses to meet the plaintiff's case. The Magistrate therefore, in my opinion, erred in making the plaintiff pay the costs of that day, seeing that it was the defendant's fault, and the defendant's fault only that the case was not heard on that day. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and instead of the costs being paid by the plaintiff, they will be costs in the cause. The costs of this appeal will, of course, be paid by the defendant.

PINNOY V. AFRICAN AND } 1904.
UNITED COLD STORAGE. { Apr. 25th.

Wholesale butcher — Standing order.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Molteno, in which he found for the plaintiffs in a claim for £22 3s. 9d. for goods sold and delivered to the defendant. Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the appellant, and Mr. Uppington was for the respondent.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, held there was a standing order for a weekly supply of meat to the plaintiffs from the evidence disclosed in the case. There was evidence to show there was a stoppage of supply on October 22, but the witness Kamp gave a perfectly reasonable explanation of that. Mr. Pinnoy admitted that his cheque would not arrive at Port Elizabeth until October 31. He stated in that letter he terminated all transactions with the plaintiffs, but the witnesses Kamp and Stockdale stated that a standing order had been received, and the defendant did not deny that. The manner in which the defendant gave his evidence in court satisfied him that he was not misled by the footnote, and as he was a perfect stranger to the plaintiffs they could not be blamed for protecting their own interests.

Mr. Searle said that at the trial no standing order was produced. All they had was the telegram of October 14, asking for the supply of two hind and two fore quarters of beef once a week, and the price. To that the plaintiffs wrote, giving their price, that any order would have their immediate attention, and hoping to be favoured with the defendant's custom. Certainly the plaintiffs did not regard that as a standing order. Both Kamp and Stockdale admitted that no more meat would be supplied until an account was paid, and even if there was a standing order they broke it themselves.

Mr. Uppington contended that if the wire sent by the defendant were read along with the letter, it would be seen there was a standing order, because otherwise the second consignment was sent on without orders. At the trial the defendant did not deny there was a standing order. The transaction was a cash one, and when the defendant had not met his obligations the plaintiffs refused to send further supplies. The Magistrate, he contended, was perfectly correct in his judgment.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Magistrate had mistaken the true position of the parties, and he ought to have given absolution from the instance. The appeal was allowed, and judgment altered to one of absolution from the instance with costs in both Courts.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSE.

VAN BOOM V. VISSER. { 1904.
{ Apr. 26th.

This was an action brought by Frans Jacobus van Boom against Daniel Visser, for damages. Mr. M. de Villiers appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Williams was for the defendant.

Mr. Williams applied for a postponement, because, he said, he intended to move the Court for removal of bar in order to enable the defendant to enter his defence.

Mr. De Villiers said that he would raise no objection so long as due and proper security was given for costs.

His Lordship said that the case would be postponed sine die on the understanding that due security would be given for costs within 24 hours, and proper notice given to certain parties interested in the suit.

APPEALS.

BETHUNE V. KEY.

Medical practitioner — Fees —
Proof of status.

A medical practitioner, in order to recover fees, must prove that he is duly licensed to practice in this Colony. Production of the Medical register is not sufficient proof of status.

Louw v. Fryer and Nqumbela v. Culligan followed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Coleberg.

The Acting Resident Magistrate had given judgment for the respondent for £14 16s. 6d., for professional services rendered and medicine supplied. The ground of appeal was that the respondent had not given proof of his qualifications as required by Act 34 of 1891.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that after the plaintiff (James Key) had given his evidence, in which he stated, inter alia, that he was a duly qualified medical practitioner, and that he could produce his certificates, if necessary, he (the Magistrate) asked the attorney for the defence if he had any questions to put to the doctor, and he replied that he had nothing to ask the plaintiff, and he thereupon applied for absolution from the instance, on the ground that there was no prima facie evidence that the doctor was a duly qualified medical practitioner, as required by the 56th section of the Medical and Pharmacy Act, and he named two cases which appeared on the record, which he did not produce, and did not quote from. He (the Magistrate) refused to accede to his application, after having taken judicial notice of the fact that plaintiff's name was duly registered as qualified in the Medical and Pharmacy Register for the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, published by direction of the Medical Council, and the Colonial Pharmacy Board, which was constituted under the Medical and Pharmacy Act, and it would be superfluous to prove it. He considered that, together with the doctor's evidence, sufficiently prima facie, and as that was his (the defendant's attorney's) only defence, according to his own statement, of such a plea as stood recorded, he (the Magistrate) gave judgment for the plaintiff, with costs.

Mr. Upington (for the appellant) cited the cases of Louw v. Fryer (8 C.T.R. 253), and Nqumbela v. Cullinan (13 C.T.R. 489), in support of his contention, and he submitted that the Magistrate should have granted absolution from the instance.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he regretted that the previous decisions of the Court which had been cited were not brought before the Magistrate. The appeal would be allowed and absolution from the instance would be granted.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Respondent in default.]

GACULA V. DICKERSON.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Tabankulu, Native Territories, in an interpleader action. The appellant was the plaintiff in the Court below in an interpleader action in respect of certain oxen and a wagon, the Magistrate giving judgment in favour of the respondent.

The inter-pleader case arose out of an action between Dickerson and one Henry Konyana in which the former claimed £78 10s., with interest, in respect of two promissory notes of the amounts of £64 and £14 10s. respectively. The defendant failed to meet the promissory notes. Judgment was given by default for the amount claimed. That was on the 6th August. The messenger of the Court took an indemnity from the plaintiff, holding him harmless in case of execution. A writ of execution was issued, and the property now in dispute was attached. Then the property was claimed by the present appellant, Nomenti, widow of Gacula, and under the circumstances the messenger, caused a writ to be issued in an interpleader, setting forth that one red ox and two white oxen and one wagon taken under a writ of execution were claimed by the plaintiff, Nomenti, and that the matter would be determined on the 24th August. The Magistrate then declared the cattle and wagon executable.

The appeal had been ordered to stand over pending communication with the Magistrate in order to ascertain whether the summons was finally amended, and whether two or three oxen were declared executable.

It now appeared that the Magistrate had replied, stating that the summons was amended so as to embrace the three oxen.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the appellant. Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers for the respondent.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that the white ox should not have been declared executable. The Magistrate gave fairly general reasons, but he did not meet the point that Dickerson's man admitted that no cattle but the three mentioned in the promissory note were Konyana's at all. The only point that there might be some doubt about was in regard to the wagon, and his contention was simply that the strong presumption that they were Konyana's, which arose in the case of the two cattle which were pledged by him, did not arise in this case, because the parties were practically on a level in the matter, seeing that the wagon was not attached at the kraal at all. He must admit that these two cattle which were purported to have been pledged were subsequently seized at the kraal of Nomenti really. He submitted that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in regard to the white ox.

Mr. De Villiers having been heard, De Villiers, C.J., said that the appeal would be allowed, with costs in this Court, and the judgment would be altered by declaring only two of the cattle executable, and not the white ox mentioned in the summons; judgment as to costs in the Court below to stand.

REX V. FISH.

Adulteration of foods—Vinegar—Act 5 of 1890—Master and servant—Fraud.

The defendant's servant sold as vinegar a liquid in a cask, from which he was authorized by the defendant to sell vinegar. The certificate of the analyst under the 27th section of Act 5 of 1890, was to the effect that the liquid was composed of 100 parts of vinegar and 17 of water added, and that the original vinegar had been adulterated by the addition of 17 parts of its weight in water. No application was made at the trial of the defendant before the Magistrate for the cross-examination of the analyst.

Held, that the defendant was responsible for the sale by his servant, and that, although he had not been guilty of fraud, he was liable under the 6th section of the Act.

See Reg. v. Eichbaum (10 C.T.R., 556).

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Dordrecht, imposing a fine of 5s. or in default five days' imprisonment, on William Fish, a storekeeper, of Dordrecht, found guilty, under section 6 of Act 5 of 1890, of having sold to Henry Marks, a police sergeant, a quantity of vinegar adulterated with water, as vinegar.

The evidence in the Court below went to show that on January 4 Sergeant Marks went to the defendant's store and asked for vinegar. He was served by the shop assistant. The Government analyst at Graham's Town subsequently analysed the contents of the bottle supplied, and certified that they were composed of 100 parts of vinegar and 17 parts added water, that was to say that to 100 parts of the original vinegar 17 parts of water had been added, making a mixture of 117 parts water and vinegar. For the defence, it was stated that the cask from which the contents of the bottle were drawn was received from Cole and Co., Worcester, and that the defendant had no means of testing whether it was adulterated. The cask was received on the undertaking that it contained vinegar. Badger, the assistant who drew the liquid from the cask, and the defendants both stated that they had not tampered with the cask; its contents were sold just as received from Worcester, and it would have been impossible for anyone to add water without their knowledge while the cask was in the store. The Magistrate, in giving his reasons for his decision, declined to entertain the objection that no intent to defraud had been proved, because, he held, it was not necessary to prove such intention. Although satisfied that there was no intent to defraud, he found the defendant guilty of a technical offence against the Act, and inflicted a nominal fine of 5s., or in default five days imprisonment.

Mr. McGregor for the appellant. Mr. H. Jones for the Crown.

Mr. McGregor said that since the water, which could not be injurious, had only been added to the vinegar, and the mixture was not, therefore, injurious to health, it could not be said that defendant had sold an injurious drug, and failing that it should have been shown that there was intent to defraud.

His Lordship said that the analyst appeared to have assumed a certain standard for vinegar. What, after all, was vinegar? Water entered largely into its composition, and the analyst having, apparently, assumed a standard, stated that 17 parts of water had been added. Was there any fixed standard for vinegar? In the absence of a standard, it would appear that what was sold was only weak vinegar. He did not see how any analyst, however expert he was, could say that 17 parts of water had been added to vinegar, an article into which water largely entered.

Mr. McGregor said that one would like to feel sure that the analyst had not assumed a fictitious standard, adopted from another country, where the conditions which would govern such a standard would differ from those of this country. Proceeding, counsel submitted that what the defendant had sold was vinegar.

In the course of his argument Counsel cited Act 5 of 1890 Sec. 6 and 25. Reg. v. Anderson (9 C.T.R. 220), Quern v. Wright (11 S.C.R.), Chamber's Encyclopedia and Yure's Dictionary (Art. "Vinegar.")

Mr. H. Jones: We have no evidence as to what is vinegar; but there must surely be some standard or other of strength for vinegar. If the Court does not consider the analyst's certificate satisfactory, the matter might be referred back to him. I submit the case is too important to be dismissed without further enquiry. It has been contended for the appellant that it is necessary to allege fraud in the summons, but see Sections 24 and 28 of the Act. These sections are taken from the English Act 32 and 33, Vict. C. 112, Sec. 4. In criminal prosecutions for a statutory offence, all that we need do is to set forth the offence. In Reg. v. Anderson (9, C.T.R., 221), the question of fraud was not raised.

Mr. McGregor in reply urged that the Court should be guided by the Colonial standard of vinegar and not by the English.

De Villiers, C.J.: The bottle of vinegar was purchased at the appellant's store, and the person who sold it was the servant ordinarily employed by the appellant as salesman. He sold what purported to be vinegar. It was contained in a cask, and there is no evidence that the servant sold anything else other than what the master authorised him to sell, and, therefore, the defence that the appellant cannot be held responsible for what his servant did falls to the ground.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN
and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SALIE V. ABRAHAM. } 1904.
Apr. 26th.

This was an action brought by Hadji Salie, a building contractor, of Cape Town, against Joseph Abrahams, a landed proprietor, also of Cape Town, to recover £165 5s. 6d., being the balance of an account for certain work done by the plaintiff at the defendant's request.

The declaration set out that about December 22, 1902, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement, whereby the plaintiff undertook for £680 to do certain work on two buildings in Constitution-street, Cape Town. The contract specified there was to be no extra work or waste of material. Plaintiff, about January, 1903, proceeded to carry out the terms of the contract, and with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff to carry out certain extra work, and he was entitled to claim the extra money stipulated. About the 15th May the plaintiff was obliged to discontinue the work on account of want of material.

The plea denied that the plaintiff did any extra work with the defendant's knowledge or consent, or that he was entitled to payment. He also denied that the plaintiff applied for any extra material. On the 5th May plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully discontinued the work. The defendant in reconvention admitted an indebtedness of £50 11s. 9d., and tendered £70, with costs, to date of tender.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Alexander), was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers), was for the defendant.

Hadji Salie, plaintiff in the case, stated that the defendant asked him to make a tender for the work. The contract was signed on the 22nd December, 1902. The original plan provided for a 10-foot yard. The work was started on the first week in January, and witness served a notice on the building inspector, who told him not to go on with the work on account of insufficient air space. The rooms had to be made five feet smaller, in order to extend the yard. The only indication he had as to how to proceed with the alteration was by means of marks on the adjoining wall made by the defendant. The defendant came to inspect the work every day, and never raised any objection to the way in which the work was being done. The defendant refused on several occasions to give him an amended plan. He was obliged to stop the work about 6th May, for want of sand and cement, of which the defendant had ample notice. He received a letter on Friday that unless he started the work by

The further evidence is that there was no proof of intention to defraud, and the 25th section has been relied upon as showing that there must be proof of an intention to defraud. I think that the 25th section applies to those offences, in which, under the Act, intention to defraud requires to be alleged: the 25th section does not apply to an offence under the 6th section, where fraud does not enter into the composition of the offence. On this objection also the defence seems to me to fall to the ground. My main difficulty in the case is in regard to the certificate of analysis given by the Public Analyst, and I confess I should have much preferred to have had this analyst under strict cross-examination, because, if he had been strictly cross-examined, it is quite possible that it might have been proved that he assumed a standard for vinegar, which no manufacturer has been able to reach. After all, vinegar is diluted acetic acid, and, in the composition of vinegar, a large proportion of water enters; and I see great difficulty in any analyst, however able he may be, laying down a particular standard, and saying so much is vinegar, and, if there is any proportion of water beyond what he has fixed, that proportion must be considered as having been added. But the 27th section of the Act is clear in its provisions—the production of the certificate of analysis shall be evidence of the facts therein stated, unless the defendant requires the analyst to be present, or to be examined by interrogatives. If the defendant had done that, I feel satisfied that the analyst would have been considerably shaken in his evidence. The defendant chose not to avail himself of the facilities allowed by the Act, and I must take it that he was satisfied to accept the analysis. If the defendant was satisfied, and did not choose to avail himself of the facilities, the Court of Appeal is bound by that analysis: however much it may distrust it, it is the only evidence on the point. The certificate says: "I am of opinion that the contents are composed of 100 parts of vinegar and 17 parts of added water." Clearly, then, the analyst says that to what may be considered vinegar, water was added. And the certificate goes on as follows: "The original vinegar was adulterated by the addition of 17 parts of its weight in water, making, thereby, 117 parts altogether." There is nothing to contradict these statements which would bring the defendant under the sub-section, because if he has added 17 per cent. of water to what is vinegar, he has clearly sold a drug which is not of the substance, nature, and quality of what was demanded.

The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

[Appellant's Attorney: V. A. Van der Byl.]

4 o'clock on the previous day the work would be taken away from him. It was impossible to resume, owing to inclement weather until Tuesday, and when he went there he then found other men on the job. The extra work was done with the sanction of the defendant. In making the yard larger it was agreed that £35 would be a fair price for the saving of material and labour. There could be no damages, as witness had carried out the work according to defendant's instructions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The 3,500 extra bricks were required because Abrahams said that cement was too costly. The defendant did not mark 15 feet on the wall. He took more space off the small rooms than the larger ones. There were more than two plasterers at the work. He knew nothing of the police complaining about the heaps of material lying on the road.

Re-examined by Mr. Alexander: The cement and sand were wasted through the defendant's failure to supply the material.

Omar Habes, the foreman, was called, and stated that he had a plan at the beginning of the work. When the alterations were decided upon he proceeded with the work on a mark made by Abrahams on the wall. Abrahams came to the work a couple of times a day, but never complained of the manner in which the work was being done. The work was stopped in May for want of material. All the extra work was done at the instructions of the defendant.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He was not on the work on the 6th May, and he only heard that there was a paucity of material. He heard the defendant, after the Building Inspector had visited the place, instruct plaintiff to make a brick foundation.

Comarodien, a mason at the work, gave corroborative evidence as to the defendant marking the wall where the alteration was to be made.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The defendant made a mark with a pencil on the brick wall, and plaintiff did nothing to make the mark more permanent.

Anthony de Witt, architect, stated that he measured the yard of this building, and estimated £24 as a fair amount to allow for the saving in brick and material by the extension of the yard.

Mr. Searle closed his case

Joseph Abrahams said that in 1902 he got certain plans from an architect for two buildings in Constitution-street. The first he heard of any extra work was in the pleadings. It was absolutely false that he ordered the plaintiff to put bricks in the foundation, neither was it true that he ordered plaintiff to put a window in instead of a door. The plaintiff was told to proceed with the work according to the plan of a building in the neighbourhood. Salie was told to make the yard 15 feet instead of 10, and to take 5 feet off the buildings, and plaintiff pointed out that the small bedrooms were so small already that he could not reduce them. Witness then told him to take off 5 feet from the front rooms. As a result of the plaintiff's work he had to reduce the rent £2 a month. It was untrue that he marked the wall of an existing building where the wall was to come. The £28 claim for rent was reasonable, considering that similar buildings had been erected in eight or nine weeks. The man who finished the work used the material on the ground.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: As far as witness knew, there was no extra work done on the foundation. He had not specified in his contract any time for completion of the work, but he put in "without delay."

Percival William Goodchild stated that he prepared a plan of the buildings, and now found that the rooms were unfit for habitation. He would give an allowance of ten weeks to complete the work.

Michael Fox, a plasterer, stated that when he went to complete the job, he had to take off the plastering. There was plenty of material on the spot when he arrived. Previous to that he was working on another job close by, and was never prevented from working through the weather.

Solomon Kanterowitz stated that he owned the property adjoining the one in question. He never noticed any want of material at the defendant's property.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not see the property in May.

Charles Stewart was called to prove the rainfall for the month of May.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said that when the building inspector condemned the construction, Mr. Abrahams did not trouble to prepare fresh plans. He was on the spot every day, and no architect was employed. Therefore, he was cognisant of everything that was going on. Judgment would be entered for the plaintiff for £154 13s., and as the tender was not sufficient to avoid costs, the plaintiff would also be entitled to costs in the case.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte MASON. { 1904.
Apr. 27th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order for the removal of the name of Phillip Mason from the roll of advocates of the Supreme Court, petitioner being desirous of becoming an articled clerk to an attorney.

Order granted.

Ex parte SYNNE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the executors in the estate of the late Mathilda Synne to dispose of certain property for the benefit of the minor heirs in the estate.

The matter, counsel said, had been before the Court previously, but had been referred back in order to have the petition amended. The late Mathilda Synne bequeathed to her three children, in equal shares, certain property, consisting of a house and piece of ground. As the ground was not bringing in any return to the estate, it was, on an order of the Court, disposed of, and the proceeds were paid into the Guardian Fund to the credit of the heirs. The revenue derived from the house amounted to only £74 per annum, and it was desired to sell the property, and, as in the previous instance, place the proceeds to the credit of the children in the Guardian Fund.

The Master recommended that the petition be granted.

Order granted, the proceeds to be paid into the Guardian Fund to the credit of the heirs.

APPEALS.

REX V. LANG. { 1904.
Apr. 27th.

Police Offences Act, section 14—
Proof of authority—Police officer.

In a prosecution for a contravention of the 14th section of Act 27 of 1882, the demand for admittance was made by a policeman, but there was no proof that he had been thereto authorized by any officer of police or chief constable.

Held, that in the absence of such proof, the defendant had been wrongfully convicted of such contravention.

This was an appeal from the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Wynberg against the conviction of Solomon Lang, who was charged with having, on the 20th ult., at Claremont, refused admission to licensed premises after hours to one Anthony Roche, a police-constable.

In giving evidence in the court below, the constable, Roche, stated that at 10.15 he saw a light in the bar of the defendant's hotel at Claremont. He watched the place until 11.10, and during that time the light disappeared and reappeared again several times. The closing time was 9 p.m. He went to the door, and asked to be admitted. He knocked, and heard noises as of persons rushing from the bar. He went round to the side door, and just then two men came out. He apprehended one of them, a man named Morrison, who was in the defendant's employment, who was running, but the other man got away. For the defence, the defendant and the men who were with him in the room stated that they were engaged in stock-taking and making up accounts, as the end of the month was approaching. There was light only in one room. The room in which they were was separated by three doors from where the constable was, and they were not aware that anyone was demanding admission. The man Morrison, who was apprehended by the constable, stated that he had been engaged with the others in stock-taking, etc. When he came out at the side door he began running because the night was dark. As soon as he became aware that a constable wanted him to stop he ceased running and stood. The Magistrate, in giving his reasons for convicting the defendant, said that the Court was satisfied that the constable Roche had succeeded in conveying to the inmates of the hotel that he was a constable, and that his request for admittance was deliberately ignored.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Wilkinson submitted that before any one could be convicted under the Act it should be shown that the demand was made by a person authorised by an officer of police to enter the premises. But in this case there was no tittle of evidence on that point.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It struck me at once that there was no evidence on that point.]

Mr. Jones: I am not aware that this point has ever been raised before, but section 14 of the Act clearly draws a distinction between a constable and a policeman.

[De Villiers, J.C.: Is this man a sergeant?]

That does not appear on the record, but any such objection as is now urged should have been raised in the Court below. The Crown has had no notice of this objection; it has been sprung upon us. The meaning of section 14 evidently is that a constable requires a special authorisation to enable him to claim admission after hours to licensed premises, but not a policeman; otherwise the comma after the word "policeman" would be unmeaning.

[De Villiers, J.C.: Was not a similar point raised in an appeal from Aliwal North some time ago?]

I do not remember, but my point is that the comma to which I have referred shows that in this matter a policeman is placed on the same footing as an inspector, sergeant, etc., while a constable is not.

Mr. Wilkinson (in reply), admitting (for the sake of the argument) the distinction between a policeman and a constable, in this case the appellant was not charged with refusing admission to a policeman, but to a constable.

Mr. De Villiers, C.J.: The powers given to the police under the 14th section of the Police Offences Act constitutes a considerable infringement on the rights of the subject. His Lordship then proceeded to quote the section of the Act, which authorised "any police officer, policeman, or constable, who may be authorised by any such officers," to demand admittance to licensed premises if he has reasonable and proper grounds for suspecting a violation of the law; and lays down that if the licence holder, after being informed of the official nature of the demand, wilfully and intentionally refuse admittance, or cause an undue delay in complying with the demand, he shall be liable to certain penalties. Proceeding. His Lordship said: "It is clear therefore that the provisions of the section should, in every respect, be complied with before a person may be held liable to the penalty. The Act seems to guard the rights of the licence-holder by requiring that it shall be some person in authority who either enters or gives the ordinary policeman or constable authority to enter. If, therefore a person demands admittance who does not prove that he has authority to demand admittance, there is no offence under the section. The words of the section make it clear to my mind that even if this witness were a policeman, or constable—although I must say I do not know the difference—but supposing there is a difference—he requires the authority of an officer of police before he can demand admittance, and this being a criminal case, the witness should have proved his authority. There is a total absence of any proof of authority. It is possible that the man had it, but there is no evidence of any authority. The evidence as to whether there was any unnecessary delay is somewhat doubtful, I am bound to add, because it is just possible that the defendant may not have heard the noise. But that is a question of fact, which it is not necessary to decide. Proof is wanting to justify the conviction, and the appeal must be upheld and the conviction quashed.

[Applicant's Attorney: C. W. Slaughter.]

REX V. KUKARD. { 1904.
{ Apr. 27th.

Trading without licence—Carrying on business of general dealer.

The accused, a shunter on the railway, bought a job lot of goods at a sale without knowing what was in the parcel and without any intention of dealing in the contents. Finding that the parcel contained watches, he gave away three and sold the remaining three to some railway workmen.

Held, that the sale was an isolated act which was not sufficient to prove that the accused had carried on the business of a general dealer.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Sterkstroom, who convicted Wm. Kukard, a shunter on the Cape Government Railways, on a charge of having contravened the Stamps, Duties, and Licences Act by exercising the trade of general dealer, in that he sold three watches to three natives in the employ of the Railway Department without having a dealer's licence.

In the Court below, the defendant, William Kukard, stated that he had bought a parcel of jewellery at a sale which he attended. The parcel contained six watches and some other articles. He gave away three of the watches, and sold three others to natives working on the railway. The public were not admitted to the place where the sale was transacted. He had not intended to exercise the trade of a dealer. He sold the watches because he did not want them himself. He did not know exactly what the parcel contained when he bought it. The Magistrate's reasons for his decision were that he found it difficult to believe the circumstances under which the watches were bought, as stated by the defendant, because a man in Kukard's position did not spend 39s. without knowing what he was going to do with the articles purchased; and the manner in which the defendant had pressed the watches on the three men told against him. The grounds of appeal were that the form of the indictment was bad in law, and the conviction was not borne out by the evidence.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner: The evidence shows that the appellant sold three watches, but that does not bring him under the definition of a general dealer given in section 3 of Act 38 of 1887. Then there is no proof that these watches were not made in South Africa. (See section 3.) But I rely chiefly on the fact that one or two isolated transactions do not constitute a carrying on of trade. Green v. Parkins (3 E.D.C., 167), Queen v. Amos (11 E.D.C., 129), Queen v. Plockey (5 H.C., 368). If the appellant carried on any business at all (which I do not admit) it was that of a hawker, it certainly was not that of a general dealer.

Mr. Jones: I admit that the case falls very near the line, but it is just over the line. The case for the appellant was that he bought a box for his own amusement: he seems, however, to have made a very substantial profit on the transaction. Where can we draw the line between isolated cases and the carrying on of business? The Court certainly has ruled that one or two sales do not constitute a carrying on of business, but here we have three sales.

Mr. Gardiner was not heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The accused was a shunter on the railway. He happened to attend a sale; there was a job lot of jewellery sold, and he bought the lot, without knowing what was really in the parcel. Not knowing what to do with them, he gave away three of the watches, and having three more left, he met some of the railway employees and sold the watches to them. This was held to be an act of trade. There was no proof whatever that there was any habitual trading, or that the watches were bought with a view or intention of trading. There was no proof that the defendant carried on the business of general dealer, as he was charged. The watches were only sold because the man had happened to buy things he did not want. Even if he had made material profits, it would have been impossible to hold that he is a general dealer. I am of opinion that the Magistrate was wrong, and the appeal must be allowed.

REX V. MILLER.

Apr. 27th.

Adulteration of foods—Pepper—
Act 5 of 1890—Warranty.

The defendant, under a prosecution for a contravention of the 6th section of Act No. 5 of 1890, in selling pepper, with which ground olive stone had been mixed, proved that he had bought the pepper, in tins, from L., of Cape Town, and that on the tins was a label of the manufacturers, warranting the pepper to be genuine.

Held, that there was no such "written warranty" from the person from whom the defendant had bought the pepper, as is required by the 29th section of the Act.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Somerset West, who convicted Wolf Miller, a store-keeper, on a charge of having contravened section 6 of Act 5 of 1890, by having, on December 3, at Somerset West, sold to John Opey, a policeman, 2½ oz. of a mixture, consisting of 100 parts of pepper, adulterated by the addition of 15 parts of olive stones, which was not of the nature, quality, and substance of the article demanded.

In the Lower Court, the certificate of the Public Analyst was put in in support of the charge, showing that the mixture was composed of 115 parts of pepper and olive stones. The defence was that the mixture was purchased as black pepper from Messrs. B. Lawrence and Co., Cape Town, it being supplied in a tin labelled with Messrs. Goodall, Backhouse and Co.'s (Leeds) label, on which was printed "Black pepper; warranted genuine." It was further stated that the contents of this tin had not been tampered with while in the possession of the defendant, and there was no intention to defraud.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner: The appellant was convicted of contravening Sec. 6 of Act 5 of 1890, but sec. 29 is really the important section. The Magistrate distinguishes between a warranty, an invoice, and a label, but it has been held in English cases that a label such as that which was affixed to these tins is a warranty Farmers' Association v. Sterenson (63 L.T. 776). I rely on the wording of this label "warranted genuine pepper."

[De Villiers, C. J.: Lawrence did not give that warranty, if it was a warranty, but Goodhall.]

It is true that there was an intermediate vendor between Goodhall and Miller, but Lawrence may have been acting as the agent of Goodhall. See Laidlaw v. Wilson (Q.B. 1894, vol. 1, p. 74).

[De Villiers, C. J.: That was a case of a warranty given by the immediate vendor, but here you have a case of an intermediate vendor. Does not the Act give the purchaser a right of action against an intermediate vendor?]

I submit that the intermediate vendor is simply an agent, and the maxim respondet superior would apply.

Mr. Jones: It has frequently been held in England that a label affixed to goods is not to be regarded as a warranty. See Jones v. Van Tromp (59 J.P. Cases 246); Elder v. Smith (57 J.P. Cases 1809); Hodgson v. Hindmark (23 Q.B. 181). Also as to the adulteration of milk, etc., Cleveland Dairy Co. v. Stevenson (63 L.T. 776), and Laidlaw v. Wilson (Q.B. 1894, vol. 1, p. 74).

Mr. Gardiner declined to reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: I confess that in these cases of contravention of the Adulteration Act I feel considerable sympathy with the unfortunate shopkeepers who are charged. In most cases they buy the articles from Town merchants, and they simply retail what they have purchased, and they believe to be genuine articles. But the sixth section of the Act does not require that there should be any fraud on the part of the seller. If he sells, "to the prejudice of the purchaser, any article or food which is not of the nature, substance, or quality of the article demanded by such purchaser," he is liable to a penalty, unless he fall within certain exceptions which do not apply in the present case. The exceptions to the contraventions of the 29th section of the Act are: "If the defendant in any prosecution under this Act prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he purchased the article in question as of the same nature, substance, and quality as that demanded of him by the purchaser, and with a written warranty to that effect; that he had no reason to believe at the time that he sold it that the article was otherwise, and that he had sold it in the same state as when he purchased it, he shall be discharged from the prosecution." In the present case the accused has proved everything in this section except one thing. He has proved that he purchased the article in the "same nature, substance, and quality"; he has proved also, I think, that at the time he sold it he had no reason to believe it was otherwise; and that he sold it in the same state as that in which he purchased it. But he has not proved that he purchased it with a written warranty to that effect. It is said that the tin in which the pepper was enclosed contains a label. "warranted genuine." But it is a label put on the tin by Goodhall, Backhouse and Co., Leeds. It is not the label of the vendor, of the person from whom the accused bought, viz., Lawrence and Co., Cape Town. It is impossible, therefore, to hold that this is a written warranty given by the vendor to the effect that the article is "of the same nature, substance, and quality." In my opinion, it is clear that this section refers to a written warranty given by the person from whom the accused bought the article, and in the present case there is no proof whatever of any warranty having been given by Lawrence and Co., from whom the accused bought. For these reasons, I am of opinion that he was rightly convicted. The appeal must be dismissed.

REX V. TAYLOR.

Liquor licence—Dealing in liquor.

The tenant of a billiard room, not licensed for the sale of intoxicants, who dispenses to a number of persons present intoxicating liquor brought on the premises by one of those persons, is not guilty of dealing in liquor.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Umtata, in which the appellant, Frederick Edward Taylor, had been convicted of a contravention of section 27, of Proclamation 104, of 1903, governing the sale of liquor in the native territories.

The charge against the accused was that he did wrongfully and unlawfully sell, deal in, or dispose of certain intoxicating liquor to certain members of the C.M.R. at a billiard room, known as the Imperial Billiard Saloon, which was not licensed for the sale of such liquors. The said billiard room was licensed for billiards, aerated waters, and tobacco. The appellant was also the holder of a licence for the Masonic Hotel, and he kept a boarding-house, as well as the billiard room. Appellant was fined £10, or in default, one month's imprisonment.

The Magistrate's reasons appear from the judgment.

Mr. Graham, K.C., for the appellant; Mr. H. Jones for the Crown.

Mr. Graham submitted that there was no evidence of a sale in the present case. It seemed to him that the story of the prosecution was highly improbable. A man named Roberts, apparently, was about to leave the C.M.R. Seeing one of his old comrades approaching, he asked them into this billiard room to have a drink. The fittings, it was true, were like bar fittings, because this place had previously been a licensed bar. Roberts had bought this liquor at the Masonio Hotel. He took the whiskey to his bedroom, and afterwards went into the billiard room, and invited Taylor to a drink. They then seemed to have put the whiskey under the counter. It did not seem to him of any importance whether Taylor or Roberts helped the C.M.R. men to the drink. He contended that the magistrate had misinterpreted the term "deal." No money passed. He submitted that all the probabilities were in favour of the story told by the defendant and the witness Roberts. The question was not one of credibility, but of probabilities.

Mr. Jones contended that this was an issue of fact, and that the matter was, therefore, one of the credibility of witnesses. There was a direct conflict of testimony. One of the witnesses for the prosecution distinctly said that he saw bottles of brandy and whisky on the shelves. The defendant said that Roberts signed a card for the soda that was used along with the whisky. Why did not the defendant produce this card at the hearing?

De Villiers, C.J.: The accused seems to me to have been guilty of some degree of imprudence in allowing Roberts to treat his friends on those premises. He ran the risk of being himself considered to have been guilty of the treating and of having dealt in liquor at a place where he was not authorised to deal in liquor. But the prosecution had to prove that there was a sale or dealing in liquor by the accused, and what seems to me to have been proved was that Roberts, a sergeant-major in the C.M.R., having been about to retire from the Service, or having just retired, wished to treat some of his friends, and he had brought a bottle of liquor from his own room into those premises, and he then gave liquor to his friends. There is a difference of opinion as to whether Taylor himself poured out the liquor, or whether Roberts did it, or who did it, but I will assume, for the purposes of this case, that Taylor (the accused) served the liquor. If he did pour out the liquor which had been brought by Roberts, the serving of a man with liquor would not make him guilty of a contravention of the law. The Magistrate seems to have believed that Taylor did pour out the liquor, but unfortunately he expressed no opinion upon the question whether he only disbelieved the evidence given by Roberts. I am inclined to think that he could not wholly have disbelieved it, because the reasons he gives seem to show that he considered that the fact that Taylor poured out the liquor constituted to his mind the offence of dealing in liquor. He says: "The Court found that Privates Cook and Skipwith had been supplied by the accused Taylor with intoxicating liquor on premises for which he had no licence to deal in such liquor, but which were licensed for a billiard table and for the sale of aerated waters and tobacco only. Although no payment was proved, the Court was satisfied that Taylor has dealt in intoxicating liquors within the meaning of section 27 of Proclamation No. 104 of 1903." It is not quite clear to me what he meant by this. It is just possible that he may mean that, although no payment was proved, yet payment may be presumed from all the circumstances. It seems more likely that what he really means was that, while there was no payment made, yet, inasmuch as Taylor poured out the liquor, under the circumstances he has dealt with intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the section, and that would be clearly wrong. As to the view I suggested, that would be merely an inference from the evidence this Court, as a Court of Appeal, has quite as good an opportunity of forming a correct inference from the evidence as the Magistrate had. It is not a question of credibility so far as the question as to whether Taylor poured out the liquor or not is concerned. The Magistrate does not say that he disbelieves Roberts, and I do not think the general tone in which the evidence is given would justify disbelief unless the Magistrate said so. I think it is a case in which the Magistrate ought not to have convicted. The evidence is wholly insufficient to prove that there was a sale, and, on the contrary, the presumption which might arise from the suspicious circumstances of the case is rebutted by the evidence given, not only by the defendant and his witnesses, but by the witnesses for the prosecution themselves. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed and the conviction quashed.

REX V. WALKER AND OTHERS. { 1904.
Apr. 26th.
" 29th.

Liquor Licensing Acts—Subscription dance—Refreshments.

The applicants were promoters of a dance, at which they supplied liquor and other refreshments to the subscribers in consideration of the sum of eight shillings and sixpence paid by each subscriber. There was a loss on the transaction, which was paid by the promoters, but if there had been a profit they would have been entitled to the benefit of it.

Held, that as the promoters held no licence, they had rightly convicted of selling liquor without a licence.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting A.R.M. of Wynberg by which the appellants, Thomas Walker and two others—Cape coloured labourers—had been convicted of a charge that at Claremont they did "wrongfully and unlawfully, without licence, sell, deal in, or dispose of a quantity of intoxicating liquor on premises known as the Mechanics' Hall, at Claremont." Mr. Burton was for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

The evidence was to the effect that the police visited the Mechanics' Hall, Claremont, while a dance was in progress, and that they found a temporary bar behind the stage, where there were sherry, pontac, ticky beer, etc. The police seized the liquor. The evidence for the defence was to the effect that the dance was promoted in honour of a birthday, and that tickets were disposed of to friends at 8s. 6d. each, to include refreshments. The Magistrate found the defendants guilty, and imposed a fine of £1 upon each.

Mr. Burton: This appeal is brought on the grounds (1) that the conviction was not supported by the evidence (2) that it is contrary to law (3) it is not stated to whom the liquor was sold Sec. 25 of Act 28 of 1883 does not meet this case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This was not a subscription dance].

We say it was.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In the case of a subscription dance, people buy liquor for their friends, but here the liquor was sold to anybody].

The three appellants bought liquor on behalf of the people who came to dance. They did not sell to the subscribers, but the vendors of the liquor sold to them.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is there to show that they could not pocket any profit which might be made?]

They did not enter into this transaction with a view of making a profit. There was no intention to contravene the law. No thought was taken as to the disposal of any balance, and, as a matter of fact, the subscribers had to meet a deficit.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It would be very dangerous if people were allowed to get up these dances and make a profit.]

The same remark would apply to ordinary subscription balls.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In these cases the proceeds are usually distributed in charity].

That is immaterial. The only question is, "was any profit made on this liquor or not?" Non constat that there was any profit, and the evidence all goes to show that everything in this case was bona fide, and that there was no intention to evade the law.

Mr. H. Jones: It is not necessary in such a case as this to show that any money passed (see sec 77). Nor is it necessary, or even possible to allege in the summons a sale to any particular individual in cases of this nature. I admit that it would be difficult to distinguish this dance from many subscription dances; but the important question is, "had there been a profit, who would have got it?" It has been said that the liquor was thrown in as a kind of present to the purchasers of tickets, but obviously something was charged for the liquor. The appellants say that they made no profit, but the onus is on them to prove that, and this onus, I submit, they have not discharged.

Mr. Burton in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (April 29th).

De Villiers, C.J., said: This is an appeal against a conviction of the appellants of the offence of selling liquor without a licence. The offence consisted in selling tickets to various people, which admitted them to a ball at which refreshments were provided for the purchasers of the tickets. The refreshments included liquors of different kinds, including beer, sherry, port wine, and brandy. Whilst the dance was proceeding, at the Mechanics Hall, Claremont, the police entered, and after a short conversation with the three appellants, who were the promoters of the dance, seized all the liquor on the premises. The defence at the trial of the appellants was that the dance was got up as a sort of entertainment on the occasion of the birthday of the first appellant's child, and not for the purpose of making any profit for themselves. When asked what they would have done with the money if there had been a profit, two of them said they did not know, and a third witness said that the usual practice in case of similar balls, is for the subscribers to have a jollification among themselves. Now, if this had been an ordinary subscription ball, the promoters of which act only as the agents of the subscribers in the purchase of liquor as part of the refreshments, it would have been impossible to support the conviction. If people moving in what is called society are allowed to have their subscription dances and charity balls, there is no reason why people, moving in a humbler sphere of life, should be deprived of a similar liberty. The difficulty, however, in the present case is that the appellants, in buying the liquor for the entertainment, did so on their own behalf, and not as agents for the subscribers. The liquor, therefore, which was supplied to the subscribers was liquor belonging not to the subscribers, but to the appellants as promoters. The supply of the liquor was an important part of the consideration for which each ticket-holder paid his 8s. 6d., and it is impossible therefore to avoid the conclusion that the liquor was sold by the promoters to the subscribers. It does not appear that the promoters paid any subscription in the first instance. The ball ended in a loss—probably on account of the police raid; and the loss was borne by the promoters only, and not by all the subscribers. This fact alone is sufficient to show that if there had been a profit, the promoters only would have been entitled to share in it. It was suggested on the hearing of the appeal that similar arrangements are often made in regard to fashionable subscription dances; but I can only say that if there be any truth in the suggestion, it is to be hoped that the police will be instructed to treat future offenders as they have treated the present appellants. The law will never be respected so long as there is any good ground for the suspicion that a different measure of justice is meted out to the poor and humble from that which is meted out to those who are rich or supposed to move in good society. The appellants, however, have in my opinion contravened the law, and the appeal must therefore be dismissed.

Liquor Licensing Acts—Wholesale licence—Unbroken case.

The appellant, being the holder of a wholesale licence to deal in intoxicating liquors, sold to D. half a dozen quart bottles of Ohlsson's beer for 1s. 6d. and half a dozen Castle ale for 3s. 6d., and, after placing them in a case and nailing down the lid, he delivered the case to the purchaser.

Held, that the sale was by retail and not by wholesale as authorized by sub-section 1 of section 7 of Act 28 of 1883.

This was an appeal against the decision of the Acting A.R.M. of Wynberg, in which the applicant was charged under Section 15 of Act 28 of 1883, as amended by subsequent liquor laws, in that he did wrongfully and unlawfully, contrary to the provisions of the said Act, and without licence, sell to one Robert Donald, a sergeant of the police, one-half dozen bottles of beer, known as tickey beer, and a similar quantity of Castle ale.

Sir Henry Juta appeared for the applicant, and Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

Sir Henry Juta said that the question was one that largely affected wholesale dealers. The Act provided that the wholesale dealer could sell an unbroken case containing not less than twelve reputed quarts or twenty-four pints, or a cask, containing not less than five gallons, such liquor not to be consumed on the premises. The applicant had such a licence, and the beer sold was six of one kind and six of another. Similar cases had come before Mr. Blackstone Williams, the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, who had given a verdict of not guilty, but the A.R.M. had found the applicant guilty. The important point in law was whether the twelve reputed quarts must be all of the same kind. In this case the Magistrate seemed to have assumed that there must be twelve quarts of the same kind of liquor. The evidence had proved that it was a common practice for such dealers to sell different kinds of liquor to make up a dozen.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do you mean by an unbroken case?]

Simply the grammatical meaning of the word.

[Hopley, J.: Supposing you have a cask divided into five compartments to contain a gallon of five kinds of liquor, would that come within the Act?]

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is not an unbroken case the case as it comes from the manufacturer?]

I take it to mean unbroken in quantity. [Hopley, J.: It may mean unbroken in quality or kind.]

I take it to mean just what it says.

Mr. Howel Jones contended that the legislature had intended that the dealer should not handle the bottles, but simply supply single casks or cases, as received from the manufacturers. At that time the manufacturers had been almost entirely resident in foreign countries.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose the dealer receives some thousands of bottles from the manufacturers, and has to make them up into cases, or suppose he buys in casks from the farmers and bottles it himself.]

If he buys in casks he must sell in casks.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Take the case of a manufacturer sending cases of samples to introduce the various brands.]

Sir Henry Juta (in reply) contended that the idea was to restrict the quantity only.

Cur. adv. vult.

Postea (April 29th.)

De Villiers, C.J.: This case raises a very important question as to the rights acquired by a dealer in intoxicating liquors under a wholesale licence. The appellant, as the holder of such a licence, sold to one Donald half-a-dozen quart bottles of Ohlsson's beer for 1s. 6d., and half-a-dozen Castle ale for 3s. 6d., and, after placing them in a case and nailing down the lid with a single nail at each end, he delivered the case to the purchaser. He was charged with selling liquor by retail, and was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of £10, and he now appeals against the conviction and sentence.

The 7th section of Act 28 of 1883 provides that "a wholesale licence shall authorise a dealer to sell and deliver liquors in quantities of not less than five gallons if in cask, or one unbroken case containing not less than twelve reputed quarts or 24 reputed pint bottles, to be delivered at one time, such liquors not to be consumed in or upon the seller's premises." The practice of Resident Magistrates in the construction of this clause has by no means been uniform, and it is certainly surprising that the question as to the correct meaning of the words "one unbroken case" has never yet come before this Court for decision. The ordinary meaning of the term "selling by wholesale," is correctly stated in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as "selling by large parcels, generally in original packages, and not by retail." This idea was followed out by the Cape Legislature in defining a "wholesale dealer" for the purpose of the Stamp Act of 1863. The definition given by the 8th section of that Act is that the term "shall extend to and embrace every person who sells or exposes for sale, goods, wares, or merchandise in the original package as when imported." It appears to me that the same notion must have been present to the mind of the Legislature when it came to deal with a "wholesale dealer's" licence to sell liquors. It seems to have been assumed that if he sells liquors otherwise than in cask he would only sell imported cases of liquor, and accordingly it was enacted that he should sell cases containing not less than twelve quarts at a time, and that such cases shall be in the original unbroken condition as when received. The Legislature does not appear to have contemplated the possibility of a wholesale dealer selling in cases liquor which has not been delivered to him in cases. For instance, he may have purchased wines in cask, and have had them bottled himself. If he places the bottles in a case, or even in a bottle basket, may he sell a dozen to a customer, provided a dozen bottles are delivered at one time, and no portion is consumed on his premises? Taken literally, the section does not provide for such an event, and if the definition were to be taken in its strictest sense, the result would be that a wholesale dealer who wishes to sell liquor in bottles could only sell it in cases in the condition in which he received them from the vendor. In the ordinary course of trade, each case would contain only one kind of liquor, and it therefore becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether he would have the right to re-sell such case in its unbroken condition. If he had the right at all it would only be on the ground that the case was still unbroken when he re-sold. Where, however, the wholesale dealer has bought the liquor in cases, and has had it bottled himself, the expression "one unbroken case" becomes quite meaningless in reference to a resale. To my mind the essential object of the section is to draw a clear distinction between wholesale and retail dealings. For that purpose, a limit of quantity is fixed, below which the wholesale dealer shall not sell any kind of liquor. The limit is fixed at a dozen quarts, and if he sells not less than that quantity of any one kind bottled by himself, the words, "one unbroken case," would not apply, seeing that he did not buy the liquor in cases, but as he has complied with the essential requirement of the Act that he shall not sell any kind of liquor by retail, he would not be guilty of a contravention of the Act. But the Court is now asked to go a step further, and to hold that he may sell different kinds of liquor in retail quantities, provided only the total quantity sold does not fall below the minimum fixed by the Act. In the present case the two kinds sold are Ohlsson's beer and Castle ale, but they were bought from different manufacturers, and sold at different prices, and if the sale was permissible, there would be no reason why another dealer should not sell, say, one bottle of imported brandy and eleven bottles of Cape beer, provided only he places them all in the same receptacle. In so far as the brandy is concerned, such a transaction would clearly be a retail dealing, and the difference between such a case and the present would be a difference of degree only, and not of principle. The meaning of the Legislature is by no means clear, but the construction now placed upon the section appears to me to be the only one which can reconcile the rights of the wholesale dealer with the rights of the bottle licence holder, and the retail dealer, and with the general interests of the public. The appeal must be dismissed.

VOLO V. MAJUKZEL. (1901.
(Apr. 26th,

Resident Magistrate's jurisdiction —Trespass—Right to occupy land.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Queenstown. The plaintiff in the court below, one Solomon Majiyezi, had brought an action against Paulus Yolo to recover the sum of £20, as and for damages incurred by reason of the defendant having allowed certain cattle, his property, to trespass in and upon certain land occupied by the plaintiff. The Court below gave judgment for the plaintiff for £6 5s. 6d. with costs, and dismissed the claim in reconvention set up for the defendant. Against this judgment the defendant now appealed.

In the Court below the defendant's agent excepted to the summons as vague and indefinite. It having been amended by consent the defendant had pleaded the general issue. The circumstances of the case sufficiently appear from the Magistrate's reasons for his judgment:—

"In this case the plaintiff for certain alleged trespass of stock belonging to the defendant on cultivated lands, the property or in the lawful possession of the plaintiff, claims £20 as damages. In respect of the damage to crops growing on the commonage, the plaintiff appears to have had no authority to cultivate or use any portion thereof and his claim for any trespass thereon cannot be sustained."

With regard to the trespass on crops growing on the land of which the plaintiff is in legal possession or occupation, the plaintiff's witnesses distinctly state that such damage was caused by defendant's cattle. On the other hand, defendant's witnesses assert to the contrary, and it therefore becomes a matter of credibility of witnesses. I am quite satisfied in my own mind that the plaintiff's witnesses are to be believed and those of the defendant discredited. I consider the plaintiff has made out a good case, and have awarded him the sum of £6 5s. 6d., the amount assessed by the Field-Cornet, including cost of valuation. The defendant's claim in reconvention is dismissed on the grounds that in his own evidence he states that he has no claim against plaintiff and none has been proved.

Mr. Burton appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

Mr. Burton contended that the matter was to a great extent a question of fact. The case was one of damage by trespass of stock. £20 had been claimed for destruction of crops, the land being in the district of Queen's Town. The plea for the defence had been that the summons was not sufficiently clear, but although permission had been given for the summons to be amended, it had not been done. Defendant therefore took up the position that if the plaintiff proved that trespass had been on certain "common" land, then he denied plaintiff's lawful occupation. If, however, it was proved that trespass took place on plaintiff's private property, then defendant denied the allegation altogether.

Plaintiff's witnesses had stated that the damage was done by defendant's cattle; but, on the other hand, defendant's witnesses had stated to the contrary. The Magistrate, in giving judgment, had stated he was quite satisfied the plaintiff's witnesses were to be believed, and awarded £6 5s. 6d. damages. The evidence involved numerous questions as to title of the land, ownership of the cattle, and the right of impounding.

Mr. Gardiner was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: The question is entirely one of the credibility of witnesses. Some witnesses of repute on the part of the plaintiff swore that they saw defendant's cattle trespassing, not only on the portion of the commonage, but also on his own private land. This is denied. There is no doubt that the majority of the witnesses swore to the contrary. The Magistrate heard them, and came to the conclusion that the witnesses for the plaintiff were to be believed. That being so, it is impossible to reverse the action of the Magistrate, unless the circumstances are so clear as to induce the Court to hold the contrary. Something has been made of the point that if the cattle had been driven into the commonage by Lulu, that the defendant is not to be held responsible. But it seems that the defendant's son was there on his behalf guarding the cattle, and the defendant's son, at all events, was aware of the cattle being driven on to the commonage. He says that he never saw the cattle trespass on defendant's private ground; but this point is contradicted by witnesses for the plaintiff and by the Field-cornet. There is nothing to show that the damage was done by any other cattle. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Hopley, J., said he was of the same opinion, and for the reasons stated.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

DUMINY V. DAY.

{ 1904.
{ Apr. 27th.

Landlord and tenant—Holding over.

This was an action brought by Francois Duminy, a farmer of D'Urban road, against Petronella Johanna Day, also of D'Urban-road, to recover £44 7s. 2½d., being the actual cost of materials supplied for a certain fence on the defendant's farm.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a farmer, and resided at D'Urban-road, and the defendant was married out of community to property to William Day, also of D'Urban-road. About November, 1902, the defendant agreed to let and the plaintiff to hire for six months from 1st January, 1903, at a monthly rental of £10 a certain portion of the defendant's farm. It was agreed that the plaintiff should fence off the portion, and that the defendant should pay for the materials when the lease was up. About January, 1903, the plaintiff entered into occupation and duly fenced the portion of the farm, for which he had expended £44 7s. 2½d. The defendant thereafter gave the plaintiff notice to either quit the farm or to pay £50 a month for rent. The plaintiff quitted the farm at the end of February, although he was not legally obliged to do so.

The plea admitted the formal allegations, but the defendant denied that it was agreed that the plaintiff should have the farm for a period of six months, or that she should pay for the material for the fence. In reconvention she claimed £10, £10, and £50, rent for January, February, and March, in respect of which she had received £20, and taking the plaintiff's claim from the claim in reconvention the defendant claimed the difference, £5 12s. 9½d.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Alexander) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. M. Bisset was for the defendant.

Francois Duminy, plaintiff, stated that in November, 1902, he went, along with Mr. Finck, to see the defendant in regard to the lease of a certain portion of her farm. At that time he had a contract with the Repatriation Board for grazing cattle. The defendant promised to give a definite answer through Mr. Finck as to whether plaintiff would have the farm at £10 a month. A period of six months was mentioned, and witness was to erect a fence at his own cost, and at the expiration of six months Mrs. Day was to take over the fence, compensating him for the material only. Everything was settled except the extent of the ground. Next day, Mr. Finck told him that he could have two-thirds of the portion he required, and witness agreed to accept it. The fence was duly erected at the cost of the material mentioned. The cattle remained grazing on the farm until the end of February. On the 21st January, Mrs. Day wrote him giving him notice that from the 1st March the rent would be increased to £50 a month. In February, Mrs. Day wrote again giving him notice to remove the fence. He quitted the farm on the 28th February. The cattle did not on any occasion cross over to defendant's farm.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bisset: It was agreed that if Finck wanted a small portion for cultivation it was to be fenced off. He never mentioned the six months' contract in any of the correspondence. There was sufficient herbage on the land to support the cattle for a period of six months. He considered he was cheated out of his bargain. When he gave up the tenancy the matter was in the attorney's hands, and he sent no intimation to the defendant. He did not deny the assertion of the defendant that the cattle were still running on her farm on the 20th March.

The evidence of Arthur Tranmer, formerly Inspector of Stock for the Western Province Repatriation Department, was taken on commission, from which it appeared that Finck told him that the plaintiff had got a six months' lease of the defendant's farm, the plaintiff to fence it, and the defendant after six months to pay for the cost of the material.

Andrew Evats, a fencer in the employ of the plaintiff, stated he erected the wire fence in March. A part of Mr. Duminy's fence was pulled down to allow the cattle to pass through to the camp. The cattle could not get get through to the defendant's farm.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bisset: He knew nothing about the gate.

Philip September stated he was in the employ of Finck from December, 1902, to March, 1903. Before March the fence was cut opposite to Finck's house. During March the only cattle in the camp belonged to Mr. Finck.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. Bisset: He had no quarrel with Mr. Finck, but on the 5th April he was fined by the Magistrate for desertion of service.

Johannes Duminy, brother of the plaintiff, said that he owned a farm adjoining that of his brother, and that a reasonable rent for that particular camp for grazing purposes would be £10 or £12 a month.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Petronella Johanna Day, defendant in the case, stated when the plaintiff came to see her she agreed to take the fence over if it was in order, and to pay for the material. The plaintiff understood within a few days that he could have another portion of the farm for £10 a month. The plaintiff entered into occupancy at the end of December. The reason that she gave notice of an increase of the rent to £50 was because some 600 cattle from which she had been receiving 3s. a head per day had been taken away from her and placed in the camp. About the 7th March she saw a lot of strange cattle grazing in the camp. Although she repudiated the liability for the fencing in March, she now had offered to take it over.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The plaintiff had to sue her before for the purchase price of certain wire. Duminy was only to erect the fence for one month.

Jacobus Finck stated that in November, 1902, he went with the plaintiff to hire some ground, and the defendant said she would hire the land for a month or longer. On the 3rd March there were still 300 cattle on the farm. As regards the fence, Mr. Duminy said he would fence the ground, and Mrs. Day could take it over, but if not he would take it away, and use it on his own farm.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Since the interview with Mr. Walker he had been sued by Mr. Duminy and judgment given against him, and, in consequence, he had to surrender his estate. He denied cutting the wire in February. It was untrue that September and he cut the wire. He never told Tranmer that the lease was for six months.

Wm. Arthur Day, husband of the defendant, said that he virtually acted as his wife's agent in the transaction. Witness saw some of the cattle in the camp on March 12 or 14.

C. Abrams, in the employ of Mrs. Day, said he knew the Camp, and saw a lot of Mr. Duminy's cattle there in March, 1903.

Mr. Benjamin Norton said he remembered seeing 100 to 120 cattle in the camp on the second Saturday in March. They were repatriation cattle.

Mr. Bisset closed his case.

Mr. Upington asked leave to call

Mr. Walker, who stated that on April 6 Fink and Duminy came to his office, and the former said that the arrangement was that Mrs. Day had to repay the cost of putting up the fence, and also that he was with Mr. Duminy, when the arrangement was made. When Fink was asked as to whether cattle was on the ground in March he said he did not know as he was away during that period.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel, having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff and the defendant are neighbours occupying adjoining farms in the Cape district. Towards the end of the year 1902, the plaintiff Duminy approached the defendant for the purpose of hiring a portion of her farm for grazing purposes. An agreement was entered into which the plaintiff Duminy alleges was for the period of six months from January 1, 1903, at the monthly rental of £10. The plaintiff Duminy also said it was a condition of the agreement that he should fence off the portion of the land he hired, and at the termination of his tenancy the defendant should take over the fence so erected, and pay the plaintiff the cost price of the materials used in making the fence. The defendant denies both the agreement for six months, and also denies that she agreed to take over the fence, but in her plea she says, although it is not clear on what grounds she admits it, that the plaintiff is entitled to claim the price of the materials of the fence, that she is willing to take the fence over, set off against her claim the cost price of the fence, and that she was always prepared to do so. The question of the cost of the fence does not require further consideration. The plaintiff claims £44 7s. 2½d. as the cost of materials for this fence, and the defendant is willing to pay this and set it off against her counter-claim, so this question need not further be discussed. But the next question is whether there was an agreement for six months at a rental of £10 a month from January 1. The onus of proving that this agreement was entered into lay on the plaintiff, and I must say in the absence of anything in writing, and looking at his conduct and the correspondence, if the case rested here, I should not be prepared to hold that he had an agreement of tenancy for six months at a rental of £10 a month. The defendant in this case, shortly after the tenancy commenced, gave notice to the plaintiff that as she claimed the tenancy to be a monthly tenancy that the agreement would not be continued beyond the end of February, and if the plaintiff wished to continue in possession of the farm after that date, he was to pay £50 a month rent. She alleges that the plaintiff had remained in possession after the month of March, and although he has paid for the month of January and February, he has not paid for the month of March, and if this amount of £50 is found due, judgment will have to be given for the balance. If she is not entitled to claim the amount of £50, judgment will have to be given for the plaintiff for the amount that the material of the fence cost. The plaintiff, in his letter in reply to the notice he received on January 21, does not distinctly set up his agreement, but simply says he does not accept the notice. He says, "I beg to state I am prepared only to carry out the arrangements entered into between us and cannot accept anything else." Then when the letter is put into the hands of his attorneys they write that they will for the sake of peace, give up possession of the property at the end of February, therefore, not insisting upon the agreement to continue in possession after the notice. Has the plaintiff continued in possession after this notice, and, if so, what rate ought to be charged for rent? If the plaintiff remained in possession of the property after the notice had been given by the defendant that the tenancy was to cease, he would, I think, under the circumstances disclosed in the case, be liable to pay £50 a month. He intimated he would not remain in possession after the end of February, and the question is, has he done so? He hired this land for the purpose of grazing certain cattle owned by the Repatriation Department. These cattle were running on his farm. He gave notice to the manager of the Repatriation Department that he would no longer have the grazing on the defendant's farm, and the manager, Mr. Tanner, said that after receiving this information, he immediately took steps so that the Repatriation cattle should be removed from the defendant's farm. He says they were so removed, and the plaintiff himself says he had nothing further to do with the property, and that after the end of February, no cattle were grazing there, and if there were cattle, he had no concern with them, as all the animals owned by him were removed. As a matter of fact, I think it is proved in this case that cattle were grazing on this property, and it is also proved, I think, that these cattle belonged to the Repatriation Department. But that these cattle were so running on the farm in continuance of a right of tenancy, I think has not been proved. In this case the number of cattle which the Repatriation Department had was a very large number; but the utmost seen by any witness after the 28th February was some 100 or 120, and I think it is clear that the cattle that did get on this farm were cattle trespassing, and not cattle sent on the farm by the plaintiff by virtue of his right of tenancy. The letter which has been put in did not show any tenancy after the 28th February, for the defendant says: "I have to inform you that cattle are still grazing on our land, for which you will have to pay £50 a month as long as they remain." However, it appears from the evidence that there were cattle about the beginning of March, but these cattle were not grazing by any right of tenancy, and if they were there, it was without the knowledge of the plaintiff in this case, and without the knowledge of Tanner. They may have strayed over from one camp to the other, and if so, the defendant in this case would have had the right to claim damages for trespass; but no such claim is set up. I am forced to hold that the plaintiff has not rendered himself liable to pay any rent for the month of March. The defendant, no doubt, found herself rather harshly used. She had these Repatriation cattle running on her farm, and was receiving a large amount—some £95 a month—for grazing. After she let the portion of her farm to the plaintiff, these cattle were removed from her farm, and sent to the portion so hired, and she lost the contract. The bargain with the plaintiff was a fair one, and the defendant herself submitted to it, although she did not probably know the consequences; but she cannot now claim for trespass by the cattle. Under all the circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the cost of the material. He expended £44 odd, and judgment will be given for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

REVIEW CASE.

REX V. PLAATJES.

Remit to Magistrate—Act 20 of 1856.

Where a charge of house-breaking had been remitted to a Magistrate for trial under Act 20 of 1856, and the Magistrate had imposed a sentence of nine months' imprisonment; the sentence was, on review, reduced to three months.

Buchanan, J., said that during the week a case came before him from the Resident Magistrate's Court of Robertson, in which Ephraim Platjes was charged with attempting to commit the crime of housebreaking. The preparatory examination was held, and the case was remitted by the Attorney-General to the Magistrate for trial under his ordinary jurisdiction, under Act 20 of 1856. The Magistrate passed a sentence of nine months' imprisonment with hard labour. The extreme sentence that could be passed under that Act was three months' hard labour, and the sentence would have to be reduced to that.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS.

1 1904.
1 Apr. 28th.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for the admission of Carl Jeppe as an advocate. Applicant had been admitted in 1884 as an advocate of the High Court of the late South African Republic. In December, 1903, he was admitted to practise as an advocate of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal. Counsel argued that according to Act 30 of 1892, there was no necessity for the Governor to issue a proclamation for an examination of the applicant. He cited the cases of Ex parte Holderness (Rhodesia). (13 C.T.R., 254), and Ex parte Hofmeyr (Transvaal). (13 C.T.R., 337 and 728).

Application ordered to stand over, to enable their lordships to look into previous cases.

Postea (May 13).

Buchanan, J., said that, in regard to the matter of the application for the admission of Carl Jeppe as an advocate of this Court, the examination which Mr. Jeppe had passed in the Transvaal was not recognized by a proclamation of his Excellency the Governor, under section 1 (b) of Act 30 of 1892, referred to. The Judges had advised his Excellency that this Proclamation may issue, and when the Proclamation issued the application might be renewed.

Postea (November 14th.) Applicant was admitted.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the admission of Johannes Nicolaas Vlok as a translator.

Application granted, and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

DANIELL V. ROOS. } 1904.
 } Apr. 28th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds of £250 and £225 respectively, with interest, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs, the bonds having become due one by reason of non-payment of interest, and the other in consequence of notice given.

Order granted.

HERMANN V. FEYER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,500, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs, also for payment of £5 5s. insurance premiums.

Order granted.

CORTIS V. BROOMBERG.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Mr. M. Bisset read an affidavit by the defendant to the effect that he entered into an arrangement with the plaintiff for the interest due on the 31st December to stand over, as he (defendant) was negotiating for the sale of certain property. This transaction fell through. The plaintiff had agreed to waive his right to payment of the interest due on the 31st December until the 6th March, 1904. Deponent was ready and willing to pay the interest, had tendered it, and again tendered it.

Mr. Close read an affidavit by plaintiff's agent stating that the defendant failed to pay the interest on the 6th March, and a demand was then sent for the capital and interest. Plaintiff, in an affidavit, denied that he waived his right to interest from the due date, and said that defendant informed him in January that he had made an arrangement with Mr. Arderne, and he would be able to pay the interest. He then consented to waive his right until the 6th March. The interest due on the 31st December was not tendered to deponent.

Mr. Close having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said that on this claim all that was due to the plaintiff was the interest. Provisional sentence would, therefore, be given for the interest only, and, as the amount of interest was tendered before the proceedings were begun, the plaintiff would have to pay the costs.

BAMFORD V. BROWN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence upon a document, signed by the defendant, acknowledging his indebtedness to the plaintiff for £30 11s. 6d., which was to be paid by two instalments. One instalment of £10 10s. had been paid, and there was a balance of £20 1s. 6d.

Order granted.

GORDON MITCHELL AND CO. V. KAPLAN.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final order of adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN BLEEK V. ECKSTEIN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £4,500, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

JAGGER AND CO. AND OTHERS. V. GRUSKIN AND POLLIAK.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's partnership and private estate. The principal assets of the insolvent estate were perishable, and the creditors were anxious that a provisional trustee should be appointed to realise the stock.

Aron Polliack appeared, and stated that he had been erroneously coupled in the partnership estate.

Order granted. Mr. T. H. Hazell and Mr. Cranmer appointed as trustees, the question of the sequestration of Aron Polliack's estate to stand over until next Thursday.

Postea (May 5th.) An order of final adjudication was granted against Polliack's estate.

GOTZE V. BERGH.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note dated East London, January 4, 1904, and due on the 4th April for value received. The note was for £900, was signed by J. Wedderburn, and endorsed at the bank by the payee, Alex. Bergh. A sum of £539 14s. 9d. had been paid on account, and provisional sentence was applied for in regard to the balance of £360 5s. 3d.

Mr. Upington read an affidavit by the defendant, who said that he endorsed the note for the accommodation of the said Wedderburn, who had purchased scrip in the Federal Supply and Cold Storage of South Africa. He received no value for the note. He made the endorsement on the distinct understanding that the said plaintiff and Wedderburn should discharge the obligation, and that he (defendant) should be held harmless. Plaintiff had sold the scrip, and defendant submitted that it should have been attached to the note as his security. Mr. Upington asked for leave to put in a supplementary affidavit by the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan objected that this was a reply to the plaintiff's affidavit.

The case was ordered to stand over until the 12th May, to enable the plaintiff to file further affidavit, question of costs to stand over.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. STEENSMA.

Mr. Upington moved for the discharge of the provisional order granted against the defendant on March 30.

Order granted.

BOULTON V. DE WIT.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes amounting £467 17s. 6d.

Mr. Burton, for the defendant, put in affidavits to prove that the defendant owed the plaintiff no money except £37 10s. The plaintiff had never handed him back the old promissory notes, nor had he ever furnished him with a specific account.

The Court ordered the parties to go into the principal case, costs to abide the result.

BLAKE V. FOBIAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest at the rate of 5½ per cent., from October 1, 1903, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

LIPSCHITZ V. DELPORT.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on promissory notes for £250, £155, £50, £131, and £2 7s. 5d.

Order granted.

THE MASTER V. VILJOEN.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for an order on the defendant to file an account in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late Jan Viljoen, with costs.

Order granted.

LOGAN AND CO., LTD. V. CLAWS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

The defendant appeared in person, and put in a statement showing that his assets exceeded his liabilities.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Thursday week, the defendant in the meantime to see if an arrangement could not be entered into with the attorneys.

PORT ELIZABETH COLD STORAGE V. MARNICOWITZ.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

S.A. MUTUAL V. NORTJE.

Mr. P. Jones moved for provisional sentence for £24 interest on a bond from July 1, 1903, to the 31st December, 1903, at the rate of 6 per cent.

Order granted.

DUMINY V. DREYER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £75.

Order granted.

ORLSSON V. MAGOR.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment for £15,000, less £7,000 paid on account, together with interest on £1,376 5s. 2d., from 30th June, 1903, to 2nd September, 1903, and on the sum of £8,000 from 2nd September, 1903, at the rate of 6 per cent., and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due and payable by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

OHLSOON'S CAPE BREWERIES V. MAGOR.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from 29th September, 1903, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due and payable by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

PATERSON AND ANOTHER V. PITT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £70 and £85 respectively, together with interest.

Order granted.

PATERSON AND ANOTHER V. TWINE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £90, with interest from 29th March, 1904.

Order granted.

KING BROS. V. ROWAN.

Mr. McGregor moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant by reason of his non-payment of costs to the amount of £23 1s. 3d.

The defendant appeared in person, and stated that beyond offering £1 a month, which he hoped to borrow from his friends, he could make no definite offer.

Buchanan, J., said that it was clear under the circumstances that no order could be made at present, but there would be leave to apply again if it was discovered that the defendant had any property.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ALLEN V. MILNER. { 1904.
{ Apr. 28th.

Mr. Upington moved for an order declaring the respondent, Wilfred Harvey Milner, aged sixty, to be of unsound mind, and appointing a curator of his person and property.

Dr. Dodds, medical superintendent of Valkenberg Asylum, stated that he had Wilfred Harvey Milner under his charge since the 5th April. He was suffering from acute melancholia and hallucinations, and was quite unable to look after his own affairs. There was a fair prospect of recovery, but it would take some time.

Dr. Claude Wright, of Wynberg, stated that he had known Milner for about twenty-five years. About five weeks ago he was called in to see him, and found that he was suffering from melancholia. He refused to speak, or to take food, and was quite unable to manage his own affairs.

[Buchanan, J.: Is the Curator in Court?]

Mr. Upington: He was here, my Lord.

[Buchanan, J.: This is not the proper proceeding, Mr. Upington. The curator is appointed by the Court to look after the interests of the alleged lunatic.]

Mr. Upington, replying to the Bench, said that the curator was not now in Court.

[Buchanan, J.: This is not regular. He ought to be in Court to watch the case on behalf of the lunatic.]

Dr. McGregor, of Wynberg, also gave evidence as to the respondent's insanity.

Mr. Upington read a report by the curator ad litem to the effect that the respondent was of unsound mind. He seemed to imagine some impending trouble. The case was put down in the asylum book as "acute melancholia."

Robert Allen stated that the respondent was a widower, and had four children. He owned property in Church-street, Wynberg, part of which brought in a rental of £17 10s. a month.

Order granted as prayed, Mr. Robert Allen to be curator of the respondent's person and property, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte THE RECEIVERS OF J. SEDGWICK AND CO.

This was an application by Messrs. Syfret and Steytler, two of the receivers in the estate of J. Sedgwick and Co., for an order authorising them to dispose of the business to Charles Frederick Sedgwick for £116,000.

The petition set out that on the 11th February petitioners were appointed receivers of the company, and after appointing trustworthy valuers and having valued the immovable property, the wine and spirits on hand and the goodwill, Charles Frederick Sedgwick made an offer of £101,000 for the assets of the firm. He estimated that he represented two-thirds of the capital, and as regards his brother, he offered to pay £20,000 in cash on completion of the sale, and the balance by three yearly instalments, and to furnish satisfactory security. Any attempt to launch on the market the large stock of wine and spirits at the present time, he thought, would entail a great loss. Petitioners were unable to reply to his letter owing to the other liquidator, Mr. Gibson, demanding £155,000, and they were unable to come to any agreement. Petitioners thought that the price was a satisfactory one, but they stipulated for £15,000 for the goodwill, and then Mr. Charles Frederick added that to his original offer. They were convinced that if sold by public auction the estate would not realise anything like the amount offered by Mr. Charles Frederick Sedgwick. Petitioners asked for an order authorising them to dispose of the estate to Charles Frederick Sedgwick, and for authority to pass transfer of any property in the name of the firm, to Charles Frederick Sedgwick, subject to an adjustment of the final order of the firm's transactions and the release from any liability of the firm's debts of Mr. A. M. Sedgwick.

The affidavit of Mr. Gibson set out that he was always ready and willing to accept £155,000 for the business. He hoped by cautious and judicial liquidation to benefit the partnership in the estate. He valued the goodwill at £32,000.

The affidavit of Dr. Hahn set out that it would be utterly impossible to realise anything like the value of the stock if it were placed on the market.

The affidavit of Charles Frederick Sedgwick, set out that he had been acting for the firm for 42 years, and had had the sole management nearly all that time. The gradual liquidation of the business would prove disastrous to the partners, and in addition it would throw out of work 115 men, many of whom were married, and that had in a good measure induced him to make an increased offer. If Mr. Gibson's idea was carried out, it would result in the collapse of the tied houses. He was quite willing to dispose of his share in the business to his brother or anybody else.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the other receiver, Mr. Gibson; and Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for Charles Frederick Sedgwick.

Mr. Searle, having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., said that if an illustration were wanted it was supplied in the facts disclosed in the affidavits of the wisdom of the Court in granting the last application in this matter by which three liquidators instead of two were appointed. If the matter of liquidation had been left in the hands of two liquidators there could be little doubt that the business would have come to a deadlock. The dissenting liquidator based his objection mainly upon two things: One was the price at which the wine had been valued, and the other the price put upon the goodwill. The wine had been valued by experienced men without any restriction as regards putting a fair value on it, and on the rest of the assets, he thought the liquidators had made an excellent bargain. If the firm was gradually liquidated the goodwill would entirely vanish, and the opposing liquidator puts in £32,000 for this. The Court was bound to grant the application, and the liquidators would be authorised to make the sale of the business in the way proposed, and to transfer the property, the costs of the case to come out of the liquidation, as both parties came to the Court to do their duty.

Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

REVIEW CASE.

REX V. BAARTMAN. { 1904.
{ Apr. 29th.

Acts 19 of 1861, Sec. 15—Act 19 of 1877—Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction—Whipping.

Where a boy, aged 15, was accused of contravening Sec. 15 of Act 19 of 1861, and the case having been remitted to a Magistrate to try under his ordinary jurisdiction, was sentenced to be whipped.

Held, that as the boy was over 14, and this was a first offence, the Magistrate could not, under his ordinary jurisdiction, inflict a whipping.

Hopley, J. At the end of last month came before me in review the case of the King v. Thye Baartman from Beaufort West. The accused was charged with the very serious offence of contravening the 15th section of the Railways Act, in meddling with the railway points with intent to endanger the safety of the people travelling thereon. That, of course, is a very serious offence, for which 21 years, and, subsequent to the Act, 25 lashes can be administered. This lad is 15 years, and the way in which he is alleged to have committed the offence in itself was not a very serious contravention of the Act, and the Attorney-General seems to have taken that view in remitting the case to the Magistrate under his ordinary jurisdiction, at the same time calling the attention of the Magistrate to the Act 19 of 1877, for which lashes are made possible on conviction. The particular section of the Act is as follows: "Any person who may be convicted of any offence made punishable by the 3rd section of the Forest and Herbage Preservation Act, 1859, or by the 4th or the 15th section of the Railway Regulation Act, 1861, shall be, in addition to, or in lieu of the punishment provided for any such offence in or by the said sections, liable to corporal punishment in any number of lashes or cuts with the cane or rod not exceeding 25." Now, on remission, the Magistrate found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to 25 cuts of the cane. Under his ordinary jurisdiction, the Magistrate has no right under a first conviction to give lashes at all, unless the culprit is not over 14 years of age. Here the culprit is 15 years of age, and therefore the Magistrate had no right, under his ordinary jurisdiction, to give lashes, and he has no right to impose any number of lashes under the Act. The sentence is therefore a wholly improper one. If there had been promptitude in the matter the case might have been sent back to Beaufort West to have a proper sentence passed. Under the circumstances, this boy has been in gaol all this time, and it seems to me that the sentence should now be quashed.

Mr. M. de Villiers was for the applicant, and Mr. W. P. Schreiner, K.C., was for the respondent. Mr. De Villiers said that the parties had arrived at an understanding. The application was for the appointment of some impartial person to take charge of the business carried on by the applicant and respondent. It was agreed that Mr. James Muir should be appointed as liquidator, with full power to dispose of the goodwill, and the business, either to one of the partners or to any intending purchaser, the costs to come out of the liquidation. CHORITZ V. SHOOLMAN.

Pactum de non petendo—Forgery.

Where to an application for provisional sentence, the defendant pleaded plaintiff's written agreement, to accept payment of a debt by annual instalments, which agreement the plaintiff alleged to be a forgery, the Court, judging from the admissions of the plaintiff that his contention was improbable, refused provisional sentence and directed plaintiff to prosecute defendant for forgery and then go into the principal case.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgement of debt for £300, signed by the defendant, with interest from the date of summons and costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers read an affidavit by the defendant, which set out that on the 26th May he was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £350, which was advanced to him to discharge his debts. On the same day it was agreed that his indebtedness should be paid off at the rate of £50 a year, the first instalment to be paid in the course of the current year. An agreement was drawn up, and signed to that effect on the 26th February.

Mr. Alexander put in the replying affidavit of the plaintiff, who denied that he ever agreed that the sum of £350 should be paid by instalments. On the 26th February he signed a promissory note, and he had never signed an agreement. The signature on it was a forgery. Plaintiff was illiterate, and the defendant told him he was signing a receipt for the balance of the money on the 4th March.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: If the document sued upon of the 11th March stood by itself it would certainly be prima facie proof of a debt of £300 being immediately owing by the defendant. The terms of the document are: "Balance due to Mr. Choritz £300, signed by Max Shoolman," but it is quite consistent also with the continued existence in force of the document of the 26th February, 1904. Under that document there was still also to be a balance owing to the defendant, but instead of paying immediately to the plaintiff it would be owing at a future date. The defendant puts in this document which postpones the payment to a future date, and he also puts in another which is a receipt given on the same day as the day on which the document was given, and it is a receipt for a certain amount, for £50 on account of the £350 being the first instalment according to the arrangement of the 26th February, 1904. This document is admitted by the plaintiff, signed by himself, and now he says that the first document is a forgery, although the second document is not a forgery. Still that is a case which he may set up in the principal case, but I think it seems so unlikely that the Court would not be justified in now giving provisional sentence upon the document. The provisional sentence will be refused, and the plaintiff ordered to go into the principal case, and what the plaintiff ought to do now before he goes to trial is to prosecute the defendant for forgery. If he does not do so it will be very difficult at the trial to prove a forgery. The opportunity is now given to the plaintiff to prosecute the defendant for alleged forgery. Provisional sentence refused, plaintiff to go to the principal case, costs to be costs in the cause.

Provisional sentence—Surety.

The Court refused provisional sentence against a surety, the principal debtor not having been excused; although the principal debtor was absent from the country, and it was alleged, but not proved, that he was insolvent.

Mr. P. Jones moved for provisional sentence for £569 14s. 9d., balance of a promissory note signed by the defendant as surety.

Mr. M. Bisset put in the affidavit of the defendant, which set out that he was before informed that proceedings would be taken. The principal debtor, he thought, should have been excused before he was sued.

Mr. Jones quoted Master of H.C. v. Haarhoff (2 H.C. 215); Nourse v. Styn (1 Mens. 23); Orphan Chamber v. Seretyn and Others (1 Mens. 25), to show that plaintiff was entitled to proceed at once against the surety in the case owing to the facts, that it was patent from the affidavits that the principal debtor was absent, that he was notoriously insolvent, and that plaintiff could not recover from him. He submitted that the whole practice proved that the plaintiff was entitled to provisional sentence, leaving it to the defendant if he were not satisfied, to put the plaintiff to the proof that the principal debtor could be excused.

Mr. Bisset contended that provisional sentence could not be obtained against a surety, and that he was entitled in the provisional case to set up this defence of non excusation of the principal debtor. He urged that the Court had never departed from the practice of refusing to grant provisional sentence against a surety to a promissory note, because his liability was merely a contingent one.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing it is clear that the principal debtor is insolvent, and cannot be excused, how can the Court then sustain the defence of the benefit of excussion?]

Mr. Bisset submitted that in this case there was no such proof of insolvency before the Court.

TRIAL CAUSES.

RUSSELL V. RUSSELL. { 1904.
Apr. 29th.

This was an action brought by Harriet Russell, of Cape Town, against her husband, Charles Stewart Russell, a fitter, lately of Beira, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage. Mr. Rowson was for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Mr. Rowson said that they had been unable to effect personal service. Substituted service had been made by publication in the "Post" at Beira, a Cape Town paper, and the "Government Gazette."

The plaintiff Harriet Russell said that she was married to the defendant in Johannesburg at the Baptist minister's manse. The defendant got drunk occasionally. They afterwards came to Cape Town, and he there deserted her to go to Beira. He said he did not earn sufficient money down here, and he would go to Beira. Witness was born in Natal. Shortly after the marriage they came to Cape Town, and resided here for three years. The defendant, she believed, was born in England. When the defendant went to Beira he said he would send for her, but he had not done so.

Buchanan, J., said he doubted very much whether the plaintiff was domiciled in this colony. She was born in Natal, married in the Transvaal, and her husband had gone to Beira.

Witness, replying to counsel, said that she brought an action in the High Court of the Transvaal, and was told that she could not sue in that court, and that she must bring her action in Cape Town.

His Lordship, in giving judgment, said he must say that the question of domicile was very loosely proved, but the desertion took place in Cape Town, and as the plaintiff had been refused redress in Johannesburg, she might take an order. A decree of restitution would be granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th July, failing which a rule nisi to issue for divorce, to be returnable on the 4th August, publication to be as before.

Postea (Aug. 4th.) The rule was made absolute.

MAX V. MAX.

This was an action brought by Polly Max, of Cape Town, against her husband, Julius Max, of Bloemfontein, O.R.C., for divorce, by reason of the defendant's adultery with one Annie Simonds. Mr. Alexander appeared for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

The plaintiff, Polly Max, said she was married to the defendant in London, in 1894, according to Jewish rites.

Mr. Alexander put in the certificate, which was in Hebrew, and said that the abstract in English on the back or document was written at the time.

Buchanan, J., said that an abstract was not sufficient. The Court must have a complete translation in English of any document put in.

Mr. Alexander said that he had put in similar documents previously, and they had been accepted by the Court.

Buchanan, J., said that the Court must be furnished with a full translation.

Witness, continuing, said that her husband was at the time of the marriage a cigarette maker. They afterwards removed to Glasgow, and subsequently came out to South Africa. They lived in Johannesburg for a time, and came down to Cape Town on the 2nd October, 1899. They had a house in Cape Town, and later on defendant went to Johannesburg in search of work. All she had had from him was two letters, saying that he had arrived safe and obtained work. There had been one child born of the marriage. Defendant deserted her about 16 months ago. She now asked for divorce, custody of the child of the marriage, and costs of suit. Photographs were produced by witness of her husband and the woman Simonds.

Alexander Harris, at present employed as a cigarette maker, said he knew the defendant in Johannesburg. He saw the woman Simonds go away from Johannesburg with defendant. Witness subsequently went to Bloemfontein, and for some time he was employed by the defendant at his restaurant as a cook. The defendant and Simonds were cohabiting between October and December last year. He spoke to the defendant about his adultery; Max replied that he did not want to live with his wife again. Simonds knew that the defendant was a married man.

Matilda Magolis, of Constitution-street, Cape Town, also gave evidence as to the defendant living with the woman Simonds at Bloemfontein.

Decree of divorce granted as prayed, subject to papers being properly translated and put in.

PIETERSEN V. ESTATE OF { 1904
GABRIELSE. { Apr. 29th.

"Right of way"—Cancellation of sale—"Right of way" is equivalent to "via."

Where G. sold land to P. on the following condition of sale: "Purchaser to have a right of way over the remaining extent,"

Held, that an offer by G. to P. of a passage 3 feet wide did not comply with the above condition.

Semble, that 8 feet was the least width that P. could be compelled to take.

This was an action brought by Philip Pietersen sanitary contractor, of Stellenbosch, against the executors in the estate of one Gabrielse, for cancellation of a certain sale of land at Stellenbosch and £100 damages for breach of contract.

The declaration set forth that in April last year the plaintiff purchased at public auction certain land known as the northern half of lot 87 in the town of Stellenbosch. The auctioneer was Mr. Van Wyk. It was a condition of the sale that the purchaser should be allowed a passage for a draught vehicle. Plaintiff paid £650 for the land, and other expenses, amounting altogether to £679 15s. 6d. The defendants failed to give a right-of-way over the said land. Plaintiff claimed an order cancelling the said sale for the said sum of £679 15s. 6d., and £100 damages for breach of contract, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Defendants, in their plea, denied that it was part of the conditions of sale that the purchaser should have a right-of-way over the remainder of lot 87 to Bird-street sufficiently wide to allow the passage of a vehicle. They said that that part of the declaration was bad and embarrassing, and prayed that it should be struck out. They tendered to pass transfer together with right-of-way over the remainder of lot 87 to Bird-street as shown upon the diagram, and in accordance with the terms of the said conditions. They denied that a breach of contract had been committed, or that plaintiff had sustained any damage.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Rainsforth) for plaintiff. Mr. Upington for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner said the defendants admitted that they had to allow the plaintiff a right-of-way, but they denied that it was to be of such a width as to allow for a draught vehicle to go through.

Mr. Upington said that he would be prepared to argue the exception if the Court thought fit at that stage.

Buchanan, J., said he would first hear the evidence.

Mr. Upington said that his clients had tendered to give transfer in terms of the conditions of sale with a right-of-way over the adjoining property belonging to Fowler without specifying the width. The question of width was one as between the plaintiff and Fowler.

[Buchanan, J.: That is a point for you as the seller. It is a pity that Fowler was not joined as a party to the suit.]

Mr. Gardiner called evidence.

Mr. Haupt, agent, of Stellenbosch, said he had seen the ground in dispute. He had seen Fowler's wall. The distance between the peg on Swartz's estate and Fowler's wall was 3 feet.

The plaintiff, Philip Petersen, said he heard the conditions of sale read out at the auction. There were then no pegs or flags to indicate the boundaries. Both Fowler and witness bought plots. A man named Hunt was at the sale, and he asked the auctioneer how they could approach the property on the north side.

Mr. Upington objected to evidence being led as to statements and warranties given by the auctioneer prior to the conditions of sale. In Durr v. Bam (8 Juta, 22) the Court had ruled that parole warranties given by auctioneers were inadmissible.

Mr. Gardiner quoted Wiid v. Murison 60, T.R. 484) wherein he submitted that the Court accepted a warranty given by an auctioneer.

Buchanan, J., said he would make a note of the objection, and in the meantime the evidence could be led.

Witness (continuing) said that the auctioneer informed Hunt that he would have a right-of-way over the adjoining land. A dispute arose as to the property on the north side, and the auctioneer came to witness and offered him the property for £650, promising him a servitude over Fowler's ground and right-of-way, so that he could get in with his cart and horses. The auctioneer told him that he would be able to build a coachhouse on the ground. Witness went three days later and signed the conditions of sale. When he signed the conditions Van Wyk told him he must pay two guineas for his servitude.

Cross-examined: He considered it very important that he should have a right-of-way to his land with a cart. At least a 6 feet way would be necessary. When witness signed the conditions, Van Wyk read out a 10 feet way as contained in the conditions: It was said publicly at the sale that there would be a right-of-way for vehicles to go through.

The plaintiff's wife and son gave corroborative evidence. The latter said he was confident that the auctioneer said there would be passage way 10 feet wide.

William Hunt, of Stellenbosch, also gave evidence as to the conversation which he had with the auctioneer at the sale relative to the right-of-way.

Evidence for the defence having been led, and Counsel heard in argument, Buchanan, J.: Certain property was sold under the written conditions of sale by public auction. It was sold in two lots, the northern portion being bought by the plaintiff, and in the conditions of sale it was said the buyer of this lot was to have the right of way over the remaining extent. This right of way was not defined. This Court is of opinion that a tender of a three-foot passage is not compliance with the contract. There is nothing in evidence to show that the right of way was limited. The authorities quoted showed that it was usual to give eight feet, and the Court is of opinion that this is the least that should have been allowed. The defendant cannot now give this right of way, and there must therefore be judgment for the plaintiff for the cancellation of sale, and return of the purchase money paid; as the property would be useless for the purpose for which it was bought without means of sufficient access to the back premises.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPELY.]

SIEBERHAGEN V. KELLER { 1904.
AND CHANTLER. { May 2nd.

Messenger of Court—Sheriff—Sale in execution—Damages for wrongful sale.

The defendant C., a messenger of a Magistrate's Court, having the custody of certain sheep, half of which belonged to the plaintiff, sold them in execution of a judgment obtained by defendant K. against the plaintiff's sons. C. did not know that any of the sheep belonged to the plaintiff, but might have ascertained it if he had made reasonable inquiries. The defendant K. took no part in the sale beyond obtaining the warrant of execution in the ordinary course. The plaintiff had no knowledge of the sale until some time after it had taken place.

Held, that K. was not liable for C.'s wrongful act.

Held further, that C. was liable, and that the measure of damages was the value of the plaintiff's sheep at the time when he wrongfully sold them.

This was an action brought by Elizabeth Sieberhagen, a widow, of Klipkraal, in the district of Fraserburg, against the defendants, the second of whom, in execution of a writ in favour of the first defendant, wrongfully and unlawfully, as it was said, sold certain sheep, the property of the plaintiff.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a widow, the first-named defendant a shopkeeper, and the second-named defendant at the time of the occurrence was a messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Fraserburg. About 27th May, 1902, the first named defendant obtained a judgment of the R.M.'s Court against the plaintiff's sons for £42 19s. 10d., and on the 27th and 30th May, writs were issued in respect of the said judgments, and 1,566 of the plaintiff's sheep were wrongfully and unlawfully attached by the second-named defendant. Plaintiff said that of the total number of sheep so disposed of, a proportion to the value of £450 were wrongfully and unlawfully attached and sold in respect of the said writs for £42 19s. 10d. in favour of the first-named defendant. It had been discovered that a portion of the amount claimed in the writs had been satisfied out of stock other than the sheep in question, and the amount claimed would in consequence be reduced to £305.

The plea set out that about June, 1902, the military authorities took possession of certain sheep, about 1,566, some of which were the property of the plaintiff, and some the property of her sons. They were brought into Fraserburg, and handed over to the auctioneer, under the bona fide belief that all the sheep were the property of the sons. A portion of these were sold on behalf of the military authorities. The proportion of sheep sold for the satisfaction of the judgment was 176 of the 1,566. A certain number were the property of the plaintiff, but the remainder were the property of her sons. Defendant tendered £20 in full satisfaction in respect of any sheep found to be the property of the plaintiff.

Mr Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Close) was for defendants.

Elizabeth Sieberhagen stated that at Klipkraal in April, 1902, a column of troops under Major Brock came to the farm. At that time three of her sons were living with her. There would be 3,740 sheep on the farm, and of that number about 400 belonged to her sons. The military took all the sheep to Steinkampspoort. About 740 of the total number were lambs of three months and younger. Her son-in-law brought 630 of the sheep back.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The farm was bequeathed to the sons, and it was her husband's custom to give them sheep from year to year. All the sheep had several marks, and as there were five sons, there would be six different marks. She claimed compensation for all the sheep at the Compensation Enquiry, but subsequently withdrew her claim for 1,566 of the sheep. She knew that the sheep fell off very much in quality when the military had them at Steinkampspoort. The sons had not half the sheep. Most of them were hers, although she never looked at the marks. Guilleon was the son who looked mostly after the sheep. In 1901 there were twenty bales of wool, but she would not say of that lot what her proportion was.

By De Villiers, C.J.: Brook's Column burnt the buildings down, and everything was destroyed, including a memorandum of the stock of sheep.

Guilleon Sieberhagen stated that he was at the farm in April, 1902, when Brock's column came up. Witness went to Steinkampspoort with the military, who removed thereto 3,740 sheep from the farm. Of the lot, he owned about 100, and in all the brothers had about 400. He valued the whole lot at 10s. a head.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Two of his brothers joined the enemy. They got compensation for the burning of the house. As a child he got a certain number of sheep, but did not get them from year to year.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He only got one sheep when he was eight years of age.

Further cross-examined, witness stated he did not get any sheep from his mother. When the sheep were shorn in 1901, the fleeces were separated, but he could not say of the twenty bales how many belonged to his mother. There were 680 lambs in the whole flock.

Hendrik Hanekom, plaintiff's son-in-law, stated that after the sheep were taken to Steinkampspoort he brought some 600 of the sheep back to the farm. The sheep as they ran would be worth 15s. each.

Geo. Henry White, chief constable, and messenger of the R.M.'s Court at Fraserburg, produced the messenger's sale book for the 23rd June, which showed that 1,566 sheep were sold in execution of the writs. The amount realised was £280 7s. 10d. The Civil Commissioner received £150 2s. 11d as the balance of the proceeds of the sale, and on the next day £23 8s. 3d. was paid in as the proceeds of another sale, making a total of £173 odd. Of that amount £54 14s. 1d. was paid out to the last witness on account of the writ, and that would leave a balance of £118 16s. 3d. with the Civil Commissioner. According to the sale book, the sheep were not sold on behalf of the military.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The only reason he had for saying that the sheep were not sold on behalf of the military was that the balance was paid over to the Civil Commissioner.

Paul Vester, contractor, residing at Fraserburg, stated that in June, 1902, he was at the sale of sheep. The price at which they were disposed of was very low. Some of the sheep were sold at 4d. apiece, and that was a scandalous sacrifice. One buyer alone paid £180 for 980 sheep, and, in his opinion, they were given away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The sheep were thin, and the flock included a number of lambs. He did not take any of the sheep that were given away.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. McGregor: Before leading evidence I must except to the form of this action, and ask for absolution from the instance. The plaintiff accuses the defendants with what would be known in English law as "Conversion." There is no question of rehabilitatio, because it is not alleged either that we are in possession of the sheep or have made away with them. Saurie v. Standard Bank (7 Juta, 27).

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do you say is their remedy?]

An action for damages.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Practically speaking, this is an action for damages.]

I submit they do not claim damages, and they do not allege culpa.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They say that you wrongfully and unlawfully took the sheep; surely that is an allegation that they have sustained damages?]

No, the plaintiff must show that she has suffered damnum. She has not done so if there is a profit on the whole of the sheep.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You are now going into the measure of damages, but the question now is, "can they sue at all for damages?"]

Here the wrongful act was disposing of 1,500 sheep. There is no allegation of any loss.

[Hopley, J.: She says 1,500 were taken unlawfully, and that 500 were sold at a loss. This is not really an action for damages, but for conversion.]

Then again, there is nothing to show that these which were sold were Mr. Sieberhagen's sheep.

[De Villiers, C.J.: To whom did these sheep belong?]

We do not know; the military may have had other sheep.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It said that 1,500 sheep were wrongfully and unlawfully taken by the military: what was done with them?]

I cannot say, but I would submit that all four defendants should have been joined; why single out Keller. We tender £20, and there is nothing to show that that is not a sufficient tender for the 50 sheep.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But what about the 500 sheep which you admit were killed or lost?]

Suppose they bring actions against (for instance) Conradie, Dr. Mader, etc., etc., they might go on with actions in infinitum.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We have nothing to do with what may have been done, but only with the case now before the Court. You had better call your evidence.]

Evidence was then called for the defence.

George Chantler, messenger of the R.M.'s Court of Wodehouse, stated that until the end of 1903 he was at Fraserburg. In June, 1902, he conducted a sale of sheep at Fraserburg, as a result of several writs against the brothers Sieberhagen. Towards the end of June, Major Brock sent in the flock of sheep to be sold on and behalf of the military. The proceeds of the sale were to be placed to the credit of the military accounts. Witness notified that the sheep were to be sold on behalf of the military. The Civil Commissioner instructed him that it was his duty to attach a number of the sheep to satisfy the writs against the Sieberhagens. The sheep were in a very bad condition, and if he kept them much longer they would have died of hunger. He did all in his power to bring about a good attendance, as it was to his advantage to get the best price. He sold on behalf of the military, who understood that the writs would have to be satisfied first. Under the circumstances, the prices were very good, as the sheep were scabby; there was nothing but wool over bones. It was 135 lambs that were sold at 4d. each.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: All the sheep were sold on behalf of the military. The Deputy Administrator ordered him to put the entries in the messengers' sale book. The balance of the sale went to the Civil Commissioner, in his capacity as Deputy Administrator. He did not know that the balance of the money was still in the hands of the Civil Commissioner. He did not take an indemnity from any of the plaintiffs when he sold the sheep. It was not true that Mr. Stofberg made an offer to discharge the writs and save the sale of the sheep. The whole lot of the sheep were scabby.

Johan Keller the first defendant in the case, said that he had received payment for the amounts of his writs against the brothers Sieberhagen through his attorney. He could not say the exact number of sheep that the Sieberhagens had. He had bought certain quantities of wool from the brothers at different times.

Fritz Keller, son of the last witness, stated that he was present at the sale of the sheep. There was a good attendance, but the sheep were in a very poor condition, some of them being unable to get up. Witness would not have bought the sheep.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Those that were sold for ninepence and a skilling he would not have bought, as it was difficult to know what to do with them. About half the sheep were scabby.

Stephanus Marais said he could not say whether the brothers Sieberhagen had any sheep, although it was the custom in the district to give every child sheep, the produce of which were kept distinct as theirs. When he was 21 years of age he had 400 sheep through that custom. About three years ago Andries Sieberhagen offered him £200 and 400 sheep for his farm. The sheep were in a rather poor condition at Steenskamps-poor. After the sale he did not examine the sheep, but he thought they would be worth six or eight shillings.

Chas. Marais said he knew the marks on Sieberhagen's sheep, and approximately the number was more than 2,000; he put down half of them to the mother and the other half to the sons. At the shearing in 1901 about half the wool belonged to the sons. He thought Guilleon owned six or seven hundred sheep.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He was not certain of the estimates he gave them of the shearing.

Bissol Harrant, labourer and shepherd, stated that he had been on the farm of the plaintiff. He was there in 1900 when shearing took place. Twenty bales of wool were got, and seven of them belonged to Mrs. Sieberhagen.

George Chantler (recalled by the Chief Justice) stated that he was informed by the military authorities that the Sieberhagens were not at the farm, and as he was outlawed to be shot by the rebels, he did not go to the house to demand payment.

Mr. Burton: The plaintiff has a good claim for damages against both the defendants, and the measure of damages is simply the value of these sheep. Keller has clearly derived advantage from the sale of this property. The Messenger has referred to the case of Olivier v. Keating (Foorde 102).

[De Villiers, C.J.: How can you sue the messenger. He is merely an officer of the law.]

He is also, in a sense, the agent of the law; but the case against the messenger is stronger than against Keller.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the seizure was unlawful why did you not follow up the sheep. You cannot follow up the proceeds of the sale.]

That was done in Olivier v. Keating (Foorde 102). The Messenger of a Magistrate's Court is in the same position at common law as the Sheriff. In this case he failed to exercise ordinary care and diligence. He never attempted to find out the owner of these sheep. For aught he knew Hendricks may have owned one or two of these sheep, worth (let us say) four shillings each, while any one of the other brothers may have owned 200 or 300 each, worth 12s. Then he took no indemnity from the purchasers of the sheep. Again, he sold more than were required to satisfy the exigency of his writ. He sold no less than 1,566 and handed over a balance to the Civil Commissioner. He says that he sold on behalf of the military, but there is no evidence of that, and if he did so, why did he hand over the balance to the Civil Commissioner? Clearly, he is a tort-feazor and, therefore, the onus is upon him to show that he did not sell any of our sheep. Plaintiff and his sons had 3,840 sheep; but if we take only the 1,566 it is certain that some of them belonged to Mrs. Sieberhagen, and probably not more than 150 belonged to the son. It is absurd to suppose that these sheep were worth only 3s. 7d. on an average. They were worth at least from 8s. to 10s.

Mr. McGregor: I shall confine myself chiefly to the evidence. It is admitted by the plaintiff that his only case is against the second defendant. As to Sec. 42 of Act 20, 1856, two of the men had joined the enemy and others had been deported by the military, and their houses had been burnt down by the military. I should like to call the attention of the Court to Sec. 8 of Act 17 of 1886. Any action against the Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff must be commenced within six months after the cause of action accrued and a messenger of the Magistrate's Court stands on the same footing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, no.]

Very well, then, I shall not press that point. It has been said that in this case the onus is on the defendant; but the onus is never on the defendant in an action for damages. The fact that the military stole some of these sheep has nothing to do with us. We are not liable for their torts or their crimes, and I do not appear for them. It is true that we received one sheep from the military and that may very seriously affect the question of damages.

[Hopley, J.: Apparently the military did not sell the sheep: they seem to have been sold under civil execution.]

Yes, but the plaintiff should have claimed compensation from the military. It was only because the sheep had been seized by the military that the messenger could sell them and he then handed over the proceeds to the Civil Commissioner as deputy administrator of martial law.

Another point is that in this case the plaintiff sues for value. If anyone sue for value of a thing he must state what that thing is. Here the defendants were sued jointly for 176 sheep. Only that number of sheep is in suit, and the second plaintiff has accounted for these in his books. Then again, the evidence as to the number of sheep owned by the sons is absolutely incredible. The independent evidence of the herd and of Marais shows that at least half of the sheep belong to the sons. More than half the wool (viz., 13 out of 20 bales) is said to have belonged to them.

As to the tender, 176 sheep were sold on Keller's writs. About 80 of these may have belonged to Mrs. Sieberhagen and for these I submit that 5s. each, or £20 in all, was ample.

Mr. Burton in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff in this case complains that certain sheep belonging to her were attached and sold in execution of a judgment given against four of her sons. She complains that the act was a wrongful and unlawful one on the part of the defendant Chantler, as the messenger of the court of the Resident

Magistrate of Fraserburg, but she also sues Keller, the first defendant, as the execution creditor. There seems to have been more than one judgment against the sons of the plaintiff, and it was in execution of several of these judgments that the sheep were attached. I confess I cannot understand why Keller was made a co-defendant in the action at all, and if he was to be made a co-defendant, why all the other execution creditors were not joined as co-defendants. The evidence does not show an act of tort on the part of Keller as the execution creditor. He merely left the matter in the hands of the officers of the law, and he does not seem to have done anything when the sale took place to persuade the second defendant to sell the sheep belonging to the plaintiff. In my opinion, therefore, Keller ought not to be made a party at all. But the case is somewhat complicated by the fact that Keller has pleaded a tender. He has admitted his liability to the extent of £20, and with his co-defendant, they both tender to pay £20, with costs up to the date of tender. The Court therefore cannot ignore the tender, and as to Keller, there will be absolution from the instance, except as to the £20 which he has tendered, for which amount there must be judgment for the plaintiff against both defendants, with costs to the date of tender. As to the second defendant, it is clear from the evidence that he sold sheep belonging to the plaintiff. She lived on the farm with her sons, and her sons no doubt had a certain number of sheep. The first question to decide is what proportion of the total quantity of the sheep belonged to the plaintiff. For myself, I am certainly inclined to believe that the witnesses for the plaintiff somewhat minimised the number of sheep belonging to the sons. The manner in which the sons dealt with the wool that was shorn from the sheep from time to time shows that the sons must have had larger interest in the sheep than the plaintiff's witnesses would now wish the Court to believe. It seems almost incredible that these sons—one of them being over 40 years of age—should have had the small number of sheep alleged by them, and I am inclined to accept the statement of one witness for the defence that the sons owned about half the total number of sheep. If the same proportion existed in regard to the 1,566 sheep that were sold by the defendant, then there would have been about 783 sheep of those sold by the second defendant belonging to the plaintiff. The next question is what should be considered a fair value of these sheep at the time when this wrongful sale took place? Upon this point also the evidence is very conflicting, but when it is borne in mind that these sheep had been in the hands of the military for about two months, with such custody as was likely to be given to them under the circumstances, I can quite understand that the value of the sheep must have greatly deteriorated by the time the sale took place. I am satisfied also that many of these sheep might have succumbed entirely if not sold at the time. The average amount actually realised in respect of these sheep would represent a fair amount of the damages for the sale of 783 sheep, which would be the proportion belonging to the plaintiff. Three shillings and sevenpence I understand to be the price—the average price—and that would make about £140 for 783 sheep, and for that, at all events, I am clearly of opinion that the second defendant is liable. But, seeing that £20 is awarded against both defendants, there will only be judgment for £120 against the second defendant. A great deal has been made of the fact that the sheep were actually in the possession of the military at the time the sale took place, and it is argued that no real damage was sustained by the plaintiff. This argument would have been convincing if the sheep had already been forfeited by the military, for then the Court would not have inferred, but it is quite clear that there was no such forfeiture. The defendant simply took possession of the sheep on behalf of the military, the military being the custodians of the sheep on behalf of the true owners, and when the sale had to take place the second defendant having possession of the sheep, simply proceeded to sell them without complying with any of the formalities required by law. It is said that the defendants in the suite were away, some of them having joined the rebels. But they were not out of the Colony, as some of them were admittedly at Beaufort West. No attempt was made to find them, to ask them to point out any goods or chattels to satisfy the writs. The second defendant never went to the farm. If he had gone to the farm, or made further inquiries, he would probably have ascertained what sheep belonging to the defendants. He made no inquiries from people at the sale, who might have given him information. The very shepherd who guarded the sheep was in Fraserburg at the time, and if the second defendant had taken any trouble he could easily have ascertained that a large number of the sheep did not belong to the defendants, but that they belonged to Mrs. Sieberhagen. Several of the witnesses were in Fraserburg at the time, who could have given information to the second defendant if he had chosen to take the trouble to make the necessary inquiries. He attached the sheep because he knew that they belonged to the Sieberhagens, and he did not even know the proportion. The debts for which judgment was given against the Sieberhagens were not the same against each of them, and he made no inquiries. He sold the whole lot of the sheep without any further inquiries. Clearly, he acted contrary to the manner in which the Sheriff or Messenger should perform his duties, and for his negligence in the performance of his duties he must pay damages to the plaintiff for the sheep wrongfully and unlawfully sold. As against the second defendant, there will be further judgment for £120, with costs. As to any costs incurred by the first defendant since the date of tender, which would not have been incurred if he had not been made co-defendant, such costs must be paid by the plaintiff.

TENNANT V. ZWAIGENHAFT { 1904.
May 2nd.
„ 3rd.

Building contract—Extras.

This was an action to recover the sum of £424, which plaintiff alleged the defendant owed him for work done and material supplied. In his declaration the plaintiff stated that in May, 1903, he entered into a contract to do certain work for defendant for £300. The work was in connection with certain alterations to a building belonging to the defendant at Rondebosch. Plaintiff alleged that certain further work was agreed upon subsequent to the contract, for which defendant agreed to pay £300, and that defendant also agreed to pay half the sum of £112, being the amount of the cost of rebuilding certain walls, which collapsed. Plaintiff allowed £50 in respect of certain work (the erection of a kitchen) not completed under the later contract. The sum of £182 10s. had been paid by the defendant, and the plaintiff now claimed £424. The defendant admitted having entered into a contract for £300, but denied that he agreed to pay the further sum, and that he agreed to pay half the cost in connection with the walls, which collapsed. He had paid on account £182 10s., and now denied that he was indebted to the plaintiff in any sum further than £117 10s., which amount he tendered. Defendant claimed, in reconvention, that he was entitled to payment of 10s. per day after the lapse of three months from the date of the contract—from the 26th July, 1903, to the 29th February, 1904. He claimed £107 in reconvention.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for plaintiff; Mr. Alexander for defendant.

Wm. Hy. Tennant, the plaintiff said that in April or May defendant came to him, and asked him to do some building and alterations at Rondebosch. They went out to see the place, and defendant showed witness some plans and specifications, on which witness estimated that the work would cost £800. Defendant said he could not spend so much. Subsequently witness tendered for putting on the roof, breaking down a wall, and other work, for £300. A contract was drawn up, signed by both parties. The work could not be started in June, as the weather was too bad. In June, defendant agreed to pay a further £150 for making two bow windows, and for making a kitchen. The latter was to be commenced when the main building was finished, and when payment had been made therefor. Originally there was a penalty of 10s. for every day the work was delayed after three months but witness undertook the further work on condition that this would be cancelled. Witness started work in August. Defendant came to see him, and wanted the floors and walls raised. Witness agreed to do that for a further £150. When the roof was on—it was put on during the wet weather—the inside walls, with which witness had nothing to do excepting to raise them, fell down. Witness had done no work on these walls. Witness proposed to defendant that defendant should furnish the material to rebuild the wall, and that witness should find the labour. Defendant said: "No, you do it, and I will pay half." Witness agreed to this. Witness did not do the kitchen, for which he allowed £50. The rest of the work he did. He had received £182 from defendant. Witness struck work because defendant would not supply him with money for materials.

Cross-examined: Witness did everything possible to protect the walls which fell in. The work was done in a proper manner.

Isaac Sickley, painter, in plaintiff's employ, said he heard defendant tell plaintiff he would agree to the cancellation of the stipulation as to the penalty of 10s. a day, and that plaintiff could do some work in connection with two bow windows for £150.

John Ambrose, bricklayer, in the employ of the plaintiff, deposed to having heard defendant and plaintiff discuss the cost of raising the walls. Plaintiff said he would do the work for £150. There were no foundations under the walls which fell down. Witness heard defendant agree to pay half the cost of erecting the walls. All the work done at the house was worth about £600 or £700.

John Lyon, architect, stated that he estimated the work done at the house at £840, less the kitchen. As regarded the old walls, witness had put his umbrella through one; it was simply old mud.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Louis Zweigenhaft, the defendant, said the plaintiff tendered £300 for the work, as shown on the plan and specification. The bow windows were shown on the plan, but not on the specification, which simply showed work which could not be seen on the plan. Witness never agreed to pay for the walls which had fallen down; plaintiff said that if he had taken the roof down bit by bit, they would not have fallen. Mr. Schroeder, witness's architect, went to the place and pointed out certain particulars in which the work was not in accordance with the plan. Witness never made any agreement with Tennant for extra work. Witness was willing to pay Tennant the balance of the £300 on his getting the architect's certificate that the work was completed, and on his receiving payment for the loss caused by the delay, which, reckoned at 10s. a day, came to £107.

John Stonier, formerly acting Municipal Engineer of the Claremont Municipality, said he had passed the plans produced. The work which had been done did not agree with the plan. A roof should not be taken off and walls left unprotected in wet weather, or the walls should be protected with galvanised iron. Witness saw the walls unprotected. The painting was very badly done, and on the whole, the work was of what might be called a second-class description.

Percy Askenham, Municipal Engineer at Claremont, said the building was not fit for habitation, owing to the kitchen being filled with debris, and to their being no ventilation and no surface drains.

Daniel Jacobus Steele said he did the carpentering for plaintiff at the house in question. He did all the carpentering in the building—windows, doors, and so on—for £45, working on the plans. Witness was told by Tennant that the reason why he could give no more than £45 was because it was a cheap contract. Witness believed Tennant mentioned that the contract was £300 or £350. He said nothing about any extras except the kitchen. If the roof had been covered the walls might have been saved.

Cross-examined: Witness made the contract for £45, but he might have had £60. The material cost a great deal more than the labour. The doors and windows were already made, and had to be fixed.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., referred the matter to Mr. Ohms, a practical builder, to report to the Court upon the value of the extra work done beyond the work specially mentioned in the specifications, taken in conjunction with the letter of the 25th May, the referee specially to state the cost of the erection of the walls and the value of the old material used up in the erection. On his report the Court will give judgment. He was of opinion that £300 must be paid for work specified for and the value of extra work and half the cost of re-erection of the inside walls, which fell in consequence of rains. The claim in reconvention would be dismissed with costs.

Postea (May 13th).

Buchanan, J., said the plaintiff claimed for the balance of a certain amount due under a contract performed by him in connection with a building at Rondebosch, and for certain extras. The defendant had filed a claim in reconvention, but this the Court had already dismissed, and certain questions in respect to the defendant's claim had been referred to Mr. Ohms, a practical builder. The referee had now reported, and on the plaintiff's claim for £300 he awarded £440, while on the claim of £56, in regard to extras, he awarded the sum of £65. Under these circumstances the plaintiff was fully entitled to the amount he had sued for, and judgment would be given for the plaintiff, with costs.

Sale and purchase—Provisional sale — Agency — Scope of agent's authority.

W. had instructed one C. to buy certain property for him at a public auction for £7,000. A portion of the property was put up provisionally and knocked down to C. for £4,500. W. at once repudiated C's agency. W. being sued to complete his purchase and take transfer.

Held, that as C. had not acted within the scope of his authority, and moreover as a provisional sale binds neither purchaser nor vendor, W. was justified in repudiating C. as his agent, and that absolution must be granted from the instance.

This was an action brought by Samuel Cohen, of Woodstock, against Edwin George White, of the firm of White, Ryan and Company, merchants, Cape Town, for a declaration of rights under certain conditions of sale.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he duly authorised Messrs. Behr to offer for sale by public auction, in two lots, certain premises in Essex-street and Albert-road, Woodstock. The first lot was knocked down to one A. J. Cooper for £4,500. He was acting with full authority to purchase the said premises on behalf of the defendant, who afterwards ratified the said purchase. Plaintiff had tendered, and hereby tendered to pass transfer of the said premises to the defendant, and he prayed for the defendant to be forthwith ordered to pay the sum of £1,500, one-third of the purchase price, or produce such securities as were required by the conditions of sale, otherwise the plaintiff to be empowered to exercise certain rights as to re-sale set out in the conditions.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted that he was present at the sale, but he denied Cooper's agency. He admitted that the sale took place on certain conditions, and he believed that the said Cooper did sign the same in his own name, and he (defendant) had no knowledge of the alleged sale. He did not purchase the property.

Mr. M. de Villiers (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for defendant.

Samuel Cohen (the plaintiff) said that the defendant was present at the sale. He was accompanied by his representative, or manager, Mr. Cooper. Mr. White went over the property with witness; witness did not show Mr. Cooper over the property. The auctioneer, Mr. Behr, thoroughly explained what properties were comprised in the first lot. Witness's brother made the first bid, and then Mr. Cooper bid £4,000. Another gentleman bid £4,250, and Mr. Cooper then offered £4,500. The property was knocked down to Mr. Cooper, who, in reply to Mr. Behr, said he was buying for Mr. White. The conditions were signed A. J. Cooper.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta. Witness did not find out that no sureties had been given until afterwards. Mr. Behr was witness's agent; he did not instruct Messrs. Moore, the attorneys, to write to Cooper and call upon him to provide sureties, or pay the purchase price. The advertisement made no reference to two lots. He heard the auctioneer ask Mr. Cooper for whom he was buying before the property was knocked down. He did not know whether White, Ryan and Co. wanted to buy the property in order to cover their bond. He did not hear Mr. White say that Cooper had no authority to buy for him. Ohlssons held the first bond; Mr. Bultitude, their manager, was present at the sale.

Edward John Moore, attorney, said his firm were instructed by Messrs. Behr and Co. to send the letter to Cooper, calling upon him to complete the sale.

Cross-examined: Behr came to witness as Cohen's agent.

By the Court: So far as his firm were concerned, the matter dropped at that stage.

Archibald Bultitude said he attended the sale in question. He had a conversation with the defendant before the sale in regard to the different bonds. The property was put up in two lots. As far as he knew, White and Cooper were together. The first lot was put up provisionally, and it was knocked down to Cooper; then the second lot was put up provisionally and knocked down. Then the lots were put up together. After the first lot had been knocked down, he thought that the defendant woke up to the fact that they had been bidding on only a portion instead of the whole property. He observed a heated argument between White and Cooper. Mr. White afterwards came to witness, and said that his agent had made a mistake, and that he had bought the first lot only instead of the whole property. Mr. White repudiated the sale. When the two lots were put up together the price offered was not higher than it had been for the single properties. Mr. White afterwards asked witness to go and see the plaintiff's brother, and ask him whether he would not be prepared to pay more for the aggregate than the two separate bids. Plaintiff's brother said that if Mr. White had made a mistake he must stand by it. Mr. White, he thought, told him that he had given Cooper instructions to buy the whole property for £7,000.

Cross-examined: Mr. Ohlsson held the first bond of £5,150. Witness was the manager of Ohlsson's Breweries. He thought Mr. Ohlsson's bond was quite safe. He was quite sure Mr. White told him that he had instructed Cooper to buy the whole property for £7,000. Before the signing of the conditions, Mr. White made it clear that he was not liable for the sale.

Re-examined: The plaintiff told witness that he should hold Cooper to his bargain. After the first lot had been knocked down, White said that his man had made a mess of it. He took it that White was there as representing his firm.

Bensean Cohen (plaintiff's brother) said that before the sale Mr. White said he was going to buy the property. He described what took place at the sale, and said that Mr. Bultitude came and asked him if he could make a larger offer for the whole lot than had been made for the separate lots. They all believed that Mr. White was the purchaser. White told him before the sale that they intended to offer £7,000 for the whole property.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He understood that the defendant was buying for White, Ryan and Co. There might be certain judgments of the Court against witness. He did not remember saying that if his brother won this case he would be able to pay one of his creditors, Mr. Behr.

Leopold Cohen, plaintiff's son, Hyman Ginsberg, Cornelius M. van Reenen, and Moses Warman also gave evidence.

Sir H. Juta submitted that there was no evidence of agency or ratification.

After hearing counsel in argument on the facts, the Court gave judgment for absolution from the instance.

Buchanan, J.: This is an action for the specific performance of a contract of purchase and sale of certain landed property, and the plaintiffs say that, though one Behr, their auctioneer, they sold by public auction certain premises to one Cooper, Cooper at the time acting as the agent of the defendant, and being duly authorised by him to purchase, and the defendant being present at the time of the sale, immediately confirmed and ratified the purchase. We have only the evidence of the plaintiff before us, and on that absolution from the instance has been asked. The first question raised by the pleadings is: Was there a sale to Cooper as agent for the defendant? It appears that certain property belonging to the plaintiff had been bonded by him to Ohlssons and White, Ryan and Company, and in consequence, I suppose, of these bonds being called up—there are letters to show that some action was taken in reference to these bonds—the property was put up for auction. One of the witnesses, the plaintiff's own brother, says the defendant White told him several days before the sale that he would buy the property if it went for £7,000. On the day of the sale, Mr. Bultitude, who has given very straight forward evidence, says that White told him he had given Cooper instructions to buy the property for £7,000. There is, therefore, some evidence of agency on the part of Cooper. Now, when we consider the authority of the agent, and to what extent he can bind his principal, one of the fundamental principles of agency is that an agent can only act within the scope of his authority, and the authority proved in this case is to buy property at a sum not exceeding £7,000. At the sale the auctioneer divided the property into two lots. When the first lot was put up Cooper bid, and it was knocked down to him provisionally. Bultitude tells us that the purchaser then seemed to wake up to the fact that he had bought only part of the property and not the whole. White came to the auctioneer and said that Cooper had made a mistake, thinking that he was buying the whole property. Then White repudiated the sale. At this time the property had only been knocked down provisionally. Now, until a final sale it is open to the bidder, at the time until his offer is finally accepted, to withdraw his bid.

The provisional sale did not bind the seller to sell nor the purchaser to buy the property until a sale had been declared, and before any final sale had been declared. White repudiated this bid, and said he had not authorised it. Now, I cannot see how in face of this the Court can hold that there was ratification. On the contrary, instead of there being ratification there was immediately a repudiation before a final sale. After the first lot had been knocked down provisionally the second lot was put up and knocked down. At this time Cooper, the alleged agent, when required to sign the declaration of purchaser and seller, was not allowed to do so by White on his behalf, and here, again, is another emphatic repudiation of the sale. It is said that nobody would have sold to Cooper himself, because before he signed the condition he was not worth five cents, as one witness put it, but it is peculiar that the second lot was knocked down to a person who does not seem worth a straw. Here, then, we have a provisional sale; before the sale is completed there is a withdrawal of the purchaser on the ground of mistake. It may well be argued that there never was even a provisional sale in the first instance because of the mistake, but it is not necessary to decide that in this case. Here is a provisional sale; before that was ratified, the sale and the agency were repudiated, and what was done by the agent did not come within the scope of his authority. There was absolutely no ratification. The case does not end here. After the repudiation by White of any liability the auctioneer persuades Cooper to sign the conditions of the sale. He knew White had repudiated the sale, and the he gets Cooper to sign the conditions, and according to the conditions accepts Cooper as the absolute purchaser. Here is another complete defence: It is impossible to hold in this case that there was a sale by Cohen to White. There was a provisional sale, there was a repudiation of that, there was a mistake in the transaction, there was a refusal by White to accept the authority of Cooper, and the instructions given to Cooper were not carried out in that he bought only a portion of this property for £4,500. It may be quite possible that Cooper, having made a blunder at the sale and having signed these conditions, may personally be held liable, but I think there is a great deal which could be said in his favour if he had refused to sign these conditions. But it is unnecessary to decide what Cooper's position is. Under all these circumstances the application for absolution from the instance will be granted with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

INSOLVENT ESTATE DE BEER } 1904.
V. DE BEER. } May 3rd.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. W. P. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) was for the defendant.

Mr. Searle put in a consent-paper and asked for judgment in terms thereof, whereby the defendant withdrew the preferential claim of £1,500 and the plaintiff admitted the £1,500 as a concurrent claim.

Judgment in terms of the consent-paper.

MYBURGH V. MYBURGH.

This was an action brought by Winifred Laura Myburgh, of Constantia, against her husband for divorce, on the ground of the defendant's adultery with one Theodora Osman, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage and custody of the children. Plaintiff also asked for payment of £30 a month as maintenance.

Mr. Burton was for the plaintiff; Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan said he only appeared in regard to the amount of maintenance to be paid by the defendant.

Evidence was called for plaintiff.

William Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, produced the register of the marriage at Wynberg, in 1894.

Winifred Laura Myburgh, the plaintiff, said she now lived at Constantia. She was married by ante-nuptial contract. She and her husband lived together for about eight or nine years at Hout's Bay, where the defendant had a farm. Defendant was in joint possession of a farm with his brother. There were two children surviving, a boy and a girl—the latter thirteen months of age. She had some information about the defendant in 1902, and in consequence they entered into a deed of separation, the condition being that the defendant should pay her £15 a month. Subsequently, she again had information in regard to his conduct, and on inquiring at the house of a Mrs. Bidulph, at Wynberg, she learnt certain facts which had led to the present action. Witness's health had suffered in consequence of the household work she had to do while living with the defendant. The children had also been in poor health. She had had to pay a good deal to doctors for attending to the children. The children would cost £6 or £7 each if put out to nurse. The defendant had told her that his income from rents this year would be £1,000.

By the Court: Witness had the furniture given her under the deed of separation. Defendant had paid her £15 a month regularly.

Casina Georgina Bidulph deposed that defendant came to her house in September of last year with a woman (not the plaintiff), who represented herself as Mrs. Myburgh. They lived there for some time as husband and wife.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. Buchanan called

George Conrad K. Myburgh, who said that at present things were very bad with him, and the rents were coming in badly. He could not afford to pay more than £7 10s. a month for the children. His property had recently been valued at £5,750, and it was mortgaged for £5,850. Against his income of £1,000 he had many liabilities. He paid £350 in interest on the bonds. The rates amounted to £60, without the water, and money was required every year for the repair of the property. He had lost money by bad debts, and during the last year the tenants had been paying very badly. If his prospects improved he would be prepared to pay more when the children became of an age to go to school.

Cross-examined: The valuation of £5,750 was made last week for the purposes of this case. Witness had fifty-five houses, of which he built ten four months ago. Thirty-two of the houses cost him £50 each to build. Witness's brother held bonds on the property for more than half the whole amount raised on mortgage. Four of the best houses were at present vacant.

Buchanan, J., said that a decree of divorce would be granted, plaintiff to have the custody of the children, with access to the children allowed to the defendant at all reasonable times and places. Considering the whole circumstances of the parties, and the health of the children, it would be only fair to order the defendant to pay the sum of £6 per month for the maintenance of each child until they attained the age of twenty-one years or previous majority. At the same time, the Court would reserve to either of the parties the right at any time to move to reduce or increase the sum.

KAISER BROS. V. ROSEN. { 1904.
May 3rd.
" 4th.

Landlord and tenant — Sub-letting.

This was an action brought by Kaiser Bros., of Cape Town, to recover from M. Rosen the sum of £65, being the rent of certain premises in Sir Lowry-road.

The declaration set out that in March, 1903, the plaintiffs let to one Chrysacros, hired under a written lease, a portion of the premises as a restaurant or private hotel, for the period of five years from the 1st March, 1903, and upon certain terms and stipulations, one of which was "should the lessee wish at any time to transfer this lease or to sub-let these premises, he should be allowed to do so provided he received the consent, in writing, from the lessors. On the 27th July, 1903, it was agreed between the parties that the defendant should take over the lease and the occupation from the 1st August, upon the previous terms and stipulations in so far as they were altered in terms of the defendant's letter of the 27th July, 1903. In December, 1903, an agreement was entered into between the parties whereby the hotel was sublet and occupation was given to one Martin, on the express understanding that the defendant should be liable for the rent.

The plea admitted that it was agreed on the 27th July, 1903, that the defendant should take over the lease subject to the terms of his letter of that date, and that he should take occupation of the premises. In December, 1903, defendant ceded and made over to one Norton his interests under the said lease, and gave written notice to the plaintiffs, and the latter consented thereto. He denied there was any agreement or express understanding, as alleged by the plaintiffs, that the defendant should continue liable for the rent.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. P. Jones) was for the plaintiffs, and Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gutsche) was for the defendant.

Maurice Kaiser, one of the plaintiffs, stated that in March, 1903, he let certain premises in Sir Lowry-road to one Chrysacros, who left, and the lease fell to the ground. Negotiations were opened with the defendant, and on the 27th July the defendant offered to take over the lease with certain amendments in the clauses. The rent was to increase from £65 a month to £81 at the end of the lease, with an option of renewal for three years. On the 24th August, witness agreed to the terms that the defendant specified. The hotel was carried on by Rosen from August, Norton acting as manager. There was certain furniture in the hotel belonging to the defendant. On the 24th December, the defendant wrote relinquishing tenancy of the hotel, having ceded his interests therein to Norton. Norton called on the 7th January and paid the rent for December, due by the defendant. The defendant called next day and asked witness if he would accept Norton in his place, and witness replied, "Certainly not." Rosen called again on Monday, and witness and his brother again refused to agree to Norton as the sub-tenant. Norton had often come to witness to borrow money. The defendant said that he would be responsible for Norton's rent. At the end of January the rent was not paid, Norton referring witness to the defendant. Norton afterwards became insolvent. After negotiations between the attorneys, the parties came to a decision to let the hotel pending the decision of this case. Rosen said that if plaintiffs would take back the shops he would take over the rest of the premises for £45 a month.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The defendant was a dealer in furniture, and had let a lot of furniture to plaintiff's first tenant. According to a letter written in July, the former tenant had been ejected. He was aware that the defendant's object was to protect his furniture when he put Norton there as manager. He did not reply to the letter relinquishing tenancy by the defendant. Rosen did not tell him before he wrote the letter that he could not get on with the business, and that he was assigning everything over to Norton. He did not arrange with Norton to let him have the premises for twelve months at £65 a month. Norton paid the December rent with his own cheque. The defendant could have given witness three months' notice when Norton was refused as tenant. He did not know why the defendant did not give notice of three months and get rid of a place that he alleged was ruining him.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He signed the receipt for the rent, and it was unnecessary to refer it to his brother. After the summons, the defendant said he might have given three months, but now he was saddled with the whole lease. After Norton left in January witness did not interfere with the letting of the premises.

By Buchanan, J.: He could not explain how it crept into his declaration that there was an express agreement that Rosen would be liable for the rent during Norton's tenancy.

Jacob Kaiser corroborated the evidence of the last witness, his brother.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The defendant proposed to leave the agreement as it was, and that he would pay the rent if Norton failed. It was agreed that Norton should be the sub-tenant under the defendant. Previous to the defendant notifying the termination of the lease there never was a word about Norton.

Morris Milberg, a painter, in the employ of Kaiser Bros., said he saw Rosen at the beginning of February. He went for the rent, and took a receipt with him. He asked for the rent, and was told that he (Rosen) would see Mr. Kaiser himself.

Charles Hall said he knew the plaintiff and the defendant in the case, and knew the hotel in question. He had received the order from Mr. Herbert, and the latter had received it from the Kaisers. Some time this year he went to see Rosen at the hotel, which was on the sale-list. On the 15th February, witness brought a Mr. Magor to the hotel. There were certain transactions before that. They wished to sell the premises to Mr. Magor, and the furniture belonging to Mr. Rosen. In the course of an inspection, Rosen said he had a lease for seven years. Witness made a note of what took place. Mr. Magor said he would let them know on the following Wednesday if he would take the place, but the sale eventually fell through. He then went to see Rosen about terms, and he said he would take £350 cash and £1,000 to extend over a period of twenty-four months for the furniture. He only said he had a lease, and would be willing to cancel it if the furniture was taken. He did not refer witness to Kaiser about the lease. Eventually that fell through. Then there was the question of letting it for £100 a month and £75 for the furniture, after which he (Rosen) would be willing to deduct the payments on account of the furniture. He was not told to go to Kaiser. Then one Moss offered to run the place as manager, and Rosen said he was willing that this should be done if security could be found.

Mr. Herbert, partner with Mr. Hall, gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Morris Rosen, the defendant, stated that during last year he entered into an agreement with one Chrysecros who hired furniture of the value of £1,400. Witness then entered into negotiations with Kaiser for the lease of the place, and he asked the latter to have the tenants ejected. Eventually, in July, he came to an agreement with Kaiser, and took over the lease with modifications. He put Norton in charge of the hotel. He then entered into negotiations for Norton to take over the place. As manager the latter received a small salary and commission. Before witness made an agreement with Norton he saw the Kaisers as to whether they objected to Mr. Norton as a tenant. There was no objection, and the arrangement was that Norton was to have the place for £65 for the first twelve months, and afterwards any rent that might be agreed upon. He went to the Kaisers with Norton before the letter produced was written. They then agreed to add some rooms, and witness saw some of the alterations made. Some time in February he received a demand for rent for the month of February. He considered he (defendant) was entirely out of the hotel. He did not hear about the objections to Norton until he received a demand for the rent. An attempt was made to obtain a club licence, but this was refused. He did not say that if Norton did not pay the rent he would.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He let out furniture, and even offered to stand security for the rent, but for one month only. He simply wanted to protect the furniture. He believed that Norton had been in the Civil Service.

but could not say if Norton had any money. Witness knew there was no profit from the business. He had seen Messrs. Kaiser early in December, and the lease was signed about the middle of that month. He arranged with the Kaisers to take over Norton, and leave witness out of it altogether. He had taken Norton to see Mr. Kaiser before, and since the letter of the 24th. It had been agreed then that Norton was to come in. Some alterations had latterly been made to the rooms. Witness made the arrangements with Norton in his office. He seldom went to the hotel. He had not seen the lease before the agreement had been drawn up. He had told Kaiser that in the event of anything going wrong with Norton witness would insert in his agreement with the latter a clause to the effect that the lease would revert to him. Until he got the letter of demand he did not know of any dispute about his handing over the lease to Norton. He had called on Mr. Kaiser and said he had no intention of paying the rent, and said he would endeavour to get a tenant. As far as Mr. Hall was concerned, there was no mention of a lease. They wanted to sell the hotel, and witness wanted to sell his furniture. He did not say he had a lease. He had said the furniture was his, and a lease could be arranged. He had not said Norton had a lease.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: Mr. Norton got the proceeds of the hotel for December. Witness received the proceeds previously. He had no more interest in the proceeds. Towards the end of February he offered to make arrangements pending the dispute.

Henry Fuller, attorney, said that he drew up the agreement between the parties from instructions received about a fortnight before the 11th January.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He did not draw up the agreement between Kaiser Bros. and Norton.

William Norton stated that before November, 1903, he was engaged by the defendant as manager of the Cherm-side Hotel. About the beginning of December negotiations were going on between Rosen and himself with regard to his taking over the responsibility embodied in the lease. After twelve months the plaintiffs had the option of increasing the rent. Witness said in consequence of a letter that the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs on the 24th December the plaintiffs had agreed to make certain alterations with a view to making the place pay, and a plan was drawn up by O'Brien Bros., architects. Previous to the 11th January the plaintiffs sent up to witness for the rent, which he paid with his own money. Witness paid defendant £100 for taking over the furniture on the hire purchase system. When witness presented an agreement for the plaintiffs to sign they said they would wait to see how the hotel was going, and in the meantime Rosen's agreement would do. He was aware of the terms of the defendant's contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Before July, 1903, he was in the Civil Service. He had experience of catering. The house had a bad reputation, and it was difficult to make it pay. He paid Rosen £100 for the furniture. He was unable to pay the rent at the end of January, but he did not refer plaintiffs to the defendant. About the 2nd of February he found that he could not meet his liabilities, and he called a meeting of his creditors.

James Carmichael stated that he was the manager of the defendant's business. He took in Norton as manager of the Cherm-side Hotel. He was aware of the negotiations between Rosen and Norton by which it was agreed that Norton should take over the place. Kaiser Bros. were quite agreeable to this. On the 24th December he wrote giving Kaiser Bros. formal notice of the cession to Norton. He kept the books up to November 30, and Rosen took all the proceeds. After that Norton took all the receipts for December and January.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He knew of the forms of the arrangement between Rosen, Norton, and Kaiser Bros. before December 24. The letter of December 24 simply confirmed a verbal arrangement.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in arguments on the facts,

Buchanan, J., said that between Norton and Rosen an arrangement was entered into in December, 1903, with the object that Norton should take over the place and work it on his own account. Rosen paid the rent up till the end of December, but Norton did not pay the £65 rent due for January. Under the lease and letter of July 27th the power was given to the lessee to sub-let with the consent of the lessors in writing, but in this case no such consent in writing was received. It was alleged that a verbal consent had been given. If the plaintiffs' contention was right that the negotiations in December were concerning the proposal that Norton should be taken as sub-tenant under Rosen, then Rosen still remained the tenant. Where parties contracted that certain things should be done in writing, and they were not so done the Court would require very clear evidence to establish such a contention, and the onus lay on the defendant to prove it. There was a conflict of evidence, and defendant had failed to show that such consent was given by the plaintiffs. The letter of December 24 did not refer to any verbal arrangement arrived at before that date. The plaintiffs' explanation about not replying to the letter because they were waiting on Rosen and Norton was a very reasonable one, as both the parties had promised to call. The defence said there was a complete cession to Norton was not supported by the evidence. He would refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether Rosen had lost his chance of getting rid of the premises by giving three months' notice. That was still an open question. Judgment would be given for the plaintiffs for £65 with costs.

WYNN V. WYNN AND THIRSK.

This was an action brought by James Thomas Wynn against his wife, Annie Wynn, for divorce and for damages against the second defendant. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the plaintiff, and neither defendant was represented.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in community of property at Woodstock in 1900. They lived happily together until December, 1903, when the plaintiff noticed a certain intimacy between his wife and the co-defendant, who was master of the steamship Balgowan. During January, 1904, his wife had admitted misconduct with the co-defendant. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce, forfeiture of the benefits from the marriage in community and custody of the minor child.

Mr. Buchanan called William Thomas Birch, a clerk in the Colonial Office, who produced the marriage register showing the signatures of the parties.

James Thomas Wynn stated that he was married on the 4th October, 1900, at Woodstock. After his marriage he went to Hoetjes Bay, and lived happily with his wife until September, 1903. About the end of December he noticed an intimacy between Captain Thirsk, of the S.S. Balgowan and his wife, and witness cleared him out of the house. The first defendant in a letter admitted her adultery with the second defendant. Witness had a fight with Captain Thirsk, and after that he forgave his wife. Later on his wife came to live at Woodstock with her sister, and subsequently he followed Captain Thirsk to the Central Jetty, where a boat, belonging to the Balgowan, conveyed the two defendants to the steamer. The following morning he saw the two defendants come from the steamer and walk up Adderley street. His wife admitted to her father that she had stayed with the second defendant on the steamer.

Alvin Park gave corroborative evidence as to seeing the defendants going on board the steamer and coming off the next morning.

Mr. Buchanan said that as the second defendant had paid an amount of damages he did not proceed on that claim.

His Lordship granted a decree of divorce, forfeiture of the benefits accruing under marriage of community, the plaintiff to have custody of the minor child, without costs.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

HATTINGH V. DE WET. { 1904.
May 3rd.
" 5th.

Surety and principal debtor —
Undue preference—Costs of defending action for undue preference.

The plaintiff advanced to D. the sum of £40, for which the defendant became surety, and the defendant and D. signed an I.O.U. in favour of the plaintiff. In due course D. paid the amount, but afterwards became insolvent, upon which the trustee of his insolvent estate brought an action for undue preference against the plaintiff. The plaintiff gave notice of the action to the defendant, and informed him that he would be held liable for the costs, but received no answer. The trustee succeeded in his action, but the Court found that there was no collusion with plaintiff, and ordered the trustee to give an indemnity under the 90th section of the Insolvent Ordinance.

Held, in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the £40 and the costs of the previous action from the defendant, as surety, that he was entitled to succeed.

This was a special case for a ruling of the Court as to the interpretation of section 90 of the Insolvent Ordinance. From the statement of the case it appeared that in 1903 the plaintiffs lent to one Scobell a sum of £40, for the repayment of which de-defendant agreed to become surety. Subsequently Scobell paid plaintiffs the amount, but a month afterwards, the trustee of his estate, which had become insolvent, sued the present plaintiffs for the money, on the ground that there had been undue preference, and the Eastern Districts Court declared that the payment had been an undue preference, and ordered the present plaintiffs to repay to the trustee the £40, subject to an indemnity being given by the trustee in accordance with the provisions of section 90 of the Insolvency Ordinance. Plaintiffs now contended that defendant was responsible for the payment of the £40, and of the costs of the previous action, of the defence of which he had been advised. Defendant contended that the plaintiffs should have sued the trustee under the indemnity. The point at issue was the construction of section 90 of the Ordinance.

After hearing Mr. Searle in argument, the Chief Justice stated that the Court would intimate later whether it was necessary to hear counsel for the plaintiffs.

On Wednesday, Mr. Searle, K.C., addressed the Court at some length in support of the defendant's contention.

Postea (May 5th.)

De Villiers, C.J., asked counsel for the defendant whether he proposed to address the Court on the question of costs.

Mr. Searle said that he desired to do so.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would now hear counsel on this point.

Mr. Searle proceeded to urge that anybody who took a payment of this kind from an insolvent must take his own risk. He submitted that there was no principle of law upon which the defendant should be made liable for these costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: The facts of this case are fully stated in the special case submitted to the Court. The plaintiff advanced to Doubell £40, for the payment of which the defendant was to be surety, and the defendant and Doubell signed an I.O.U. in favour of the plaintiff. In due course Doubell paid the plaintiff the debt of £40, but afterwards became insolvent. The trustees of Doubell's insolvent estate challenged the payment as being an undue preference, and the Eastern Districts Court found that it was an undue preference, but refused to declare a forfeiture under the 88th section of the Ordinance. The judgment was, however, given on condition that the trustee gave an indemnity to the then defendant under the 90th section of the Ordinance. Before defending that action the defendant, who is the plaintiff in the present case, gave notice of the action to the surty, the present defendant, and informed him that he would hold him liable for the costs of that action. There appears to have been no answer to this communication. The questions to be determined are whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the £40 from the defendant, and whether he is also entitled to recover the costs paid by him in the previous action.

As to the first question the Court must assume, after the judgment of the Eastern Districts Court, that the payment by Doubell was invalid, but that the present plaintiff was not aware of the invalidity. He received the money from the principal debtor as he was bound to do if he had no reason to suspect that Doubell was contemplating the sequestration of his estate, and when the payment proved to be illegal, he was entitled to treat such payment as having never been made. As to the costs incurred by the plaintiff in defending the action for undue preference, if he had not given notice to the defendant of his intention to defend the action, and hold the defendant liable for the costs, it would have been impossible, consistently with the case of Hurley v. Marais (2 Juta, 155), to hold the defendant liable for the costs. But he gave due notice, and thus afforded an opportunity to the surety of fulfilling the obligation resting on him to pay the debt on failure of the principal debtor to discharge the debt. The surety did not avail himself of the opportunity, and does not even appear to have returned any answer to the communication. What, then, was the creditor to do? If he repaid the money to the trustee he would take upon himself the risk and responsibility of deciding that the payment was an illegal one, with the result that the surety might repudiate his decision altogether. If the creditor allowed judgment to go by default, costs would have been awarded against him, but the surety would, probably have refused to pay them on the ground that the creditor had failed in the duties which he owed to the surety. In principle there appears to me to be no difference between the duty of a creditor to excuse the principal debtor and his duty, after such excuse, to defend the validity of the payment where he has no reason for doubting its legality. The judgment of the Court must be in terms of the plaintiffs' contention with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, F.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEX.]

MOHR V. TWYCROSS.

{ 1904.
{ May 4th.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a minor (through her father as natural guardian) against the defendant, who resides at Westerdor, Rondebosch, for damages for seduction.

The declaration set out that the defendant, on divers occasions in May, June, and July, 1903, was intimate with the plaintiff, and that as a consequence she had given birth to a male child on the 3rd February, 1904. She claimed £150 damages, and £10 expenses of confinement and maintenance of the child at the rate of £1 a month.

The defendant, in his plea, denied all except the formal allegations.

Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; Mr. Burton was for the defendant.

Margaret Mohr deposed that she worked at the defendant's house while his wife was ill in 1902. She worked there for five or six weeks. After she finished working for him, she went into the employment of a dressmaker, at Westerdor Bridge. To go to and from work she had to pass defendant's house. She used to meet defendant at the bridge during the lunch hour. This was from about March, 1903. She met him almost every afternoon, going to the station. On May 25 she met him at his house. He called her into the house, and took her into his bedroom. She did not go willingly. There was no one in the house at the time. Witness described what took place in the room. She was then between 16 and 17 years of age. The same thing occurred on subsequent occasions and a child was born in February of this year.

In cross-examination, the witness denied that in 1903 she ever walked out with any young men; she did not have any young men friends. She never went to dances; had never been to one in her life. She remembered the 25th May because Twycross told her his wife had gone to the Paarl, it being her father's birthday. Witness's mother used to be in Twycross's employ in 1902 as washer-woman, and defendant dismissed her. Her mother was very angry, and used to go to defendant's house and abuse his wife. Her mother was a coloured woman.

Annie Mohr, mother of the last witness, said that in December her daughter made a statement to her, as a result of which she wrote to Twycross, telling him to come to her house, "or she would know what to do." A reply came from defendant's attorneys, stating that if she wanted to communicate with defendant she must do so through them. The letter further stated that "Mr. Twycross does not know what you mean when you refer to him."

Cross-examined: Witness had never threatened to do all she could to ruin Mr. and Mrs. Twycross after they dismissed her. She never threatened to shoot defendant when she saw him in the street. Witness could not explain why her attorney wrote claiming damages for seduction while the girl was in Twycross's service.

Annie Stephens said she lived in the same street as defendant. In June last she saw plaintiff go into Twycross's house.

Mrs. Duploy gave confirmatory evidence.

Robert Twycross said that the girl was in his service for about a fortnight while his wife was ill, being employed as a general help. While the girl was in his employ he always treated her as a servant. After she left his service he never had anything to do with her, excepting that he met her casually on the street. He denied her allegations as to his having taken her into the house. Witness could only remember one occasion on which she came to the house. She came then to see about a fowl, but she did not enter the house; she only passed through the gate. Mrs. Mohr had greatly annoyed witness and his wife, and had threatened to ruin them. On one occasion he complained to the police about her conduct. Witness had seen the girl writing to men, and had remonstrated with her. He became suspicious. This was while she was in his employ. He had seen her walking arm and arm with a young man at Waterford.

Cross-examined: When witness received the letter from Mrs. Mohr telling him to go to her house or she would go to his house, and would know what to do, he did not know what she meant. He gave the letter to his attorneys at once, as he did not want to have anything to do with these people.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why did you go to the attorneys to answer that letter? Did you not think there was something behind it that you considered important?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then why did you consider it important?]

Because there was something in it. There was a kind of threat in it.

Cross-examination continued: Witness's wife was away at her father's farm on May 25. Her father's birthday was on May 26.

Petrus Johannes Hendrik Eyss said that during 1903 he had seen the girl Margaret Mohr walking out with men on several occasions at night.

Isam Nobel, farm labourer, in the employ of the defendant's father-in-law, gave similar evidence.

After hearing Mr. Alexander in argument, the Court gave judgment for absolution from the instance, with costs.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was expected that in a case of this sort the onus of proving the paternity being on the plaintiff, the plaintiff should give a clear, consistent, and perfectly credible account of the circumstances which led up to the seduction and of the seduction itself. His Lordship reviewed the evidence, and, proceeding, said that, seeing that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, that her evidence was not consistent, that upon some points she had not spoken the truth, the Court felt bound to give absolution from the instance. The only circumstance which at first weighed with him (the Chief Justice) against the defendant was the fact that when he received the letter from the girl's mother in December, he, instead of going to see the girl's mother, or instead of replying himself, got his attorneys to write a letter; but when the Court bore in mind what had taken place before between the parties and the terms of the letter, this did not seem so extraordinary as at first sight it appeared. The judgment of the Court would be for absolution from the instance, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1904.
May 5th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of McLaren Gray Maitland, as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Idutywa.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of George Warren de Villiers, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Reginald Barker, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Assistant R.M. at Indwe.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Bazett William Ebenezer Edmeades, as an attorney and notary. The applicant, he said, had now been examined as directed by the Court, and had been certified.

Application granted oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court of the Orange River Colony.

LAWRENCE AND CO. AND OTHERS V.
AH YOUNG.

Mr. Rainsford moved to make absolute a provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate, and to continue the order of attachment of certain property.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for defendant) read an affidavit which set out that the defendant had sold one of the shops that he had at Wynberg to one Sheen Faw. He had paid the proceeds to his creditors, the greater part to the petitioning creditors. He had sold the other shop to one Soy, but the shop had been placed under attachment. He denied having been guilty of collusion with intent to defeat his creditors. He declared the sale of the second shop to Soy was a bona fide one, and he denied having committed an act of insolvency.

Mr. Rainsford put in answering affidavits to show the value of the stock on the date of sale to be £200, and counsel contended that the sale for £50 to Soy was a collusive act to defeat the creditors.

The matter was ordered to stand over for a further affidavit by an impartial appraiser as to the value of the assets sold by Ah Young to Soy, with liberty to both sides to furnish further affidavits.

Postea (May 25).

Affidavits (for the defendant) were read, showing the sale of certain goods by Young to one Hew Sooye, who had taken over the shop, and that the latter had purchased goods from other sources. According to Sooye, there were now in the shops goods to the value of about £95. The sole act of insolvency alleged, was that Young sold one of the shops fraudulently and collusively to Sooye, with a view of delaying and defeating his creditors. Young sold the goods for £50, and it appeared that the goods actually in the place when the messenger went were valued at about £100 or £110. To this £40 was to be added for sales, and Sooye had bought from independent sources goods to the value of about £100. The applicants alleged that the respondent, Young, sold to Sooye for £50 goods of the value of £100, whereas it appeared that there was very little discrepancy indeed. Counsel proceeded to read several affidavits, in order to show that the sale from Young to Sooye was bonâ fide, and that the allegation on which the proceedings in insolvency were founded was not substantiated.

The replying affidavits of the plaintiffs were to the effect that the value of the stock in one shop was £109, and in the other £183 3s., and that the value of the goods actually sold by Young to Sooye was about £89 odd.

Mr. Rainsford said that they had it on affidavit that at the time of the alleged sale by Young to Sooye, the value of the shop was about £200. On this point of the value at the time of the sale, he submitted that defendant's affidavits were hopelessly weak.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not see how the plaintiffs were going to substantiate the allegation of fraudulent collusion.

Mr. Rainsford said that they had some proof that the value of the shop was £200.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes; but one of your witnesses puts it at £100?]

Mr. Rainsford: Yes; but that is evidently the very lowest estimate. The other deponents say £200.

Mr. Buchanan, replying to His Lordship, said that he did not know that the defence would be able to pay the debts. He believed that the amount of indebtedness represented by the petitioners was about £150. Counsel went on to submit that it could not be proved that the defendant had, as alleged, acted fraudulently and collusively with Sooye.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if it had been necessary for the purposes of confirming the provisional order of sequestration, to find that there was fraud or collusion on the part of Sooye, he would certainly not have confirmed the order, because he was not satisfied there had been anything in the nature of fraud or collusion on the part of Sooye. The allegation that the sale by Ah Young to Sooye was made fraudulently seemed to be wholly unnecessary. If it had been alleged that the sale was made with the intent to defeat or delay his creditors that would have been sufficient to establish an act of insolvency. He was clearly of opinion that the sale to Hew Sooye had the effect of delaying or defeating the creditors. He did not think, if the order had been made that the tender of £50 would have been made. On the affidavits he was of opinion that the property was worth a good deal more than £50, but that did not necessarily prove collusion on the part of Hew Sooye, because if he was offered a property at a lower rate, he might accept it without collusion. He was of opinion that the defendant was really insolvent, and it would be to his own benefit, as well as to the benefit of the creditors to confirm the order.

ESTATE VAN DER BYL V. SNYMAN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £60 and £115, also for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £207 6s. 9d., being balance of account for goods sold and delivered, and £133 and £36 for rent due, with costs.

Order granted.

SPIILHAUS AND CO. V. MULLER BROS.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. MINAAR.

Mr. Struben moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on his failure to comply with a judgment of the Court. There had been a return of nulla bona, and personal service had been effected on the 27th April, but counsel had not got the originals.

Ordered to stand over for the originals.

Postea (May 14). Decree granted as prayed.

SPENCE V. BROMLEY.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

PHILPOTT V. HOLZNICHTER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment granted against him in the Supreme Court for £200 damages, with costs. Counsel said that the plaintiff in the original case claimed £1,000 damages against the defendant for abducting his wife. In the pleadings he tendered £50 in full settlement, and made a claim in reconvention for an alleged slander uttered by the plaintiff. In the original case the defendant admitted that he used to get remittances from Germany, and there was also evidence that he had paid fares for two ladies to Johannesburg.

The defendant appeared in person, and stated that he had got no money at all, that he had no billet, and that he had got no remittance for nine months.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is your occupation?]

I have been through the war.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is your present occupation?]

I used to be a farmer at Drakenstein, but at present I have no occupation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the lady staying with you at present?]

I am staying at the same house.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Will you undertake to pay any amount per month?]

I have got no billet. I don't know how to do it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: D you wish to give evidence as to your means?]

Yes.

The defendant then entered the witness-box, and swore that he had no means whatever. He did not support the lady, as she was able to support herself. He had lost £1,800 in speculation on the Stock Exchange, and at present had absolutely nothing. He was living on the generosity of his friends.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He did not know that he was better known in the bars than anybody else. When he offered the £50 in full settlement he had money, but he had since spent that. His remittances from Germany had been stopped, probably on account of his people hearing of this case. He did not take up the position that he would not pay anything.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What shares had you?]

I had 10 Premier Diamonds, and sold them about three months ago, along with some Natal Oceans.

De Villiers, C.J., said there would be no order at present, but the summons would stand, with leave to apply again when there was proof that the defendant had means.

PANTREY V. ZACHARIAS JOHANNES AND CARL JOHANNES DE BEER.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence for £400, less £75, paid on account, with interest from 10th July, 1903.

Mr. Van Zyl appeared for the second defendant, and asked for a postponement until 14th May, in order that his client might have an opportunity of perusing the plaintiff's affidavit.

Order granted against the first defendant, and as against the second defendant ordered to stand over until May 14.

Postea (May 14). Provisional sentence was granted against the second defendant.

ESTATE HALL V. WALLIS.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £250 10s., with interest from December 24, 1903.

Order granted.

TOWNSEND V. IRVINE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £115, with interest from March 12, and costs.

Order granted.

LEWISON V. APPEL.

Mr. Struben moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SCHOLTZE AND CO. V. LUBALIN.

Mr. Russel moved for provisional sentence for £65 18s. 9d., the balance on certain bills of exchange.

The defendant appeared in person, and said that he could pay £20 at the end of the month, but could hold out no definite promise as to the future.

Order granted, execution stayed for fourteen days.

PHILLIPS V. LOUW.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for provisional sentence for £82 18s. 8d., on an unsatisfied judgment of the Witwatersrand Special Court.

Order granted.

S.A. MUTUAL CO. V. LOCHNER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a bond for £5,000, less £975 paid on account, with interest from June 10, 1903, less £3 10s. 7d. interest paid on account, and also for £1,000. The bonds had become due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

NOLAN V. SIBBETT AND STEPHAN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration.

Granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

NONES V. FARMLIA. { 1904.
May 6th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £81 1s. 3d., being the balance of money lent.

Judgment as prayed.

JEFFEREY V. HERBERT.

Mr. Gardiner moved, under 329d, for judgment for £132, being the price of land sold to the plaintiff, less £50 paid on account.

Granted.

WILSON, SON AND CO. V. DICKER.

Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £122 5s. 3d., for goods sold and delivered.

Granted.

GREENSTREET V. FALSE BAY FISHING CO.

Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £187 17s. 3d., for professional services rendered in the preparation of plans, etc.

Granted.

SWINTON V. CORBALLIS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £144 for rent.

Granted.

PIENAAE V. ESTATE SLUITER.

Rule 319—Removal of Bar.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment in terms of three declarations.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the defendant, and moved to purge default, and remove bar.

In support of the defendant's application to remove bar, an affidavit was read made by Mr. Roos, secretary to the Board of Executors, executors of the defendant estate, stating that the plaintiff's declaration was filed on the 5th April. Instructions were sent by defendants to their agents in Colesberg, to collect information, in order to frame a plea. The defendants, however, had been unable to get the information necessary to the framing of their plea in the time allowed, and had asked for an extension of time, in which to file their plea, and for a postponement of the case until next term. To this, however, plaintiff had declined to agree. Deponent stated that in the short time allowed it was impossible to collect the necessary information for the defence.

In an answering affidavit, the plaintiff's attorney stated that the defendants were aware of the claims made against the estate fully twelve months ago, and that the whole matter had been fully gone into and discussed. The defendant had brought an action against the plaintiff for perpetual silence, and had knowledge of his claims. The matter was one of long standing, and the plaintiff had deferred proceedings in the hope that an amicable settlement would be arrived at; but the matter had been long delayed, and it was urgently necessary should be heard this term.

In an answering affidavit, Mr. Roos denied that the defendants knew what the plaintiff's claims were until the service of the declaration, and stated that it had been impossible to collect the necessary information to meet the plaintiff's claims.

After hearing counsel in argument on the facts, the Court ordered that the bar be removed, and the defendant allowed to plead, the question of costs to be reserved.

[Before the Hon. Sir J. BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

DE WAAL V. VAN DER WESTHUYSEN. { 1904.
May 5th.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £255, for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. LIPSCHUTZ.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £35 8s. 8d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

FAURE, VAN EYK AND CO. V. ZIN.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £184 18s. 4d., for professional services rendered and money advanced, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of Robert Moodie. The estate had been sequestrated on the 25th August, 1891, but the trustee's report was not exactly favourable, in that he stated that the insolvent had kept no exact record of his cash receipts, and the books handed to him were only written up about the time of the surrender.

Granted.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the rehabilitation of James Greer, a hotel keeper, of Mowbray. Counsel put in a consent paper signed by the creditors.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte BERGH. { 1904.
May 5th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to have a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte THE UITENHAGE AND PORT ELIZABETH DUTCH REFORMED CHURCHES.

Mr. Gardiner moved to make absolute the rule nisi calling on all persons interested to show cause why a certain piece of land should not be transferred to the applicants.

Order granted.

Ex parte BLIGNAULT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the sale of certain property, which the applicant, as executor, had bought out of the estate of his father.

Order granted.

COHOON V. COHOON.

Mr. Upington moved for leave to sue by edictal citation. The parties were married at Johannesburg in 1894, but in 1901 the defendant left his wife to take up an engagement at Umtali, and since he left she had only received two letters from him. He was last heard of in Pretoria.

Leave granted, return day fixed for July 15, personal service to be effected, failing which one publication in the “Gazette” and one in a Rhodesian and Pretoria newspaper, with leave to serve the notice of trial with the citation.

Ex parte SIMPSON.

Attorney—Admission—Registration of articles.

Where a clerk had duly served articles, these articles, owing to a misunderstanding not having been registered, the Court granted leave for the applicant's examination and ordered the articles to be registered; the registration to date back to the date when the service commenced.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to have the applicant examined as an attorney and notary of the Supreme Court. The applicant had duly served his apprenticeship with Mr. Elliot, of Kokstad, but through a misunderstanding the articles had not been registered.

Leave granted, the petition to be referred to the examiners, the registration on proper cancellation of the stamp to date from March 30, 1901.

Ex parte DYER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property.

Rule nisi granted in terms of the petition, returnable June 9, to be served on the Registrar of Deeds, and one publication to be effected in the “Gazette,” and an East London paper.

Ex parte BOTHA AND ANOTHER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to raise certain money on mortgage in the interest of a minor.

Order granted.

Leave granted.

LOGAN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Close (with him Sir H. Juts, K.C.) moved in this matter to have the award of the arbitrators in connection with the expropriation of land at Touw's River made a Rule of Court. The amount was £11,710, with costs in favour of the applicant. Mr. P. Jones appeared to consent on behalf of the Government.

Order granted.

Ex parte THOMPSON.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain deed of transfer, and also of the letters of administration.

Order granted.

Ex parte INGRAM.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order authorising the sale of certain property. The petitioner was an executor in the estate of John Ingram, and when the matter was last before the Court it was ordered that if the petitioner paid the Divisional Council value the sale would be confirmed. He had now done so.

Order granted.

Ex parte WATSON.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sell certain property. Petitioner's husband had been declared of unsound mind. It was essential to dispose of certain property to keep the remainder of it in pro-witness to the defendant. Norton afterwards became insolvent. After negotiations between the attorneys, the parties came to a decision to let the hotel pending the decision of this case. Rosen said that if plaintiffs would take back the shops he would take over the rest of the premises for £45 a month.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The defendant was a dealer in furniture, and had let a lot of furniture to plaintiff's first tenant. According to a letter written in July, the former tenant had been ejected. He was aware that the defendant's object was to protect his furniture when he put Norton there as manager. He did not reply to the letter relinquishing tenancy by the defendant. Rosen did not tell him before he wrote the letter that he could not get on with the business, and that he was assigning everything over to Norton. He did not arrange with Norton to let him have the premises for twelve months at £65 a month. Norton paid the December rent with his own cheque. The defendant could have given witness three months' notice when Norton was refused as tenant. He did not know why the defendant did not give notice of three months and get rid of a place that he alleged was ruining him.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He signed the receipt for the rent, and it was unnecessary to refer it to his brother. After the summons, the defendant said he might have given three months, but now he was saddled with the whole lease. After Norton left in January witness did not interfere with the letting of the premises.

By Buchanan, J.: He could not explain how it crept into his declaration that there was an express agreement that Rosen would be liable for the rent during Norton's tenancy.

Jacob Kaiser corroborated the evidence of the last witness, his brother.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The defendant proposed to leave the agreement as it was, and that he would pay the rent if Norton failed. It was agreed that Norton should be the sub-tenant under the defendant. Previous to the defendant notifying the termination of the lease there never was a word about Norton.

Morris Milberg, a painter, in the employ of Kaiser Bros., said he saw Rosen at the beginning of February. He went for the rent, and took a receipt with him. He asked for the rent, and was told that he (Rosen) would see Mr. Kaiser himself.

Charles Hall said he knew the plaintiff and the defendant in the case, and knew the hotel in question. He had received the order from Mr. Herbert, and the latter had received it from the Kaisers. Some time this year he went to see Rosen at the hotel, which was on the sale-list. On the 15th February, witness brought a Mr. Magor to the hotel. There were certain transactions before that. They wished to sell the premises to Mr. Magor, and the furniture belonging to Mr. Rosen. In the course of an inspection, Rosen said he had a lease for seven years. Witness made a note of what took place. Mr. Magor said he would let them know on the following Wednesday if he would take the place, but the sale eventually fell through. He then went to see Rosen about terms, and he said he would take £350 cash and £1,000 to extend over a period of twenty-four months for the furniture. He only said he had a lease, and would be willing to cancel it if the furniture was taken. He did not refer witness to Kaiser about the lease. Eventually that fell through. Then there was the question of letting it for £100 a month and £75 for the furniture, after which he (Rosen) would be willing to deduct the payments on account of the furniture. He was not told to go to Kaiser. Then one Moss offered to run the place as manager, and Rosen said he was willing that this should be done if security could be found.

Mr. Herbert, partner with Mr. Hall, gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Morris Rosen, the defendant, stated that during last year he entered into an agreement with one Chrysecros who hired furniture of the value of £1,400. Witness then entered into negotiations with Kaiser for the lease of the place, and he asked the latter to have the tenants ejected. Eventually, in July, he came to an agreement with Kaiser, and took over the lease with modifications. He put Norton in charge of the hotel. He then entered into negotiations for Norton to take over the place. As manager the latter received a small salary and commission. Before witness made an agreement with Norton he saw the Kaisers as to whether they objected to Mr. Norton as a tenant. There was no objection, and the arrangement was that Norton was to have the place for £65 for the first twelve months, and afterwards any rent that might be agreed upon. He went to the Kaisers with Norton before the letter produced was written. They then agreed to add some rooms, and witness saw some of the alterations made. Some time in February he received a demand for rent for the month of February. He considered he (defendant) was entirely out of the hotel. He did not hear about the objections to Norton until he received a demand for the rent. An attempt was made to obtain a club licence, but this was refused. He did not say that if Norton did not pay the rent he would.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He let out furniture, and even offered to stand security for the rent, but for one month only. He simply wanted to protect the furniture. He believed that Norton had been in the Civil Service.

but could not say if Norton had any money. Witness knew there was no profit from the business. He had seen Messrs. Kaiser early in December, and the lease was signed about the middle of that month. He arranged with the Kaisers to take over Norton, and leave witness out of it altogether. He had taken Norton to see Mr. Kaiser before, and since the letter of the 24th. It had been agreed then that Norton was to come in. Some alterations had latterly been made to the rooms. Witness made the arrangements with Norton in his office. He seldom went to the hotel. He had not seen the lease before the agreement had been drawn up. He had told Kaiser that in the event of anything going wrong with Norton witness would insert in his agreement with the latter a clause to the effect that the lease would revert to him. Until he got the letter of demand he did not know of any dispute about his handing over the lease to Norton. He had called on Mr. Kaiser and said he had no intention of paying the rent, and said he would endeavour to get a tenant. As far as Mr. Hall was concerned, there was no mention of a lease. They wanted to sell the hotel, and witness wanted to sell his furniture. He did not say he had a lease. He had said the furniture was his, and a lease could be arranged. He had not said Norton had a lease.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: Mr. Norton got the proceeds of the hotel for December. Witness received the proceeds previously. He had no more interest in the proceeds. Towards the end of February he offered to make arrangements pending the dispute.

Henry Fuller, attorney, said that he drew up the agreement between the parties from instructions received about a fortnight before the 11th January.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He did not draw up the agreement between Kaiser Bros. and Norton.

William Norton stated that before November, 1903, he was engaged by the defendant as manager of the Cherm-side Hotel. About the beginning of December negotiations were going on between Rosen and himself with regard to his taking over the responsibility embodied in the lease. After twelve months the plaintiffs had the option of increasing the rent. Witness said in consequence of a letter that the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs on the 24th December the plaintiffs had agreed to make certain alterations with a view to making the place pay, and a plan was drawn up by O'Brien Bros., architects. Previous to the 11th January the plaintiffs sent up to witness for the rent, which he paid with his own money. Witness paid defendant £100 for taking over the furniture on the hire purchase system. When witness presented an agreement for the plaintiffs to sign they said they would wait to see how the hotel was going, and in the meantime Rosen's agreement would do. He was aware of the terms of the defendant's contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Before July, 1903, he was in the Civil Service. He had experience of catering. The house had a bad reputation, and it was difficult to make it pay. He paid Rosen £100 for the furniture. He was unable to pay the rent at the end of January, but he did not refer plaintiffs to the defendant. About the 2nd of February he found that he could not meet his liabilities, and he called a meeting of his creditors.

James Carmichael stated that he was the manager of the defendant's business. He took in Norton as manager of the Cherm-side Hotel. He was aware of the negotiations between Rosen and Norton by which it was agreed that Norton should take over the place. Kaiser Bros. were quite agreeable to this. On the 24th December he wrote giving Kaiser Bros. formal notice of the cession to Norton. He kept the books up to November 30, and Rosen took all the proceeds. After that Norton took all the receipts for December and January.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He knew of the forms of the arrangement between Rosen, Norton, and Kaiser Bros. before December 24. The letter of December 24 simply confirmed a verbal arrangement.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in arguments on the facts,

Buchanan, J., said that between Norton and Rosen an arrangement was entered into in December, 1903, with the object that Norton should take over the place and work it on his own account. Rosen paid the rent up till the end of December, but Norton did not pay the £65 rent due for January. Under the lease and letter of July 27th the power was given to the lessee to sub-let with the consent of the lessors in writing, but in this case no such consent in writing was received. It was alleged that a verbal consent had been given. If the plaintiffs' contention was right that the negotiations in December were concerning the proposal that Norton should be taken as sub-tenant under Rosen, then Rosen still remained the tenant. Where parties contracted that certain things should be done in writing, and they were not so done the Court would require very clear evidence to establish such a contention, and the onus lay on the defendant to prove it. There was a conflict of evidence, and defendant had failed to show that such consent was given by the plaintiffs. The letter of December 24 did not refer to any verbal arrangement arrived at before that date. The plaintiffs' explanation about not replying to the letter because they were waiting on Rosen and Norton was a very reasonable one, as both the parties had promised to call. The defence that there was a complete cession to Norton was not supported by the evidence. He would refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether Rosen had lost his chance of getting rid of the premises by giving three months' notice. That was still an open question. Judgment would be given for the plaintiffs for £65 with costs.

WYNN V. WYNN AND THIRSK.

This was an action brought by James Thomas Wynn against his wife, Annie Wynn, for divorce and for damages against the second defendant. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the plaintiff, and neither defendant was represented. The declaration set out that the parties were married in community of property at Woodstock in 1900. They lived happily together until December, 1903, when the plaintiff noticed a certain intimacy between his wife and the co-defendant, who was master of the steamship Balgowan. During January, 1904, his wife had admitted misconduct with the co-defendant. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce, forfeiture of the benefits from the marriage in community and custody of the minor child.

Mr. Buchanan called William Thomas Birch, a clerk in the Colonial Office, who produced the marriage register showing the signatures of the parties.

James Thomas Wynn stated that he was married on the 4th October, 1900, at Woodstock. After his marriage he went to Hoetjes Bay, and lived happily with his wife until September, 1903. About the end of December he noticed an intimacy between Captain Thirsk, of the S.S. Balgowan and his wife, and witness cleared him out of the house. The first defendant in a letter admitted her adultery with the second defendant. Witness had a fight with Captain Thirsk, and after that he forgave his wife. Later on his wife came to live at Woodstock with her sister, and subsequently he followed Captain Thirsk to the Central Jetty, where a boat, belonging to the Balgowan, conveyed the two defendants to the steamer. The following morning he saw the two defendants come from the steamer and walk up Adderley-street. His wife admitted to her father that she had stayed with the second defendant on the steamer.

Alvin Park gave corroborative evidence as to seeing the defendants going on board the steamer and coming off the next morning.

Mr. Buchanan said that as the second defendant had paid an amount of damages he did not proceed on that claim.

His Lordship granted a decree of divorce, forfeiture of the benefits accruing under marriage of community, the plaintiff to have custody of the minor child, without costs.

Surety and principal debtor—
Undue preference—Costs of defending action for undue preference.

The plaintiff advanced to D. the sum of £40, for which the defendant became surety, and the defendant and D. signed an I.O.U. in favour of the plaintiff. In due course D. paid the amount, but afterwards became insolvent, upon which the trustee of his insolvent estate brought an action for undue preference against the plaintiff. The plaintiff gave notice of the action to the defendant, and informed him that he would be held liable for the costs, but received no answer. The trustee succeeded in his action, but the Court found that there was no collusion with plaintiff, and ordered the trustee to give an indemnity under the 90th section of the Insolvent Ordinance.

Held, in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the £40 and the costs of the previous action from the defendant, as surety, that he was entitled to succeed.

This was a special case for a ruling of the Court as to the interpretation of section 90 of the Insolvent Ordinance. From the statement of the case it appeared that in 1903 the plaintiffs lent to one Scobell a sum of £40, for the repayment of which defendant agreed to become surety. Subsequently Scobell paid plaintiffs the amount, but a month afterwards, the trustee of his estate, which had become insolvent, sued the present plaintiffs for the money, on the ground that there had been undue preference, and the Eastern Districts Court declared that the payment had been an undue preference, and ordered the present plaintiffs to repay to the trustee the £40, subject to an indemnity being given by the trustee in accordance with the provisions of section 90 of the Insolvency Ordinance. Plaintiffs now contended that defendant was responsible for the payment of the £40, and of the costs of the previous action, of the defence of which he had been advised. Defendant contended that the plaintiffs should have sued the trustee under the indemnity. The point at issue was the construction of section 90 of the Ordinance.

After hearing Mr. Searle in argument, the Chief Justice stated that the Court would intimate later whether it was necessary to hear counsel for the plaintiffs.

On Wednesday, Mr. Searle, K.C., addressed the Court at some length in support of the defendant's contention.

Postea (May 5th.)

De Villiers, C.J., asked counsel for the defendant whether he proposed to address the Court on the question of costs.

Mr. Searle said that he desired to do so.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would now hear counsel on this point.

Mr. Searle proceeded to urge that anybody who took a payment of this kind from an insolvent must take his own risk. He submitted that there was no principle of law upon which the defendant should be made liable for these costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: The facts of this case are fully stated in the special case submitted to the Court. The plaintiff advanced to Doubell £40, for the payment of which the defendant was to be surety, and the defendant and Doubell signed an I.O.U. in favour of the plaintiff. In due course Doubell paid the plaintiff the debt of £40, but afterwards became insolvent. The trustees of Doubell's insolvent estate challenged the payment as being an undue preference, and the Eastern Districts Court found that it was an undue preference, but refused to declare a forfeiture under the 88th section of the Ordinance. The judgment was, however, given on condition that the trustee gave an indemnity to the then defendant under the 90th section of the Ordinance. Before defending that action the defendant, who is the plaintiff in the present case, gave notice of the action to the surety, the present defendant, and informed him that he would hold him liable for the costs of that action. There appears to have been no answer to this communication. The questions to be determined are whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the £40 from the defendant, and whether he is also entitled to recover the costs paid by him in the previous action.

As to the first question the Court must assume, after the judgment of the Eastern Districts Court, that the payment by Doubell was invalid, but that the present plaintiff was not aware of the invalidity. He received the money from the principal debtor as he was bound to do if he had no reason to suspect that Doubell was contemplating the sequestration of his estate, and when the payment proved to be illegal, he was entitled to treat such payment as having never been made. As to the costs incurred by the plaintiff in defending the action for undue preference, if he had not given notice to the defendant of his intention to defend the action, and hold the defendant liable for the costs, it would have been impossible, consistently with the case of Hurley v. Marais (2 Juta, 155), to hold the defendant liable for the costs. But he gave due notice, and thus afforded an opportunity to the surety of fulfilling the obligation resting on him to pay the debt on failure of the principal debtor to discharge the debt. The surety did not avail himself of the opportunity, and does not even appear to have returned any answer to the communication. What, then, was the creditor to do? If he repaid the money to the trustee he would take upon himself the risk and responsibility of deciding that the payment was an illegal one, with the result that the surety might repudiate his decision altogether. If the creditor allowed judgment to go by default, costs would have been awarded against him, but the surety would, probably have refused to pay them on the ground that the creditor had failed in the duties which he owed to the surety. In principal there appears to me to be no difference between the duty of a creditor to excuse the principal debtor and his duty, after such excusation, to defend the validity of the payment where he has no reason for doubting its legality. The judgment of the Court must be in terms of the plaintiffs' contention with costs.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers. Defendant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

sent him in all matters regarding the partnership and the winding-up of the partnership business. Certain accounts still remained to be adjusted. Ransome deputed the work to one Thunder; but deponent found that Ransome and Thunder did not keep appointments, and deponent could not obtain a settlement. Owing to bad health, and upon medical advice, witness was going to England on the 11th May next.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Thunder (accountant) said that he was appointed by respondent to act and he had acted on behalf of the respondent in connection with the winding-up. Mr. Adamson had ever since the dissolution of partnership acted as receiver, and he was in a position to frame a statement of accounts. Deponent denied that he had almost invariably failed to keep appointments. He wished the whole matter to be settled. He did not object to the appointment of a receiver; but he objected to the appointment of Mr. Mouat.

The replying affidavit of the applicant said that the books of the partnership were in the hands of Mr. Mouat, and deponent had rendered a statement to him which Mr. Thunder could obtain. Deponent stated that Mr. Mouat was fully acquainted with the entire partnership and was well fitted to carry out the winding-up.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

His Lordship said that Mr. J. E. P. Close would be appointed liquidator and receiver of the partnership business, costs to be costs in liquidation.

Contract—Installation of electric lift—Unskilful workmanship—Damages.

This was an action for damages for breach of contract for the supply and erection by plaintiff of a direct-coupled electric lift. The plaintiff, William Chas. Thomson, is a general importing merchant carrying on business in Cape Town, and the defendants are also carrying on business in this city.

The declaration set out that on the 25th June and the 1st July, 1902, plaintiff sent in to the defendant a tender and amended tender to erect a certain electric goods lift at the defendant's premises in Cape Town, for £395, and to maintain the same for 12 months from date of erection. Defendants accepted the tender. Thereafter the plaintiff proceeded with the work, and on or about the 17th October, defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff a further sum of £25 in connection with the erection of a switchboard. The goods lift was erected and completed on the 28th October. The defendants had paid £250 on account, and neglected and refused to pay the balance. Owing to the default of the defendants in not obtaining the services of a competent man to manage the lift, the same got out of order. A new motor had to be fixed and other work had to be done in the way of repairs and so on, in consequence of which the plaintiff made a further claim for £155, making £325 in all.

The defendants, in their plea, said that the plaintiff had failed to carry out the terms of his contract in regard to the speed of the lift, its carrying capacity, and the time within which it was to be completed. The lift was constantly getting out of order and had never been delivered to the defendants in accordance with the terms of the contract. They denied that they owed to the plaintiff the sum of £155, and they admitted that they refused to pay the balance of £170 claimed by the plaintiff.

In re-convention the defendants said that the plaintiff wholly failed and neglected to perform his contract, and the defendants refused to accept the work. By reason of the said breach of contract they had sustained damages, and they counter-claimed as follows: £250 on account of the contract; £800 damages by the plaintiff having failed to supply and erect a lift in accordance with the terms of the contract; £216 by the plaintiff having failed to carry out the contract within the period agreed upon.

Plaintiff's Replication stated that there was a delay of about a week owing to the defendants not having the necessary structural work finished. He denied that the lift did not work at the speed agreed upon. He said that the repairs and so on were rendered necessary owing to the default of the defendants. He denied other points alleged by the defendants to have been contained in the agreement, and joined issue.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Pyemont); for plaintiff, Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), for defendants.

William Charles Thomson (the plaintiff) said he was a general importing merchant, carrying on business in Castle-street. He supplied and erected lifts. He was not an engineer, but he employed competent men. He submitted an amended tender to McKenzie's on the 25th June, the amount being £395. He sent a letter to the defendants on the 1st July, in which he agreed to erect the lift before the 4th October, 1902, under a penalty of £3 a week. He also told them he should have to cable to England for the lift. Correspondence took place in regard to several points. There was no delay in the shipping of the lift from England; a portion arrived on the 12th August, and the whole was delivered by September. He would have had the lift completed by the 11th or 12th October if the defendants' overhead girder had been erected. He had actually offered to pay penalty for seven weeks—£21. He did not think any payment was made specifically on account of the switchboard. About this time witness went to Johannesburg, and his business was under the superintendence of Mr. Dawson. Witness returned to town in December, 1902, when he received certain reports about the lift. He remained in town from December. In January, 1903, he had to cable for a fresh armature for the motor through the first one having been burned, probably on account of overloading. There was certain trouble in regard to the underground travel. The tender was made out on the understanding that the lift should not go below the ground floor; then the defendants said they wanted the lift to go down into the basement. There was an accident to the brake coupling. He found in March last year that the lift would not carry the maximum load of 2,000 lbs.; it would carry 1,500 to 1,600 lbs. It was working from October right on until now, except for a few weeks when it required repairs. Finding that the lift would not carry the maximum load, he imported a new resistor and had it erected; this was included in the second account that witness had filed for £155. All the repairs he had made and the extra parts he had had to get out he had included in the second account. Afterwards a new motor was supplied to the lift owing to the negligence of the defendants.

No agreement had been entered into to the effect that the defendants could use the lift with his permission. He took it that the defendants had taken over the lift from the 28th October. This was the first lift he had put up in the town, and he was most anxious that it should be satisfactory. Witness had seen the lift working several times, and he had been told by the foreman and engineer at McKenzie's that it was working all right. There had never been any complaint made to him about the speed; the speed depended on the power of the electric current. The lift was a cheap one.

By Sir H. Juta: There were tenders for the lift other than witness's, and Mr. Sexton asked whether he had not made a mistake, as his tender was so low. Witness told him this was the first lift he had had to put up in Cape Town, and that he wanted to get an advertisement out of it. Witness did not know what horse-power was required to start a lift.

Sir Henry Juta: Do you know that it requires 25 horse-power to work this 10 horse-power lift of yours?

Witness: You are asking me technical questions which I cannot answer.

Bert Whiting, electrical engineer, formerly in the employ of Mr. Thompson, said he was employed to erect this lift with another engineer now in the Transvaal. The Town Council people tried the lift, which worked properly with about the full weight on. The lift worked satisfactorily. A week or so afterwards a fuse went, and witness went there and put it right. This might have been caused by carrying an excessive load or by reversing the lift too abruptly. In December witness went to repair the lift, which had been damaged, apparently by letting the lift down sharply on a pile of boxes of butter. Witness saw some of the butter cases smashed, but they had not suffered so severely as the lift. Witness refused to repair the lift, but was afterwards instructed to do so. It took witness and a labourer two days to repair the damage; the cost of repairing that damage was about £5. The shock put a great strain on the armature, and witness thought it went a long way towards causing the armature to fuse later on. As to the controller, witness thought the damage was caused through overloading the lift; the same applied to the fusing of the armature. A new armature was cabled for, witness fixing up the lift to be worked by hand in the meantime. The armature came in six weeks, and witness put it up. For some time it seemed to be working all right. The old motor was taken down because the armature had broken down, and they could not get it re-wound in town. Witness attributed the different stoppages to overloading and to working it from the bottom without a man inside. Hence the lift might overshoot the mark, and would be reversed suddenly, which would put a great strain on the insulation. Witness had told them in the first instance that they should have a man inside to work it. He had seen the lift reversed in the sudden manner he had described. He had also seen Cape boys working it from the bottom.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Sir Henry Juta called

John Denham, Government Electrical Engineer, who said he had recently examined the lift. To work the lift satisfactorily seven or eight horse-power was required if properly worked and applied. It took 48 amperes to start the lift at present; whereas to start it quickly it should only require 35 amperes. It should only require 15 amperes to work it. The effect of the excessive amperes required was that the electricity consumed was greater, and that the armature coils would be destroyed more quickly. The present motor was 10 h.p. When the 8 h.p. motor was working the same power was required to start the lift. The brake was useless when witness saw it. The lift was in his opinion very dangerous. To make the lift do its work properly a motor of 15 h.p. or more was required. If witness had to work the lift he would give it a minute examination to find out the excessive friction and what caused the gigantic consumption. The defects, he thought, were removable, and if they were removed a 10 h.p. motor would be sufficient. The cause could not be discovered without a lot of trouble. The whole thing would have to be taken down.

Edward George Jones, electrical engineer, deposed that he accompanied Mr. Denham when the lift was inspected by the latter. He confirmed what Mr. Denham said with regard to the imperfections in the machinery. To trace the cause of the excessive friction would be very difficult. The lift would have to be taken down, and elaborate tests made. This would be very expensive. Witness thought the best thing to do with the lift would be to put in an entirely new and adequate winding gear, which would cost between £200 and £400.

George Sexton, director of Messrs. McKenzie and Co., and other witnesses also gave evidence for the defendant. The former stated that the claim made by the defendants was made up of the charges of £3 a week for demurrage. Witness was not aware until recently that the firm had had to pay for extra current consumed owing to imperfections in the machinery; hence nothing was claimed for this. Other witnesses stated that the lift was frequently out of repair, and had to be kept idle for days.

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adr. Full.

Postea (May 17th.)

Hopley, J.: In the month of July, 1902, the plaintiff and defendants entered into a contract, the material portions of which were that the plaintiff should supply and erect an electric direct coupled goods lift of a specified size in the defendants' stores to work from a continuous current at a speed of 75 to 100 feet per minute, and lift a load of 2,000 lb.; cage to be fitted with safety gear and two wire ropes; cut worm gear running in an enclosed oil bath, and coupled to a compound wound motor. The price for the machine and its erection was to be £395, which was to include its maintenance for twelve months, after it was handed over by plaintiff to defendants, and the plaintiff bound himself to hand it over in working order before October 4, 1902, under a penalty of £3 a week for delay. Upon the conclusion of the contract the plaintiff cabled to England for the lift. There seems to have been some delay in fitting the lift when it arrived, not altogether due to the default of the plaintiff, but eventually, on 28th October, or about three weeks after the specified time, the plaintiff notified to the defendants that he was ready to hand over the machine in good working order, and that the electrical engineers of the Town Council should be called in to pass it. This was done, and, according to the evidence of Mr. Sims, one of the engineers of the Corporation, on the third journey of the lift during the test, part of the resistance was burnt, with the result that the current leaked away to a neighbouring stable, where it nearly killed some ponies. He says that the resistance and controller of the machine were then defective, and they could not pass the machine as fit for use. He noticed that the machine required much more than the proper current of electricity, and he thought at the time it was unsatisfactory. The machine was not passed for use on the occasion of that visit, but on the damage being repaired, a further inspection was made by a Mr. Roberts, who had accompanied Mr. Sims on the first test, and upon his report, permission to use the lift was duly given. An attempt has been made by the plaintiff to utilise the permission thus given by the responsible officers of the Corporation as conclusive evidence, not only of the fitness of the lift to work at all, but of its compliance with the terms of the contract, and of the defendants' acceptance of it. It is, however, obvious that the Corporation engineers inspect only for the Corporation, and that they in no way bind the parties to such a contract of their finding. Their duty is, as explained by Mr. Sims, merely to see that such a lift is safe from fire—that the earth connections are so made that an escape of electricity will not give anyone an electric shock, and that the machine does not consume more motive power than the Corporation can afford to supply. It is also perfectly clear from the correspondence between the parties that until the law suit was imminent the plaintiff never attempted to treat the passing of the lift by the Corporation as a formal taking over thereof by the defendants. The lift soon gave trouble, and it must be admitted that the plaintiff, who was anxious to make a good name for himself in this line, did everything he and his advisers could think of to attain a satisfactory and successful result. He is, however, only an importer and merchant, and has no scientific or practical knowledge of electrical machinery, which, nevertheless, it is part of his business to erect and instal. For carrying out that part of the obligations which he undertakes he relies upon practical working men, who have been through workshops, and thereafter seem to be described, and to describe themselves, as electrical engineers. It seems to me that much of the trouble and the considerable expense which have been incurred in this case are due to the plaintiff's confidence in the remedies suggested by men of that class, to whose every suggestion he acceded, instead of calling in the advice and experience of more highly-trained and educated men, who would in all probability have traced the troubles that arose in the working of this lift to their proper source. The troubles were numerous, and the complaints frequent. So early as November 6, 1902, the defendants wrote complaining of the unsatisfactory working of the lift—adding in a postscript that it had just stopped altogether. No doubt Whiting, the practical engineer, then went down, but he admits in his evidence that in that month the controller broke, and the resistance burnt entirely out. Slightly later, owing to the safety stop not working, the cage crashed into a pile of cases of margarine, and the whole lift was thrown out of gear for some days. That was, however, repaired, and then again in January part of the armature fused, once more stopping the working. Attempts were made locally to re-wind the armature, but with no really beneficial result, whereupon a new armature was cabled for from England, and a shaft cone was put in to work the lift by hand-crank, pending the arrival of the new gear. This mode of working lasted some six weeks, but it was not particularly successful, even as a hand-worked machine. And the defendants' patience seems to have been nearly exhausted, for on February, 1903, they wrote threatening to have the entire lift removed if it was not put into proper order by March 1. To this the plaintiff, on February 23, replied, "regretting exceedingly the inconvenience that the delay in having the lift in working order has caused," and promising to have it put right; and on February 24 he wrote saying that he considered the lift then complete, and suggesting that it should be formally taken over by the defendants. This suggestion was, however, not adopted by the defendants, who wrote, on March 4, that they had never yet succeeded in getting the lift to carry the maximum load. To this the plaintiff replied on March 6: "I quite acknowledge that the lift will not take the maximum load, and recognising this, I am getting out a different resistance-arrangement for the controller, which will enable the motor to utilise its full 8-horse-power, which is considered to be ample for raising the load required. I expect this will be here in about a month. Meantime, I hope you will be able to make the lift serve your purpose, by taking such loads as it will carry. You may rely upon it I will not be satisfied with the lift myself till I see it perform its work properly. As I have heavy payments to make, you would exceedingly oblige me by letting me have a cheque for £100, keeping the balance of £70 in hand till the lift is passed and approved by you." This letter contains a clear recognition that the lift was not according to contract, and had not been accepted by defendants, who, however, are asked to make such use of it as they can. And the defendants, in reply, on March 7, state very emphatically that if they do use the lift, they will not be taken to have accepted it, and they refused to pay any money. About this time, or shortly after, the new armature arrived from England, and some improvement took place for a time. So that, about June 8, plaintiff made another attempt to obtain payment of the £170 still owing (the rest of the contract price having been paid on account). The defendants, however, refused to pay, saying that they had a counter-claim for the delay due to plaintiff's failure to perform his contract in proper time. Thereupon the plaintiff wrote a letter making various charges against the defendants of negligence and unskilful working, and threatening that, unless they paid him the £170 due, he would charge against them the various repairs his workmen had in consequence been obliged to make. The defendants thereupon put the matter into their attorneys' hands, who wrote to plaintiff on June 9 a letter in which they state their client's position, and reiterate the claim for damages for delay. They further stated that the lift had raised the maximum load for the first time on May 30. After this letter the plaintiff remained silent for some time, but there seems to have been further unsatisfactory working of the lift, as the plaintiff, on the advice of his practical men, in July purchased locally an expensive 10-horse-power motor, which he attached to the lift, in order that it might do its work properly; and in September, 1903, he again tried to get the £170 due under the contract. This was, however, refused, and counter-claims for delay were again put forward, as well as a denial that the lift was even then performing its work properly. Thereupon the plaintiff boldly took up the position that the lift had been taken over by the defendants on October 30, 1903, and that all that he had since done to it had been rendered necessary by their unskilful use of the machine; and he furnished them with an account, not only for the £170, but also for £155 odd for labour, repairs, and new parts to the machine, all said to have been rendered necessary by the defendants' negligence. These claims were repudiated by the defendants, and the plaintiff issued his summons in November, 1903. In the present action the plaintiff claims both the above amounts, and the defendants deny that the plaintiff has ever carried out his contract, and that they are liable to him in any sum whatever. They counter-claim for £1,266, being the amount of £250 paid to the plaintiff under the contract; £800, the cost they allege of such a lift as the plaintiff agreed to supply; and £216, as damage sustained by reason of the plaintiff, the cost they allege of such a lift, in terms of his contract, on October 4, 1902. Now, it is perfectly clear from the evidence that this lift was never a satisfactory machine. The defendants' witnesses say that they were obliged to be constantly sending for plaintiff's servants to obviate delay and to effect repairs—a statement borne out by the account which plaintiff sent in just before starting his action, and now relied upon by him, in which he charges for no less than 353 hours of work by his various engineers and 201 hours of unskilled labour, all expended on this lift in less than a year. Parts of the machine were broken or rendered useless, and had to be replaced, armatures were burnt out, fuses were constantly blown, stops did not act, and altogether there were so many vicissitudes, accidents, and eccentricities as to render it, for a large part of the first year of its existence, rather a nuisance than an assistance. Whiting, the plaintiff's engineer, who erected it, admitted that it was "unique" among lifts in the multiplicity of the troubles that fell upon it; and the plaintiff admits that he has written strongly to the manufacturers complaining of the defective nature of the machine supplied by them. I may say at once that there is not any evidence whatever of negligent or unskilful working of this machine by the defendants, nor, indeed, was anything of the kind imputed to them by the plaintiff until they were on the verge of the present suit. What, then, was the cause of all the troubles that arose? It is impossible to say that any certain answer can ever now be given, but it is certainly some defect in the machinery, and for my part I believe that if professional men of the standing and ability of Mr. Denham and Mr. Jones had been called in when the troubles first arose the causes would have been discovered, and might have been remedied at comparatively small expense. Of course, it was not incumbent on the defendants to call in competent men. They were entitled under the contract to await its due fulfilment by the plaintiff, who was satisfied with the advice given to him by the various electrical engineers employed by him from time to time. When, for the purposes of this case, Mr. Denham and Mr. Jones were called in, they found that even now the lift is dangerous, that it takes by far too much current owing to the resistance or controller being defective that the brake and safety stops do not work, that it cannot go when carrying 2,000 lb. at a greater speed than 65½ feet when ascending, and 70½ feet when descending. Moreover, it is patched; the motor is too large, and the rheostat too small, all of which causes too much strain to be put upon the machinery, tending to break it down, and to shorten its period of usefulness. Moreover, the motor is not a "compound wound motor" as contracted for, but a "shunt motor." Both Mr. Denham and Mr. Jones attribute the unsatisfactory running of the machinery and the excessive use of motive power, which is both dangerous and extravagantly expensive, to the presence of excessive friction in some parts of the machinery; but they are unable to specify in what part without a thorough examination. They say that an eight-horse power machine should be amply sufficient to raise the maximum load at the stipulated speed if it were properly fitted and installed. It is, on the evidence, quite impossible to say that the plaintiff has fulfilled the terms of his contract, or that he is in a position to claim anything save by way of a quantum meruit, for the machine and work actually supplied by him. Taking the machine as it stands to-day, and as it has been in use for the last eight or nine months, by the defendants, as being on the whole about equally good as the one contracted for, if it were in good order, what would be required to put it into decent working order? Mr. Jones seems to think that the only sensible thing to do is to get new winding gear at a cost of £300 or thereabout, but Mr. Denham thinks the machine could be taken down and examined, and the cause of the friction discovered, for about £30 to £50, and that in all probability it could then be repaired, but no one can say exactly at what cost. In this, as in many other respects, the case is one very difficult to deal with, for the fact remains that the defendants have got the machine and that it has been doing their work, on the whole satisfactory, for about eight or nine months. I am inclined to think the most equitable course is to allow them to keep the machine at cost price, and make a reasonable allowance for them to examine and repair it. The amount to allow must necessarily be arrived at mainly by guesswork, for the matter when discovered may be small or large, but in all probability will be found to be some defective bearing, not difficult to replace or repair. On the whole, I am inclined to allow the defendants the sum of £70, for the purpose of repairing the defects in the machine, some of which are possibly due to their own working since the plaintiff ceased, in October last, to have anything more to do with it. Coming next to the defendant's counter-claim for damages, there is abundant evidence that they have suffered inconvenience and loss in their business, and there is general evidence given as to how it was incurred, but unfortunately the Court is again left to

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte VAN NIEKERK. { 1904.
May 9th.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved, on behalf of the petitioner, the pastor of the Dutch Congregational Church, Roelandstreet, for leave to sell the burial ground belonging to the Church in Somerset-road.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., appeared on behalf of the Town Council.

In his petition applicant stated that it was intended to remove the remains of the dead from Somerset-road to a piece of ground at Maitland, to be purchased out of the proceeds of the sale of the present burial ground, and to erect a monument there to the memory of the dead.

Mr. De Villiers said he would suggest that a more proper time for opposition would be on the return day of a rule nisi.

Sir H. Juta said the position the Town Council took up was that it was not proved to begin with that the present petitioner was the successor in title to the ground. As to opposing after the granting of a rule nisi, he would not object to that course, but he would point out that a rule nisi was not asked for. He would ask that, if a rule nisi were granted, petitioner should be ordered to be in Court on the return day for the purposes of cross-examination.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on the 2nd June, the Court further ordering that the petitioner appear in Court there for the purpose of being cross-examined on his affidavit.

T. B. HARBOUR BOARD V. { 1904.
BUCKNALL S.S. LINES. } May 9th.
" 13th.

Harbour Board — Regulations —
Ultra vires — Negligence —
Tacit agreement.

The master of a ship in the Table Bay Docks, with full knowledge of the Harbour Board regulations, which stated that the Board would not be liable for any neglect of the masters or crews of the Board's tugs, engaged the services of two of its tugs to tow the ship out of the Docks. In the course conjecture and speculation as to the exact amount, no notes having been kept nor notice given at the time to the plaintiff of any particulars of losses now alleged to have been incurred. Nor does the amount laid down in the contract—of £3 a week—materially assist in the assessment of the damages: for a lift of a kind and capable at times of use was supplied and erected shortly after the specified time, and it was not totally rejected, but such use as was possible was from time to time made out of it. And yet the lift behaved in such an uncertain and spasmodic way that the defendants could not, until September last, with safety reduce their staff of labourers from 12 to 4, as they might have done if a proper lift had been supplied, and so they probably lost a difference on wages of about £12 or £14 a week for about 40 weeks. But, as I have said, no particulars have been kept or supplied to the plaintiff, and this source of damage was not even specifically set forth in the pleadings—nor has it been traced how the servants engaged were actually employed and whether all their time was wasted, and whether all their services would have been supplied by the lift. Another claim for damages is made by reason of excessive consumption of electricity, which, it is said, must have been going on since the erection of the lift, and for which defendants have had to pay. This, however, is by no means certain, though it seems probable, and it is possible that the large current may have been necessitated by the state to which the machinery had been reduced shortly before the tests applied by Mr. Denham and Mr. Jones. Nor do I think that damage through loss of one rice storage contract, and through having to employ extra labour to carry out another in October, 1902, has been clearly established as against the plaintiff, who, at that time, was complaining that the defendants had caused delay in erecting of the lift. Yet I am satisfied that between October, 1902, when the lift ought to have been running satisfactorily, and September, 1903, when it began to run more or less satisfactorily, considerable damage must have fallen on the defendants. I feel that in cutting the amount down to £100, I am leaning as far as I possibly can in favour of the plaintiff, and I think that in the circumstances that amount will be fair and equitable to award to the defendants on their counter-claim. The result, therefore, is that of the £170 in their hands, the defendants retain £70 towards repairing the lift, which they are to retain as their property, and they are also entitled to retain the £100 as against the damages which I have awarded to them. The plaintiff must pay the costs of the action.

of the towing, the ship was damaged through the negligence of the master and crew of one of the tugs. The acknowledged usage of the port was that no other tugs than those of the Board were allowed to tow ships out of Dock, and that the masters and crews of the tugs towing had to take their orders as to speed, direction, and so on from the master or pilot of the ship in tow.

Held, on a case stated by arbitrators, that the regulation was not on the face of it so unreasonable that the Court could, without any evidence that the regulation acted unfairly and without any statement to that effect by the arbitrators, declare the regulation to be ultra vires.

Held further, that the condition of the regulation should be deemed to have been tacitly incorporated with the contract by which the services of the tugs were engaged.

This was a special case stated under section 27 of the Arbitration Act of 1888, which provides that a referee or umpire could refer a question of law to the Court. The case is one which the parties submit to arbitration in a claim for damages in connection with the collision of a certain tug, the property of the Harbour Board, with the S.S. Fort Salisbury, which it was engaged in towing out of the harbour. Two tugs were engaged to take the steamer out, and it is alleged that owing to the negligence of the master and crew of one of the tugs, that the ship suffered damage in a collision.

Mr. Schreiner (for plaintiffs): The arbitrators say that the master was aware of the regulations. The master evidently knew what he was doing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This vessel was a steamer. I suppose a steamer can get out?]

Many do, but if they attempt to do so they must make the attempt at their own risk. The Act 36 of 1886 prescribes the manner in which regulations are to be framed. I suppose it will be argued that section 13 of the Harbour Board is ultra vires. No doubt the Court can say that the regulations are unreasonable, but can they be said to be unreasonable in the present case? The docks only occupy a very limited space, and it would not be in the interest of the port to allow anybody and every body to come and work in the docks. They submitted to arbitration under Act 29 of 1888. The servants of the tug were the servants of the master of the ship. See Carrier on Carriage by Sea (sec. 102). My point is that the Harbour Board did not show negligence.

Mr. Upington (for defendants). It is useless to say that these Harbour Board regulations are contracts rather than bye-laws; for there is absolutely no freedom of contract. If a steamer wants to get out of dock she must engage a tug, and no tug can be engaged save a Harbour Board tug. See the judgment of Lindley, L. J., in London Association v. London Dock Company (3 Ch. 1892, 242 and 252). This was not a question of a contract but of a bye-law. But even supposing it was a contract: (1) Was it in the power of the Harbour Board to make it? (2) Was it reasonable? I submit it was not reasonable. See Peck v. N. Staffordshire Railway (10 H.L. 473, and 473 and 32 L.J.Q.B., 241). I therefore submit that the conditions laid down by the Harbour Board are neither just nor reasonable. See Peck v. N. Staffordshire Railway (32 L.J.Q.B., 241) and "The Halley" (L. Rep. 2, P.C. 193), see particularly the judgment of Selwyn, L.J. (at p. 201). Here all competition of people outside the Harbour Board is excluded, and the Harbour Board thus oblige us to use their tugs. This being so, it is surely unreasonable that they should attempt to limit their liability. See Addison on Contracts (p. 960). But I would say that this is not a question of contracts, but of a bye-law.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): If it is contended that this bye-law was invalid, the defendants could have come to Court. If it is good it is valid. See MacLachlan on Merchant Shipping (4th edit., p. 295). Who, then, in this case was the pilot? Obviously the master, who had control of the whole matter. East London is a compulsory pilotage port, and yet the rules of the East London Harbour Board say that the master is to pay the pilot, but is responsible for his torts. I should like, in conclusion, to refer to the case of Glan Line Steamers v. Alrook and Co. (13 S.C.R., 104) Cur. Ade. Vult.

Postea (May 13th.)

De Villiers, C.J.: The question raised by the special case is whether the Table Bay Harbour Board is relieved, under the 13th section of its regulations, from liability for injury caused to a ship through the negligence of the master and crew of a tug belonging to the Board while towing the ship out of the Docks. The regulation is as follows: "The Board will not be responsible or liable for any loss or damage occasioned by accident, collision of tug or tow, defect or imperfection in machinery or ropes, stoppage or slackness of speed, however occasioned. The masters and crews of the tug or tugs towing will be deemed to be the servants of the owners, masters, or pilots of the vessels towed, and will act under their instructions, the Board being in no way liable for any neglect or act of the masters or crews of the tugs when towing." The case states that on the 13th of March, 1903, the master of the steamship Fort Salisbury engaged the services of two tugs, the property of the Board, to tow his ship out of the Table Bay Docks, he being then aware of the terms of the said regulation. The case further states that tugs not belonging to the Board are not permitted to tow ships out of the Docks, and that, owing to the negligence of the master and crew of one of the tugs engaged by the master of the steamship in question, the tug came into collision with the ship while she was being towed out, and caused her some injury. The case further states that the master or pilot of a ship being towed out of the Docks may give orders to the master of the tug as to speed, when to go ahead or astern, when to stop, in what direction to go, and the like; but the master or pilot of the ship is not permitted to interfere with the master and crew of the tug in its management and control. If the question had arisen for decision between two ordinary individuals, the answer would clearly have been in favour of the relief from liability of the owner of the tug. Public notice had been given that the Board would not be liable for any neglect or act of the masters or crews of the tugs when towing, and the master of the ship, with full knowledge of this condition, engaged the services of the tugs. There was no express agreement that the Board should be relieved from liability in case of injury done to the ship through the negligence of those on board the tug, but there was a tacit agreement to that effect arising out of the fact that the master engaged the services of the tugs with full knowledge of the condition on which the other contracting party would allow those services to be rendered. There is no averment in the special case that there was any want of due care on the part of the Board in the selection and appointment of the masters and crews of the tugs. Negligence of that kind would not have been protected by the terms of the regulation in question, but the Court is bound to assume that due care and diligence had been exercised in the appointments. It is said, however, that there are special reasons in the present case why the Board should not be allowed to contract itself out of the ordinary liability for negligence attaching to persons who, for reward, render services similar to those rendered by the Board. One of those special reasons is that the shipowner was obliged to employ the Board's tugs, and would not have been permitted to employ tugs belonging to anyone else. It is not, however, by any means clear that it would have been impossible for the ship to get out of the Docks without the assistance of tugs. She was a steamship, and no reason is stated why she should not, with careful management, have gone out of the Docks without the aid of a tug. There is no regulation prohibiting steamers from going out without the aid of a tug, but even if there had been, it would not have affected the decision of this case. The ship's coming into the Docks was a perfectly voluntary act on the part of the master, and if he came here with a knowledge of the regulations of the port it would be impossible to hold that the subsequent employment of tugs to take the ship out, was such an involuntary act as would relieve him from the consequences of his acceptance of the Board's conditions, whether such acceptance were express or tacit. He made no protest at the time when he engaged the tugs against the terms upon which the services of the tugs were rendered, and it was too late for him, after the injury had been done, to rely upon the involuntary nature of the engagement. Another special ground relied upon for not relieving the Board from liability is that a regulation or bye-law is not an agreement, but a law binding on all persons to whom it applies, whether they agree to be bound by it or not. This statement is, no doubt, perfectly correct, but where an agreement is entered into subject to the terms of any regulation, that regulation may be regarded as an indivisible part of the contract. In the case of London Association v. London Docks (L.R. Ch. Div., 1892, p. 242), to which the Court has been referred, the bye-laws had not been duly made and confirmed as bye-laws, and they were consequently held not to be binding upon the plaintiffs, "save so far as the plaintiffs may have agreed to be bound by the same." A fortiori, therefore, where, as in the present case, any regulation has been duly confirmed in the manner required by the Statute which created the Board, and authorised it to frame regulations, any person contracting with the Board may do so subject to any conditions imposed by the regulations of the Board. The regulation is not an agreement, but where the shipowner, with full knowledge of the regulation, contracts with the Board for the use of its tugs, and by his conduct leads the Board to believe that he accepts the conditions contained in the regulations, such conditions must be held to form part of the contract.

The main ground, however, on which the shipowner in the present case relies is that the regulation in question is so unfair and unreasonable as to be ultra vires, and therefore incapable of being incorporated as part of the contract with the Board. There would have been much force in this contention if the regulation had gone further than it does, by relieving the Board of its duty to supply proper tugs, and to employ competent masters and crews for the navigation and handling of the tugs. That duty, however, is not affected by the terms of the regulation, and, therefore, if the collision had occurred by reason of the Board having supplied improper tugs or appointed unfit masters or crews, the Board would not have been relieved from liability by virtue of the regulations. But the arbitrators have not, in the case stated, expressed it as their opinion that the regulation is unreasonable, and I am not prepared to express that opinion without some evidence in support of it. I can well understand that a regulation of that nature may have been necessary, in view of the admitted custom of the port that the master of the ship being towed may give his orders to the master of the tug as to speed and direction, and as to the other matters mentioned in the special case. It may well be that the regulation was framed because of the extreme difficulty there would be in apportioning the blame between the master of the ship, who gives the orders, and the master of the tug, who executes these orders, but who can prevent any interference with the management and control of the tug. At all events, there is nothing before me to justify the view that the regulation is so unjust as to be incapable of being relied upon on behalf of the Board. The conclusion, therefore, at which I have arrived is that the Harbour Board is relieved from liability for the injury caused to the ship. Question of costs left to the arbitrators.

KAISER BROS. V. CAPE TOWN } 1094.
TOWN COUNCIL. { May 9th.

Interim valuation—Cape Town Municipality—Basis of valuation.

In making an interim valuation of properties under the 93rd section of Act 26 of 1893, the valuer acted upon the basis indicated by the solemn declaration required by the 88th section, and valued properties belonging to the applicant at the price which they would realise if brought to voluntary sale and not according to the amount actually expended on improvements.

Held, that the applicants' objection to this mode of valuation could not be sustained.

The valuer included properties which had not been improved since the previous valuation by the erection of new buildings or otherwise.

Held, that this was a good ground of objection and was maintainable in the Supreme Court, although it had not been specially mentioned as a ground in the objection lodged by the applicant under the 92nd section.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling upon the respondents to show cause why the valuation of certain properties belonging to the applicants should not be reduced for the purpose of Municipal taxation, and why the name of Kaiser Bros. should not be expunged in the valuation record in regard to certain property (4,023), which the applicants stated did not belong to them.

The affidavit of Messrs. Kaiser Bros. set out that the Municipal authorities valued their property in 1904 at a figure considerably beyond their value, and they had also certain property against Kaiser Bros., which did not belong to them.

The answering affidavit of J. R. Finch, Town Clerk, set out that in consequence of the improvements made on applicants' property an interim valuation had been made, and had been reviewed by the valuation Court, and great reductions had been allowed.

The affidavit of Mr. Muller, auctioneer and appraiser, set out that he had valued the property on the price it would bring if sold in the ordinary way.

Mr. Graham, K.C. (for the applicants.) We object to this valuation on the ground (1) that it is not based on the cost of our buildings, but on the price it is suggested that they would realise if sold in the open market. That is manifestly an unfair standard. No doubt our property (in common with other city property) has increased in value, but that is not our fault.

(2.) The interim increased valuation was made upon portions of our property which had not in any way been improved. That is quite contrary to the provisions of sec. 93 of Act 26 of 1893.

(3.) Rates have been imposed upon us in respect of certain property which does not belong to us.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the respondents), argued against the first of these objections, and urged that if the respondents succeeded upon this point they should be allowed costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: The objections to the valuation in the present case are three-fold. The first objection is that the valuation was made not on the basis of the cost of building, but upon the basis of the actual value. I am clearly of opinion that the basis adopted by the valuator is the proper one. The solemn declaration which the valuator has to make under the 88th section of the Act 26, 1893, indicates the basis on which the valuation should be made. He makes a solemn declaration that he will conscientiously value the property for the full and fair price which such property would realise at a voluntary sale under the usual terms and conditions. This declaration applies to the interim valuation as well as to the general valuation. Therefore, it is clear to me that whatever the cost to the owner of the additional building may be the valuator can only look to the improvement of the property. The value of the property may increase to a much greater extent than the actual expenditure by the owner, and it is the actual improvement which will form the basis of the valuation. The first objection, in my opinion, falls to the ground. The second objection is that properties were included in the valuation which had not been improved in terms of the 83rd section. This clearly is a good objection. In fact, it is surprising to me that such a valuation had ever been made, and I cannot understand upon what principle the Town Council acted in sweeping into their net for the purposes of interim valuation properties which had not been improved at all. The third objection is that properties were valued which did not belong to the applicants. Well, it is now admitted one of these properties, at all events, No. 4,023, does not belong to the applicants, and clearly that property ought to be omitted. The real discussion in the present case has been on the question of costs. It is said that a notice should have been given as required of any objection under the 89th section, but, in my opinion, it was clearly the duty of the Town Council not to include in its interim valuation any property which had not been improved. I am not satisfied that the Town Council had done everything to prevent a mistake. The present applicants have succeeded in obtaining a considerable reduction, and, of course, there must be a reduction of from £5,750 to £4,400, and from £17,000 to £7,000. These are substantial reductions, and, seeing it is the original mistake of the Town Council in valuing property in the interim valuation, which ought not to have been valued, I consider that the applicants should not be deprived of their costs in the present case. The costs will follow the result, and the Court will make an order for these reductions, and for the omission of the names of the applicants in connection with the property 4,023.

BRETT AND WIFE V. DIVISIONAL COUNCIL OF VICTORIA WEST. { 1904.
May 9th.

Divisional Council—Excavation in road—Negligence.

This was an action brought by James Brett and Ellen Brett against the Divisional Council of Victoria West, plaintiffs suing to recover £5,000 damages for injuries received through the defendants' negligence. The case was the outcome of a trap accident due, it was alleged, to the defendants' negligence in failing to take proper precautions in guarding certain excavations on a bridge close to Victoria West-road. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) was for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the defendant.

Mr. Upington, in stating the case to the jury, said the action was one in which the plaintiffs claimed £5,000 damages from the Divisional Council of Victoria West. The first plaintiff was an accountant, and had been in the employ of the S.A. Milling Company. On the 10th August last he proceeded with his wife to Victoria West, and on the evening of the 15th August he left with his wife for Victoria West-road, and travelled in a Cape cart along a certain road under the management of the defendant Council. About 7 o'clock in the evening, as he approached a bridge near Victoria West-road, the cart he was travelling in was upset through going into an excavation that had been made by the defendant Council. Mr. Brett and his wife were thrown out of the trap, and sustained severe injuries, the former being so severely hurt that the doctors would tell that jury that his life was still in danger. The first plaintiff had been ordered to England for a complete rest, and the evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Brett had been taken on commission. The defendant Council had tendered £1,000, which Mr. Brett considered was wholly inadequate. Mr. Brett's evidence went to show that he was in receipt of a salary of £500 a year from the S.A. Milling Company. On the night in question, with his wife, he was driving in a Cape cart, and approaching Victoria West-road the cart was driven into an excavation about one foot four inches deep. The cart fell on Mr. Brett, and after about half an hour he was extricated. He was removed to a farmhouse close by, and remained there for five weeks, when he was removed to Cape Town. After treatment in Cape Town he was unable to stay at business for more than an hour a day. At present he was suffering from a complete derangement of the nervous system, spinal and heart trouble, and had to resign his position as accountant. In disposing of his property to go to England he calculated that he had lost £100 on the furniture and £400 on his property. The evidence of the second plaintiff showed that she had received more or less serious injuries, and corroborated the testimony of her husband with regard to the details of the accident.

Mr. Upington then called evidence.

Dr. Edgar Jones, of Victoria West, stated that on the night of the 15th August, he saw Mr. Brett lying in bed in a farmhouse. He was greatly collapsed, and had a fractured rib and bruises. His heart was beating very irregularly, and on the third night after the accident he remained all night with him, as his life was in danger. Witness had seen him every day for five weeks. After the general concussion passed off witness found that there was symptoms of spinal concussion. Mrs. Brett sustained a painful fracture of the left arm. His account of £70 had since been paid. He would not be at all surprised if the plaintiff developed serious heart trouble in Cape Town.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He had never seen Mr. Brett previous to the accident. He could not trace any valvular disease of the heart. There was no specific mention in his report made in January of any heart trouble.

Dr. Charles Kitchen, of Cape Town, stated that on the 16th November last he made a detailed examination of Mr. Brett. He found him suffering from pains in the back and legs, walking with difficulty, and from what he heard he concluded that the spinal concussion was due to an accident of some months previous. His heart too was very irregular, and there was evidence of valvular disease. It might be a long time before he recovered from the injury to the back, but he would probably never get over his heart trouble. In his opinion he would never be able to pursue a regular avocation again. Assuming there had been a latent heart complaint, the accident would precipitate the disease. Mrs. Brett was run down from time to time looking after her husband.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The valvular part of the disease of the heart might not have been caused by the accident. It was quite possible that the plaintiff would be able, after a long rest, to take light work, but he would never be able to take a responsible position.

By the Court: All the symptoms he found in the heart might have existed before the accident.

Dr. Charles Elliott, of Cape Town, stated that in January he saw Mr. Brett. He noticed symptoms of spinal complaint, but the most serious part of his complaint was his heart trouble. A crisis like the accident would bring out any latent disease. In his opinion, Mr. Brett would always be an invalid. On May 3 he was in danger of death. In his opinion, the plaintiff would never be permanently cured.

James Harper, of R. M. Ross and Co., stated that he had known the plaintiffs for about twelve or thirteen years. He had lived near them, and never knew of them being laid up. Mr. Brett, although not robust, was certainly healthy, and was of a genial, jovial, and quiet disposition. Witness saw him before he left for Victoria West, and he looked very well; but on his return there was a decided change for the worse. He had never noticed any signs of laboured breathing when Mr. Brett was out walking.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Since his attack of insomnia eight years ago he had never made any subsequent complaint.

Cecil White Harry, of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries, said that he had known the plaintiffs since October, 1902. He had been a constant visitor at the house, and had noticed Mr. Brett in good health. After the accident he looked a total wreck.

James M. Stephen, joint general managing director of the South African Milling Co., in whose employ the first plaintiff had been engaged as their chief accountant, stated that his regular salary was £500, and sometimes he got bonuses. Mr. Brett he would not call a delicate or a robust man; he was rather inclined to biliousness. When he returned from England about eight years ago he had recovered from his attack of insomnia. When Mr. Brett came to the office after the accident, it was merely to supervise for an hour or so. In his opinion, Mr. Brett would never be able to take up his position again, and his resignation was a matter of extreme regret by the directors.

Eliza Emma Legg deposed that she drove the cart. They approached the bridge carefully, and when about half over, the wheel fell over a ledge. The cart capsized, and witness and the other occupants were thrown out. Mr. Brett was found under the cart, and seemed seriously injured. There was no sign to let witness know that there was any excavation on the bridge.

Mr. Burton called no evidence for the defence.

Counsel having been heard in argument, His Lordship addressed the jury.

After a brief deliberation, the jury found for plaintiffs for £3,000 damages.

Judgment was entered accordingly, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

WIID V. WIID. { 1904.
{ May 10th.

This was an action brought by Hendrick Carl Moller Wiid, against his wife, Johanna Maria Wiid, for decree of divorce, custody of the children, and forfeiture of the benefits of community of marriage.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in community of property, at Rondebosch, in 1895. There were three children of the marriage, aged 7 years, 3 years, and 15 months respectively. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce on the ground of the defendant's adultery at various times during 1901-02-03.

Mr. Close was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Wm. Thomas Birch, of the Colonial Office, produced the marriage register, showing that the parties were married on the 5th March, 1895, at Rondebosch.

Hendrick Wiid, plaintiff, stated that in June, 1902, he was on the railway construction at Piquetberg, and in November, 1902, he returned to Salt River, and found a man named Robert Wells living with his wife as a lodger. Up to that time she was a good wife, but she became very neglectful, and ultimately refused to occupy the same house with him. The children slept in Wells's room, and she made that as an excuse to visit the room. On the 17th January last he saw Wells come out of the defendant's bedroom under suspicious circumstances. Witness on the 26th January, was obliged to force the drawers open in Wells's room to get some papers, and the defendant took Wells's part, and asked the latter to admit his intimacy to witness. Witness then left the house, and subsequently the defendant sent the children to him. Wells remained in the house after witness left. The defendant said that she had sold some of the furniture to Wells. On the 26th March, the defendant admitted her misconduct with Wells and another man.

Frederick Smith stated that, in his opinion, the defendant was a woman of very low moral character, as she evidently thought nothing of admitting her offences to him. When she was living in separation from her husband he had seen

Wells go into her room, and remained there with the defendant for hours.

Decree of divorce granted, plaintiff to have custody of the children, and forfeiture of any benefits arising out of community of property, without any order as to costs.

HEYDENRYCH V. HOCTOR.

Promissory note—Principal and agent—Agent's authority to receive payment.

This was an action brought by Benjamin J. Heydenrych against Michael Hctor to recover £25 on a promissory note given by the defendant to the plaintiff in August, 1902, and due payable a month later.

The defendant in his plea admitted having received the £25, and signed a promissory note in plaintiff's favour for the same, but further stated that the money was paid by his attorneys through James Scott, to the plaintiff. Scott was the duly authorised agent of the plaintiff, and was entitled to receive the money.

Mr. Burton for the plaintiff; the defendant in person.

Michael Hctor, the defendant, stated that he had a witness in Court to prove that he had had transactions with the plaintiff, and paid through Scott. Scott took the cheque for £25, and went to the bank and handed witness £20, taking £5 back to the office. He could not say why his attorneys paid the £25 without getting the promissory note back.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He subsequently told his attorneys to get the note back, and they told him it was right. When he got the letter from the plaintiff, he went again to his attorneys, who told him that everything had been settled.

A witness named Solomon stated that he had paid £40 back to the plaintiff through Mr. Scott.

Benjamin Heydenrych, the plaintiff, stated that Scott applied to him for a loan on behalf of Hctor. He had lent money through the agency of Scott before. He had received repayment through Scott, but that was not with his authority.

Buchanan, J., said that after the note became due, the defendant went to the attorneys and asked them to pay it. Had they been careful to get back the promissory note, there would have been no necessity for this case. It was a very hard case, as the defendant had paid his debt back. The plaintiff was entitled to judgment, but he would suggest to him to show some leniency in regard to interest, and he would also suggest to the defendant that he should put the matter before his attorneys, who did not act with the discretion one would expect.

RIX V. RIX.

This was an action brought by Gertrude Rix against her husband, Peter George Rix, for a decree of judicial separation on the ground of the defendant's cruelty, and ill-treatment.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in Cape Town on the 23rd March, 1892. There was no living issue of the marriage. Nine years ago the defendant adopted a male child of three weeks old. The parties lived happily together until the year 1902, but by reason of the defendant's familiarity with another woman, differences arose, and the defendant had on several occasions violently assaulted her. On the 10th February, 1903, it was agreed they should separate, the defendant paying £3 a month, and maintaining the child. The defendant had not paid any maintenance since September last. Plaintiff claimed a decree of judicial separation, division of the joint estate, termination of the community of marriage, and maintenance for herself and the boy.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeared in person.

Wm. Thomas Birch produced the marriage register of Wm. Thomas Rix and Gertrude Crawley on March 23, 1892.

Gertrude Rix, plaintiff, stated that in 1900 she found it necessary to remonstrate with the defendant on account of his familiarity with another woman. The defendant had held her down in September, 1902, while the other woman gave her a thrashing. Subsequently, they had several quarrels on account of this woman, and on a few occasions she had to visit a doctor. In February of last year they agreed to live apart, the defendant agreeing to contribute £3 a month, and something to the support of the adopted boy; but at present he was some six months behind with his payments. The defendant had put an advertisement in the "Cape Times" that he would not be responsible for any debts contracted by witness, although that was altogether unnecessary. She would be satisfied now with £6 or £7 a month. The defendant made about £20 a month.

Cross-examined by the defendant, witness said it was not since she received letters in her maiden name in Johannesburg that the quarrelling started. It was not against the defendant's wish that the child was adopted. Witness refused to say what her mother was doing before the child was adopted. It was quite true that she grabbed a chair and a chopper when the woman Sarah Moses appeared on the scene.

Another witness, named Leo. Waterloo, was called to testify to the ill-treatment of the plaintiff by the defendant.

Buchanan, J., said that the parties had agreed, as far back as 1902, that £3 would be a fair amount of maintenance for the plaintiff. There had been sufficient evidence to justify a decree of judicial separation, and that decree would be granted. The plaintiff asked for custody of the child, which was not a child of the marriage; but the Court could not make any order as to the maintenance of the child. As the parties agreed to £3 before the dispute came into Court, he thought that was a reasonable amount of maintenance. There would be a decree of judicial separation, with costs, defendant to pay plaintiff £3, the first payment to be paid at once, and subsequent payments to be made on the 10th of each succeeding month, with leave to either party to move to vary this order at any time.

JOSEPH V. NATHAN.

This was an action brought by Morris Joseph against David Nathan, for the recovery of £57 17s. 7d., being the balance of salary due to the plaintiff.

The declaration set out that about April, 1903, the defendant hired the services of the plaintiff as a shop assistant, at a monthly salary of £10 a month. Plaintiff duly served the defendant up to the 15th February, 1904, when the plaintiff was wrongfully and unlawfully dismissed by the defendant. His salary had been paid in small instalments, and allowing £12 2s. 5d. for goods and money received on account, there was a balance of £57 17s. 7d. due to the plaintiff. The plea admitted the formal allegations, but the defendant denied that he was duly served. After the date of the contract, and before the plaintiff's dismissal, he had dishonestly converted defendant's money to his own use. He denied any liability, but tendered £15 in full settlement.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton appeared for the defendant.

Morris Joseph said that he was employed as a shop assistant by the defendant. He joined the defendant for the second time in 1903 on a salary of £10 a month. He was allowed to take what he liked out of the shop, and to debit himself for the same. He did not get his salary regularly. No complaint was made about the stock when he transferred from Waterkant-street to Caledon-street. He had made continual complaints about his salary not being made up, but the plaintiff kept putting him off, as things were bad. An account was sent in for his salary on February 8, and the defendant entered all goods sold. Subsequently the defendant asked witness to make out an account, which on the 16th February amounted to £38 1s. 1d. The defendant said there was £104 short in the stock, and if witness did not take £15, he would get nothing. The defendant told witness to leave the shop, but before he left he offered him £15. On one occasion he lent a young man 3s. 6d. out of the cash drawer, which was returned the same day.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was not short of money when he joined the defendant. It was untrue that he was paid regularly. Witness did not remember selling a suit which was unaccounted for in the cash register. The following day the defendant merely mentioned about the £104 short in the stock, when his services were dispensed with.

David Sharp stated he was with the defendant as manager in Waterkant-street. Witness had an arrangement with the defendant to take goods for himself at cost price. He got his November and December salary in February. He remembered on the 16th February the defendant offering the plaintiff £15, but he heard no charge of dishonesty.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Nathan had told him that Joseph had not entered an article amounting to 3s. 6d. He understood from the defendant that if he wanted a couple of shillings he could take it from the drawer, but he seldom got the chance, as defendant cleared the drawer when there was a couple of pounds in it.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

David Nathan said that the plaintiff was paid his salary regularly every month. He was dismissed in February because, after giving him one chance, he found 11s. short on February 13. Witness then found £100 short in the stock. On the Monday he asked a man named Singleton to go into the shop, and witness gave him £2 10s. to purchase a suit value 38s., and a hat worth 5s. 6d. Witness then went back to the shop, and plaintiff, in reply to a question, said that nothing had gone out, and that everything was quiet.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: His books showed he had received £1,500 less than he paid out, but he met the difference from a private account. Witness admitted that he had mistakes in his cash entries, but he could not see how they affected the case.

By the Court: He always paid the salesmen their salary regularly.

Thomas Robert Singleton, formerly a brewery employee, at Woodstock, said he bought at the defendant's shop, from the plaintiff, three shirts, a singlet, and a hat. This was at the request of the defendant. On a subsequent occasion he received £2 10s. from the defendant at the corner of Harrington-street. He went by way of Primrose-street to the defendant's shop, and bought from the plaintiff a suit for 38s., and a hat for 8s. 6d. He was served by the plaintiff. He took charge of the goods (produced), and gave the defendant the change. Plaintiff came forward and examined the tickets on the suit of clothes. He said that the cost price marked on the ticket was £1 2s. 6d. The suit would be sold at anything from 30s. to 35s. or 38s.

Cross-examined: He went to the shop in the evening after his work was done. He did not know at first that he was being used as a "trap."

Henry Wolfe, hairdresser, Caledon-street, said he was with the defendant when the latter gave money to the last witness. He saw Singleton go away, and return with a parcel, and give the defendant some change. He saw defendant afterwards go to the shop and open the cash sales book and the till.

Cross-examined: The plaintiff was not in the shop when the defendant made his investigation of the sales book and till.

Samuel Cohen, an employee of the defendant, spoke to there being 11s. short in the cash in the clothing department on one occasion. Defendant called the plaintiff, and dismissed him, offering first £10 and then £15. The plaintiff refused the money.

Cross-examined: Witness appealed to the defendant not to have the plaintiff arrested.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. Alexander asked for the cheque alleged to have been made out by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff.

Mr. Burton produced a cheque in favour of Friedlander and Du Toit.

Mr. Alexander said that this was not the correct cheque at all.

Mr. Alexander having been heard in argument, on the facts, without calling upon Mr. Burton

Buchanan, J., said that the plaintiff entered the service of the defendant on the 16th April, 1903, and was dismissed on the 15th February, 1904. The plaintiff brought this action to recover two sums of money as his wages from the 10th September to the date of dismissal, and £10 damages in lieu of notice. When he looked at the accounts he must say that there was a distinct conflict between the plaintiff and defendant on the matter of payments. The only documents produced for the plaintiff and the defendant respectively were the books which had been put into court. Both books were most unsatisfactory, but the more satisfactory of the two were certainly the defendant's books. On the question of credibility, he accepted the defendant's statement that he paid the defendant's wages up to the 10th January last. The defendant dismissed the plaintiff about the middle of February, he alleged, because he was justified by the dishonesty of the plaintiff in converting money to his own use. Plaintiff himself admitted that he had taken 3s. 6d. out of the till to lend to a friend, and that he had not put the money back until he was accused of selling a shirt for 3s. 6d., and not having entered the sale in the books. Subsequently, in February the defendant sent a man to the shop to buy certain goods, and on that he returned to the shop, and it was clear from the books that these goods were never entered in the books. He thought the books corroborated the defendant's statement, and that he had good and just grounds for dismissing the plaintiff. The defendant had tendered £10 to the plaintiff in respect of the arrears of wages for one month, and also £5 for the portion of another month, during which the plaintiff had been employed, which more than covered the wages that the plaintiff was entitled to. The defendant was still willing, and he tendered £15 wages, and judgment would be given for the plaintiff for that amount, but the plaintiff must pay the costs of the action.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

Ex parte AURET.

1904.
May 11th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved as a matter of urgency, for an interdict restraining one Geo. Stanley Smith from withdrawing or dealing with a sum of £560 now deposited in the Standard Bank, Muizenberg, also to restrain the manager of the said bank from paying out such money. The petition was to the effect that in November, 1903, the petitioner, W. F. Auret, opened a boarding-house at Muizenberg, and installed one, Mr. G. S. Smith there as manager. The said G. S. Smith was a stepson of petitioner's wife, and the object of placing him in the boarding-house was to afford him a fair start in life. The arrangement was that Smith was to share equally in the profits. Smith had, however, disappeared since Friday, May 6. He had left without making proper provision for the carrying on of the boarding-house. The petitioner had now taken charge of the house, and there was nothing to warrant the conclusion that Smith had done anything wrong during the time he was managing. Several bills had since come in, but could not be paid, as, although there was £560 in the Standard Bank, Muizenberg, it was in the name of Smith. The petitioner was wishful to pay the liabilities off, but was unable to do so without an order from the Court. The cheque-book appeared to have been taken away by Smith, and if he was allowed to draw cheques, petitioner would suffer. Therefore petitioner prayed for an interdict restraining Smith from drawing, and the manager of the bank from paying any moneys, and for an order authorising petitioner to pay all debts up to the end of April last.

The Court granted a rule nisi, calling upon Smith to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, rule to be returnable on June 2, and in the meantime to operate as an interdict restraining respondent from drawing, and the bank from paying the said money, rule to be served personally if possible, failing which one publication in the "Government Gazette" and "Wynberg Times."

LIQUIDATOR OF "YE MECCA" 1904.
CAFE V. WEBNER. May 11th.

Company—Winding up as insolvent—Liability of shareholders, past and present—Act 25 of 1892, Sec. 97.

One T. had entered into a contract on behalf of a certain joint stock company with the defendant for the purchase of defendant's business, for which it was agreed that defendant should receive £100 in cash and 100 fully paid-up shares in the company. This payment was referred to in the duly registered Articles of Association of the Company, but the contract for the issue of these shares to the defendant was neither reduced to writing nor registered. Thereafter the defendant disposed of 50 of his shares. Subsequently the Company became insolvent, and the trustee now sought to hold the defendant liable for the full value of the 100 shares originally issued to him.

Held, that as there was no evidence that the then holders of the 50 shares he had disposed of were not solvent, he could not be held liable as a past shareholder in respect of those shares.

Held further, that as he had neither paid the full value in cash for the 50 shares still held by him, nor had these registered in the manner provided by Sec. 97 of Act 25 of 1892, he was liable as a contributory in respect of these.

This was an action brought by the liquidator of the Mecca Cafe, against Isidore F. Webner, to recover £100, the value of 100 shares in Ye Mecca Cafe Co. (Ltd.). It was alleged in the plaintiff's declaration that when Ye Mecca Cafe Co. was formed, an agreement was entered into between one Tuck, on behalf of the company, and the defendant, whereby the latter was to receive 100 £1 shares in the company in consideration of his transferring to the company his interest in the lease of the rooms in the Savings Bank Chambers, St. George's-street, Cape Town. Defendant, in accordance with this agreement, received the scrip for the said shares in April, 1903. For these no payment in cash or otherwise had been made to the company. Fifty of these shares had been transferred to one Tuck, who subsequently became insolvent. There had been no registration of the contract between "Ye Mecca" Co. and defendant. There was a large deficiency in the company in liquidation, and plaintiff claimed: (a) That it be declared that the 100 shares must be deemed to have been issued subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof (£100); (b) that the defendant be placed on the list of contributories in respect of the fifty shares transferred to Tuck, plaintiff tendering to defendant to cede to him all his rights against Tuck's insolvent estate.

In his plea the defendant said that the contract in respect of which the shares were issued was specially referred to in the memorandum of association of the company, which memorandum was duly registered in the office of the Registrar of Deeds, and was a sufficient compliance with the terms of section 97 of Act 25 of 1892. As a further plea the defendant said that he accepted the shares as fully paid up shares on the faith of the share certificates issued by the directors of the company, and contended that the plaintiff was estopped in law by the terms of the certificates from claiming that the shares had not been fully paid up. Defendant further stated that the shares transferred to Tuck were afterwards transferred by the latter to other persons.

In his replication, the plaintiff admitted that in the Memorandum of Association it was stated that one of the objects of the company was to purchase and take over the lessee's interest in the lease, in terms of the contract entered into between defendant and Tuck, but contended that the nature of the consideration was not stated in the memorandum, and that the reference as aforesaid was not sufficient in law to satisfy the requirements of the 97th section of the Act. Plaintiff denied that the fact that the share certificates issued stated that the shares were fully paid up was any answer to this claim.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), for plaintiff; Mr. Burton for defendant.

Mr. Searle called

Donald Tuck, who said he entered into the agreement with Webner in 1903. Witness was managing director of the company. It was agreed that witness was to divide with Webner the shares and money that Webner might obtain for his interest. Witness received £50 and 50 of the shares allotted to Webner. He (witness) was instrumental in getting out the articles of association. The contract was not registered. In May, 1903, witness made over 25 shares to Hart and Neave, who took the shares on the understanding that they were full value. Witness, in one case, paid the greater part of the amount himself.

(Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness believed the shares were given to Hart, while Neave paid £18 15s., witness paying the balance in order to try to get in more shares. The defendant got no cash. Witness received his £50; defendant did not get his £50, because there were not sufficient funds. Witness and his clerk omitted to register the contract. Webner was to have received £100 and 100 shares in consideration of his transferring the lease of the buildings.

Mr. Burton said he could not dispute defendant's liability as to the 50 shares he still held, but as regarded the other 50, these had been transferred to persons who must be presumed to be solvent, and who could therefore be proceeded against.

Counsel were then heard in argument.

Buchanan, J.: This matter raises a question of considerable importance, and if there was any doubt in my mind as to what the judgment of the Court should be. I would take time to consider it; but it seems to me the Act is clear on the subject. The facts are that in February, 1903, one Tuck and the defendant entered into a contract for the purchase of a certain business belonging to the defendant, with the object of floating the business into a joint stock company. The terms of this contract between the two, as far as they are relevant to this case, were that the seller, the defendant, was to receive £100 in cash and 100 fully-paid-up shares in the company about to be floated. This fact was advertised in the prospectus, and was not concealed in any way, and there is no question of want of bona fides in the transaction on anybody's part. The articles of association of the company stated that the object of the company was to purchase and take over the business of the defendant, in terms of a contract entered into between the defendant and Tuck on behalf of the company. The articles of association were duly registered. The defendant received his 100 shares, but had parted with 50 of them to Tuck, and he is still the registered owner of 50. The company having been placed in liquidation, and there being a considerable deficiency, the liquidator wishes to place the defendant on the list of contributories for the amount of the 100 shares which were issued to him without payment thereon of the face value, in consequence of the non-compliance with the 97th section of the Company's Act. The section says that every share in every company shall be deemed and taken to be issued and to be held, subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash, unless the same has been otherwise determined by contract in writing and filed with the Registrar at or before the issue of such shares. The words "unless the same" have been interpreted by the English Courts on a similar section in the English Act to mean, unless the terms of payment otherwise have been determined by a contract made in writing. Now these shares, it is admitted, were not issued on account of payment in cash, but were held under a contract which determined the terms of payment otherwise, viz., that they were issued as the consideration for the goodwill or purchase price of the business. By this section, therefore, not only ought the articles of association to have been registered, but also the contract between the defendant and the company, under which these shares were issued, without being paid for in cash. The contract was not registered, and, consequently, after hearing the authorities, I have no doubt that the defendant is liable to be placed on the list of contributories for the amount unpaid on the shares held by him. But 50 of the shares which were issued to the defendant were subsequently transferred and are not now held by him. They were first transferred by him to Tuck, who was fully acquainted with the contract, and Tuck says they were given away by him as, he says, a bait to induce other persons to take shares in the company. Now the principle of liquidation is this: when persons are called upon to contribute, the liquidator takes the list of the shareholders on the register, and applies to them in the first instance. Section 96 of this Act makes past shareholders liable in certain eventualities. A past shareholder is not to be made a contributor under a liquidation unless it appears that the existing members are unable to satisfy the liabilities. Now there is nothing to show that the existing shareholders are unable to do so, that they are not liable upon these shares. It may well be, had the evidence been more complete, that the Court could have dealt with this question now, but the evidence is not complete. We have nothing beyond Mr. Tuck's statement. We do not know the terms upon which these shares are now held; whether they were received as representing fully-paid-up shares, or whether any value was paid for them by the present holders. Therefore, I think judgment can only be given for the plaintiff on the 50 shares in the defendant's name, and absolution from the instance must be given as to the 50 shares transferred away, and not now held by the defendant. The judgment of the Court will be for £50, with costs.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

COHEN V. CARN.

{ 1904.
" May 11th.
" 16th.

Witness—Privilege—Defamation.

A witness is civilly liable for any defamatory statements he may volunteer in the course of his evidence in any judicial proceeding respecting the character of any person not before the Court if such statements are made falsely, maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause.

Diepnaar v. Haumann (Buch. 1878, 135) followed.

This was an action in which Mr. and Mrs. Cohen, at present of Johannesburg, sued Israel Carn, a well-known member of Tattersall's, for £5,000 damages, by reason of certain defamatory statements made by the defendant in respect of Mrs. Cohen.

The declaration set out that about October and November, 1903, an action was pending in the Witwatersrand High Court, Transvaal, between Miriam Cohen, plaintiffs' daughter, and one David Langleben, of Johannesburg, in which she claimed damages for breach of promise of marriage. The said High Court granted a commission to take evidence on oath at Cape Town, and at that commission the defendant stated irrelevantly that Miriam Cohen's mother associated with men, including one Samuel Pross, who had been convicted of crime, and had served sentences on the Breakwater, and by such a statement he contrived to injure the plaintiff in her good name, fame, and character. Further in answer to the question: "Where did you see Miss Cohen (meaning the then plaintiff, Miriam Cohen, aforesaid) speaking to Samuel Pross?" he answered that Mr. Pross had committed adultery with plaintiff's mother (meaning the aforesaid plaintiff, Clara Cohen, the mother of the then plaintiff, Miriam Cohen). Subsequently, on the 10th November, 1903, in Plein-street, and in the presence of witnesses, the defendant, in answer to a question, said that what he had said before the Commission was true scores of times, and that he would prove it any time they liked. Plaintiff claimed $5,000 damages.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted the words referred to in evidence on oath, but stated that he had probable cause for believing them at the time to be true, and in making use of the words he was not actuated by any malice. He denied that he had repeated the defamatory statement on November 10th in Plein-street.

Counsel then read voluminous evidence taken on commission in connection with the first action for breach of promise.

[Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for the plaintiffs). Mr. Graham, K.C. (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for defendants.]

Clara Cohen, the plaintiff, denied having had any intimacy with the man Pross. She left Bloemfontein because she was afraid of enteric fever. Her husband was not deported from Bloemfontein. She never allowed gambling in her house. Since the defamation reached Johannesburg, her friends refused to speak to her.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: There was no gambling going on in her house. She had not seen Pross since his conviction, and never once had she seen him. The allegations against her daughter were absolutely untrue.

Morris Cohen, plaintiff's husband, stated that he had been in this Colony since 1899. He was promoted to Johannesburg in the same employ as he occupied in Cape Town. At the sitting of the Commission he heard the evidence of Mr. Carn, whose allusion to his late father was so insulting that he had to appeal to the Commissioner. That was before he gave his evidence. Carn said that he was not so clever as witness's father as to get up a case in White-chapel Court in five minutes. He said that any time that witness wanted to have a divorce that he (Carn) would be a witness. The statement simply dazed him. About a week after he had given evidence, the defendant said that witness's wife had committed adultery scores of times and that he would prove it. At that time an apology had been published in Cape Town and Johannesburg papers, and £250 damages paid. His wife was in Johannesburg at the time he met the defendant, and the news travelled to Johannesburg within a few days.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham: The other witnesses did not apologise. The whole time he had been here he was in the same employ. When he was in Bloemfontein he was in a different employ. He knew a man named Stracey, and he denied that he had kept a gambling house. Solo whist was the only game he understood, and it was absolutely untrue that he kept a "bank." The defendant positively spoke to him in Plein-street, and he was certain that Carn offered to give him a card, although he did not know that the defendant ever had a card. He had never got into trouble in England, nor was he ever a private detective. Mr. Stracey knew him in England, and he never had a man in his employ named Humberstone. It was untrue that he was convicted with Humberstone in England in October, 1897, for theft of goods from Salmon and Gluckstein. The record which counsel read did not refer to him. The same case had been put to him at the Rand High Court. He had a brother-in-law in Johannesburg with two names, but he was not certain whether his name was Prince or Vincent. He would be surprised to know that Prince or Vincent brought the record which counsel read to South Africa. Mr. Vincent knew him in 1897, and would be in a position to say whether he was the party convicted in England.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: The conviction against Morris Cohen did not refer to him.

David Nimino, attorney, of Johannesburg, stated that at the commission the defendant's demeanour was very extraordinary. Before the evidence commenced Carn shouted out to Cohen, "I'm not like your father, I can't get up evidence in five minutes," and Mr. Close had to remind him that he was in a court of law. The defendant made use of the irrelevant answer imputed to him at the commission. The news of the slander had arrived in Johannesburg within a few days.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham: He did not know whether the husband had telegraphed the slander to his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Cohen sat right through the case, and listened to the disgusting evidence. When the settlement was arrived at he was not in communication with the defendant's attorneys. There had been a lot of mud slung, which had broken down under the cross-examination of witnesses. There had been an abundance of evidence about Mr. and Mrs. Cohen's character before the defamatory statement was made.

Peter Hulse, of Johannesburg, stated that in 1901 he was lodging with the plaintiff in Plein-street, Cape Town. He had seen Pross there three or four times before Mr. Cohen went to England. When Cohen left for England, Pross ceased to visit the house. During the time that witness was there it was not a gambling hell; with the exception of a game of solo whist or nap there was no other game. It was a deliberate falsehood that anyone could come into the house. He remembered meeting the defendant on election day in Cape Town, when he said that what he said at the Commission was quite true, and he added "scores of time during the period Cohen was in England." Mr. Cohen looked very agitated after Carn reiterated his defamation.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham: He had heard about the commission, although he did not come down as a witness. It was untrue that the Magistrate reprimanded him when he was in the box giving evidence for Cohen in an assault case. His limit at whist was sixpence; he was not a gambler. He was not one of a party that walked deliberately over to Carn to hear what was going on. He did not know Cohen before he came to South Africa.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He would travel twice as far as from Johannesburg to Cape Town to tell the circumstances of the case. The defamation was the topic of conversation among his co-religionists.

Dr. D. B. Hewitt stated that he had Mrs. Cohen under his care for about five weeks, when she was suffering from mental worry.

Bert Davis, in the same firm as Cohen, corroborated the other witnesses as to what transpired in Plein-street.

Samuel Pross denied any intimacy with Mrs. Cohen. He had never been seen with her later than eleven o'clock at night.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham: He kept a little establishment known as the "Cosy Club," in Harrington-street, which was a gambling hell. Mrs. Cohen never visited him in Caledon-street. He would deny that he ever told Carn that he was on intimate terms with Mrs. Cohen. It was not a fact that he admitted to Mr. Moore, the attorney, that he had told Carn that he had committed adultery with Mrs. Cohen. He himself had been convicted for trying to defeat the ends of justice by bribing a witness. Mr. Moore never put a question to him at all about Mrs. Cohen when Carn brought him round to the office. Cohen asked him to go to Mr. Trollip's office to make a statement. He gambled for a living at that time.

[Hopley, J.: What are the hours of business at the "Cosy Club"?]

Generally in the afternoon.

Further cross-examined: Witness stated that he did not go out to collect clients for the Cosy Club. There was no limit to the boys ages that he picked up. He attempted to bribe a witness to leave town. More or less, he acted as commission agent to back horses for gentlemen.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: The bribery was in connection with the prosecution of his brother. At the time he ran the Cosy Club there was no law about gambling. Carn often visited the club, and on one occasion he drew the faro bank. He was positive that he never told Mr. Moore anything about intimacy with Mrs. Cohen.

Blanche Burton stated that she lived with Mr. and Mrs. Cohen, in Plein-street. She had never seen Mr. Pross at the house. There was no gambling going on in the house beyond quiet games of cards that might be played in any family. The place was not kept as a gambling saloon.

James Purton stated he was living in the same house as Mrs. Cohen in Plein-street. He did not see Mr. Pross visit the house. There was no gambling going on in the Plein-street house.

Miriam Cohen, daughter of the plaintiffs, stated that she was the plaintiff in the breach of promise case against Langleben. She was present at the commission. Carn said everything that was untrue. Sometimes Pross saw her mother and herself home from the music-hall. After Pross had the row with Miss Greenberg, he never visited the house. The allegations by Barrington were untrue. Witness corroborated the other witnesses as to what Carn said in Plein-street. She was eighteen years of age on the 17th March last.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham: There were all sorts of untruthful charges made about her at the commission. They said such terrible things. A little professional jealousy was the cause of the row she had with another actress, but it did not end in broken furniture, windows smashed, and the police called in. The New Pavilion was a better class of institution than the Pekin. She did not sit and gamble with young men at a table. Carn's statements were absolutely untrue.

By Hopley, J.: She had never been to the hall when it was called the Pekin. Previous to the New Pavilion opening, she had been engaged at the Masonic Hall. She knew nothing about anything that might have happened between her mother and Pross during the time she was in England.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Edward John Moore, attorney, swore that when Mr. Carn brought the letter of demand claiming £5,000 damages, Pross admitted positively to him that he had told Carn that he had committed adultery with Mrs. Cohen.

[Hopley, J.: Pross might have been lying.]

He might, my lord.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Carn, he believed, told him that Pross had been convicted. He was acting for a client, and he had nothing to do with the grave charge against the lady. He did not think there could be two different views of the interview; he was sure his was the correct one. He did not suggest that inquiries should be made before he put the charge in writing.

Mr. Graham asked leave to recall Morris Cohen, as some fresh evidence had been brought to his mind since the last hearing.

His Lordship allowed the witness to be recalled.

Morris Cohen, recalled, and cross-examined by Mr. Graham, emphatically denied that he had been convicted in England while Vincent was in court. Last year he was charged with the theft of watches, but the Crown withdrew the charge.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: There was an action pending by him against Vincent for £92.

Edward Vincent stated that he was in court when Cohen was convicted.

Mr. Buchanan objected to the evidence.

Hopley, J., said that it was not strictly evidence, and Mr. Graham said, in deference to the ruling, he would not ask Vincent any further questions.

John Arthur Stracey, clerk to Carn, was called, and was about to give evidence as to the alleged conviction of Cohen.

Mr. Buchanan objected.

Hopley, J., said that it was utterly irrelevant to the present case.

Evidence was then called for the defence.

Israel Carn, the defendant, stated that he was a turf commission agent. Pross stated to him during the commission that he had only just come out of gaol. Pross asked him to state that he had intimacy with Mrs. Cohen, and when witness made the statement he believed it to be true. He had been to the gambling house in St. John-street, where faro was played at high stakes. He never made any statement to the witnesses in Plein-street. He never had a private card printed.

Witness: This is the only card, my Lord.

[Hopley, J.: What is on it?]

Witness: The Manchester Cup, my Lord.

Continuing, witness stated that what Mr. Moore said about the interview was absolutely correct.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He had been in South Africa eight years. He was not charged with robbery at Pretoria. The complainant in that case said that witness had tried to steal his purse, but in the court the complainant said that he had made a mistake.

Mr. Buchanan: Was there another little incident on the Johannesburg race-course?

Witness: No.

Continuing, under cross-examination, witness said that he never had been under lock and key in his life. It was true that he had kept a betting shop in St. George's-street. He never knew that Langleben was engaged to Miss Cohen when his daughter supplanted her in his affections.

Further cross-examined: He did not give any worse evidence at the Commission than anyone else. Langleben had often seen Miss Cohen speak to women of ill-fame at the Pekin.

He never said that Sheila Cohen worked up a case at the White-chapel County Court. He did not marshal the witness at the commission; in fact, all the witnesses took a couple of hours each, so that they did not want much marshalling. It was only when the newspaper came out that he knew there had been a settlement during the commission. He had never seen Langleben since.

[Hopley, J.: You did not think anything the worse of the Cohens for keeping a betting-shop?]

Well, I did not like to see betting in front of the daughter.

Further cross-examined: Miss Cohen used to speak nicely to the young men, and entice them to bet. Pross came off the Breakwater in October, and came to witness, who had a lot of money for him. If Pross said that he rode Galtee More in the Derby, he would not believe that. Nor would he believe him if he said he had an interest in Galtee More. After Pross told him of the intimacy with Mrs. Cohen, and he had seen them together late at night, he believed Pross's statement to be true. He did not give the irrelevant answer at the commission with any malice.

[Hopley, J.: Where did you see Miss Cohen speak to Pross?]

At the Pekin.

[Hopley, J.: Why didn't you give that answer at the commission?]

I gave the answer without malice.

Further cross-examined: He was not glad to seize upon the statement; he put two and two together, and thought that it might be true. He thought that Pross had schemed with the other man to extract money from him.

Mr. Buchanan: He tried to bribe a witness to get his poor brother off?

Witness: You may call him poor. He has been longer under the Government hands than I have.

Mr. Buchanan: Oh, then, you have been under the Government hands?

Witness: I have never been under the Government hands.

Mr. Buchanan: Oh, be a little candid, Mr. Carn; you know pretty well you have been under the Government hands.

Witness: I don't think I was ever under the Government hands. They got plenty of money off me.

Further cross-examined: Holz might have been a professional witness, but he had never been up for perjury or libel. All the witnesses about the Plein-street affair were telling lies.

Mr. Buchanan: They all agree.

How long have they been rehearsed?

Continuing, witness said that all plaintiff's witnesses were in league to blackmail him to get money. He never repeated the statement about Mrs. Cohen in Plein-street.

[Hopley, J.: You believe Hols and Davis will share in the spoil?]

I believe everyone of them will share in it.

Continuing, witness said that when Pross told him about Mrs. Cohen, he made no further inquiries. He did not know what to think of Pross, as he had kept £200 for him while he was on the Breakwater. It might be that he also was standing in on the result of the case. He had made a good deal of money out of speculation.

Re-examined by Mr. Graham: He went to St. John's-street to take a boy named Samuel Abrahams out of the house.

Ralph Brown said that at one time he lived with the Cohens in St. John-street. When he came home late at night, he saw gambling going on in the house.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Cohen had collected ticket money on one or two occasions for him. Witness lost a case at Durban through blackmail.

Joseph de Vries stated that he was a commission agent, and a member of Tattersall's. He had played faro at Cohen's house.

Mr. Buchanan (for plaintiff.) The defendant while being examined by the Commissioner in the former case voluntarily made a most defamatory statement regarding Mrs. Cohen. He did not make it in answer to any question put to him by the Commissioner or by Counsel; had he done that he would have been protected, but he volunteered the statement. Such a statement is not privileged. Even Counsel are not privileged unless such accusations or innuendos they make in some way or other bear on the case in hand. See Pollock on Torts. (p. 251, 5th edit.) Colonial law hardly goes as far as English law in protecting statements made on oath. See Norden v. Oppenheim (3 Menz. 42), and Diepenaar v. Hauman (3 Roscoe, 41). Defendant repeated the slander in Plein-street.

Mr. Graham, K.C. (for defendant): The defendant honestly believed the truth of what he said, and he made the statement on oath in the course of a judicial proceeding, such a statement is not actionable, R. v. Hilliard (1 L.T.R.); Odgers (p. 210). In England not a single reported case can be found of a person being convicted of defamation for any statement made by him in the course of judicial proceedings. The cases of Diepenaar v. Hauman (3 Roscoe, 41), and Norden v.

Oppenheim (3 Menz., 42), are quite in my favour, and show how similar our law is to the English in this respect. The onus of showing that a witness makes a prejudicial statement mala fide is upon the plaintiff, and in the present case the plaintiff has not discharged that onus.

As to the words spoken by the defendant in Plein-street, the plaintiff had himself to blame, for they were spoken in answer to a question asked by himself.

Mr. Buchanan was not called upon in reply.

Hopley, J.: A great deal has been said in argument about the law and the protection afforded to a witness when giving his evidence, and cases have been quoted specially from the English Courts to show how far he is protected from civil liability for anything defamatory which he may say in the course of his evidence. The law of England seems to be more favourable to a witness than the law of this Colony, as was pointed out in the judgment of the Chief Justice in the case of Diepenaar v. Hauman in 1878. In the course of that judgment it was pointed out that in this Colony a witness may be proceeded against for statements made in a Court of Justice in the course of his evidence in a judicial proceeding, in case it is proved that the statements he made were false, malicious, and made without probable cause.

In the present inquiry we have to deal with the following circumstances. The plaintiff's daughter had in 1903 brought an action for breach of promise of marriage against one Langleben, who it is alleged, and admitted, had at that time become engaged to marry Miss Cohen, the present plaintiff's daughter. The breach of promise case was pending in the High Court at Johannesburg, which Court granted a commission to examine witnesses in Cape Town. In defending the action, Langleben, by his pleadings, imputed to Miss Cohen looseness and impropriety of behaviour, and among other things it was alleged that she was in the habit of associating with men who had been convicts on the Breakwater. One of such men was a man called Pross, and the present defendant who was called as a witness before the Commissioner in Cape Town, on being asked "Where did you see Miss Cohen speaking to Pross?" made the reply, "Pross had connection" (meaning carnal connection) "with her mother." It is clear that this was a wholly irrelevant answer. It did not reply to the question put, and it attacked the character of a person not before the Court, in any way save that she was related to the then plaintiff. It is claimed for the defendant in this action that he was privileged in making that statement, as he believed, or had reason to believe, that it was true, and that it cannot, therefore, be held to have been made maliciously or without probable cause, and it therefore becomes your duty to examine that answer with the facts and information on which it was founded as well as the probable motives which prompted it. In Diepenaar v. Havemann it is stated that "the privilege of a witness is supported on the express ground that he is compelled to give evidence; and to extend that privilege to cases in which a person volunteers to go out of his way to make a certain charge, I think would be very dangerous indeed;" and in Norden v. Oppenheim it is stated that a witness if asked must state not only what he knows but what he believes, and what are the grounds of his belief.

I take that to mean that a witness giving an honest reply to any question put to him is absolutely protected; but it would be monstrous to hold that a witness could seize the opportunity of being in the witness-box to say anything he liked about someone else however defamatory it might be, and without being questioned on the point. In the present case the statement made by the defendant was quite voluntary and highly defamatory. Was it false, malicious, and without probable cause? As to its falsity no attempt had been made to prove that there had been improper relations between Pross and the plaintiff. Pross had been introduced to plaintiff by her own husband, and there was evidence that he used frequently to escort her and her daughter to their home from the musical-hall in which Miss Cohen was one of the performers, and to which her mother used to accompany her; but no serious attempt has been made in this action to substantiate the charge, and both plaintiff and Pross, who had been called as a witness, denied it. Was there probable cause at the time he made the statement in the defendant's mind? He swears, and there is some evidence to support him, that Pross had told him he had had connection with Mrs. Cohen. Probably Pross had told him so—that seems likely in view of Mr. Moore's evidence—but ought a loose statement of that sort, made by a man of Pross's character, to be without corroboration, a ground for making such a charge in such a manner? Then was there malice? It seemed clear that at the time he made the statement defendant was interested in shielding his prospective son-in-law Langleben from a judgment for heavy damages, and that might be a sufficient inducement to a man of his class to volunteer such a statement, as it would through her mother cast discredit on Miss Cohen, the then plaintiff. Moreover if the words were used it does not lie on the plaintiff to prove express malice, but the defendant must disprove it, the use of the words raising the presumption of malice, especially when the circumstances and the manner of the use of the words are taken into consideration. If you come to the conclusion that the defendant did not honestly, when giving the answer he did, speak his mind as a witness, but that he used the words to further his private ends or to indulge in a personal spite you will be justified in finding for the plaintiff.

There is also the further slander claimed for in this action when the defendant in answer to a question put by the plaintiff's husband in a public street, and before her daughter and three witnesses, is alleged to have repeated the charge in an aggravated form. This he entirely denies, and it is a matter of evidence which you will weigh. Two of the three witnesses besides the plaintiff's husband and daughter who were present have been called, and they seem to have no interest in the case, and to have given their evidence fairly.

[His Lordship here dealt with the evidence and the circumstances of the parties as disclosed by the evidence.]

All the circumstances of the parties should be taken into consideration by you, and the manner in which they have as far as you can judge behaved themselves, and the question of the damage sustained by the plaintiff, if you find for her is a matter in your discretion.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £5 damages.

Judgment was entered for that amount, with costs, including the costs of the witnesses.

APPEALS.

REX V. ANIM—REX V. JESSUB.

This was an appeal from judgments of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia. The accused had been charged before the Magistrate of the district of Salisbury with the crime of contravening section 16 of Ordinance No. 7, of 1901, in that on or about the 1st December, 1903, at or near Salisbury they did wrongfully and unlawfully offer for sale at the Market Square by private sale or by auction certain cattle infected with scab. The defendant Jessub was charged with offering 100 goats so infected, and he was fined £10, or in default one month's imprisonment. The other defendant was charged with offering a number of sheep so infected, and he was similarly dealt with. An appeal was then noted to the High Court of Southern Rhodesia on the ground that the convictions were not supported by the evidence, and were contrary to law. It was contended that there was no evidence that the said stock were offered for sale, and that they could not be considered to have been offered for sale seeing that the auctioneer had not asked for bids. The appeal was dismissed and leave was granted to appeal to the Supreme Court. The presiding Judge in his reasons said that the Magistrate seemed to have disbelieved that part of Bernstein's evidence in which he said that the sheep were not to be put up to auction until the inspector had seen them. Mr. Grimmer argued the appeal on this assumption and rested his appeal solely on the ground that, until the auctioneer called for bids, there was no offering for sale. He said that only the opportune arrival of the cattle inspector prevented them from being sold, and he considered that bringing cattle to the market for the purpose of being sold was sufficient to constitute an offence under the Ordinance.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the applicants. Mr. Pyemont for the Attorney General of Southern Rhodesia.

Mr. Buchanan (for appellants). As is usual in criminal appeals, the Magistrate gives no reasons, but I cannot understand how the Magistrate could have accepted one part of Bernstein's evidence and rejected the other part. It is not criminal to be in possession of scabby sheep, but it is criminal to attempt to send them by train, or not to give notice of infection. See sec. 28, sub-sec. (2) of the Ordinance (p. 474); also sections 30 and 31. I submit that sec. 15 refers only to an offer for sale by public auction.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It refers to all offers of sale.]

I submit not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does the inspector say that he makes it a practice to go to market?]

He does not say so in so many words, but the evidence of Bernstein shows that the inspector usually attended the market. There is no evidence that the sale of those sheep was entrusted to the auctioneer. Had that been the case, I can argue only that the auctioneer was agent of the vendor. In case of an auction, nothing is offered for sale until it is put up. The offering for sale by auction does not mean entrusting the property to the auctioneer. The offence is in offering for sale. In such a case as this the law must be strictly interpreted. See Queen v. Töppen and Another (1 Ap. 471), and Queen v. Bussow (8 Juta, 174). The inspector says that he refused permission to sell. If he refused he must have been asked, and if he was asked, that fact in itself shows that there was no intention to sell without his leave. Then the section deals with selling, both by private sale and also by public auction. I submit that the appeal should be upheld with costs.

Mr. Pyemont argued that the presumption was that there were magistrates' reasons on which the learned judge based his judgment. The truth of that portion of Bernstein's evidence which the learned judge accepted was borne out by the subsequent action of the accused. The term "offer" was a general term and had subsequently been specialised. Counsel proceeded on the technicalities of the word "offer" from a standard dictionary and contended the word was put in the Ordinance to have a wide field to catch in the net every act which tended to the spread of the disease, otherwise the word "expose" would have been inserted as in the English Act. In support of his contention that the word was not used in any technical way, counsel referred to the different sections of the Ordinance in which he submitted everything tended towards isolation. When a person was aware of disease among his sheep he was bound not only to notify the authorities, but his nearest land owners.

De Villiers, C.J., was proceeding to give judgment, stating that he did not see on what principle the Court could altogether reject the evidence of the chief witness for the prosecution, when

Mr. Pyemont pointed out to the Court that Bernstein was a witness for the defence in one case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is not on record.]

If your lordship has any doubt on the point, it might be advisable to telegraph to Rhodesia.

De Villiers, C.J., said he was not sure whether that would make any difference in the final decision of the Court, but it might be as well now to refer the record back in order to ascertain whether the auctioneer gave evidence for the prosecution or not. The Court would give judgment after receiving the record back.

SALISBURY BUILDING CO. § 1904.
V. BRITISH S.A. CO. (May 13th.

Beneficial occupation—Destruction of premises—Act 8 of 1879, Sec. 7.

Act 8 of 1879, Sec. 7, does not apply to cases in which buildings have been destroyed by fire or other unavoidable misfortune, and hence in such cases a tenant is liable for the rent of such buildings only in respect of the time during which he has had beneficial occupation.

This was an appeal against a decision of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia sitting at Salisbury in a special case, which came before the Court in March last.

From the evidence in the Court below it appeared that on the 27th November, 1902, plaintiffs (now appellants) and defendants entered into an agreement by which the plaintiffs let certain premises to the defendants in 1902. The premises, including part occupied by defendants, were destroyed by fire in September, 1903. Plaintiffs took steps for the re-erection of the building in order that the defendants might occupy the same. Plaintiffs maintained that notwithstanding the loss the defendants were liable for the rent of the premises in terms of the lease. The Court, after hearing argument, decided in favour of the defendants' contention that they should not be liable to pay for the period they did not occupy tenancy. In his reasons for judgment, Mr. Justice Watermeyer said that he did not think the case could be brought under the decisions cited for the plaintiffs. Leaving aside the question whether the lease of one or two rooms in a building was a lease of land within the meaning of the Act of 1879, or whether fire was an unforeseen calamity within the meaning of this Act, he thought the case must be decided on another principle of law, viz, that in any contract de certo corpore, the destruction of the subject matter of the contract releases each contracting party from further liability under the contract. It was the total destruction of the subject matter that, in his opinion differentiated the case from the cases quoted from the Cape. In each of them the subject matter remained, but the occupation had ceased to be beneficial to the tenant. It had been argued for the plaintiffs that the Act of 1879 was meant to assimilate our law to the law of England on this point, but if that were so the case of Taylor v. Caldwell (3 B. and S., 826, 833) cited was conclusive against the plaintiffs. The case of Taylor v. Caldwell had been recently much quoted, and the principle had been carried even further in the case of Krell v. Henry (K.B. 1902-2-740) Civil Service Co-operative Society v. The General Steam Navigation Co. (K.B. 1902-2-756), Blakely v. Muller and Co. (K.B., 2-760), and Hobson v. Pattenden and Co. (K.B. 1902-2-760). These cases professed to be decided on the principles of Roman law, and were, therefore, binding on them, and, in his opinion, it was conclusive that when the subject of the contract was destroyed both parties remained where they were and neither could call on the other for further fulfilment. There must be total destruction, for if the contract was performable in part it still remained good. (See Herne Bay Steamboat v. Hutton, 19, "Times" Law Report, p. 680.) For those reasons he thought judgment should be in favour of defendants' contention. He would point out, however, that the action, though brought in the form of a special case, was practically an action for rent, and that was a calling on the defendant to perform his part of the contract. In such an action the defendant having had no beneficial occupation, he thought it would have been incumbent on plaintiff to show whether he had received any insurance money for the building, and if so to account to defendant for any profit he might have made from such insurance money by way of interest or otherwise. (See Logan v. Beit, 7 J., 197.) The judgment on the special case would be for defendants' contention, with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for appellants Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.) for respondents.

Mr. Searle argued that it had been held in many cases where the occupants had been deprived of beneficial occupation owing to war, plague, etc., they were still liable for the rent. He contended that the present case was analogous. In support of his contention he quoted the United Mines case (10 C.T.R., 665), Logan v. Colonial Government (11 C.T.R., 84), and Joe v. Mohammed (11 C.T.R., 816).

[De Villiers, C.J.: In those cases the property remained. It was not swept away as the premises in this case were.]

The tenants of the building from which they had been turned out by the Government on account of plague had just as little beneficial occupation as the tenants in the present case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where the premises in respect of which the contract was made were entirely destroyed, the obligations on the other side terminated.]

The ground was still there, and the tenants would have the right to go upon it. The lease was one not only of the premises but of the land as well. Leake on Contracts (p. 485) laid it down that the rent was not excused by the accidental destruction of the property, unless some express provision were made in the lease. This principle was also laid down by Pothier on Obligations (section 613) and by Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (p. 434), and Fox on Landlord and Tenant (p. 475). English law was therefore quite clear on the point. In the case of the United Mines, the Court had laid it down that the object of the General Law Amendment Act was to assimilate our law to the English law.

[Buchanan, J.: This was only in unforeseen circumstances.]

It is a fallacy to say the property was gone because the building was burnt down. The tenant could go on the site and rebuild if he liked. The lease of a house meant also the lease of the land on which it was built. In Raphael v. Clutterbuck (10 Shiel p. 320) it had been agreed that if the premises were burnt down during the tenancy the owner was to rebuild at once and the tenant was to pay the rent. The Court in that case made an order declaring the tenant entitled to the remainder of the lease and directing the owner to rebuild. Counsel went on to discuss the Coronation cases which arose in connection with the postponement of the King's coronation, quoting Crowther v. Henry (1903 L.R., K.B., pt. 2 p. 740). He also quoted Ison v. Gordon (5 Bingham N.R. 501), and Marshall v. Schofield (52 L.J., Q.B., p. 58). Van der Linden said that the lease expired with the destruction of the property. But in this case the lease was still going on, and the respondents were rebuilding as quickly as possible in order that appellants might return [De Villiers, C.J.: Can there be a lease of a thing that does not exist?]

The English law clearly says that there can.

Mr. Schreiner said that his learned friend had not addressed himself to the following point. Certain rooms in a large building were let on lease, and it was not certain whether they were on the ground floor. The appeal had been argued as if the premises were an entire house let with the land on which it stood. Unless the statute applied, the Common Law came into operation, and there was no principle clearer than that a tenant could not be made to pay rent unless he had beneficial occupation. English law in this respect differed from Roman-Dutch law, and the Act of 1879 did not bring in the whole body of English law.

Mr. Searle, in reply, said that his learned friend had admitted that the contract still went on; therefore there must be a property lease as there could not be a lease of what was non-existent. If there was a property lease, it was producing nothing, and all the cases decided by the Court had gone on the principle that the tenant was bound to pay the rent, even if the property produced nothing.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is common cause that if the case had arisen for decision before the passing of the Act of 1879 the defendants would have been entitled to succeed. On September 13, 1903, the premises leased by defendants from plaintiffs were destroyed by the burning of the building in which they were situated. On the principles of Common Law defendants would not be liable for the rent. But plaintiffs now contend that the Act of 1879 placed our law in exactly the same position as the English law. In some respects doubtless it had this effect, but it did not go so far as to bring in the whole body of English decisions on this point. In certain cases beneficial ownership of property was lost, but the property remained, and it had been held that the tenant was liable under the Act of 1879. But the further case, where the property was completely destroyed, was not in contemplation of the Legislature when the Act was framed. The question must therefore be decided by the Common Law. The appeal would be dismissed with costs.

BULAWAYO MARKET CO. V. BULAWAYO CLUB. { 1904.
May 13th
June 14th.

Principal and agent—Tacit agency
Notice of revocation of authority.

The defendant Club had for several years been in the habit of buying their market supplies on credit from the plaintiff Company, through the Club steward, until the appointment of G. as steward. G. continued for two months to buy market supplies on credit from the plaintiff Company, and the Club continued to pay for them. The Club then entered into an agreement with G., by which he was appointed manager, charged with the duty of catering for the Club, but without authority to pledge the credit of the Club. No public notice of this agreement was given nor was private notice given to the plaintiff Company, which continued for seven months, to supply goods on credit to G., in the belief that they were selling to the Club.

Held, that in the absence of any knowledge on the plaintiff Company's part of the change in G.'s position, they were entitled to recover from the Club the price of the goods thus supplied.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Senior Judge of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, by which a judgment of the magistrate was confirmed in favour of the defendants, who were sued by the plaintiffs for £61 for goods sold and delivered.

The Market Company sued the Club for goods sold and delivered, and they were called on to show cause why they should not be called upon to pay to the plaintiffs £61 for goods sold to the Club during January and February, 1902. The plea of the Club was that the goods were sold by the plaintiffs in their capacity as auctioneers to one Gordon, who contracted for the defendants, although he had no authority to incur any liability on behalf of the Club. On the 29th May, 1903, it was agreed that Gordon should contract on his own account for the catering of the Club, and had since then paid the respondents by his own cheques.

The Magistrate's reasons are as follows:—

In my opinion I held that it was not incumbent upon the defendants to have informed third parties (plaintiffs in this case) that an agreement had been entered into by Mr. Gordon and themselves. It might certainly have been done but the defendants were merely negligent in not doing so. This omission did not hold them liable.

I held too that the Market Master should have been aware of the change as from the 1st May, 1903. Cheques previously signed by the club were signed by Mr. Gordon up to the end of December. This was sufficient notification. No notice was however taken of this. Mr. Soutter however states that he did not see the cheques. He should have seen them or his attention drawn to them by his clerk.

In face of the Market Master's notice of October 2nd 1903 the right of demanding security for goods purchased, or that some arrangement be entered into was not done. Mr. Gordon should have been asked whom he was buying for. Gordon would have been bound then to state that he was buying for himself and the Market Master would either have allowed Gordon credit or asked for a guarantee. The Market Master by not doing this renders himself liable.

According to the agreement Mr. Gordon had expressly no authority to pledge the club's credit or incur any liability.

I held too that it was Gordon's duty to have informed the Market Master of the change, he buying goods and knowing these were put down to the defendants, whereas in reality he was the person buying, making a contract thereby and knowing he had no authority. The club further did not hold themselves out as guarantors.

All cheques were payable to and by Gordon, the sole catering rights and orders being in his hands.

The club derived no profits but only a fixed amount for these rights.

Gordon therefore becomes a contractor, being manager in name only.

The judgment in the Court below was as follows:—

In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed with costs. It can be disposed of in a very few words for I consider the real issue, which is a very simple one, was somewhat lost sight of. In order to ascertain what is the exact position it becomes necessary to have regard to the summons and plea in the case.

Now what is plaintiff's claim? It is a claim in which the plaintiff demands from the defendants the sum of £61 4s. 7d. for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendants during the months of January and February last, that is, that these goods were delivered to the defendants at their own special instance and request or at the special instance and request of some one who was the duly authorised agent of defendants.

What is the plea? Defendants admit the actual sale of the goods, but say that the sale and delivery was to one Gordon, a contractor for defendants, but that the said Gordon had no authority to and did not pledge the credit of the defendants.

A mass of evidence was led to show that the club is liable, on the ground that by their conduct they must be considered to have held out or represented Gordon as their agent in the matter of these purchases. The judgment of the Magistrate proceeds almost entirely on the question as to whether there was or was not a holding out.

On the pleadings, I can find nothing to show that this question of holding out is raised.

What then is the real issue? It is, who ordered the goods and who received the benefit of the goods.

It is abundantly clear from the evidence that the goods were ordered by Gordon, were received by Gordon at the club, and were used by Gordon for the meals of the members of the club. What was the position of Gordon at the time of the purchases?

It appears that previously to the 29th day of May of last year, Gordon was the Steward of the club and as such was authorised by the club to effect purchases on the Morning Market of vegetables, etc., for the benefit of the club, which was then catering for the members of the club and receiving the price of the members' meals. From the 29th May and up to February 1st Gordon's position was different—he entered into a contract with the club by which he undertook to supply the members of the club at his own expense.

It was strongly urged by the Solicitor-General, on behalf of the applicants, that this agreement in no way affected the previous position of Gordon—that in view of his being called "Manager" in the agreement, and of certain clauses in the agreement by which the club exercised control over Gordon and his servants in certain respects, Gordon was still the club's agent so far as the purchases on the Market were concerned, and that therefore these purchases must be regarded as being on behalf of the club. I cannot assent to this proposition. It is clear to my mind that on the contract Gordon was not the club's agent. He was, so far as the supply of vegetables, etc., from the market is concerned, and that is the only question I have to deal with in this case, an independent contractor, running the dining-room at the club for his sole benefit; and he was, moreover, expressly by the contract forbidden in any way to pledge the credit of the club.

Gordon therefore, not being the club's agent, and the goods being ordered by Gordon for his own use and benefit, it is impossible, in my opinion, to arrive at the conclusion, from the nature of the claim disclosed in the summons and the issue raised by the plea, that the goods were in fact sold to the club.

Being then of opinion that the form of this action in no way involves the doctrine of what by English Law is termed "holding out," the appeal must, for the simple reasons I have indicated, be dismissed with costs.

Mr. McGregor (for the appellants) said that the club provided meals for its members. Gordon was the manager, and it was part of his duties to provide the food that was required. In Watto v. Pennick (67 L.T.R., p. 831), it was held that an agent was impliedly invested with the right of doing all things necessary to the performance of his duties. For seven years the club had been buying on the market. When Gordon got into difficulties the club then on February 1 gave notice to the Market Company that Gordon was no longer authorised to buy on their behalf. This was after the date of the last purchase. If the club held out Gordon as their representative or acquiesced in his doing so, they were liable. All the decided cases from Faure v. Louw (1 Juta, 5) down to Holliday v. Van Blommestein (14 C.T.R., 64), laid down this principle. There was a private agreement made between the club and Gordon on May 1, 1903, by which Gordon undertook to supply the club with provisions on his own behalf, but this private agreement could not affect the position of a third party, to whom no notice of the agreement was given (Rich v. Coe, Cowper's Reports, vol. 2, p. 636). The notice sent to the Market Company in February was a tacit acknowledgement that Gordon had some sort of authority to pledge their credit. Counsel also quoted Kent's Commentaries (vol. 2, p. 629) as laying down the doctrine that the principal was bound as to a third party by an agent acting within the apparent scope of his authority. Cababe on Estoppel (p. 65) and Fruman v. Loder (11 Adolphus and Ellis, p. 589), Todd v. Robinson (Ryan and Moodie Reports, p. 217), Edmonds v. Bushell (35 L.J., Q.B., p. 20), Pilot v. Cuase and Others (4 T.L.R., p. 453), all supported this doctrine.

Mr. Close (for the respondents) said that it must be established as a fact that Gordon was the agent of the club or held out by the club as such before the appellant could succeed. By the May agreement Gordon was to take over on his own private account the business of the club and private refreshment for for the members. He was not entitled to pledge the credit of the club. He was then not a manager at all. He ran the refreshment part of the club as a private business. The transactions by Gordon on behalf of the club before May 1 were very few and trivial. The cheques after May were signed by Gordon, and this ought to have put the market authorities on inquiry. There was, therefore, contributory negligence on the part of the club. The market-master had been negligent in his duty in not refusing to give credit. In support of this contention counsel quoted Storey on Agency (p. 209).

Mr. McGregor, in reply, said that Gordon had specifically stated that he bought for the club in the market during the time that he was manager. The club acknowledged that Gordon initially had authority to act. What happened to divest him of that authority? The goods were always debited to the club and not to Gordon.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Posten (June 14th).

De Villiers, C. J.: In this case the Bulawayo Market Company appealed against a judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, confirming the judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Bulawayo in an action brought by the company against the Bulawayo Club for goods sold and delivered to the club. The defendants, by their plea, admitted that goods to the value of £61 4s. 7d. had been sold by the plaintiffs to one Gordon, but they alleged that Gordon was only a contractor for the defendants, and had no authority to pledge the credit of the defendants. There was no replication to this plea, and, indeed, the mode of procedure in the Magistrate's Court does not require a formal reply to the defendants' plea; but evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiffs, and not objected to, that by the previous course of dealing between the parties the defendants had led the plaintiffs to believe that Gordon, as club steward, was duly authorised to buy ordinary supplies for the club on credit. It is not clear from the reasons of the learned judge in the Court below whether he would have decided in favour of the plaintiffs if they had formally replied that the defendants were estopped by their previous conduct from setting up the defence of want of authority on the part of Gordon. He held that the question of estoppel or of tacit authority was not raised by the pleadings, and that as Gordon was an independent contractor, and was forbidden by the contract between him and the club to pledge the credit of the club, the Market Company could not recover from the club the price of goods bought by Gordon from the company. Seeing, however, that evidence of tacit as opposed to express authority was given without objection, and that the mode of procedure in the Magistrate's Court did not require a formal replication, I am of opinion that the case should be decided according to the law applicable to the facts which have been actually proved. What then, are the facts of the case? On the 2nd of March, 1903, Gordon became steward of the defendant club, and in that capacity he used to buy ordinary supplies at the plaintiffs' market on behalf of the club. Before that time, articles bought on credit at the market by different stewards of the club had been regularly paid for by the club. From March until May, 1904, goods so bought on credit by Gordon were also duly paid for by the club. On the 23rd of May, 1903, a formal agreement was entered into by which the club, "having full confidence in the honesty and ability" of Gordon as "manager," entrusted him with the management of the club, subject to certain conditions. Among the conditions were the following: The manager was to supply the members with meals of first-class quality at a certain tariff, and supply all provisions himself, except liquors, cigars, and cigarettes, which were to be supplied by the club and sold by the manager at scheduled prices, he receiving the profits. Another condition was that the manager should have no power or authority to pledge the credit or incur any liability on behalf of the club. No public notification, however, of the terms of this agreement was given, nor was any notice given to the Market Company. After the date of the agreement, Gordon continued to buy goods on credit from the Market Company, ostensibly on behalf of the club, but, in settling the accounts, he gave his own cheque, instead of, as previously, the cheque of the club. This mode of dealing continued until the beginning of the present year, when Gordon failed to meet the market bills, and an action was brought against the club for the goods sold in January and February. The Magistrate who decided the case in the first instance seems to have held that the market master ought to have known that a change had been made in the position of Gordon, because cheques signed by the club before 1st May, 1903, were signed by Gordon from that date until the end of December. This, he remarked, was sufficient notification. I cannot myself attach the same weight to the circumstance that Gordon now signed cheques in his own name. The goods were still being bought by Gordon in the name of the club, and, in the absence of any notification that Gordon was no longer the agent of the club for the purchase of provisions, the Market Company might fairly believe that Gordon had received authority to deposit club moneys in his own name. The giving of Gordon's cheques in payment of the club's accounts was not so inconsistent with his continued agency as to throw on the Market Company the duty of inquiring whether the agency had been revoked. It was the plain duty of the defendants, who knew that credit had hitherto been given to them in the belief that Gordon had authority to pledge their credit, to give notice to the plaintiffs that Gordon's authority had ceased. Having failed in that duty, they cannot now be heard to say that by a private agreement with Gordon they had revoked his previous authority. The principles applicable to a case like the present were fully discussed in Faure v. Louw (1, Juta, 3), and do not need repetition. In that case the course of dealing which was held sufficient to establish the agency had been longer than in the present case, but the length of time does not affect the principles involved. The defendants' counsel has not seriously contended that his clients could have escaped liability for goods supplied to Gordon on their behalf between March and May, 1903. That liability arose out of the previous course of dealing between the parties to this suit, quite independently of any private arrangements between the club and Gordon. But if the liability existed at the end of April, it is difficult to see on what consistent principle that liability ceased after May. The defendants having failed in their duty to inform the plaintiff that Gordon was no longer authorised to buy supplies for the club on credit, are as much bound by Gordon's purchases as if they had expressly authorised him to make them. The appeal must therefore be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff, with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

REX V. JENKINSON. } 1904.
 } May 13th.

Criminal law—Evidence—Indecent assault—Particulars of complaint made by female.

Where, on a trial for indecent assault or other kindred offence on a female, it appears that she made a complaint as soon, after the assault, as she met a person to whom she would naturally make a complaint or give an explanation of her condition, the particulars of her statement, so far as they relate to the charge against the accused, are admissible as evidence in corroboration of her evidence upon the main issue.

This was an argument on a point reserved. The appellant, who had been convicted of indecent assault, applied for leave to raise the question as to whether or not statements made by the complainant to her mother immediately on reaching home were admissible in evidence in the examination-in-chief. Mr. Alexander was for the appellant and Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Alexander said that the point reserved was whether or not there should be admission of evidence of the kind mentioned, and if their lordships decided it to be an illegality, whether the Court would interfere with the decision of the Court below. Counsel relied on section 34 of Ordinance 72 of 1830, which would rule as irrelevant any statement which the child might make to other persons. He submitted in cases of that kind where young children gave evidence it was very necessary to interpret very strictly this evidence because evidence of that kind was very dangerous. In England there was some sort of safeguard where it was necessary there should be material corroboration of the complainant's story.

Without calling on Mr. Nightingale, the Court gave judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: The question at issue in this case was whether or not the accused had committed an indecent assault on the little girl whose statement to her mother was objected to at the trial. The girl gave details at the trial of the assault alleged to have been committed on her in a railway carriage. Among other things she said that she screamed while the accused was assaulting her, and tried to prevent him from touching her indecently, and that she made a complaint to her mother as soon as she reached home, giving the particulars of the assault. The mother was called, and she confirmed the child's statement, that a complaint had been made to her, but the question as to the particulars of the complaint was objected to. The learned Judge, however, allowed the evidence to be given, and the question reserved for the Court is whether the evidence was properly admitted.

I take it to be a cardinal principle in the law of evidence that not only the facts in issue may be received in evidence, but also facts relevant to the facts in issue, provided that they are material, and may conduce to prove or disprove any fact in issue in the case. This principle is recognised by the 34th section of Ordinance 72 of 1830, but it is in the application of the principle that great difficulty constantly arises.

According to Stephen (Digest of Law of Evidence, article 3), "facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction or subject matter, are relevant to the fact with which they are so connected." To illustrate this rule he says: "The question is whether A committed manslaughter, on B by carelessly driving over him. A statement made by B as to the cause of the accident as soon as he was picked up, is a relevant fact, though it may not be admissible as a dying declaration. The relevancy of such evidence arises, I presume, out of the facts that there has been no time for the person making the statement to concoct a false story, and out of the presumption that a statement made under circumstances which would necessarily call forth some explanation of his condition from the person making it would be a truthful statement. Now the view which, in practice, I have always taken of the admissibility or otherwise of statements made by a female upon whom an assault with intent to commit rape or other kindred offence is alleged to have been committed is that if she makes a statement as soon after the assault, as she meets a person to whom she would naturally make a complaint, that statement is admissible to corroborate her evidence in support of the main fact in issue. This, I understand, has also been the practice of my brethren beside me. It is certainly difficult to appreciate the principle upon which some judges have held that the fact of a complaint having been made is admissible, but not the terms of the complaint. The reasons for admitting evidence of the fact of a complaint would seem a fortiori to favour the admissibility of the statements accompanying the complaint, so far as they relate to the charge against the accused. If while in a state of excitement, or in a condition showing traces of a recent assault on her, and before she has had time to invent a story, a complainant makes a statement to a person to whom she would naturally complain, or give an explanation of her condition, the whole statement appears to me to be as relevant as the fact that she made a complaint. This case has, however, been argued as if the evidence objected to fell within the definition of hearsay statements which, as a general rule, are not admissible as evidence. Counsel for the accused has contended that, as the evidence would in 1850 not have been admissible in a similar case pending at Westminster, it should, under the provisions of Ordinance 72 of that year, be excluded at the present time in the Courts of this Colony. Assuming then that the statements in question are in the nature of hearsay, I cannot accept the view that the judicial interpretation of the law of England after 1850 should be excluded from consideration. At that time the authorities conflicted with each other, and there has been no legislation since to put an end to the conflict. In 1896, however, the question was pointedly raised before a strong Court of Criminal Appeal whether the fact that a complaint was made by the prosecutrix shortly after the alleged occurrence, and the particulars of such complaint, may be given in evidence on the part of the prosecution, and the question was answered in the affirmative. The judgment of the Court was delivered by Hawkins, J., who after reviewing the previous cases on the point said: "After very careful consideration we have arrived at the conclusion that we are bound by no authority to support the existing usage of limiting evidence of the complaint to the bare fact that a complaint was made, and that reason and good sense are against our doing so. The evidence is admissible only upon the ground that it was a complaint of that which is charged against the prisoner, and can be legitimately used only for the purpose of enabling the jury to judge for themselves whether the conduct of the woman was consistent with her testimony on oath given in the witness-box negating her consent, and affirming that the acts complained of were against her will, and in accordance with the conduct they would expect in a truthful woman under the circumstances detailed by her." It would thus appear that the grounds upon which the evidence was admitted differed somewhat from the grounds upon which my colleagues and I have hitherto acted, but the result, so far as the present case is concerned, would be the same. The girl virtually denied that she consented to the indecent acts of the accused, and there was the same reason for admitting her evidence as existed in the English case referred to. Even, therefore, if the question were treated as one affecting the admissibility of hearsay evidence the statements were properly admitted by the learned judge under the provisions of the 44th section of the Ordinance. The question reserved must be decided in favour of the Crown.

Buchanan, J.: I have always admitted evidence of the terms of the complaints made immediately after assaults by women and children. I have not confined the admission of evidence to cases of children making statements to those in loco parentis. I held to this rule in consequence of the experience gained by me when at the bar of the practice usually followed in this Court. I think the admission of the evidence objected to was justified by sound sense as well as by long usage.

Hopley, J.: I did not allow any argument on this point at the trial as I considered that it had been decided. My experience at the Bar and on the Bench has been that such evidence is admissible. I do not confine such admissibility to complaints made to persons in loco parentis, as I think that the circumstances might frequently preclude the possibility of the report or complaint being made to persons in that relationship to the complainant; and in such cases, if the complaint is made to anyone who might naturally be appealed to for help or advice, I think it would be admissible. I concur that the point reserved should be decided against the accused.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

BUYSKES V. TRUIKE BROS.

Provisional sentence — Incorrect plan.

The Court refused provisional sentence for the purchase price of certain property where defendant alleged that the plan exhibited at the sale was incorrect.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for provisional sentence for £430, being the total amount of the purchase price of certain ground at Wynberg.

Mr. Burton (for the defendant) said that the sale was by public auction on the 10th December, 1903. The defendants' affidavit set out that the property was not according to the plan exhibited at the auction. The sureties in their affidavits stated that they were quite willing to carry out their duties if the property was transferred according to the plan.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was a pity that the defendants had not indicated the exact lines of the defence which they intended to take. If the defence were really that they intended to repudiate the sale, he did not think the Court should grant provisional sentence, because he had not sufficient information before him to judge as to the extent to which the actual situation of the cottage operated on the minds of the defendants in purchasing it. On the whole, he thought plaintiff should go into the principal case. At the same time, he should certainly not recommend the defendants to defend this case unless they were prepared to produce clear evidence as to the extent to which the actual situation of the cottage operated on their minds at the time of the purchase. Costs would be costs in the cause.

ERASMUS V. VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,125, with interest and costs, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Granted.

HEYDENRYCH V. FRAME. } 1904.
 } May 14th.

Provisional sentence—Promissory note—Proof of allegations in affidavit.

The Court granted postponement of a provisional case, in order to enable the defendant to produce proof of certain allegations contained in her affidavit, which, if proved, would be a good defence to plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Burton moved for provisional sentence for £146 9s., on a promissory note, dated the 5th February, 1896, with interest from that date.

Mr. Upington, who appeared for the defendant, read affidavits to the effect that in 1896 the defendant gave the promissory note in connection with an account running over several years, and that in a settlement made in March, 1896, this was included, all liabilities of the defendant and her husband to the plaintiff being then settled. The defendant applied for time in order to get certain documents from Scotland to prove the settlement.

In a replying affidavit the plaintiff denied the allegation that there had been a full settlement of all his claims. Plaintiff alleged that the money in respect of which the note now in question was given, was advanced by him to the defendant, and that in the account settled the wife's liability was omitted.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant's request for a postponement is a most reasonable one, and I am surprised that plaintiff should have instructed his counsel to oppose it. Statements were made on behalf of the defendant, which, if substantiated, would be a complete answer to the claim, and all the defendant asks for is that there should be some time allowed in order to enable her to get documents from England to substantiate these statements. The case will be ordered to stand over until the 1st August.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

NOMADINA V. SISSING. { 1904.
May 17th.

Mr. Percy Jones moved on behalf of Archibald Sissing, missionary, late of Eastern Pondoland, for the rule nisi to be made absolute for the restoration of certain nineteen head of cattle, which were alleged to have been forcibly removed.

Mr. Gardiner (for the respondent, Jane Nomadina, a native) read her affidavit, in which she claimed that the cattle were left to her and her brother, who was now dead, by her late father. She declared that the missionary Sissing had no interest whatever in the cattle. Sissing had never had legal possession of any of her property. Deponent added that she was lawfully married, and was a major. She absolutely denied that the cattle were forcibly seized. Counsel also read an affidavit sworn by the respondent's husband, who corroborated the statements made by his wife.

In reply to his lordship.

Mr. Gardiner said that he believed the cattle were still in the possession of the respondent, and that the rule nisi obtained by the applicant had not been executed requiring respondent to restore possession.

Mr. Jones submitted that, whatever were the rights of the parties in the cattle, the applicant had been dispossessed, and that the rule nisi should be made absolute. He submitted that the acts of the respondent or her agent amounted to spoliation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The respondent does not claim more than a life interest.]

Mr. Gardiner: She says she intends contesting the applicant's claims, because he wrote the will himself.

Without calling upon Mr. Gardiner.

De Villiers, C.J.: The respondent stated in her affidavit that she was lawfully married to her husband Andrew, so that Andrew should be a party to this case to make it quite in order. But the applicant, in his affidavit, said that during his absence in Natal in February, 1902, the said Jane eloped with one Andrew, a native, with whom she was now living unmarried at another kraal, and that she refused to return to the petitioner. If Mr. Sissing knew, as he ought to have known, that the respondent was a married woman, he considered that it was an improper statement on his part to make that the respondent was an unmarried woman. Possibly he might not have known that she was a married woman, but he might have inquired into the matter and ascertained whether she was.

Mr. Jones said that the applicant filed his petition some time last year.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When was the respondent married?]

Mr. Gardiner: I think about June last. Mr. Jones: I believe the applicant filed his petition about twelve months ago.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am glad I made the remark, because the position of the applicant has now been explained. Proceeding, his Lordship said that the applicant now sought confirmation of the order under which the cattle now in the possession of the respondent should be handed back to him (Sissing). He the Chief Justice was quite satisfied that if the learned judge had been aware of all the facts of this case he would never have granted that rule at all. In the first instance, if the will were a valid one, then it was quite clear that the respondent was entitled to the cattle, and it would be a nugatory act now to order her to return the cattle if, immediately after returning them, she would be entitled to claim them back again. Still, that would be the order of the Court if the Court were satisfied that there had been anything in the nature of spoliation on the part of the respondent when she took possession. He thought that, reading the affidavits made by the respondent herself, and all the witnesses on her behalf, there really was nothing in the nature of spoliation. There must be something in the nature of illegality, or in the nature of force, to justify the Court in holding that there was spoliation. If Mrs. Sissing chose to yield to a demand, that was her own act, and, unless that demand were anything in the nature to suggest force, or violence, or fraud, he considered that it was not spoliation. He considered, therefore, that the order must now be discharged, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner asked if the costs would include costs of the application made by the respondent for an order against the applicant for security.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think so.]

Mr. Jones said he would like to address the Court on that point. Sissing was at present in Natal, but he said that he had resided in Eastern Pondoland all the time. He submitted, seeing that there was no necessity for the application, Sissing should not be mulcted in the costs. The application was not for security for costs, but for security for the return of the cattle.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard,

De Villiers, C.J., said he would like to hear the affidavits read in regard to this point as to the nature of the application made by the respondent.

Counsel having addressed the Court further.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought the application made by the respondent was quite a proper one. The costs, therefore, should follow. The order of the Court would be that the rule be discharged, with costs, to include costs of the application made by the respondent for an order as to security.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), moved for leave to execute a certain ante-nuptial contract, which petitioner had omitted to have registered in England, where the marriage took place in 1888. Counsel said that although a number of years had passed, there seemed to be no reason in principle why the Court should not act as it had done in cases where application was made immediately after the marriage, provided, always, that the interests of creditors be protected. It seemed that the petitioner only discovered in 1907 that the marriage was in community and he was at that time advised that it was too late to then move the Court. The wife consented.

De Villiers, C.J.: The property involved is considerable, and as the effect of the registration of the contract would be to prevent Mrs. Morrison from having her share of the community which, without a contract, she would enjoy, it would be well for the Court to ascertain whether she has joined in this application of her freewill, and without any undue influence having been exercised on her by her husband. The Court will, therefore, refer the matter to the Resident Magistrate, who, after interviewing Mrs. Morrison apart from her husband, will report to the Court whether she understands the nature of the application, and consents to it of her own free will. The deed of settlement produced would seem to show that the parties did not intend to marry in community, and, if the report of the Magistrate is satisfactory, there will be no further objection to the proposed registration.

PRINCE V. MYBURGH. { 1904.

Lease — Cancellation for non-payment of rent—Waiver of rights under lease

This was an action brought by Mrs. Prince, widow of the late George Prince, farmer, of Stellenbosch, against Frank Myburgh, for cancellation of a lease of a certain farm, which had been let to the defendant for a period of three years.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was the widow of the late George Prince, who died on the 25th January, 1904, and she was executrix of the estate of her late husband. The defendant was a farmer, residing at Stellenbosch. On the 24th April, and during the lifetime of George Prince, the plaintiff, acting for him, entered into a certain written agreement of lease with the defendant, by which the latter had a tenancy of the farm Retreat for a period of three years from the 1st May, 1903. It was also agreed that the rent should be payable half yearly, the first payment to be made on the 31st October, and that the defendant should account to the plaintiff for the rent of certain labourers' cottages on the farm. On the 31st October the half-yearly rent of £115 was not paid, nor had the £36 rent for labourers' cottages been accounted for. As the rent had not been paid within the thirty days' grace allowed in the lease, plaintiff claimed a cancellation of the lease. The defendant had also neglected the farm, and cut down fruit trees against the terms of the lease. In January, the defendant paid £100, and a receipt for that amount was given by the plaintiff's attorneys. The plaintiff accepted the amounts paid by the defendant, under the distinct understanding that it would not prejudice the plaintiff's right to cancellation of the lease. Plaintiff prayed for a cancellation of the lease, and that the defendant be ordered to account and debate the sums of £25 and £5 10s., with production of proper vouchers.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted that he was paid the £36 for the rent of the cottages, but said that this indebtedness was outside the terms of the lease, and that if the plaintiff did acquire any right to the cancellation of the lease it was annulled by her acceptance of payment of rent in January. Previous to the 6th January, when the rent was paid the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £25 for repairs to a dam, and £5 10s. for sundry other repairs. Defendant stated that he came to a settlement with Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller, who allowed him for the amount of the work to the dam, when he paid the rent. Defendant admitted that he owed plaintiff £9, and tendered that in full settlement.

The plaintiff, in her replication, denied that she was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £30 10s., as the defendant had not satisfied her that the sums were actually expended. The fruit trees cut down by the defendant were sound.

The rejoinder set out that the defendant had spent £50 on the reconstruction of the dam, and £5 10s. for other work. When he paid the rent in January it was duly accepted by the agent of the plaintiff.

Mr. M. de Villiers was for the plaintiff, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. Gardiner), appeared for the defendant.

Susanna Prince said that in April last she entered into an agreement with the defendant as to the farm Retreat, and the cottages thereon. Everything was in good order when the defendant took possession in May last. A flower garden had disappeared, but as far as she knew, the cottages were in good repair. The drawing-room of the dwelling-house had been used as a dairy. Her late husband and herself were always prepared to keep the farm in good order, if notice was given to them. Myburgh was to put up a couple of new doors, but a fortnight ago she found them lying at the back of the house. The defendant did not deny that on the 30th July he received the rent of the cottages. Witness strongly objected to the defendant removing any fruit trees. She wrote to him several times for the rent, but he took no notice of her. During December she told the defendant that she wanted a new lease, by which she would have her rent in advance. On the 8th December she gave notice to her attorneys, who wrote to the defendant stating that if the rent was not paid by the 14th December, proceedings would be taken for the cancellation of the lease. Payment was not made on the 14th December, but later on she met the defendant, to whom she gave an extension. He was to pay £60 on the 24th December, and the balance a week later, on the conditions that a new lease should be entered into. She wrote to her attorneys again on the 29th December, on his failure again to pay, and meeting the defendant on the same day, she agreed to withdraw the summons on condition that he would cancel the lease, and pay on the 6th January. This the defendant agreed to. On the 7th January, she wrote to the defendant not to worry her any more about the farm, and setting forth the terms of the new lease. The defendant had no right to spend £60 on the dam without her authority, and the £5 10s. she knew nothing about.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: The farm was not totally neglected. Witness never told defendant with regard to the fruit trees that she was no farmer, and he could do what he liked with them. The farm was now being worked better than in her husband's time. She was quite willing to pay half the expense of the reconstruction of the dam, provided a good job was made. On several occasions she met Mr. Myburgh at the Grand Hotel, and on one occasion she agreed to an extension of time, and the lease, if he paid £60 on December 29, and the balance a week later.

John Rous, agricultural labourer, stated that he lived in one of the cottages of the farm, and the custom was that the materials should be supplied by Mrs. Prince, and that the tenants repaired the cottages themselves. The defendant had never repaired the cottages. The dam was working now, but the man who repaired it only went half as deep as he (witness) understood he was to go. He had chopped timber which had been sold in the village. The drawing-room had been used as a dairy.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Myburgh had not stopped him getting material for the repair of the cottages. Witness had offered to do the repair to the dam for £50. Lourens had carried out the reconstruction according to Mr. Myburgh's instructions. The defendant did not send the trees into the village on Mrs. Prince's account.

William Minnis stated that formerly he worked on the farm as an agricultural labourer. When the defendant came on to the farm he instructed witness to plough the orchard. The defendant also told him to clear the vineyard out. Most of the trees dug out were good trees.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He did not care what experts thought; he was under the opinion that the trees were good.

Thomas Cairncross, civil engineer, stated that on the 12th April last he went to Retreat to inspect the outside of the buildings and a dam. He found the drawing-room had been used as a rough store and a dairy. The material used for the dam was absolutely useless. He reckoned about £20 worth of work had been done.

Cross-examined by Mr. W. P. Buchanan: He had experience of all sorts of dams. He was not thinking of the Molteno Reservoir when he spoke of the dam at Stellenbosch.

William Scott, auctioneer and broker, stated that he inspected the dam, and estimated that it would cost about £20 or £25.

Alfred Beard stated that he never inspected the dam specially when he visited the farm. He got his authority to act as the plaintiff's agent about the 7th January. He never told the defendant that he approved of the dam. Witness had heard the arrangement that the defendant should have time to pay the rent if the old lease was cancelled.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He understood from Myburgh that the dam would cost £50 or £60. He saw a lot of small receipts for the dam. The defendant said that the rent of the cottages had better stand over, as he was spending money on the dam. The principal feature of the new lease that the defendant agreed to was that the rent should be paid every three months in advance.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Percival Havers, farmer, stated that he had to pass through Retreat to get on to his own farm. The fruit trees were undoubtedly useless. The defendant had cultivated the land very well. In his opinion the value of the farm had been increased fully one-third in the hands of Mr. Myburgh.

By Hopley, J.: Had the orchard been his he would have cleared it out.

Thomas Micklem, fruit farmer, stated that he inspected the trees for the late Mr. Prince, and found them practically worthless. If there had been a good orchard close by it would have been in danger from infection.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He advised Mr. Prince to remove the trees, and he was aware that he had not done so.

Albert Caslin, fruit farmer, stated that he had sold the trees to the late Mr. Prince in 1894. Subsequently he had seen the cattle nibbling at the young trees. Just before Myburgh came on to the farm there was not a piece of cultivation anywhere. If neglected for two years the trees would become absolutely useless. The trees should have been taken out five years ago.

Abraham de Villiers, owner of the farm adjoining Retreat, stated that he planted trees the same year as Mr. Prince. At present witness's trees were in full bearing. Mr. Myburgh had cultivated the farm, and improved the value of the farm beyond expectation.

Horatio Graham, farmer, of Stellenbosch, stated that the fences were much better looked after under the defendant's tenancy. He was not a fruit farmer, but he could see that the trees had not been looked after. The Hottentot boys that had worked on the dam received £10 before Myburgh took it over. He considered the work on the dam full value for £50.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He could not say that the defendant had kept the farm well.

Peter Abrahams, contractor, said last year he did certain work on the farm Retreat, and gave Mr. Myburgh a receipt for £5 10s.

James Frederick Wilson, cab proprietor, stated that he drove Mrs. Prince and Mr. Beard out to the farm Retreat at the latter end of November or the beginning of December, and twice during the beginning of the year.

Arend Lourens, contractor, stated that in July last he took a contract from the defendant to clean the dam for £40. The dam was full of rushes, and had been absolutely neglected. The work had been done as cheaply as possible. The dam would never be washed away by any rain. What Mr. Cairncross saw was what he had thrown over the substantial wall of the dam.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He made the old wall a good deal broader. The dam did not leak as far as he knew.

William Mostert, attorney, stated at the time of the occurrences he was serving his articles in the office of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller. On the 29th December he had the summons ready to issue against Myburgh, but Beard came in and stayed the summons.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He had no definite instructions about a new lease, and he understood from the conversation that Myburgh refused to enter into a new lease. He thought it very reasonable to accept the balance of the money from the defendant on the day after he promised to pay the whole amount.

By Hopley, J.: He got no instructions that he was not to accept the rent until a new lease had been entered into. As far as he knew, the parties came to no definite arrangement about the terms of a new lease.

Francis William Myburgh, defendant in the case, stated that he had farmed the lands to the best of his ability. The fences were kept in good order, and new ones were constructed. When he took it only three morgen was under cultivation—he had cultivated about 100 morgen. The fruit trees he removed were really stumps; in fact, they were absolutely useless. When the plaintiff was on the farm with Beard she said

"You are a farmer, and you should know best." The first time a complaint was made about removing trees was at the end of the year. The plaintiff instructed him to have doors put in the coachhouse, and £5 10s. was a fair price for the work and material. The dam was made in the usual way for the reasonable cost of £50. There was a small leak, and he was going to have it made right. The plaintiff was aware that he was short of money, and she gave him an extension of time to pay the rent. The plaintiff did not make any new conditions on December 26, and it was untrue that Mostert had been instructed not to receive the rent unless a new lease had been entered into. The plaintiff wanted a new lease, stipulating that the rent should be paid quarterly in advance, but witness would not accept that condition.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller wrote to him about a new lease after he had paid his rent. He thought the matter was finished when he paid the rent. It was true that he had put milk in the drawing-room, but he could not see that it did any harm.

This concluded the evidence, and Mr. De Villiers having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J., without calling upon Mr. Buchanan for the defence, said that it was most regrettable that the parties had not been able to settle this case without incurring the serious expense of a lawsuit. He was under no doubt as to the way judgment should go, so had not called upon the defendant's counsel. He could sympathise with Mrs. Prince, as Myburgh was a bad payer, and would probably get on the nerves of people who expected money from him. This sort of tenant was a nuisance. The declaration set forth the terms of the lease. It was entered into on April 24, 1903, and the declaration went on to say that the defendant did various things in variance of the terms of the lease, neglected to maintain in good order and repair the existing fences, transgressed clauses 5 and 6, destroyed a number of fruit trees (against the express desire of the plaintiff), and did not and does not manage the farm in a husbandlike manner. At various times after October 31 the plaintiff notified the defendant that unless the rent was paid she would forthwith avail herself of the right to cancel. The defendant did not pay, and plaintiff said she was therefore entitled to cancel. What the Court had to do was to see whether the defendant had so behaved and the plaintiff in, her reply so behaved that the lease was cancelled and the defendant must be ordered to quit. The rent was £230 per annum, and the dates of payment October 31 and April 30. Clause 10 of the lease said that unless the lessee paid the rent within thirty days after it became due the lessor might cancel the lease and eject the lessee. When the first half-year's rent became due on October 31 defendant did not pay. He had, however, meanwhile under agreement with Mrs. Prince spent or was spending the sum of £50 upon a dam and the sum of £5 10s. on some repairs necessary to the building, which he said Mrs. Prince had agreed to. It appeared that this was the case. Mrs. Prince and Mr. Beard (who seemed to have become the adviser of Mrs. Prince) very frequently went to the farm, and must have seen the way the dam was being cleaned out, and they must have seen after a certain time that trees were taken up, but there was no strong protest set forth and no objection to anything defendant had done up to the time that Mrs. Prince began to be worried by the non-payment of the rent. Mrs. Prince was there apparently after her flower garden was pulled up.

Myburgh said there was this little bit of garden, but the rest of the farm had been neglected. The Court did not think that the taking away of the fence from round the flower garden was a breach of the lease, in spite of clause 7. With regard to the fruit trees, Myburgh said that Mrs. Prince and Mr. Beard were walking with him, and he pointed out the trees, and said that they had never thriven, that they were in a poor state, and not worth keeping. Upon this point they had also the evidence of farmers and experts in the district, who all said that it could hardly be called an orchard at all. The gates had been left open and the cattle had gone in and weeds had grown up, and the trees had become diseased, and were absolutely worthless. Myburgh swore that Mrs. Prince said: "Well, Mr. Myburgh, you are a practical farmer, you know best. You know more about these things than I do." This seemed likely upon the evidence given. It was not likely Myburgh would want to uproot the trees if they were good and likely to bring him in a return. The Court had no doubt that in uprooting these trees defendant acted wisely, and that he had the authority of Mrs. Prince. The next point was as to whether defendant had neglected the fences. The evidence abundantly proved that Myburgh farmed the farm in a decent, husbandlike manner, and that he had done nothing in the way of waste, but a good deal in the way of improvement. They therefore had to come to whether there was anything in the way he paid his rent that would justify Mrs. Prince in cancelling the lease. The defendant entered into an agreement to pay within thirty days after the due date, and if this was not done the lease could be cancelled, and he could be ejected. The Court would warn the defendant not to overlook this point in the future. Clause 10 said that the lessor might at her option cancel the lease and eject the tenant. The question was whether Mrs. Prince had exercised her option, and had told the lessee that he was to be ejected. If she had done so no Court would assist the defendant, because he would be bound by the terms of the agreement, but the lessee must know that the option was to be exercised. The lessor must know her own mind, and not blow hot and cold, and must not lead the lessee to believe that she was not going to exercise her option. The Court would not allow the lessor to take up a position like that and eject a lessee whom she had led into the idea of the security of his tenure. The plaintiff's declaration said that at various times after December 14 she notified the lessee of her intention to cancel the lease, and more specifically on December 29 she would cancel if not paid that day. She appeared to admit that up to December 29 she had only notified him that she would cancel if certain things did not happen, but she had not up to that date cancelled. Now, on December 29, the parties appeared to have met at the Grand Hotel. There was a summons out that day against Myburgh for the payment of the amount, and perhaps for the cancellation of the lease, and plaintiff said she notified him that unless the rent was paid that day she would cancel. But why did he not pay that day? Myburgh saw her, and told her about a sum he expected to receive on January 6, and the result was that Mrs. Prince sent Beard and defendant down to the office of her attorneys to explain to the attorneys, primarily, that they were to withdraw the summons, and that this new arrangement was come to. When they got to the attorneys all that was said was: "Withdraw the summons; we have given Myburgh up to January 6 to pay." They did not say, "We have cancelled the lease, so you can withdraw the summons." Nothing of that sort appeared to have happened. It appeared to be arranged that Myburgh could go on with the lease if he paid on January 6. There was no doubt something was said about a new lease. No doubt, Myburgh got on Mrs. Prince's nerves, as he was a bad payer, and she might have intended that there should be a new lease and payment in advance, but nothing appears to have been written by Mrs. Prince or agreed to by Myburgh. Mrs. Prince appeared to rely a good deal upon her letter of December 8, but on December 16 the parties met, and entered into an agreement for Myburgh to plant 10,000 grafted vine trees. It was clear at that time they were contemplating carrying on under the old lease; not a word was said about a new lease or any new terms of payment. Even if they had told Myburgh they would only allow him to stop upon condition of his accepting a new lease, then the action should have been to call upon Myburgh to accept a new lease. This course was not taken, and it was said that the payment on January 6 had nothing to do with the right of the plaintiff to eject the defendant from the farm. There was nothing to show that Mrs. Prince ever put it to Myburgh clearly that the lease must be cancelled; so Myburgh went to plaintiff's attorneys and paid them the rent, after going into accounts, the matter of the dam and doors, and then the attorneys gave him the receipts produced. Not on the receipts or anywhere was there anything about a new lease having been agreed upon, or that the payment was taken, except unconditionally. Myburgh said it was taken unconditionally, and Mostert supported him. There was then no absolute, specific cancellation. Even if there had been a cancellation, and it had been properly exercised by the lessor, if afterwards she led her tenant to believe that everything was to go on as before she could not come to the Court for an order to cancel the lease and eject the tenant. No Court would listen to such a plea. The defendant's plea appeared to be the right one, that plaintiff did not exercise the right, but waived it and accepted the rent. For those reasons there must be judgment for the plaintiffs for the £89 tendered, with costs up to the time of the tender; costs hereafter to be paid by the plaintiff. In other words, upon the first prayer there would be judgment for the defendant, and upon the second prayer of the declaration judgment for the plaintiff, with costs up to the date of defendant's tender.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte J. I. DE VILLIERS, { 1904.
May 18th.

Lunatic—Curator—Judicial declaration of lunacy.

The Magistrate's order for detention of an alleged lunatic, although confirmed by a judge, is not such a declaration of lunacy as would justify the Court in appointing a permanent curator of the alleged lunatic's property. For the purpose of such an appointment it is necessary that a summons should be issued and served in the usual way.

Mr. Close moved, on behalf of the petitioner, who is secretary of the Paarl Board of Executors, for the appointment of a curator bonis in the estate of Magdalena Elizabeth Louw, a lunatic, who was entitled to usufruct under a certain will. The respondent was under treatment at the Valkenberg Asylum, and was detained under a Magistrate's order, given at Worcester. She had been in the asylum some 18 years.

Mr. Close: She comes in under the old Act of 1879. Section 4 of Act 35 of 1891 makes many important changes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do any other previous Acts provide for the appointment of a permanent curator to anybody who has not been declared a lunatic by order of Court?]

I am not aware of any such Act.

[De Villiers, C. J.: I can grant an order for the appointment of a temporary curator, but if you want a permanent curator to be appointed, why not apply to have the woman declared a lunatic in the ordinary way? Does not section 4 of Act 35 of 1891 apply only to those who have been declared lunatics by the Court?]

My contention is that all persons detained under Act 20 of 1879 may have a permanent curator appointed. Part 3 of Act 35 of 1891, and not part 1, applies to those detained under Act 20 of 1879.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has she been declared a lunatic under section 34 of Act 35 of 1891? A judge's certificate given on the strength of the respective certificates of two medical practitioners is not a declaration of lunacy.]

If a man has been confined for some time, the Court may declare him not to be a lunatic. See section 12 and 14 of Act.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There you have it that the Magistrate can order only detention and the appointment of a temporary curator.]

Then I would ask for the appointment of a curator ad litem, and would suggest the appointment of Advocate Russell.

De Villiers, C.J.: There never has been a formal judicial order in which the respondent has been declared a lunatic. There has been a process under the Lunacy Act by which her detention in a lunatic asylum has been ordered, but such an order does not involve such a judicial declaration of lunacy as, in my opinion, is required in a case where the Court is asked to appoint a permanent curator bonis. The 15th section of Act No. 1 of 1897 clearly shows that where a curator bonis is appointed to a person who has been ordered to be detained under the Act, he is a curator for the temporary care or custody; but if there is to be a permanent curator, then the sub-section (2) of section 15 must be followed, and a summons must be served upon the lunatic and the curator to appear in Court, and show cause why the alleged lunatic should not be declared a lunatic. The order of the Court will be that a summons be issued, calling upon the respondent to show cause why she should not be declared of unsound mind, Mr. Advocate Russell to be appointed curator ad litem, summons to be served upon the respondent and the curator ad litem, and to be returnable on the 2nd June, with leave to the applicant to prove the alleged lunacy by means of affidavits.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

Ex parte CRONJE.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the passing of a certain mortgage bond upon an estate in the division of Riversdale, subject to certain payments. Some nine beneficiaries were interested in the estate, five of these being minors. It would be a great advantage to the minors if they could retain the property, their share of the payments being £16 odd each.

The Master's report was favourable. Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte SCOTT.

Mr. Percy Jones moved on behalf of the petitioner, an executor in the estate of the late Wm. Scott, of Cape Town, of the firm of W. and G. Scott, for an order confirming the sale of half share in certain property to the petitioner. All the heirs consented, except that in the case of one who was married in community to a Mr. Donald, who was an engineer at sea, her husband's signature had not been obtained.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte PHILLIPS.

Mr. Gutsche moved on behalf of the petitioner, who is the executrix under the joint will of her late husband and herself, for leave to mortgage certain cottages at Mowbray, in order to carry out improvements and alterations required by the Municipality of Mowbray. The estimated outlay was over £130. There were already certain bonds on the property, and other charges were due.

De Villiers, C.J., explained that the Registrar had not been provided with a copy of the Master's report, while the attorneys had a copy. It was very strange, he said, because the report was really made to the Court.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte CROSBIE.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent the minor children of the petitioner and Wm. Crosbie in a special case concerning the construction of the will of the late Robert Crosbie.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Advocate Gardiner to be curator ad litem of the minors in the action proposed to be instituted.

BOTHA V. DE BRUIN.

Mr. De Waal moved for the appointment of a curator bonis to manage the affairs of the respondent, who was certified by a doctor to be unable to manage his own affairs. The applicant was respondent's mother.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that there should be more than mere certificates from medical men. One of the two certificates produced was four years old.

Mr. De Waal said that notice had been served on the respondent.

De Villiers, C. J., said the case was wholly incomplete. The Court could not upon two certificates, not upon oath, make the order asked for. If the opinion of doctors had to be stated it should be by means of affidavits. On the whole, he (the Chief Justice) considered that, having regard to the value of the property, there should be a curator appointed, and the Court would grant leave to issue a summons against Jacobus Albertus de Bruin, returnable on the 2nd June, calling on him to show cause why he should not be declared of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his own affairs. The Court would appoint the Assistant Magistrate at Maraisburg as curator ad litem, with instructions to report to the Court as to the state of mind of the respondent. Leave would be granted to prove respondent's state of mind by means of the affidavits of medical men—not certificates, but affidavits as to his present state of mind.

FOSTER AND OTHERS V. ROESTOFF AND OTHERS.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for an order for ejectment, and for an interdict. Granted.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising petitioner to take over liability under a certain bond. The Master reported that this course would be for the benefit of the minor interested. Granted.

CONTATS' COLLIERIES V. CONTAT.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan), moved on behalf of the liquidators of Contats' Collieries for an order allowing the payment of certain witnesses' expenses, or referring the matter back to the taxing officer. The taxing officer refused to allow the expenses of certain witnesses, who were subpoenaed but not called at the trial. Plaintiff contended that the witnesses were, on the pleadings, material witnesses. The taxing officer reported that when the bill of costs came before him, defendant's attorneys objected to the expenses of these witnesses being allowed. Plaintiff's attorneys did not press for the expenses, and he (the taxing officer) thereupon disallowed them. Subsequently, the applicants wished to press the claims, but he (the taxing master) held he could not go into the matter again without the consent of the parties.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was clear that the witnesses in question were necessary witnesses, and the matter would be referred back to the taxing officer for re-consideration. The taxing officer, however, was quite right in holding that when once the taxation had been decided upon he should not reconsider it without either the consent of the parties or an order of Court. As to the costs of the present application, he considered there should be no order as to costs, because these costs might have been avoided if the matter had been pressed upon the taxing officer at the time when the first taxation was made.

OSBORNE V. OSBORNE.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for leave to the wife to sue the respondent in forma pauperis for divorce on the ground of misconduct and cruelty.

A rule was granted calling on respondent to show cause on the first day of next term why applicant should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis.

Postea (June 1st.) The rule was made absolute.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WEINTROB V. DE VILLIERS } 1904.
AND SCHAVEREIN. { May 18th.

This was an action brought by Louis Weintrob, of the Paarl, against the first-named defendant, for transfer of certain property, and to declare the subsequent sale to the second defendant null and void. The plaintiff appeared in person, Mr. W. Buchanan appeared for the first defendant, and Mr. Gardiner for the second defendant.

The plaintiff stated that he had paid his advocate £40 10s., and had had no notice of the trial.

[Hopley, J.: You mean you have paid your attorneys that amount; you don't pay advocates that amount of money.]

Mr. Buchanan: His attorneys have withdrawn from the case.

[Hopley, J.: What is your position?]

Plaintiff: I am quite willing to go on with the case and take transfer immediately.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

DAVIS V. STEVENS. { 1904.
May 19th.

Mr. Roux moved for an order, authorising the liquidation of a certain partnership business. The petitioner stated that he desired to dissolve partnership, and had endeavoured to discontinue the business, but the respondent refused to agree to a liquidation. Petitioner suggested the appointment of Mr. W. H. Gray, as liquidator.

The respondent said that the application was unnecessary, as he had always been ready and willing to terminate the business. This action was principally brought as a matter of spite in order to saddle him with costs. The total value of the goods in the partnership business was small; there was very little left now but fixtures.

Order granted for the liquidation of the business, Mr. Gray being appointed liquidator, costs to be divided between the parties.

Ex parte BECKER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute for an order authorising the transfer of certain property.

Rule made absolute.

ESTATE DE SWARDT AND { 1904.
OTHERS V. SURVEYOR—{ May 19th.
GENERAL AND OTHERS. { " 20th.

Land beacons—Amended title—
Act 9 of 1879.

Notice was duly given to the applicants in terms of the first proviso to the 4th section of Act 9 of 1879, that unless within thirty days after service thereof an objection were lodged with the Divisional Council to the boundaries adopted on survey, they would be deemed to have consented thereto, but the applicants failed, not inadvertently but deliberately, to raise any objection within the time specified.

Mr. Buchanan said that his client contended there was a cancellation of the sale by reason of the plaintiff's non-fulfilment of the conditions of the contract.

[Hopley, J.: I don't see how he can have any claim against the second defendant, except he alleges collusion between the defendants.]

He does not plead that, my lord. Counsel then proceeded to read the pleadings.

[Hopley, J.: I expect all the money was spent in the previous litigation pleadings.]

Plaintiff: They never said anything about money.

[Hopley, J.: Why don't you see your attorneys?]

I have no time, my lord; they said when I saw them that it was too late.

[Hopley, J.: It can't have been that; the attorneys would only be too glad to interfere.]

Mr. Buchanan: I have been told, my lord, that his attorneys have refused to act for him because he can't make further payments.

[Hopley, J.: According to what you say, it is probable that his attorneys have not given him notice.]

Mr. Buchanan: His attorneys have taken action against him for civil imprisonment for a debt of £80.

Plaintiff: Nothing of the sort, I have managed all that.

[Hopley, J.: When did you hear of these proceedings?]

Plaintiff: I heard on Saturday.

Mr. Gardiner: The case was originally set down for the 6th.

[Hopley, J.: Where are your witnesses?]

Plaintiff: I have got a lot of witnesses at the Paarl.

[Hopley, J.: When will you be ready to have your witnesses here?]

I think by the 15th June.

[Hopley, J.: You will swear you had no notice?]

Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: I think he is often in the Supreme Court.

Plaintiff: I have paid my debts.

Hopley, J., said he did not like to be harsh in the case, and to take advantage of the plaintiff's position.

Mr. Buchanan produced Mr. Faure, who stated that he had sent notice to the plaintiff's attorneys at the Paarl.

The plaintiff then gave evidence, and stated that he only knew of the case on Saturday, 7th inst.

Hopley, J., remarked to the plaintiff that he had given a lot of trouble. The case would be specially set down for 15th June, and there could be no excuses then, costs to be reserved.

Held, that the applicants were not entitled to an order restraining the Surveyor-General from giving an amended title according to the said boundaries to the owners of the land on whose behalf such notice had been given.

This was an application brought by A. H. Stander, J. C. Botha, Jan Hendricus Barnard, Anna M. de Swardt (executrix testamentary in the estate of her late husband), and others against the Surveyor-General of the Cape Colony, Dirk M. Lamprecht, J. S. Gericke, and others. The petitioners are co-owners, with certain others, in undivided shares of the quitrent farm Gwayang, in extent 2,492 morgen, in the division of George, and the respondents are the Surveyor-General and the owners of the adjacent farm Brakfontein, also known as Schimmelkans, the said owners having applied to the Surveyor-General for the issue to them of amended title and diagram of the said farm Brakfontein. The application was for an interdict restraining the first-named respondent from preparing for issue and issuing amended title of Brakfontein, and the other respondents from proceeding with their application for such amended title pending the institution by petitioners of an action for a declaration of rights on the question of the disputed boundary line between Gwayang and Brakfontein.

It appeared that the respondents had had a survey carried out of their property, and had applied to the Surveyor-General for the issue of an amended title. Mr. W. H. Ballot, the Surveyor, employed by the respondents, informed petitioners that he had re-surveyed the farm Brakfontein for the purpose of obtaining an amended title under Act 9 of 1879, and that unless petitioners lodged an objection to the boundary line within 30 days with the Divisional Council of George in terms of section 93 Act 7, of 1865, they would be deemed to have consented. This the petitioners failed to do. They now said that the survey prejudiced their interests. Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the petitioners; Mr. M. Bisset was for the respondents.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Why have the petitioners allowed more than 30 years to elapse before making their claim?]

Mr. Searle, K.C.: They had not obtained their diagram.

[De Villiers, C. J.: That was no reason for not objecting to the boundary line.]

Mr. Searle, K.C.: The question is whether the applicants can now be debarred from objecting to the boundary line under the circumstances of this case. See sec. 4 of Act 9 of 1879. In June the Surveyor-General told them to state their objections to the Divisional Council.

Sec. 93 of the Land Beacon's Act is very obscure, but it is not against us.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The six months had not expired?]

No, but neither the Divisional Council nor the Surveyor-General did anything.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Under what Act was the amended title granted?]

Under Act 9 of 1879. None of the applicants let alone three-fourths have agreed. Sec. 4 of the Act requires a formal notice of agreement, but no such notice has been given. I suggest that this section applies only when the parties agree; but here there was no agreement, and the applicants protested to the surveyor against the boundary. It would be very hard on these people were they to lose their land.

[De Villiers, C. J.: They had plenty of time wherein to come to the Court.]

They could not get their diagrams. The Surveyor-General evidently did not consider that the matter was settled, as he advised them to apply to the Divisional Council.

[De Villiers, C. J.: These people received notice to lodge their objection within 30 days, and they did not do so?]

The clause as to the 30 days is directory, and not imperative. Had it been imperative there would have been an enacting clause. Here no less than 32 morgen is proposed to be taken away, and it is said that because one man had had his farm re-surveyed the whole boundary line is to be changed, and all co-proprietors are to suffer. Under sec. 93 we are entitled to six months' notice.

[De Villiers, C. J.: From what time do these six months' date?]

Obviously not from the same time as the 30 days referred to in the Act of 1879.

[De Villiers, C. J.: You have not given the 30 days' notice after you were warned to do so. Are you not now estopped?]

The Act does not say so.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Suppose the legislature had said that if the owner did not give notice within 30 days' he should be barred from doing so?]

The section is only for the purpose of fixing the time and the mode of procedure.

[De Villiers, C. J.: You can only ask the Court to grant relief. See Steydman v. Oudtshoorn Divisional Council.]

Mr. Bisset: I submit that sec. 4 of Act 9 of 1879 is not intended to bring the procedure prescribed by Act 7 of 1865 under that of Act 9 of 1879. As to the six months' referred to in Act 9 of 1879, the applicant has failed to raise his objection within 30 days, and therefore he cannot do so now.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Suppose that an objection had been raised, what would have been the procedure?]

The Divisional Council would have appointed a surveyor under sec. 9 of Act 4 of 1865.

[De Villiers, C. J.: But the parties do not intend to proceed in that way, and wish their rights to be decided by the Court. It may be that they cannot now proceed under the Land Beacon's Act; but may they not come to Court to have their rights decided?]

I submit not.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Do not the provisions of sec. 4 of Act 9 of 1879 refer only to procedure under the Land Beacons' Act? It is quite a different question as to whether a person forfeits his right under the common law by not giving notice.]

I submit he does if he is taken to have consented. The petitioners have been most dilatory. They have allowed in all nearly two years to elapse, after they got notice, before taking action. If they were likely to suffer irreparable injury why were they so negligent?

Mr. Searle (in reply): This act was not intended to apply to cases in which there was a bona fide dispute as to boundaries. In any case there is nothing in the Act to show any intention to oust the jurisdiction of this Court.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (May 20th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application by the owners of the farm Gwayang, in the district of George, for an order restraining the respondents, the Surveyor-General, and the owners of the farm Brakfontein, from proceeding for an amended title in terms of Act 9 of 1879. The ordinary proceedings were taken by the respondents for the purpose of having an amended title. A surveyor was appointed, Surveyor Ballot, and he took all the steps required by the Act for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the owners of the adjoining farm Brakfontein. The preamble of the Act 9 of 1879 is relied upon on behalf of the applicants, and it has been urged on their behalf that inasmuch as the Surveyor was told by the applicants that they did not agree to the boundaries, the Act did not apply. It appears to me that the object of the 4th section of the Act was to define cases in which owners of the adjoining land should be considered not to have disputed the boundaries. The surveyor seems to have used every consideration towards the owner of the adjoining land. All the required notices were given, and, not only that, but the proprietors were informed that the surveyor was quite willing to meet them in an amicable manner. The surveyor, in his affidavit, states that he arranged with them to meet the owners of Brakfontein on the 10th March on the ground in dispute, when he would point out the beacons and so on. At the appointed time and place only four or five of the owners of Gwayang appeared without powers to act for the rest. He (the surveyor) after they had been over the boundaries, claimed by the Brakfontein owners, offered to show to the applicants a true copy of the diagram of their ground, which he had in his possession, but this they declined to look at. Subsequently, a further appointment was made with the applicants, but they put in an appearance so late that the owners of Brakfontein had gone away again. The surveyor then gave them notice under Act 9 of 1879, and told them they would have 30 days within which to lodge their objection. The notice was delayed until the 14th April, 1902, and even then no objection was lodged within the specified period. The notice was served in due form in terms of the Act, 30 days were allowed to expire, and no steps were taken by the owners of Gwayang in terms of the Act. The applicants had full notice in terms of the 4th section of the Act that unless within 30 days after service of the notice an objection were lodged they would be taken to have consented, they elected not to object and they must now be deemed to have consented. In the present case it appears to me that it was not a mere oversight, not a mere inadvertence—if it had been a case of mere inadvertence possibly the Court would have power under its general jurisdiction to have given relief to the applicants—but the applicants refused to look at the diagram, they had ample time to raise the objection, and they failed to raise the objection. In my opinion they must be deemed to have consented to the diagram as proposed. It is true that the 4th section of the Act of 1879 refers to the 83rd section of the Act of 1865, but not for the purpose of altering the time within which the notice must be given. The later Act should prevail if there is a conflict as to the time in which objection should be made, i.e., 30 days after service of notice. In my opinion, therefore, the applicants are not entitled to the relief. It is their own fault that they are too late now, and the Act would be made to fail in its objects if the Court were, in the case of a deliberate refusal to comply with the terms of the Act, to give the applicants relief. The application will, therefore, be refused with costs.

There being no affidavit of service, the matter was ordered to stand over.

ESTATE KROESE V. KROESE { 1904.
AND OTHERS. { May 19th.

Mutual will—Executors of the same estate appointed under two wills.

A. and B., married in community, made a joint will, by which they appointed each other as heirs "of our estate until our death, and as executor we appoint the survivor of us and as executors of our joint estate after our death we appoint our sons," the applicants. B., the wife, died, upon which A. adiated and remained in possession of the joint estate. He married a second wife and made a second will, jointly, with her, by which they revoked all previous wills except the one just mentioned, and they appointed the respondent as executor. A. died, and the Master issued letters of administration in favour of the respondent, and the applicants as executors of A.'s estate. There was no application to set aside this appointment, but the applicants asked for an order, declaring that the respondent was not entitled to interfere with the assets of A. acquired before the death of his first wife.

Held, that in the absence of any proof that the respondent did not intend to abide loyally by both wills, the order should not be made.

The applicants were the executors of the estate of the late Maria Margarita Kroese, and respondents were executors of the late Christiaan Hendrik Nicolaas Kroese. It was stated on affidavit that the deceased persons named were married in community of property. The parties made a joint will, under which first the survivor, and after his or her death, Johannes Godfrey Kroese, Jan Kroese, and Christiaan Hendrik Nicholas Kroese (one of the respondents) were appointed as executors. The wife died in February, 1900, and the survivor remarried. He died in 1903, leaving a will making certain dispositions to his second wife and others, and appointing Johannes Godfrey Kroese, one of the applicants (Jan Godfrey Kroese), and the secretary of the Malmesbury Board of Executors as executors. After his first wife's death, the survivor adiated under the will, and remained in possession of the estate. The Master, after the death of the survivor, granted letters of administration of his estate to the respondents, who, with Johannes Godfrey Kroese, were appointed executors of the estate under the first will. Applicants contended that there was a specific appointment in the will of the survivor and his second wife of executors, who did not include Christian Hendrik N. Kroese, jun., and they now applied for an order setting aside the appointment of the last named as executor, on the ground that the appointment was wrong, and appointing applicant and the secretary of the Malmesbury Board of Executors as executors under the second will to deal with property acquired by the testator after the death of his first wife.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicant): This case is very similar to that of Rudolph v. Rudolph (12 S.C.R., 361), though the two cases are not quite on all fours. There the will did not provide for an executor after the death of the survivor. Here the will does make such provision (see the judgment in Rudolph's case at page 364, where several cases are brought up.) In the present case we have an executor appointed under a joint will, who is to administer after the death of the survivor. The executors under the first will are excluded. The Master has included as a co-executor testamentary a person whose name is not mentioned in the will. He has no such power. I submit that Mr. Kotze's attitude in insisting on administering the estate by himself is most unreasonable. Christian should never have been appointed as executor of the last will, because even though he was executor testamentary under the first joint will, he was not an executor under the last will. Christian should never have been appointed as an executor of the last will. He had been appointed an executor testamentary under the first mutual will, but he was not so appointed under the last will.

[De Villiers, C. J.: It is an anomaly that there should be two sets of executors for the same estate.]

See Brand's case (4 Juta. 320). This is a leading case on the point, and there an executor was appointed to administer the whole estate under a second will.

[De Villiers, C. J.: How many executors has the Master appointed?]

Three under the second will. The father confirms the appointments of the first will, are also executors under the first will save as to Christian; thus he is an executor of his mother's estate, but not of his father's.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Should not the executors under the first will be joined with those under the second?]

That would be so if it were clear what would happen. Suppose that one party wishes to distribute in one way and the other in another.

[De Villiers, C. J.: They could always come to the Court. The whole question seems to be one of distribution and administration.]

Yes, but the Board of Executors are in possession. We offered to share the commission with them, but they insisted on having the Master's opinion.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Why should not all join in the administration. When you come to the distribution possibly there might be a difficulty.]

The persons who should do that are those who are appointed under both wills. Kotze, however, insists on administering the whole joint estate.

Mr. Searle (for respondents): The applicants are the executors of the first dying, but they take up the position that they are executors of the whole joint estate. It would be very inconvenient to have two sets of executors. It is said that the applicants are prepared to share the commission, but Christian's letter to Kotze goes much further than that, and claims the right to administer both estates. The application means that the executors of the survivor should administer the whole joint estate. We object to that, and I submit that this application is necessary.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): We could not ask to have the appointment of Kotze set aside because he has a right to administer the property acquired after the death of the first dying which would not be included in the bequest.

[De Villiers, C. J.: I cannot understand how you can have two sets of executors to administer the same estate?]

That was done in Brand's case.

[De Villiers, C. J.: All the executors must join in all formal acts. If there are three, two of them cannot pass transfer.]

But Kotze wants to administer the whole estate.

[De Villiers, C. J.: According to law.]

He does not say what his interpretation of the law is.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Why should he? If he should attempt to do anything illegal you can always come to the Court.]

De Villiers, C.J.: I think it is to be regretted that Mr. Kotze, in his answer to the applicants, was not more specific. It is a very curt letter, and possibly there may be a misunderstanding as to what he really meant, but the letter is quite capable of the meaning that he intends to administer the estate jointly with the other co-executors in accordance with the wishes expressed by the testator in both wills. The Master has appointed three executors of the estate of the survivor. There has been no attempt to set aside that appointment of the three executors. It will be the duty of the three executors who have been appointed to administer the estate, in terms of both wills, but until it is clear, from some overt act or from something specifically said by Kotze that he does not intend to abide loyally by the terms of the first will, I do not think this Court should interfere. There will consequently be no order, but the costs may well come out of the estate, because there seems to have been a misunderstanding, and that misunderstanding partly arose out of the terms in which Mr. Kotze wrote his letter. If he had explained himself more fully, as he did in the subsequent affidavit, possibly this question might not have arisen. In regard to the costs, the question is: What estate was interested in having this question decided? Was it the second estate or the first estate, or both? If both estates were concerned in having this point decided, that would be a reason for letting costs come equally out of both estates, but, as far as I can judge at present, it is the first estate that is mainly interested in having this question decided.

TRIAL CAUSE.

HOLLAND V. SHERWOOD.

Quantity surveyor — Partnership — Division of profits.

This was an action brought by James Holland, architect and quantity surveyor, of Cape Town, against Edmund Sherwood, to recover £144 2s. 9d., being an proportionate share of certain work, which the parties had done in partnership.

The declaration set out that in October, 1902, the Corporation of the City of Cape Town, resolved to build certain electric sheds on the Dock-road. Plaintiff was engaged to take out the quantities, and it was agreed between plaintiff and defendant that the work should be done in the name of Sherwood and Co., one third to go to the plaintiff and two-thirds to the defendant. There was also the same understanding with regard to certain plans and specifications, which secured the second prize of £100, in the competition in connection with the baths. The successful tenderer for the Electric Sheds, Messrs. Hopkins and Co., were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £605, and the company admitted their liability to the defendant, who had drawn £400. The defendant was still owing the plaintiff £144 2s. 9d.

The plea denied that the plaintiff was a quantity surveyor. The defendant was approached by the plaintiff, who represented that he had taken out quantities, and would give them to defendant. It was thereupon agreed that the plaintiff should receive one-third of the proceeds. Plaintiff wholly failed to supply the said quantities, and defendant took them out himself, the plaintiff neither contributing work or expense towards them. The plaintiff had retained the £100 prize money. Defendant claimed in reconvention £54 17s. 3d., which added to the disbursements, would be two-thirds of the £100.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. McGregor (with him Dr. Greer), was for the defendant.

James Holland, plaintiff, stated that he was an architect and quantity surveyor.

[Hopley, J.: Are you a quantity surveyor?]

Yes, my lord.

[Hopley, J.: How long have you been a quantity surveyor?]

Witness: I may say I was born one. My father was one.

Continuing, witness said that up to the end of October, 1902, he was employed as an architectural draughtsman at the Town House. Witness drew up the plans for the electric light sheds. The specifications were necessary in taking out quantities. In October the defendant came to see him about the baths competition. The defendant said he had got all particulars, and asked witness if he would join him in taking out the quantities of the electric power works. Witness was to get one-third, and then he promised to consider the matter. On October 22 the defendant wrote offering again to give witness one-third on all the works, and this was duly accepted. In the arrangement witness was to supply the plans in pencil for the baths competition, and the defendant and his partner were to finish them. For the electric light-sheds he was to give defendant all information about the plans, and to give him assistance in getting out the quantities. Certain explanations were usually necessary from the architect before the quantities could be taken out. The defendant practically did nothing in connection with the baths competition. The Town Council issued the plans for the electric light sheds about the first week in November. When the plans were public property, the defendant made an appointment with witness to go down to his house to do the quantities. On the 9th November witness took out the measurements with his rule, and the defendant put them down in his book. When he left, the work had been practically done by him. On the 13th November defendant wrote that he was ready for the printers, and asking witness to guarantee the quantities. Witness guaranteed them as being correct. In connection with the plans for the new baths the defendant had done very little work. Several people he had engaged to complete the work kept worrying him for money. On February 27 the defendant wrote asking him to settle the matter amicably. If he had had any assistance from Mr. Sherwood he would have won the first prize of £1,000. On the 7th May the defendant wrote saying that there was something wrong with the quantities for the City Hall, but witness went down the following day, and said that there was nothing wrong.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: If Sherwood owed him money on the electric power sheds he owed the defendant money on the baths. He was quite sure that Mr. Pitts did not ink in the elevations. He did not send a letter contradicting Pitts, when he wrote that he had done so. When he got the cheque for £100 over the baths, he endorsed it himself, and spent the amount, as the defendant had drawn over £200 in connection with the electric power sheds. He did not state to the defendant when he called at the Town House that he had the quantities ready. It was not understood that if witness produced his quantities that the defendant would allow him something for them. He wrote to Mr. Grace that he was only a couple of hours with the defendant in making out the quantities.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He had a testimonial from the Town Council which mentioned his capability for taking out quantities. When one was acquainted with the specifications the quantities could be got out in quarter of the usual time. The work left to Sherwood was detailed work that could have been done by a clerk.

Einar Aune, Government land surveyor, stated that in November, 1902, the plaintiff got him to do some work on pencilled plans. Part of the ink-work had to be touched up. The plaintiff was in and out of the office several times, and he also helped on the plans.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: As far as he remembered, the elevations were not inked.

Frederick Grace, architectural draughtsman, said that in October and November, 1902, he was working with the plaintiff at the Town-house. The plans and specifications of the electric sheds had been in plaintiff's hands for a long time before witness took them over. He understood that plaintiff and defendant were in a partnership over the quantities. By knowing specifications, it would take a man about half the usual time to get out quantities.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The final plans and specifications were different from what the plaintiff had.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Edmund Sherwood (defendant) said that he told the plaintiff not to sign the cheque. Both the jobs were separate partnerships, as one was a certainty and the other was an uncertainty. Witness never approached the plaintiff, as he never knew he was a quantity surveyor. He was perfectly certain that the plaintiff came to him at the Town-house. The plaintiff said he had a full bill of quantities taken out, and said to witness, "What's the good of two people taking out quantities?" and then witness agreed to accept it. The reason he wanted to join the plaintiff was that he was afraid the builders would not accept the quantities. The plaintiff never rendered him an hour's assistance in the matter; in fact, he never produced a single sheet of paper. Day after day witness asked the plaintiff for his quantities. The plaintiff came to his house principally to induce witness to take him as a partner. On that day the plaintiff never rendered any assistance whatever in regard to the quantities. On the 4th November witness asked plaintiff for his quantities, and he promised to let witness have them. When plaintiff came to the house on the 9th November, he said that he was very sorry for overlooking the quantities. When he saw that the plaintiff was not forthcoming with quantities, witness went on with his own, and issued them in his own name. The plaintiff never saw the quantities drawn up by witness. It took his son and himself a week to draw up the quantities. He made the sketch plan of the ground floor and the baths while he was at Caledon.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He could get to know when the plans would be ready; he knew the running of the Town-house.

He did not know that the plaintiff drew up the plans and specifications. If the plaintiff's quantities were anything near his, it would have saved him a lot of time. Witness sent in his quantities about the 16th or 17th. He never wrote to say that as the plaintiff had not completed his part of the contract, that the agreement was off. When there was a dispute about the work, witness called for plaintiff's quantities, although he denied that the contract was open then.

Mrs. Sherwood (wife of the defendant) stated that on the 9th November, when the plaintiff came to the house, she remembered that there were no papers produced or any work done. The chief conversation was about a partnership with the defendant, which the plaintiff was anxious to bring about. She only saw him come once to the house.

Henry David Pitts, architect, stated that the defendant sent a plan for the baths competition, which witness handed over to the plaintiff, who had eight plans made out of it. Witness inked the major portion of the plans, but after some unpleasantness, witness said that he would have nothing more to do with the plans, and that was the cause of the work being sent out. His firm did fully two-thirds of the work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: The plaintiff agreed to bear his share of the outside cost.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: In this matter plaintiff sued defendant on contracts entered into for taking out bills of quantities for an electric power station and for designs for some Municipal baths. Plaintiff had been employed in the Town-house up till 1902, working mainly on the power-station plans, and it is clear that at about the time that tenders were about to be called for for the power-station the plaintiff and defendant came to an agreement to work with each other as to the taking out the quantities for that building. Each alleges that he was approached by the other. Now the defendant was a well-known quantity surveyor. If the plaintiff had been a recognised surveyor with a clientele, he would have had no need to ask the defendant to go in with him if he had the quantities already taken out. Defendant had a large connection in Cape Town amongst contractors. Therefore the plaintiff had every reason for approaching the defendant, while defendant had not equally potent reasons for approaching plaintiff. The baths transaction took place about the same time, and the terms of both agreements were stated in the same letter. The plaintiff said these two contracts were indivisible and inseparable, but there was no reason to disbelieve the defendant when he said that they were separate agreements, and were only put in the same letter because they happened about the same time. Sherwood had done a very substantial portion of the work for the baths design, David Pitts had also done some work, and would have done more but for the quarrel with plaintiff. Clearly, therefore, as to this, the parties worked together and must share the proceeds after deducting expenses. On this head defendant was entitled to £54 17s. 3d. As to the other contract, I cannot help thinking that defendant's version was the correct one. Plaintiff had induced the defendant to enter into the agreement with him by holding out that he had the bills of quantities all made out, which would have saved the defendant much labour and trouble, but as a fact the plaintiff never had any bills of quantities, and when one looked at the bulk of the bills of quantities and the specifications produced, it was impossible to think that anyone could carry all the details in his head, which is what the plaintiff said was all that he had alleged, and that he had only agreed to help when defendant took out quantities by the explanation he was able to give. Plaintiff had been engaged for two years on these plans, and he must have forgotten a great many of the details, and, moreover, the plans had been altered after he had left the Town Office. He never was really in a position to afford the substantial help which he had led the defendant to believe he could give him, and in the end the defendant had to take out the quantities himself unaided by the plaintiff, who had thus entirely failed to perform his part of the contract. Judgment must therefore be given to the defendant in convention, and also for the defendant (now plaintiff) in reconvention, for £54 17s. 3d. with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

TABORISKI V. HOFFENBERG. { 1904.
May 20th.

Release from civil imprisonment.

The Court granted an order for the release of a debtor from civil imprisonment on its appearing that he had no means of paying his debt.

This was an application by the respondent, Solomon Hoffenberg, for his release from civil imprisonment.

The applicant's affidavit said that he bought the goods which formed the subject of the action from Taboriski, and supplied them to customers who had run off and would not pay. He was willing to pay when he had means, but he was unable to earn anything at present.

The answering affidavit of Jacob Taboriski, stated that judgment was originally obtained in the Court of the R.M. at Wynberg for £8. Defendant had repeatedly moved about to evade service. If now released he would never pay the debt.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the plaintiff in the original case, Jacob Taboriski; the applicant appeared in person.

De Villiers, C. J., said that the debt was a very paltry one, and it was clear that the defendant had not the means. He would be granted his discharge from imprisonment.

Mr. Gardiner said he supposed that the applicant (Hoffenberg) would have to pay the costs.

His Lordship: No. I suppose they are co-religionists, and I think the plaintiff might have shown some consideration of Hoffenberg.

Ex parte VOGTS.

Mr. Alexander moved, on behalf of the petitioner, as representing certain beneficiaries, for leave to execute a mortgage bond on the Victoria Hotel, Victoria West, in order to provide for certain alterations and extensions. A minor was concerned.

The Master reported favourably. Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

PEISER V. BOOTSEN.

Mr. W. Buchanan appeared for the applicant, and asked for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for the recovery of £52 on a promissory note. Respondent had been resident in Griqua Town, but was now believed to be in German South-west Africa. Applicant asked that £313 7s. 8d., now in the hands of the sheriff, should be attached to satisfy the debt, and also asked for directions as to the mode of service. The country was now in a state of turmoil, and counsel suggested that leave might be given to effect service by means of registered letter.

The Court granted the order prayed for £75 in the hands of the sheriff to be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, rule returnable on the last day of next term, publication to be made once in "Ons Land" and notice to be sent by registered letter to respondent.

Ex parte COLEMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Close moved for an order for the compulsory winding up of the business of Coleman and Co., and the appointment of a liquidator.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the Robinson Bank) urged that the matter should be postponed, as no notice had been served on the voluntary liquidators at present acting in the estate.

The case was ordered to stand over until the 9th June, with leave to the applicants to serve affidavits on the 30th May, and notice to be given to the liquidators.

REX V. STANDEN.

1904.
May 20th.

Receipt—Payment of money—
Cheque—Stamp.

The appellant wrote to V. and B., who owed him money, asking them to send a cheque for the amount. They sent their cheque, whereupon the appellant gave them a receipt, as follows: "Received cheque." V. and B. had funds in the bank which was solvent, and honoured the cheque when presented.

Held, that the receipt was equivalent to a receipt for the payment of money and required a penny stamp.

This was an appeal from the decision of the A.R.M. of Cape Town, convicting the appellant under section 16, Act 20, of 1884. The appellant had received from Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne a cheque for £42 8s. 6d., and had marked the account "cheque received," and refused to give a stamped receipt as required by the Act.

Mr. Burton appeared for the appellant in this matter and Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

Mr. Burton said that the question was whether the words "received cheque" were a receipt for money. The word used in the Act was "money." What was money? It meant specie or coin of the realm. There was nothing in the Act to show that the Act extended to paper which might have a monetary value. The Act did not say money or money's worth.

[De Villiers, C. J.: What about bank-notes?]

Mr. Burton said that strictly speaking a receipt was not necessary for bank-notes.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Sometimes bank-notes are not legal tender.]

Mr. Burton said that this strengthened his case. Bank-notes as well as cheques were sometimes dishonoured. Government notice 372 of 1885 extended the provisions of the Act to all notes, paper, etc. Up till the passing of 54 and 55 Vjct., 1870, which defined money as including promissory notes, cheques, etc., the law in England was the same as ours. In the absence of express legislation of the same kind, he contended that money must be taken to mean coin of the realm.

Mr. Nightingale said that the appellant had really no case for appeal. Under the old state of the English law cases had been decided in a contrary direction. In (4 Espinasse's Reports, 1802), a case was reported which supported his contention.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Have you got the statute?]

Mr. Nightingale said that it was 43 George III., chapter 126, Section 1. A similar decision was given in the case of Spaworth v. Alexander (2 Espinasse's Reports, p. 620), under 35 George III., chap. 57. Any receipt given in full receipt for a debt must be held to require a stamp. Counsel quoted the case of Regina v. Boardman (2 Moodie and Robinson Reports, p. 143), and the case of Overton (6 Cox's Reports). The test to be applied was whether the document would be accepted as evidence in a court of law. The contention of the appellant was a mere quibble. A person was not compelled to give a receipt though he might be obliged to do so by action, but if he did give a receipt, he must comply with the revenue laws of the Colony.

Mr. Burton said, in reply, that all the cases quoted were cases in which there was an acknowledgement of a complete settlement of the debt. They all dealt with the discharge of the debt. The acknowledgement by one firm that the cheque of another firm had been received was surely not a receipt for payment of the debt.

De Villiers, C. J.: On the 26th of November, 1903, the appellant wrote to Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinné as follows: "Please let us have your cheque for the above amount," which was owing to him. It is clear, therefore, that at that time he was prepared to accept a cheque in payment of the debt. A cheque in his favour, or order, was sent, and he then wrote on the account, "received cheque, Standen and Sauer," but he omitted to affix a penny stamp. The question to be determined is whether the receipt was "a receipt for the payment of money," in terms of Act 20, of 1884. In my opinion the receipt read by the light of the previous letter amounts to an acknowledgement by the appellant that his claim had been settled by cheque. His counsel admitted that if the words "settled by cheque" had been used, they would, on the authority of the English cases cited, have amounted to a receipt for the payment of money. The drawers of the cheque had credit with the bank which was solvent, and honoured the cheque when it was present, and the words actually used were equivalent under the circumstances, to a receipt for the payment of money.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether the receipt would have been equivalent to a receipt for the payment of money if the letter requesting the debtors to send a cheque had not been written, but I do not wish to say anything from which it might be inferred that the sending of the letter makes any difference. In view of the facts that the drawers of the cheque had funds in the bank, that the bank was perfectly solvent, and that the bank did pay the cheque when presented, it would require clear authority to justify the view that without the letter the receipt would not have been a receipt for the payment of money. The appeal must be dismissed.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Sauer and Standen.]

Review—Admission and rejection of illegal evidence.

The defendant was charged in a Magistrate's Court with the offence of obstructing a public road, and the only evidence given by the prosecution was the record of a conviction against another person of having obstructed the same road. The defendant tendered evidence to prove that the road was not a public road, but the evidence was rejected, on the ground that after the previous conviction the road must be held to be a public road.

Held on review, that the evidence tendered ought to have been admitted, as it was material to the issue, the proceedings were set aside.

This was an appeal from the decision of the R.M. of Simon's Town, by which the appellant was fined in £5, or one month's imprisonment, for wrongfully and unlawfully obstructing a public road.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the appellant was charged with contravening section 163 of Act 40 of 1899, in that he obstructed a public road, which leads across his farm at Elsie's River, by placing a wire fencing across it. The road had been held to be a public road in the previous case of Rez v. Lancaster. Mr. Du Toit, who appeared for the accused, proceeded to lead evidence that the road was not a public road, and the Magistrate refused to allow it, holding that it had been fully established in the Lancaster case that the road was a public road. Mr. Du Toit objected to the records of the previous case being put in, but his objection was overruled.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the appellant) argued that the proceedings in the Court below were grossly irregular (1) inasmuch as the Magistrate had refused to admit evidence as to the road being a private one; (2) by admitting the record in Rez v. Lancaster as evidence in this case. That was merely a judgment in personam, and could not in any way affect the appellant.

Mr. Nightingale (for the Crown) argued that the Magistrate was bound by the judgment in the said case to hold that the road was public.

De Villiers, C.J.: Assuming for the purpose of my decision that the obstruction of a public road is a punishable offence, I am clearly of opinion that the proceedings should be set aside on the ground that illegal evidence was admitted on behalf of the prosecution. The only proof given that the road in question was a public road was the production of a record in the same Court of a conviction against Lancaster of having obstructed the same road. That was not in strictness evidence against the appellant, who was not a party to the previous proceedings, but a further illegality was committed by the Magistrate in refusing to allow the appellant to give any evidence in support of his defence that the road was not a public road at all. The accused was informed that the only evidence he could be allowed to give was the question whether he did or did not obstruct the road. As he could not deny such obstruction he was convicted, but it is clear that the conviction cannot be sustained. The evidence which he proposed to give was not only admissible but it was most material to the issue.

REX V. JOHNS. { 1904.
May 20th.

Exposing for sale — Municipal market.

A market agent, who had authority to sell goods out of hand, placed damaged vegetables, which he had for sale, in public view in the Municipal market.

Held, that the vegetables were "exposed for sale."

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Port Elizabeth, by which the appellant, Henry Johns, was fined in £1 for contravening section 217 of Act 27 of 1897, in that he exposed for sale a certain quantity of unsound tomatoes in the market place.

The evidence for the prosecution showed that on the 15th March the accused exposed for sale some 27 boxes of tomatoes in the market place. The inspector had them sent to Dr. Galloway, who pronounced 90 per cent. of them to be unsound. For the defence, it was stated that before articles were put up for sale, the clerk came round and entered everything that was to be given over to the auctioneer. The tomatoes in question were not entered on the list, and the accused would not have sold them until they were entered. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said it was unnecessary to prove that the accused offered the fruit for sale. They were exposed with an object of sale, which the accused could have done out of hand, and he had every opportunity of examining them between Saturday and Tuesday, as they were over for sale on the first day named.

Mr. Gardiner (for the appellant) contended that the evidence showed that they were not kept or exposed for sale.

The Chief Justice: Supposing a customer came up, would he have sold them?

Mr. Gardiner: I take it not, my lord. The appellant had no intention of selling the tomatoes until they were examined and found to be sound. The evidence of the market-master was that the fruit was not offered for sale, but only placed there for examination as to whether it was sound or not. A fruit seller could only examine the fruit at the market where presumably it was delivered. The prosecution had not proved guilty knowledge on the part of the appellant (Hearn v. Garton and Stone, 28 Law Journal, p. 216).

Mr. Schreiner (for the Town Council of Port Elizabeth) said that the knowledge of the accused was the knowledge of his agent, who was there representing him. All the witnesses proved that the fruit was offered for sale. Accused's agent was requested by the inspector to remove the fruit and refused to do so. The appellant might have sold and would have sold the goods out of hand if he had had an offer. The goods were exposed for sale on the principle laid down in the case of Crane v. Lawrence (13 L.T.R. p. 197).

De Villiers, C. J.: If this were a case in which the fruit could only be sold by the market master, after an inspection by the sanitary inspector, I should have hesitated to support the present conviction, but it appears that the appellant, besides being able to sell goods through the market master, also had authority to sell out of hand, and he had exercised that authority. He says that he only sold out of hand after the goods had been declared not sold on the market. Well, the tomatoes in question had been declared not sold on the Saturday previous to the day on which the goods were found to be in this rotten state. The defendant, therefore, would in the ordinary course sell the goods out of hand, and I am satisfied from the evidence that if a customer had passed on the day in question and offered to buy these tomatoes the defendant would have sold them, because they had already been declared not sold. It is admitted by the defendant that the goods were on the floor, with the object of being sold, and that admission by the defendant seems to me to dispose of his defence that the goods were not exposed for sale. Clearly then he exposed the tomatoes for sale, and was liable to prosecution. I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed. On the question of costs, it seems to me to be a very fair case to bring before a Court of Appeal, and the decision of this Court will be a precedent for both parties. It is for the benefit of the Town Council, and I do not feel inclined to depart from the usual practice in cases of this kind, and there will be no order as to costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MAW V. FOX.

{ 1904.
{ May 25th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved on notice of application for an order calling upon the respondent, Sydney Fox, to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay costs of proceedings which he had initiated for £5,000 damages for breach of contract by alleged wrongful dismissal from the service of Maw and Co., as their agent, and why the proceedings should not be declared to be abated. It appeared from correspondence and affidavits read by counsel that the respondent (Fox) had instituted an action for wrongful dismissal, and that it had been shown that the applicant, A. John Maw, had no office in this country and that the case was outside the jurisdiction of this Court. A letter from the respondent's attorneys intimated that he withdrew the action and accepted an assurance that the applicant, A. John Maw, was proceeding to England and that he would bring the matter before his directors, Maw and Co. The present motion had previously been adjourned for proof of service. The action had been brought against A. John Maw, who, however, did not represent the company.

De Villiers, C.J., said that an order would be granted in terms of prayers (a) and (c), requiring the respondent to pay costs of the proceedings and the present application. There would be no order under prayer (b) as to abating proceedings against Maw and Co.

COGILL V. QUEEN'S TOWN { 1904.
LICENSING BOARD. { May 25th.

Liquor Licensing Act, 1883 —
Renewal of bottle licence — Objections.

It is a valid objection to the renewal of a licence in terms of the 3rd sub-section of section 52 of Act 28 of 1883, that the business is conducted in an improper manner, although it is not alleged that drunkenness was permitted upon the licensed premises.

This was an application for review of a certain decision of the respondent Board, in refusing applicant a renewal licence for his bottle store.

Mr. M. de Villiers was for the applicant, and Mr. Upington was for the respondent.

Mr. De Villiers said that in the first place the Chief Constable of Queen's Town brought in certain objections, and the Licensing Court did not adopt the procedure required by the Licensing Act, the applicant having no opportunity to rebut the evidence, and, in the second place the objections raised were not such as it was competent for the objector to make. The record of the Board showed that two voted for the renewal, and three against it. The objections raised by the Chief Constable showed that there had been fifteen prosecutions in the Magistrate's Court for illicit traffic, and in most of the cases the convictions had been traced to Cogill's and Holmes's bottle stores. Registered native voters had been seen on several occasions to go to the applicant's bottle store and obtain sacks containing bottles of brandy, which were retailed out to natives in the location. The applicant was strictly within the letter of the law in selling liquor to registered voters, but only in reasonable quantities. Three petitions were put in by inhabitants praying for a refusal of the licence. The affidavit of the applicant set out that he had never before been convicted under the provisions of the Liquor Laws Act, and that he always understood that he could not refuse to supply liquor to natives who were registered. No notice was given to him of the objections, and he had no opportunity to rebut the evidence.

Mr. Upington read the affidavit of the Resident Magistrate and Chairman of the Licensing Board of Queen's Town, which set out that the applicant had sold large quantities of liquor to a low class of natives, and that he must have known that he was not faithfully carrying out the terms of his licence. He had no hesitation in saying, had the applicant been allowed to carry on his business as heretofore the beneficial results in regard to the restriction of the sale of liquor to natives would be nullified. The Chief Constable offered to substantiate his statements on oath, and it must have been apparent to the applicant that he was assisting in illicit traffic. The Court offered to adjourn if necessary, to give the applicant an opportunity of replying to the objections, but the offer was not accepted by the applicant or his attorney. The further affidavits, including those of the Chief Constable and Mr. Chalmers, who presided at the Court, were read, the former adhering to the terms of his report, and the latter confirming the offer to adjourn the Court.

Mr. De Villiers said that the procedure prescribed by the Act was not followed in this case. It would seem, by the wording of the section, that there was a certain amount of discretion left to the Licensing Court with regard to postponement, but in several previous decisions of the Courts it would appear that it is absolutely imperative to adjourn in order to give the applicant an opportunity of rebutting the statements made, and of appearing on another day. It was clear that a Court of that kind was of the nature of an inferior Court, and there ought to be proper records kept by a duly appointed officer. The Chief Constable said that Cogill was strictly within the letter of the law in selling liquor to the native registered voters, and Mr. Cogill thought it was imperative upon him to supply such voters. It was either legal for Mr. Cogill to sell liquor or it was illegal, in which case he should have been prosecuted and convicted. As regarded the objections of the residents, there was no petition at all against the licence; the petition was merely to reimpose certain restrictions. As to the objection of the Magistrates he (Mr. De Villiers) contended that there ought to appear on the record that the Magistrates had certain objections. He submitted that there was nothing on the record to show that any such objections were made, and that even if there were, the proper procedure was not followed, applicant not having been given an opportunity of meeting those objections, as provided in the Act.

De Villiers, C. J., intimated that he only desired to hear Mr. Upington on the point as to whether any of the objections mentioned in the 52nd section existed here.

Mr. Upington said that the Licensing Court purported to take two of these objections, first, that the premises had been conducted in an improper manner, and the conditions of the licence had not been fulfilled; and, secondly, that the licence was not required. Counsel contended that to sell liquor in the manner in which the appellant did, so as to evade the law, was to conduct the business in an improper manner. It was intended by the Legislature that a man should not facilitate, by the improper conduct of his business, the illicit sale of liquor to natives. He submitted that the appellant had full opportunity of meeting the objections.

De Villiers, C. J.: The statement appears on the record, and is confirmed by affidavits now before the Court, that the Magistrate, before putting the question to the vote, informed the applicant's attorney that if he so desired the Court would adjourn the consideration of the application in order to afford applicant an opportunity of replying to the objection in terms of section 49 of Act 28 of 1883, and that the suggestion was not accepted. The applicant has had an opportunity of denying this on affidavit, and I think that statement must, in the absence of any denial, be taken as stating the correct facts. The question to be determined is whether after refusing to accept the suggestion made by the Licensing Court, the applicant has any ground of complaint. It appears to me that he has no ground of complaint whatever, whether the case be considered under the 53rd or the 48th section of the Act. I think that the objections raised by the Chief Constable that the business was not conducted in a proper manner, and that drunkenness was permitted on the licensed premises, would each be a sufficient objection. These allegations of the Chief Constable were not refuted, and I am bound to conclude that opportunity having been offered to the applicant to refute them, and he not having done so, they could not be refuted. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MOWBRAY MUNICIPALITY } 1904.
V. MULLEE. } May 26th.

Municipal regulations — Sanitation—Engineer.

On an application by the Municipal Council of M. to compel the respondent to remove certain earth closets to another part of a building which was being constructed, on the ground that they interfered with the width of a passage on the respondent's land, which, under the Municipal regulations, ought to be of a certain width, it appeared that the Municipal Engineer, entrusted by the Council with the duty of seeing to the carrying out of the regulations, had pointed out the spot as proper for building the closets, and had visited the place while the erection was proceeding.

Held, that the applicants were not entitled to succeed.

This was an application on notice of motion for an order compelling the respondent to remove certain earth closets or to effect certain alterations in his property in Trill-road, Mowbray.

The affidavit of Francis Drake, engineer to the Mowbray Municipality, set out that the respondent had erected within the boundaries of the Municipality two dwelling-houses. Subsequent to the approval by the Municipality, the respondent erected on the premises two earth closets without submitting the plans to the Council. The closets were not built according to the regulations, and the respondent refused to remove them or make the necessary alterations. The passage would not admit of proper ventilation, and one of the closets was exposed to public view. The original idea was to let the two houses as two tenements, and for that purpose the two earth closets would have been sufficient, but the houses had been divided up into four tenements, and four different people occupied them.

The replying affidavit of the respondent stated that on the 10th

March, 1903, the Municipal attorney wrote to him calling on him to erect additional closets, and his attorney replied thereto, pointing out there was sufficient sanitary accommodation. There was no further reply to this letter, nor did the defendant Council take any action. In June last year, when one of the gables of the wall came down the Municipal Engineer was on the property, and pointed out the spot where these closets were to be erected. The engineer was several times on the property, saw the work go on, and deponent took it for granted that no further order from the Council was necessary. Subsequently he was summoned for contravening the building regulations, and the Magistrate at Wynberg found that the closets were put in their position by the direction of the Municipal Engineer, and that that was the only suitable position. According to the engineer's present plans, a balcony would have to be built at the rear of the house, and walls would have to be brought up to the height of the balcony, which would exclude air and light from the back windows.

The affidavits of Abraham Bloom and Jacob Golding corroborated the respondent with regard to the engineer having pointed out the position for the closets and his having been on the work several times in the course of their construction.

The affidavit of Francis Drake set out that the information given to the applicant's attorney that the shops were tenanted by two people was absolutely incorrect, and that the respondent knowingly gave his attorney such wrong information. He did not point out the position to the respondent.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for applicant; Mr. Upington for respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court is asked for an order compelling the respondent to remove certain earth closets, and to place additional closets on the first floor of the building, which has been erected by him. Such an order constitutes a very serious interference with the rights of an individual, and should not be made except on clear legal grounds. The responsible person employed by the Municipality for the purpose of seeing that buildings are constructed in compliance with the Municipal regulations is the Municipal engineer; and if the statements made by the respondent and by two of his witnesses are correct it seems to me that the Town Council is not entitled to claim what they are claiming. The statement of the respondent is as follows: "In June last year one of the gables of my property collapsed. The Municipal Engineer met me, and during the course of conversation spoke to me in regard to the erection of additional closets. I agreed to fall in with his view, and to erect the same. The engineer pointed out the spots where the same were to be erected, and told me to have the work proceeded with at once. This was done, and the closets erected. The said Municipal Engineer several times thereafter saw the closets in the course of erection, and seeing that, I carried out his instructions. I thought that no further plans were necessary." Well, a most reasonable conclusion if the engineer saw the work being done. If these statements are correct, clearly the Court should not assist the applicants, whatever right they might have by action, which I do not wish to encourage. The statements I have just read are supported by two other independent witnesses, who were present and heard the conversation, and saw the spot pointed out where these closets were to be erected. It is true that the engineer now denies that, but, the applicants must prove their case, and as far as I can gather from these affidavits, they are entirely in favour of the statement made by the respondent and his witnesses. It does not appear to me that the respondent set himself against complying with the instructions of the engineer, but was anxious to meet the engineer, and this view is further strengthened by the fact that there has been a prosecution of the respondent by the Municipality for a contravention of the Municipal regulations. The case was tried before the Magistrate, and the charges were dismissed. The Court found that the closets were placed in their present position by the direction of the Municipal Engineer, and that that position was the only satisfactory one. If that statement is correct, it would be an injustice to the respondent to order him to remove these buildings, and go to the expense of erecting closets upstairs, in what appears to me to be a more inconvenient position than the position proposed by the respondent. The application will be dismissed, with costs.

DE WET V. BLOOM.

{ 1904.
May 26th.

Amendment of plea—Commission de bene esse.

This was an application by the defendant in the above case for leave to amend his plea and for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of a material witness in Edinburgh.

The application of Louis Bloom set out that the applicant had found out that the amount of water on a farm which he purchased from the plaintiff, and which he had subsequently sold to one Livingstone, had been misrepresented to him. The plaintiff had agreed to give an extension of time until Livingstone took transfer. Applicant was desirous of putting in a counter-claim for damages.

The answering affidavit of the respondent, Peter de Wet, set out that the farm was sold to the defendant with the same water and other rights that he had himself. No other conditions were made, except those contained in the deed of sale, except that transfer by the defendant was extended to the 15th December, 1903.

Mr. Alexander (for the applicant): When the plea was filed the defendant did not know that the farm had no right to the water which the vendor promised. The deed of sale says nothing about water rights, though the deed of transfer does, hence we must go outside the deed of sale. The plaintiff clearly did so, because transfer was to have been taken long before it really was taken.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He gave transfer of what he had, and of all such rights as went with the land.]

That is exactly our case. (

[De Villiers, C.J.: No, your case is that there was an agreement between the parties independently of the deed of sale.]

We say that we were promised a certain quantity of water, and now find that we are not entitled to it, and wish to amend our plea so as to show what is the real issue between the parties. The Court will always grant leave to amend under such circumstances. See Rules 27 and 334 (a).

Mr. Buchanan (for the respondent). In a case in which a defendant wishes to amend his plea by alleging fraud, he should come into Court with the amended plea.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with you that their not doing so may affect the question of costs.]

Our case is that the defendant bought the farm in accordance with the terms of the deed of sale, and he admits that in his plea.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is the plea which he wishes to amend.]

The Court will not grant leave to amend a plea by introducing a chance of fraud save under very exceptional circumstances.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We do not know that he means to suggest fraud.]

Mr. Alexander (in reply): There is nothing on the pleadings to suggest fraud. The plaintiffs may only have made an innocent misrepresentation.

De Villiers, C.J.: The case cannot be heard until some time next term. No injustice can be done to the plaintiff by allowing the defendant to amend his plea, but the defendant ought to have indicated more clearly than he has done the nature of the defence which he intends to raise. The application for a commission must be refused; leave to amend the plea will be granted, but the defendant must pay the costs of this application.

[Applicant's Attorney: T. P. Peters; Respondent's Attorney: J. Buiraki.]

YOUNG V. MULVIHAL.

Tender—Costs.

This was an application on notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted as to costs in the case of Mulvihl v. Young and Young.

The application arose out of a case that came before the Court on the 18th December last. The present respondent obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendants to show cause why they should not be compelled to give up certain premises known as the City Hall Hotel. Notice had been given to the defendants on the 30th November, but it appeared that the applicant had accepted rent up to December 15, and as they were entitled to a month's notice, that motion was not pursued.

The answering affidavit of the respondent, Thomas Mulvihl, stated that the then respondents were indebted to him in the amount of £123 for rent and stock. Of the defendants, Ethel Young had been declared insolvent, and Edward Young had left the country.

Mr. Gardiner (for applicant): The respondent applied for a bill of costs, but has never acknowledged his liability. He has had plenty of time to bring his action, but his affidavit does not even say that he means to do so.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondent): We admit that we owe the costs, but say that we have a set-off. They owe us £123, and the costs amount only to £13.

De Villiers, C.J.: If there had been a clear admission by the present respondent of the liability, and a tender on his part to set it off against the claim for his rent, the present application would have been wholly unnecessary, but there is no such clear admission on his part. The fact that he asked for the bill of costs does not amount to such an admission. The applicant is entitled to an order from the Court with costs. The respondent originally instituted proceedings for ejectment, but finding that no notice to quit had been given to the applicant, he practically withdrew the proceedings. He is clearly therefore liable to pay the costs of these proceedings. But the respondent does not become a creditor for the amount of the costs until the Court has awarded the costs to him, and the object of the present application is to obtain such an award. An order will be granted as prayed, with costs, execution to be stayed until the respondent has instituted his action for the debt alleged to be owing to him, the stay of execution not to extend beyond six months.

UYS V. UYS.

This was an application by Johanna Uys, to make absolute a rule nisi restraining her husband, who was squandering the property, from dealing with any of the joint estate pending a decision of the Court in an action for judicial separation.

Rule made absolute.

FLAUM V. GERHARD AND HEY.

This was an application for leave to sue the respondents in forma pauperis.

Matter referred to counsel for certificate probabilis causa, or otherwise.

Ex parte CLOETE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan said that this matter was ordered to stand over by Mr. Justice Buchanan for a report of the Registrar of Deeds, with regard to the cancellation of a mortgage bond. The Registrar's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

EXSHAW AND CO. V. VAN RYN { 1904.
WINE AND SPIRIT CO. { May 26th.

Trade-mark — Rectification of register—Deception.

The respondents' trade-mark having been registered for nine years, an application was made to the Registrar by the applicants to have their trade-mark registered, but he refused, on the ground of what he conceived to be the similarity of the marks. The applicants thereupon applied to the Court for the rectification of the respondents' registered mark, on the ground that the applicants had used their mark and registered it in France before the respondents registered theirs in this Colony. On a comparison of the marks, however, the Court found there was no identity and not such a resemblance as would be calculated to deceive.

Held, that as both marks had been in use for several years, as no case of actual deception had been proved, and as there was no proof whatever of fraud on behalf of the defendants, who were not aware of the applicants' mark when they designed theirs, there was no ground for the rectification of the register.

This was an application for an order authorising the rectification of a certain trade-mark, and for the registration of the applicants' trade-mark instead of that of the respondents.

The affidavit of John Henry Exshaw, member of the applicant firm, set out that they had used the coronet label, which was registered in France on their brandy since 1877. About December, 1902, the firm took the necessary steps to secure the registration of their trade-mark in Cape Town, but the application was refused on the ground that a coronet device had already been registered by the respondents.

The answering affidavit of the manager of the respondent company, set out that their labels were quite distinct, and their label had always been used. Their device was registered in 1895, and there was no question of it until April, 1903. The affidavit of the designer, Mr. Van Heerden, set forth that the label was in use twelve years, and previous to designing it he had never seen the other label.

Mr. Buchanan (for the applicant): The respondents do not disclaim the use of the coronet on their trade mark. We had to come to Court to get our trade mark registered, as the Registrar refused to register it on the ground that the respondents were already on the register with a similar design. Our trade mark was in use long before Act 22 of 1877 was passed. Under Acts 27 of 1891 and 12 of 1895 we are entitled to use this trade mark, and the respondent admits our right to it, but asks that we should disclaim the coronet.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose the respondents knew nothing about your trade mark, and invented one for themselves which happens to resemble yours?]

That might be hard upon them, but I submit they could not register it. The leading feature of the respondents' trade mark is the coronet. If we could show that this was fraudulently copied, we should no doubt have a stronger case, but it does look as if the horse-shoe had been introduced into their trade mark merely to differentiate it from ours. As to rectification, see Kerley on Trade Marks (p. 311). Even after five years one may claim rectification of the register if he can show that the trade-mark should not have been registered; for instance, if it was not attached to the good-will of any business. Edwards v. Dennis (54 L.T. 112). A trade-mark must be used for the particular goods for which it is granted. As to the object of the English Act of 1875, see Kerley (p. 8 and 275). As to what is special and distinctive in a trade mark, see Kerley p. 131 to 134) and the cases there cited.

Mr. Shreiner (for respondents): I do not know on what grounds application is made to have our trade-mark struck off the register. It is not said that there was any fraud on our part, nor is it said that it is calculated to deceive. We say that these trade-marks are so distinct that nobody can be deceived; and then, again, they are applied to different articles. Exshaw's brandy is an article known only to connoisseurs, the Van Ryn Company make ordinary Colonial spirits. Instead of calling upon the Registrar to show cause why he should not be ordered to register the trade-mark of the applicant, he turns upon us and insists on our mark being struck off.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Could not the applicant have objected to your crown when you first began to use it?]

Exshaw's brandy only began to be used in this Colony in 1877. All he can now ask for is that we should disclaim the exclusive use of the crown. Our law as to trade-marks is not the same as the English law. For our law, see Act 13 of 1895, sec. 2, and compare sec. 76 of the English Act.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Dennis v. Edwards was decided under the old Act.

Yes, our law is much wider, and here it has never been held that the Court will interfere after five years, apart from cases of fraud, of mala fides. The English cases cited are, therefore, not binding on our Courts, and are not ad rem.

Mr. Buchanan, in reply

De Villiers, C.J.: The applicants ask for an order for the rectification of the registration of the respondents' trade mark, by expunging therefrom so much of such mark as consists of the coronet representation, and further for an order directing the Registrar to proceed with the registration in the name of the applicants of a mark, a description of which is appended, in the form of a label. The notice of motion is supported by the affidavit of John Henry Exshaw, who states that his firm are brandy shippers, carrying on business in France, that the registered trade-mark of his firm in France in connection with the business is of the representation of a coronet, and he affixes a coronet. He says, from the period dated the 28th March, 1877, until the present time, the applicants have been exporting brandy to the Cape with the trade-mark, but there has been no registration in this colony of the trade-mark. The applicants applied for registration in 1902, and the Registrar then refused to register the applicants' trade-mark, on the ground that the respondents had already registered a similar trade-mark. Now, that decision of the Registrar is clearly not binding upon the Court at present. It is competent for the Court still to decide whether the one or the other mark would be calculated to deceive unwary purchasers. The defence raised on behalf of the respondents is that they have been using their trade-mark for over a period of twelve years, that the trade-mark was registered in the year 1895, and that the design was invented by the respondent without any knowledge as to the existence of the previous trade-mark of the applicants. Mr. Van Heerden, who designed it, says that he has carefully examined the coronet of the applicants' label, and that the coronets are not similar to one another, and he adds that he had never seen the other design previous to designing the one for the respondent firm, and he annexes a number of labels showing the different designs for the different qualities of liquors sold. The question has been raised in this case as to whether the respondents' trade-mark can at all be questioned after it has been in existence for a period of five years and registered for a period of five years. The third section of the Act of 1877 is certainly very strong in its language. It is as follows: "The registration of a person as first proprietor of a trade-mark shall be prima facie evidence of his right to the exclusive use of such trade-mark, and shall, after the expiration of five years from the date of such registration be conclusive evidence of his right to the exclusive use of such trade-mark, subject to the provisions of this Act as to its connection with the goodwill of a business. It is unnecessary, however, to decide whether the applicants are barred by this section from questioning the respondents' mark, because in my opinion there is no evidence that that mark has been improperly registered. It is a perfectly distinctive trade mark, and it does not appear to me to be calculated to deceive. The only point of similarity is that there is a coronet, but the coronet is very different from the coronet of the applicants. The coronet of the applicants has an arm, which obscures part of the coronet, and it has nothing underneath it corresponding in any way with the design which the respondents have underneath their coronet, namely, the horse-shoe and the figure inside. The least that could have been expected from the applicants, who seek now to rectify the registration in existence since 1895, was that they would have produced some evidence that some purchasers or intending purchasers had been deceived, but no evidence to that effect has been produced. No doubt such evidence is not necessary where the similarity is so great that the Court might without the assistance of such evidence find that the respondents' mark is calculated to deceive. Both marks have been in use for several years, no case of actual deception has been proved, and it is not even suggested that there has been any fraud on the part of the respondents. Under these circumstances, it would not be in accordance with the practice of this Court to interfere. If the applicants would disclaim any right to the exclusive use of the coronet as a trade-mark, the Registrar will, no doubt, after this intimation of opinion from the Court, reconsider his decision, but the present application must be refused with costs. SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte FRASER. { 1904.
{ May 30th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the substitution of Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne for that of Casper Henry van Zyl, on the petitioner's articles of apprenticeship, and for an allowance of 138 days in the period of apprenticeship, during which the applicant was ill.

Order of substitution granted as prayed, 90 days allowed as a reasonable holiday, the applicant to serve 48 days additional.

BYRNE V. BYRNE.

This was application by Ellen Byrne for leave to sue her husband, James Byrne, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, custody of the children, forfeiture of the benefits accruing out of the marriage in community of property, and for an order authorising the Master to pay sufficient money out of £1,000 that had been left to the applicant by her mother to prosecute the action, and for maintenance of the children. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the applicant.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in Cape Town, and the respondent had deserted the applicant in Galway, Ireland.

De Villiers, C. J., said that the affidavits should be amplified, there was no information as to domicile in Ireland.

GIDDINGS V. GIDDINGS.

This was an application by Maria Giddings for leave to sue her husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the applicant.

The parties were married at Malmesbury in March, 1887, and the respondent deserted her in August, 1902. He was last heard of in Graaff-Reinet.

Order granted, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which one publication in a Cape Town paper and one in a Graaff-Reinet paper, the citation to be returnable on the 12th July, with leave to serve the intendit with notice of trial.

VAN BOOM V. VISSER.

This was an application for removal of bar.

The affidavit of Daniel Johannes Visser stated that, on receipt of the summons, he took it to be simply a demand for payment of £100 for alleged trespass, not a summons. Applicant stated that he had a complete defence on the merits.

The answering affidavit of the attorney, formerly acting for Visser, stated that when Visser brought the summons to him (deponent) Visser understood the same to be a summons. Deponent had advised Visser to compromise the matter out of Court, and Visser first accepted that advice, but subsequently declined to consider a compromise, and wished the matter to be determined by the Court. Deponent thereupon withdrew from the case.

Mr. Williams for applicant; Mr. M. De Villiers for respondent.

Mr. De Villiers pointed out that no affidavit of merits had been filed on behalf of the applicant, as required by the Rules of Court.

De Villiers, C. J., said there must be an affidavit as to the merits. He had pointed out that when the matter was last before the Court that such an affidavit was required. No prima facie ground was shown for believing that the applicant had a defence on the merits.

After hearing Mr. Williams in argument,

De Villiers, C. J.: On the last occasion when the matter was mentioned an affidavit was produced on behalf of the defendant in which he stated that he had been served with a summons, but that he was not aware of the contents, and that all the subsequent proceedings against him were taken entirely without his knowledge. These statements of his are now entirely denied by the attorney whom he employed in the country, and, so far as they can deny them, by the attorneys in Cape Town. But it is said that this man is an ignorant man living in the country, that he has a good defence to this action, and that some consideration should be shown to him. That is just what the Court is anxious to do; to show him every consideration, and for the purpose of showing him that consideration, counsel was informed on the last occasion that when he applied again he should produce an affidavit from which it may be fairly inferred that the man has a good, honest defence to the action. If such an affidavit had been produced to-day, there would have been no difficulty whatever in granting the order which is asked for. The applicant, however, has not taken advantage of this opportunity. He has not filed any affidavit of merits as indicated by the 26th Rule of Court. He has had ample time to do so, and under these circumstances it is impossible for the Court to grant him any relief. The application must be refused, with costs.

Ex parte DE JAGER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem for the purpose of instituting an action to have the applicant's husband declared to be of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his own affairs.

Application granted, the summons being returnable on the 16th June. Mr. Roux was appointed curator ad litem.

Ex parte HUGO.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order releasing the applicant from acting as curator bonis in the estate of her husband, who had been declared incapable of managing his own affairs, the property in the estate having been sold, and the estate assigned. The affidavit of the petitioner set forth that on assuming the management of the estate, she found that the estate was deeply involved in debt. Creditors threatened immediate action, and applicant assigned the estate.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The applicant ought to have applied to Court for leave to assign the estate.]

Mr. Buchanan said that under the Insolvent Ordinance any person having control of an estate had power to surrender it, and probably the petitioner and her advisers thought this implied the power also of entering into a deed of assignment.

De Villiers, C. J.: I would like to have independent evidence, as to whether this was for the benefit of the estate. The matter will accordingly be ordered to stand over.

Service of stallion.

The plaintiff, having let his donkey stallion to the defendant, for the purpose of serving the defendant's mares, brought an action in the Magistrate's Court for money alleged to be owing to him for such service, and proved that the stallion had run with the mares, but gave no evidence that he had actually served the mares or that any of them were in foal. Held on appeal, that the Magistrate had properly granted absolution from the instance.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Ceres in an action brought by the appellant for £6, being for the hire of certain two donkeys, a stallion, and gelding. The judgment of the Court below was absolution from the instance, with costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the plaintiff sued for £6, hire of certain two donkeys, a stallion, and gelding. It would appear from the evidence that the stallion was required for covering donkey mares. There was no agreement made for the cost of the hire of the donkeys, and there was no evidence that the mares were served. It was only when the plaintiff was made to pay £1 10s. for trespass that a charge was proposed to be made. He (the Magistrate) was of opinion that the summons was very badly drawn, and that it should have been stated that the stallion was hired for a specific purpose, viz., to serve mares.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Mr. Uppington said there could be no question that the defendant had had the benefit of the use of the plaintiff's donkeys. It was true no specific price was agreed upon, but under the circumstances he submitted that the Magistrate, if he was satisfied there was an agreement for the hire of the donkeys, should have awarded a reasonable sum to the plaintiff.

Defendant admitted that he drove the mares to the stallion. John Swart (father of the defendant), in his evidence, said, "I am willing to pay if the plaintiff will pay damages for his donkey biting mine."

Without calling upon Mr. Gardiner,

De Villiers, C. J.: The object of the letting by the plaintiff of his donkeys to the defendant was to cover the mares of the defendant. In order, therefore, to succeed in his action, the plaintiff ought to prove that the mares of the defendant were served. Neither the plaintiff nor any of his witnesses proved that there was any such service. The defendant does not admit that there was service. I quite agree that the plaintiff at any rate was premature in his action. The Magistrate very properly gave absolution from the instance, and the appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

MTEMBU V. WEBSTER. { 1904.
May 31st.
June 21st.

Consideration — Promise — Contract—Right of pre-emption—Nudum pactum—Donatio—Remuneratory donations.

The defendant, who owned a farm adjoining that of the plaintiff, on being pressed by the plaintiff to sell the farm, promised, that in the event of his wishing to sell the farm, he would give the plaintiff the first refusal. Thereafter the defendant sold the farm to E. without giving the plaintiff the first refusal, and E. resold the farm at a profit.

Held, that as the plaintiff had given or done nothing in return for the right of pre-emption, and had not even promised to buy at the price for which the defendant could sell to another purchaser, there was no valuable consideration for the promise, and that consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to damages for breach of contract.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mount Curry, in an action brought by the respondent, Rowland Webster, against the appellant, John Mtembu, for £500 damages for breach of contract.

The summons set out:

1. That plaintiff is a farmer residing on Lot No. 8, known as "Kempdale," in Kokstad district.

2. That defendant is also a farmer, lately the owner of, and residing on, Lot No. 9, Kokstad district.

3. That Lot No. 8, Kempdale, and the said Lot No. 9 adjoin.

4. That during the year 1894, and subsequently, defendant agreed with plaintiff, for due consideration, that in the event of the defendant wishing to sell the said Lot No. 9, he, the plaintiff, should have the right of pre-emption thereof, for a sum to be then fixed, being the market value thereof at the time of sale.

5. That in breach of the said agreement, he, the defendant, without consulting the plaintiff, or offering the said Lot No. 9 to him, he, the plaintiff, being anxious and willing to purchase the same, sold the said lot to one J. F. D. Elliot, of Kokstad, and has given him transfer.

6. That by reason of the said breach of contract the plaintiff has suffered loss and damage to the extent of £500 sterling.

The defendant excepted to the summons on the grounds that:

1. The same is vague and bad in law, inasmuch as it fails to state the date when the alleged right of pre-emption, referred to in par 4 thereof, was given by defendant to plaintiff; and

2. That it fails to state what the consideration alleged in par 4 thereof to have been given by the plaintiff to the defendant consisted of, and the date when the same passed.

And for a plea to the summons, should the above exceptions be overruled, the defendant pleads:

(a) That he admits paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 thereof.

(b) That he denies paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 thereof.

(c) That he admits that he sold Lot 9, Kokstad, to the firm of Elliot and Walker.

The Magistrate overruled the first exception on the ground that "the time stated, viz., the year 1894 was sufficiently definite, taking into consideration the fact that the defendant is a native who, in 99 cases out of 100 have no idea of time or dates."

He overruled the second exception, as he was of opinion that "it is not necessary to prove any consideration as contracts of this nature are entered into by mutuality of agreement, the promise of the one party to sell being the consideration for the promise of the other to buy."

From the evidence of the respondent it appeared that he had never charged the appellant for articles he had supplied to him, and that in January, 1903, he promised to give the appellant a life residence on Lot No. 9, in the event of his selling it to the respondent.

The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for £400, with costs.

In his reasons for judgment, after setting out the facts, the Magistrate proceeds:

"It is admitted by both sides that the defendant did promise that in the event of his wishing to sell the farm, he would give the plaintiff the first refusal. Now the point to be decided is 'was the promise sufficient to compel the defendant to first of all offer the farm to plaintiff before he could sell to another?' The defendant maintains that as no consideration passed he was at liberty to break the promise whenever he chose. Several cases have been quoted by defendant's attorney, but none, I think bear exactly on the question raised. As already stated in my reasons for overruling the exceptions, I am of opinion that a contract of this nature is entered into by the mutual agreement of the parties, the promise of the one party to buy being the consideration for the promise of the other to sell. Moreover, should any consideration be necessary to the agreement, then, in my opinion, the promise of a life residence was sufficient consideration to make the agreement binding. The only question now remaining is that of the amount of damages or loss the plaintiff has sustained. The declarations of purchaser and seller show that the farm was bought for £500, and sold for £1,000 very soon afterwards, a clear profit of £500. The plaintiff, however, states he was quite prepared to pay £600, so that, in my opinion, he is entitled to the difference between that sum and £1,000. I would like to add that the defendant gave his evidence in a most unsatisfactory way, and appears all through, since the sale, to have tried to mislead the plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner for the appellant; Mr. Upington for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner: This is an action on a contract, but it is clear that no contract was ever made. At most there was a bare promise made as long ago as 1894 to give respondent the first offer should appellant wish to sell his property. This was quite a different thing from an offer to sell for a certain price. Here no price was fixed or indicated in any way, and no time was fixed during which the promise was to hold good. Then, again, the respondent gave no consideration for this promise. He says that he promised to allow the appellant to remain on the farm for his life in the event of his selling it to him. Even if he did make that promise, he did not actually give anything. He did not even promise to allow the appellant to remain rent free. If the promise as to remaining on the farm was worth anything at all it can be regarded only as a part of the purchase price to be paid for the farm. See Goss and Michau v. Van der Hoff (13 C.T.R. 397). That was a much stronger case than the present, for there there was a definite offer to sell at a fixed price.

Mr. Upington: Apparently the Magistrate relies on Voet (18, 1, 2). But in view of decisions of this Court, this passage can hardly be relied upon. This transaction was no mere nudum pactum: there was a sufficient causa to support the contract. English law would certainly hold that the consideration was good. It was a detriment or inconvenience to the plaintiff to have a man on his ground for life.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is no part of the consideration.]

I submit it is.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Ought it not rather to be considered a part of the price?]

I submit not, though no doubt this undertaking was intended to act as an inducement to the appellant to sell.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Nothing has been purchased.]

The respondent purchased a right to the first refusal of the property, or, perhaps I should say, that there was an agreement to give him first refusal in consideration of his granting certain advantages in return. If this promise of a life tenancy was worth anything at all there was valuable consideration, consideration need not be adequate.

Mr. Gardiner, in reply.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (June 21st.)

De Villiers, C. J.: This is an appeal against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mount Currie in an action for damages for breach of contract. The alleged contract consisted in a promise made by the defendant that in the event of his wishing to sell a certain farm, then owned and occupied by him, he would give the plaintiff the first refusal. It appears that the plaintiff, who is a European owning a farm adjoining that of the defendant, who is a native, made repeated applications to the defendant to sell the farm to him, but could not exact more than the promise which I have mentioned. The defendant afterwards sold the farm to one Elliott for £500 without giving the plaintiff the refusal, and an action was brought for damages for breach of contract, with the result that judgment was given for the plaintiff for the sum of £400. Against that judgment the defendant now appeals.

The appeal raises the question, not for the first time, whether an action can be maintained in this colony on a promise not supported by valuable consideration. The Magistrate did not dispute the law as laid down by this Court that consideration was necessary, but he found that there was a twofold consideration for the promise, namely, a promise by the plaintiff to buy, and a further promise made by him that if he should buy he would allow the defendant a residence on the farm for his life. There was not, however, any promise on the plaintiff's part to buy the farm in case the defendant should wish to sell, for it was quite competent for the plaintiff, in case he considered the price too much, to have nothing further to do with the matter. As to the plaintiff's offer to allow the defendant to live on the farm, that would only take effect in case a sale should be completed, and could not in any way constitute a consideration for the defendant's promise to give him a right of pre-emption. The only reason or motive that I can discover for the promise was the defendant's wish to escape the plaintiff's importunity without giving him any offence, but the promise was definite and serious enough, and if valuable consideration had been given, the Court below would have been quite justified in enforcing it. In this respect no doubt our law differs from the old Roman law, which would have considered such a promise as a nudum pactum, inasmuch as it did not fall within the class of recognised agreements which were enforceable by action. The Roman law would have recognised such an agreement if annexed to or forming part of a recognised contract, such as that of purchase and sale, but standing by itself and not confirmed by a solemn stipulatio, it would have been regarded as a nudum pactum, and therefore not enforceable by action. The Dutch law swept away the subtleties of the Roman law relating to nuda pacta, and would have enforced a promise like the one in question, even although not annexed to a contract, provided that it was founded upon a reasonable cause. The payment by the defendant of a substantial sum for the right of pre-emption, or a reciprocal promise to buy at the price offered by another intending purchaser, would certainly have been considered a reasonable cause for the promise; but in the actual practice of the Courts, I cannot find any case from which it might be inferred that they would have enforced a contract like the one now in question.

There can be no doubt that some Dutch lawyers understood and employed the expression nudum pactum in a different sense from that in which I have just used it. The mistake was probably occasioned by the following passage in the Digest (2-14-7-4): Cum nulla subest causa practer (others read propter) conventionem, hic constat non posse constitui obligationem. Igitur nuda pactio obligationem non parit sed parit exceptionem. Vinnius, in his book on Facts (5, 15) writes with scorn of those who employ the terms nudum pactum in the sense of an agreement not founded on a causa, but in Holland the error was a very common one, and in England it was universal. Another difficulty arose out of the different senses in which the word causa was employed in the Roman law. In one of those senses it approached as nearly as possible to the "consideration" of the English law, and indeed, according to some eminent writers, it meant exactly the same thing. Now, in the Roman law, the stipulatio, as a solemn form, afforded a ground of action, but in practice, if it was not founded on a causa, judgment could still, according to Ulpian (Dig. 44, 4, 2, sec. 3), be averted by the exceptio doli. The Dutch law, while doing away with the subtleties of the Roman law in regard to pacta, continued to insist upon a causa as an essential ingredient of every actionable agreement, and the Dutch Courts, in actual practice, only admitted as a valid causa for contracts other than donation, such a quid pro quo as we should now call valuable consideration." Damhouder, in his Practice in Civil Cases (c 175), says: "Writings containing an obligation without a cause (oorzaak) are in law of no, or at all events, of little effect, and consequently have no binding force. And obligations are understood to have no cause if the wherefore (waaromme) of the obligation is not therein expressed." To illustrate what he means by the "waaromme," he adds: "That is to say, whether it arises out of a loan or a purchase or other similar causes." Groenewegen approves of this general statement, but he adds that the causa need not be expressed in those cases in which, from the relationship between the parties, the existence of a causa may be presumed, "as, for instance, if a merchant has given a bond without a causa expressed to a merchant, a scholar to his teacher, a patient to his physician, and a wounded man to his surgeon." In those cases the presumption may, of course, be rebutted, but the illustrations are valuable, as showing what the nature of the causa is which would have been required. Van Leeuwen, in his Censura Forensis (P. 1. B. 4, C. 2, sec. 2), says that a nudum pactum, however seriously and deliberately entered into, does not give rise to an action. "Hence," he proceeds, "comes the maxim ex nudo pacto non datur actio, and this has also been received in our practice, according to which, even a bond which contains no causa debiti is of no effect, nor can an action be brought thereon unless the causa is proved aliunde." If by nudum pactum, Van Leeuwen meant, as he probably did, a pact not founded on a reasonable cause, his statement fell into an error in confounding nuda pacta with conventions which have no of the rule is perfectly correct. Voet, however (2, 14, 9), correctly points out that Van Leeuwen express causa debiti. It would, no doubt, have been more correct for Van Leeuwen to say, as he did in his Commentaries, that an action does not arise out of a convention, which is not supported by a reasonable cause, but his meaning is reasonably clear from the context. Voet (2,14,9 and 42,1,15) admits that the causa debiti must be expressed, or, at least, proved, and this admission shows that the existence of the causa is essential to the validity of the debt. There are undoubtedly other passages in his Commentaries from which it might be inferred that, in his opinion, all promises, even though not made in return for something given, done, or promised, should be enforced, but he does not cite any decided cases. His opinion upon a question of practice cannot carry the same weight as that of Van Leeuwen, whose Censura Forensis was justly described by the Privy Council (L.R., 4, P.C., 255), as a work of high authority. Van Leeuwen's position as Registrar of the Supreme Court of Holland gave him better opportunities of observing the actual practice of the Court than was enjoyed by Voet, who, as professor, at Leyden, dealt with the more theoretical aspects of the law. In remarking that Voet does not cite any decided case, I was, perhaps, not strictly accurate, for he does refer to Coren's Observaties (13; num. 8, 9, and 10) as his chief authority for the statement that every agreement seriously and deliberately entered into is enforceable by action (2, 14, 9). The case reported by Coren is that of the Deacons of the Walloon Church at Amsterdam v. De Willem, and as that case is cited by so many other Dutch writers to show the complete emancipation of pacta from the trammels in which they had been held by the Roman law, it would be well that I should explain what the case really was. Two Amsterdam merchants referred certain disputes, which had arisen between them to arbitration, and by the deed of submission each of them promised that he would not apply to the Court to reduce or set aside any award which might be made by the arbitrators, and that if he should so apply he would pay a penalty of 100 Flemish pounds to the poor of the Walloon Church. After the award had been made, one of them did apply to the Court to set it aside, but before the application was heard the other party consented to the award being set aside, and this was accordingly done by the Court. The deacons of the Church thereupon sued the party who had made the application, and obtained judgment for the amount of the penalty. On appeal the Provincial Court of Holland reversed this decision, and it was on appeal to the Supreme Court of Holland, Zealand, and Vriesland that the proceedings were reported by Coren, who was an assessor of that Court. On behalf of the appellants, it was contended that good faith required that the promise should be enforced, and that although under the Roman law an agreement like the one in question could not be enforced, the Dutch law, following the Canon law, allowed an action on a nudum pactum. The respondent contended that inasmuch as the award had been set aside by the Court, the appellants were not entitled to the benefit of the promise stipulated for on their behalf by the parties to the deed of submission. The Supreme Court of appeal supported the respondent's contention, and dismissed the appeal. The only way in which the decision can be held to bear upon the present question is by the inference that might be drawn from the judgment that if the award had not been set aside, the plaintiffs would have recovered the amount of the penalty. This inference, I may incidentally remark, would support the decision of this Court in Tradesmen's Society v. Du Preez (5, Juta, 169), that a promise made by one person to another in favour of a third party, if supported by valuable consideration, and accepted by such third party, is enforceable by action. But the case cannot possibly be accepted as an authority for the view that even without valuable consideration such a promise would have been enforced by the Dutch Supreme Court. The promises were mutual, and consequently the only reasonable cause for the defendants' promise was the promise made by the other party to the submission that he, on his part, would pay the penalty to the plaintiffs in case he should depart from his undertaking not to make any application to the Court. Under the Roman law such mutual promises being nuda pacta may not have been enforceable, but if Voet and other Dutch writers held the opinion that the Dutch Courts would have enforced the defendant's promises, even if there had been no mutual promises given to him, the case cited by them affords no support whatever to that opinion. It is clear from what is said by U. Huber (Hedendaagsche Regtsgeleerdheid) (B, 3, c. 21, 6 and 7) that the practice mentioned by Van Leeuwen was not confined to bonds, and other written obligations, but was extended to other contracts. "All promises," says Huber, who was himself a Judge of high repute, "must have an 'oorzaak,' and without it they can have no effect; and it must be observed that in a written promise the 'oorzaak' must be expressed, although, if not so expressed, it may be proved aliunde; otherwise a writing by which a person acknowledges that he owes something and promises to pay it without the 'oorzaak' for the debt appearing, has no force; and so it was held in the case of Sybrandt v. Poppe, in 1680, where the Court refused judgment on a written acknowledgment of debt for 415 guildens without any more appearing." Whatever Voet might say to the contrary, I cannot find that, in practice, the Courts were satisfied with any lawful reason as a sufficient "oorzaak" unless it was clear that the promisor either received a quid pro quo, or made the promise by way of gift. In other words, I cannot find that in practice any gratuitous promises, except donations, were ever enforced by law. Even in regard to donations, it is by no means clear that the Courts would have enforced a promise to make a gift unless the donation was to take effect at once. Even Vinnius, who is generally cited as the strongest authority against the doctrine of consideration, says that a promise to make a gift at a future date would not, in his time have been enforced in Holland. The writers thus far quoted speak only of "oorzaak" as being necessary. Other writers again, observing perhaps that the term causa, in the variety of meanings, which it had in the Roman law, did not clearly express what they meant by "oorzaak," used the expression "redelyke oorzaak," as was done by Grotius and Van Leeuwen, or justa causa debendi, as was done by Van der Keesel. This Court has repeatedly decided that, except in the case of donation—which, if it be a contract at all, stands on its own peculiar footing—this "redelyke oorzaak" really means valuable consideration, and, therefore, but for the reasoning of the Judges of the Transvaal Supreme Court in a recent case, which has been brought to my notice, there would have been no doubt as to what our decision in the present case should be.

The case to which I refer is that of Rood v. Wallach (21, S.A.L.J., p. 137). The action was grounded on two documents executed on the same day. The first was a notarial agreement by which the plaintiff ceded to the defendant, for the sum of £300, one-half share of the plaintiff's interest in certain prospecting rights which he had acquired. After this agreement had been executed, but on the same day, further negotiations took place between the parties, which resulted in a letter being addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff in the following terms: "Re contract, 'Normandien.' With reference to the contract this day entered into between us regarding above farm, I hereby guarantee and undertake that in the event of sale or otherwise, as mentioned in paragraph 4 thereof, your share of the profits will be not less than £7,500, which sum, at least, I undertake to pay you should I be successful in dealing with the property. You will in any case be entitled to a full half of all profits that may accrue, but not less than the above sum." The learned Judge (Bristowe, J.), who tried the case, found as facts that the notarial agreement did not correctly represent the intention of the parties, and that the defendant gave the guarantee for the express purpose of rectifying the mistake. Upon this finding on the facts, he could come to only one conclusion, whether under Roman or Dutch or English law, and that is, that, as the whole matter was one transaction, the consideration which supported the original contract supported also the guarantee. The Court of Appeal, however, did not believe the evidence of the plaintiff that the guarantee had been mentioned before the contract was executed, and therefore treated the guarantee as an agreement standing by itself. If the finding of Bristowe, J., on the facts was wrong, there was no consideration for the guarantee, and the Court of Appeal accordingly proceeded to consider the question whether, in the absence of such consideration, the agreement could be legally enforced.

It does not appear from the terms of the judgment whether the point was raised that the promise should be supported as a donation. According to the well-known definition given by Grotius, a donation is "a promise whereby a person who is not bound to another binds himself out of liberality (weldadigheid) to give that other something belonging to himself, without receiving anything from him in return or stipulating for anything for his own advantage." I quote from Chief Justice Maasdorp's translation, which, if I may venture to say so, correctly reproduces the original. If, therefore, the defendant (Rood), without being under any obligation to pay the plaintiff anything, out of liberality promised to pay the £7,500 without receiving any valuable consideration, such a promise would be tantamount to a donation, and would be binding as such. In such a case, however, the transaction would have been hedged in by all those rules and restrictions, such as the necessity for registration, where the amount exceeds £500, and the liability to revocation for certain specified causes, to which the law has subjected this class of contracts. In the case of the so-called "remuneratory donations," that is, gifts promised as reward for past services which the donor was not bound to reward, these restrictions were greatly modified. The fact that "remuneratory donations" founded as they are upon bygone consideration, were not classed among ordinary contracts, goes far to show how deeply the notion of what English lawyers call "valuable consideration" had entered into the constitution of all other binding contracts. The truth is that it was an anomaly to admit donation into the circle of contracts at all. Once it was so admitted, an "oorzaak" had to be found, and as donation for a valuable consideration was a contradiction in terms, some lawyers found the "oorzaak" in the liberality which the donor intended to exercise towards the donee. Van Leeuwen (Comm. B 4. C 30. Sec. 1), perceiving, I presume, the inconsistency of treating the donor's bounty as a causa, boldly affirms that a donation is "a voluntary delivery of a certain thing without any oorzaak to another." Clearly, by the expression "without any cause," the learned author meant the same thing as Grotius did by the expression, "without receiving anything in return, or stipulating for anything for the donor's advantage," which, again, means the same thing as "without valuable consideration." I have already referred to Huber's remarks upon this question, and I need here only add that if the Dutch law would have enforced ordinary promises, made without any consideration, it is difficult to conceive why donations should have been hedged in by so many restrictions. The Transvaal Court, however, did not base its judgment upholding the defendant's promise on the ground that it was a donation, and, consequently, it was unnecessary to decide whether it belonged to that class of donations which are subject to the restrictions already mentioned, or whether Vinnius was right in holding that a promise to make a gift at a future time cannot be enforced. The plaintiff succeeded in obtaining all the advantages of a donation, without being subject to any of its disadvantages.

If the facts had not been correctly found by the Court of the first instance, and the promise did not hold good as a donation, then it clearly was a case in which, according to the decisions of this Court, there was no reasonable cause for the contract. The Chief Justice, in his able and lucid judgment, proceeds to criticise these cases, and to give his reasons for not agreeing with them. The first of them, Alexander v. Perry (Buch., 1874, p. 59), was very briefly reported, but the substantial point decided was that a promise by one person to serve another as bookkeeper for a definite period was not binding, unless there were a corresponding engagement on the other side to employ him and remunerate him for his services. If the Transvaal Court in theory disagrees with this view, it is difficult to imagine a case in which it would give practical effect to its theory. The two other cases, Malan v. Secretan (Foord. 94) and Tradesmen's Society v. Du Preez (5 Juta, 269), are more fully reported, and it is therefore unnecessary to repeat all the observations there made. In the former case, I ventured to point out that the expression nudum pactum did not, in the Roman law, properly signify an agreement without consideration, and the learned Chief Justice concurs in this view. He very correctly adds that with the Romans it was entirely a question of recognition, and that an agreement, not falling within the privileged class, even though founded on valuable consideration, gave no right of action. He proceeds, however, to point out that the Germans attached great importance to the observance of good faith, and refused to recognise distinctions which allowed a man to break an agreement deliberately entered into. In support of this statement, he quotes Grotius as stating that the subtleties of the Roman law on the distinction between pacts and contracts were no longer observed in his time, and that the Germans from time of old esteemed no virtue higher than good faith. It is clear, however, that he did not include among the subtleties of the Roman law, which had been abolished, the requirement of a causa to support an agreement, whether in the form of pact, or contract. On the contrary, he goes even further than Roman lawyers had gone, and demands a reasonable cause. What he means by this expression he explains in the following passage, as follows: "Redelijke oorzaak wordt verstaan zoo wanneer de toezegging of belofte geschiedt ter schenk; of dient tot eenige andere handeling, 'tzij zulks geschiedt ter tijde van de handeling of daarna." The italics are those of Grotius himself. The literal translation of the passage is as follows: "Reasonable cause is understood as well when the promise is made by way of donation as when it serves for (is auxiliary to) some other contract, whether the promise be made at the time of the contract or thereafter." Owing to its extreme conciseness, it is exceedingly difficult to grasp the real meaning of this passage. The author's intention seems to be to emphasise the distinction between donations, where the liberality of the donor is the cause, and other contracts, which require that the promisor should receive something in return, or stipulate for something for his own benefit. This intention comes out more clearly from the following chapter on donations, the first paragraph of which I have already quoted. In another passage (3, 30, 14), the learned author says that "in the case of purchase and sale, letting and hiring, and the like, all promises falling below or exceeding the real value might appear, to the extent of such difference, to be without reasonable cause (redelijke oorzaak)," yet, he adds, that, as such a transaction is founded on a legal cause (rechtelijke oorzaak), that is to say, a cause implied by law from the very nature of the transaction, the value should not be narrowly scrutinised except where the consideration is purely nominal or is grossly in excess of the value, in which case other principles of law would come into operation. It is clear from this passage that the author could not possibly mean by "redelijke oorzaak" the simple reason or ground for the contract, but must have meant something equivalent to valuable consideration. The Chief Justice (Innes), however, makes the following remarks: "With the edition of Grotius published in 1667 is printed a list of the Dutch meanings of Latin words used throughout the book. The definition of causa in that list is een raaron, the ground or reason, the why and wherefore of any matter." As the book was written in the Dutch language, and as Grotius himself used the expression "redelijke oorzaak," it is not quite clear why the publisher of the list, whoever he was, should have translated causa into Dutch. The fact, moreover, that he defined it as "een waarom," does not carry the matter much further, seeing that Damhoudou, as I have shown, also uses the term "waaromme," but gives as his only illustrations instances of valuable consideration. Van Leeuwen treats of the same subject in the chapter on Obligations, in his Commentaries (B 4, c 1, secs. 4, 5, and 6): "A promise," says he, "upon request is where a person for some reasonable cause, that is (as we have said), in return for what has been given or done to him, promises and acknowledges himself bound to another in something upon the latter's request. For otherwise a bare promise, which has no definite cause, confers no right upon another whereby he may acquire an action against the promiser. I say a reasonable cause, which in its nature is good and legitimate, as, for instance, in the case of loan, sale, hire, and the like, not that the same must necessarily be strictly and proportionately measured, for the smallest circumstance will render a thing larger or smaller, and of greater or less value." In a note to the following chapter, Decker treats the expression "reasonable cause" as equivalent to "physical and moral possibility," but this is surely a very serious departure from the author's reasoning in the text. Decker was probably influenced by the writings of the philosophical French jurists, whom he cites, and forgot that Van Leeuwen was dealing with the Dutch law as administered in actual practice in his immediate presence. If by "reasonable cause," Van Leeuwen meant "physical and moral possibility," it is difficult even to conjecture why he immediately added: "That is in return for what has been given or done to" the promiser. His meaning clearly was that there can only be a "reasonable cause" for a promise where the promise is made in return for what has been promised or given to the promiser. This view of his meaning is supported by the illustrations which he further on gives of reasonable cause. Whatever theorists like Decker might say, the testimony of writers conversant with the actual practice in Holland and Vriesland has led me to the conclusion that the more commercially-minded tribunals of these provinces, differing in this respect, perhaps from the tribunals of France and other Continental States, would not have accepted anything short of valuable consideration as a sufficient cause for any promise not intended as a donation. Certainly, if in a suit to enforce a promise, whether oral or in writing, counsel, on being asked what the "redelijke oorzaak" was, had answered, "the physical and moral possibility of performance," it is not difficult to imagine what reply he would have received from the Bench. The only other Dutch writer to whom I need refer is Van der Keessel, who (Thes., 484) adds the following explanatory note to the passage in Grotius defining reasonable cause: "Promissio cui justa debendi causa non subest, non producit actionem in foro effracem, quacvis aliquin ex nudo pacto actio nascatur." The author's object is to make it clear that although the subtleties of the Roman law in regard to nuda pacta had been abolished, the Dutch law still in his time required a justa causa debendi, and this expression the learned translator, who was an advocate practising at the Ceylon bar, interpreted to mean "consideration." Reference is made in the Transvaal judgment to Goudsmit's statement that causa, or oorzaak, is the ground or reason for the contract, and may be the desire to do another a favour, or to discharge a legal obligation, or to secure any other lawful object or purpose." Goudsmit is, or lately was, a Professor at Leyden, and the work to which reference is made relates to the system of the Pandects in the Roman law, and has no direct bearing on the Dutch law as it existed before the introduction of the present code. In a note, however, to the passage quoted, the author candidly admits that the term causa had several other meanings in the Roman law, and points out that in the case of the innominate contracts, the giving or doing by one of the parties is the causa for the giving or doing by the other party. In a later passage he states that the old Dutch law required proof to be given of the causa debiti where none was expressed in a bond, and he cites the passage I have already quoted from Groenewegen in support; but he adds that the practice was founded upon an unauthentic quotation in the Digest. It is quite possible that the Courts of Holland may have been misled by a spurious reading in the Digest; but the relevant question is not whether the Dutch Courts had departed from the pure and unadulterated principles of the Roman law, but what the actual practice in reality was. The Chief Justice also quotes with apparent approval Decker's statement that "reasonable cause is equivalent to physical and moral possibility," and Toullier's statement that cause means the motive for making the promise. I have before had occasion to point out that other French writers do not agree with this definition, but the dispute is not of much practical importance, as the Court is dealing with the Dutch, and not the French law. The difficulty in connection with the different definitions of "reasonable cause," which the Transvaal Court approves of, is that besides being somewhat inconsistent with each other, they afford so little practical assistance for the decision of concrete cases as they arise. Take the present
